This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. TO ALL THE

REPORTED CASES

IN

EQUITY AND BANKRUPTCY.

PACKER.

1. A packer may retain goods till he is paid the price of packing, where it is usual for the packers to lend money to the clothiers, and the cloths to be a pledge, not only for the work done in packing, but for the loan of money likewise: and the goods, notwithstanding the debtor has become bankrupt, shall not be taken from the packer till his whole debt is satisfied. Secus, when goods are delivered for a particular purpose; in this case there is a specific lien upon them for the price only of what is then done to those goods. Exp. Deeze, 1 Atk. 228.

2. A packer has by custom of trade a general lien upon all the goods of a customer in his possession or in his hands for all moneys due to him from that customer, and not merely for money owing in respect of those particular goods. Exp. Shubrook, Re Witt & Co., 45 L. J., Bky., 118; 2 L. R., Ch. D., 489; 24 W. R. 891; 34 L. T., N. S., 785.

PALATINE COURTS.

I. JURISDICTION, 5373.
II. JURISDICTION OF COURT OF CHANCERY, 5374.

I. JURISDICTION.

3. Jurisdiction of Lancaster allowed. Hametheson v. Tunstall, Cary 56.

4. Jurisdiction of Chester allowed. Willoughby v. Brearton, Cary 59. S. P. Heepward v. Sherrington, Cary 82.

5. Jurisdiction of Lancaster allowed. Price v. Owen, Cary 97.

6. The privilege of the counties palatine is allowed between parties living in the same county touching lands there. Edgworth v. Davies, 1 Ch. Ca. 40.

7. Appeal to the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, from a decree of the Vice-Chancellor dismissing the bill, affirmed by him on rehearing, on the petition of the plaintiff. Omerod v. Hardman, 5 Ves. 722.

8. Lands lying in the county palatine of Lancaster, becoming forfeited for being granted to superstitious uses, and A. afterwards obtaining a lease thereof under the Great Seal, it need not be also under the duchy seal. Woollaston v. Att.-Gen., 5 Bro. P. C. 1.

9. Semble, the jurisdiction of the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, when reviewing the decrees or orders of the Vice-Chancellor there, is one strictly appellate, and not a rehearing. Scarisbrick v. Skelmersdale (Lord), 4 Y. & Coll. 78.

Held, also, that by analogy with the practice of the Court of Chancery, where a bill of review may be brought within twenty years, the party, notwithstanding a lapse of seventeen years, was in time. Ib.

10. The Court of Chancery of the county palatine of Lancaster has not, as to land and personal estate within its jurisdiction, power to appoint a new trustee in the place of a trustee who is of unsound mind, but who has not been so found by inquisition. Re Ormerod, 4 Jur., N. S., 1289; 28 L. J., Ch., 55.

The power to appoint new trustees in the place of trustees of unsound mind, but not so found by inquisition, is by the Trustee Acts given, not to the Court of Chancery, but to the Lord Chancellor, or other the persons intrusted with the care of lunatics. Ib.

11. The principle under which the jurisdiction in personam of the old Court of Chancery extends, in effect, to property wherever situate applies to the Chancery Court of the county palatine of Lancaster. Re Longdendale Cotton Spinning Co., 8 L. R., Ch. D., 150; 38 L. T., N. S., 776.

Therefore, where the defendants in an action in the Chancery Court of the county palatine of Lancaster were within but their property was beyond the boundary of the local jurisdiction:—Held, that the jurisdiction of that Court was the jurisdiction in personam of the old Court of Chancery within the boundary, and therefore that the palatine court could exercise jurisdiction over the property, and could enforce any order in the action by applying to the Supreme Court under the Court of Chancery of Lancaster Act 1854, s. 7, and Judicature Act 1873, s. 18, sub-s. 2, and motion by the defendants to stay the action for want of jurisdiction refused with costs. Ib.

1. The Vice-Chancellor of the county palatine has no jurisdiction to grant an injunction restraining proceedings in the High Court. Re Alison, Re Johnson, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 1; 47 L. J., Ch., 755; 26 W. R. 450.

Chancellor of Durham.] 2. By the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 19, the temporal jurisdiction, including all jura regalia of the bishopric of Durham, was transferred from the bishop to the crown, and by the 6th section of that Act the rights of any persons holding any office by patent were reserved, and the revenues of the see were made chargeable with the same fees and stipends in respect of any office in the county of Durham as the same had theretofore been subject to. Under the authority of the Acts constituting the ecclesiastical commissioners, and by an order in council in 1836, the surplus revenues of the see of Durham, after providing for the bishopric, were directed to be paid to the ecclesiastical commissioners, and such surplus was made chargeable with the payment of the fees and stipends granted out of the revenues of the see by the last or any preceding bishop to any officer of the palatinate who held his office by patent at the time of the passing of the Act 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 19. The office of chancellor of the palatinate was created by patent before the time of Henry VIII., and the fees in respect of such office were about 27*l.* In the year 1788 the then bishop made a voluntary grant of 100*l.* to the chancellor, payable out of the revenues of the bishopric, for each sitting of the Chancellor's Court, and from that period down to 1836, 100*l.* was entered in the accounts of the bishopric under the headings, sometimes "new stipend" and sometimes "new stipend due this sitting." The ecclesiastical commissioners, having refused to pay the present chancellor, who was appointed in 1852, any more than the sum for which there was evidence of a grant by patent:—Held, that, having regard to the period during which the 100*l.* had been de facto paid, and irrespective of the question whether the payment of that sum could ever have been enforced by action at law, the surplus revenues of the bishopric in the hands of the ecclesiastical commissioners were liable for the payment of the sum of 100*l.* for each sitting of the chancellor. Temple v. Ecclesiastical Commissioners, 3 De G. M. & G. 418; 18 Jur. 45; 23 L. J., Ch., 673; 2 W. R. 112.

II. JURISDICTION OF COURT OF CHANCERY.

3. Court of Chancery is incident to county palatine. Martin v. Marshall, Hob. 63.

4. Upon a petition of appeal from an inferior Court the appellant need not assign particular errors as he must upon a bill of review. Addison v. Hindmarsh, 1 Vern. 442.

Bill of appeal from inferior Courts must be upon the same evidence, and there can be no examination de novo, any more than there may be on a bill of review; but in the spiritual courts they allow new evidence upon appeals. Id. 443.

Appeals lie from the Court of Equity at Lancaster to the Duchy Court. Ib.

5. An appeal will not lie in chancery from a decree in a county palatine. Portington v. Tarbock, 1 Vern. 177. Jennet v. Bishop, id. 184.

6. A certiorari bill may be brought to remove a cause out of a court of equity in a county palatine to this court. Portington v. Tarbock, 1 Vern. 178.

7. Proceedings can no more be removed out of a county palatine by a certiorari bill in chancery than by a writ of error at law, in case of a judgment there. Duckenfield v. Nosworthy, 6 Vin. Abr. 581, pl. 23.

8. If defendants charged upon account in Lancaster, they shall not answer here; if upon promise, they shall. Wingfield v. Fleetwood, Cary 113.

9. Suggesting prior incumbrances to persons living out of a county palatine, will entitle this Court to a jurisdiction concerning lands within the county palatine. Hall v. Dowthwaite, 1 Vern. 298.

10. Special injunction granted to stay proceedings in an action in the county palatine at Lancaster. Hine v. Fiddes, 2 Sim. & S. 370.

11. The fact of an administration decree having been obtained in the Court of Chancery of the county palatine of Lancaster is not a ground for staying proceedings for the administration of the same estate, where a portion of the estate is situate beyond the jurisdiction of the Lancaster Court. Wynne v. Hughes, 5 Jur., N. S., 165; 28 L. J., Ch., 283.

On appeal, the Court ordered all the proceedings in the suit to be stayed, the plaintiff to have the conduct of the suit in the court of limited jurisdiction, the plaintiff appearing in that Court for that purpose. S. C. 28 L. J., Ch., 485; 32 L. T. 326.

12. An injunction was granted by the Lords Justices, as the court of appeal from the Chancery Court of Lancaster, against a person out of the jurisdiction of that Chancery Court. Downes v. Jackson, 14 W. R. 907.

13. A person who has obtained a creditor's order for administration of a testatrix's estate in the palatine court of the Duchy of Lancaster, and who is neither a party to a suit in the high court for the same purpose, nor has proved his debt under an administration order therein made subsequently to the order in the palatine court suit, is a mere stranger to the high court suit, and a motion made by a person so circumstanced in the high court suit to stay proceedings therein, on the ground of the order made in the palatine court suit, was refused, with costs, upon the ground of his being such stranger. Re Yates, Bradley v. Stelfox, 3 De G. J. & S. 402.

1. Upon application ex parte by the plaintiff in a suit in the Court of Chancery of the county palatine of Lancaster, the lords justices of the High Court of Chancery, under the powers given to them by the Court of Chancery of Lancaster Act 1854 (17 & 18 Vict., c. 82), ordered that service of the claim in the suit should be effected upon one of the defendants out of the jurisdiction of the said county palatine; and directed such order to be drawn up by one of the registrars of the High Court of Chancery. Waltham v. Goodyear, 1 Jur., N. S., 197; 24 L. J., Ch., 587; 7 De G. M. & G. 76.

The fact of questions of legal difficulty arising in a suit instituted in the Court of Chancery of the county palatine of Lancaster is not sufficient reason for transferring it to the High Court of Chancery. S. C. nom. Waltham v. Goodier, 3 W. R. 352.

2. The 30 & 31 Vict., c. 64, for the dispatch of business in the Court of Appeal in Chancery, does not enable one of the lords justices sitting alone to act as a court of appeal from the Court of Chancery of the county palatine of Lancaster. Kershaw v. Vickers, 3 L. R., Ch., 513; 37 L. J., Ch., 488; 16 W. R. 772. S. P. Jones v. Kilshaw, 37 L. J., Ch, 277; 16 W. R. 295; 17 L. T., N. S., 485.

3. The sole defendant in an action commenced in the Court of Chancery of the county palatine of Lancaster resided out of the jurisdiction. On the 15th June the Court of Appeal, on the ex parte application of the plaintiff, gave the plaintiff leave to serve the writ out of the jurisdiction of the palatine court, on the plaintiff undertaking to consent to a transfer of the action to the High Court of Justice in case an application for such transfer should be made by the defendant. On the defendant subsequently applying for a transfer, the Court of Appeal made the order, and ordered the plaintiff to pay (in any event) the costs incurred in obtaining the order. Re Watmough, Serjeeson v. Beloe, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 280; 49 L. T. 220; 32 W. R. 101.

4. Order LVIII. of the Rules of Court 1875 applies to appeals from the court of the county palatine of Lancaster as well as to appeals from the High Court of Justice, and the time for appealing is now regulated by Rule 15 of that Order, and is no longer governed by the general orders of 1855 regulating appeals from the court of the county palatine. Lee v. Nuttall, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 61; 48 L. J., Ch., 616; 27 W. R. 805; 41 L. T. 4.

5. In 1874, a petition was presented in the court of the county palatine of Lancaster, for a guardian and maintenance of two infants, who were entitled for life to a very large property under their great-grandfather's will. Their mother and another were appointed guardians, and an allowance for maintenance was fixed, and was afterwards varied from time to time by the Court. In 1877, the mother, as next friend of the infants, obtained in the High Court a judgment for administration of the testator's estate, and then took out a summons in the action for the appointment of guardians and an allowance for maintenance. The summons was not served on the other guardian, but he heard of it, and by the direction of the Vice-Chancellor of the county palatine took out a summons for directions in the palatine court. On the summons being attended the Vice-Chancellor expressed strong disapprobation of the conduct of the mother in taking out the summons in the High Court, took an undertaking, which she voluntarily offered, not to proceed further with the summons in the High Court, and made a reference to the registrar as to revising the allowances for maintenance. Soon afterwards, the mother, as next friend of the infants, applied to the Vice-Chancellor of the county palatine to discharge the undertaking and to stay proceedings in the palatine court. This application having been refused, the mother, as next friend of the infants, appealed:—Held, that, although the High Court had full jurisdiction to appoint guardians and order maintenance, notwithstanding the previous orders made by the palatine court, such jurisdiction ought not to be exercised unless some special ground was shown, inasmuch as it was better for the infants that their maintenance and education should remain under the direction of the judge who had directed them for three years, and was fully acquainted with the case; and that the proceedings in the palatine court ought not to be stayed. Re Allison, Re Johnsons, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 1; 47 L. J., Ch., 755; 38 L. T. 304; 26 W. R. 450.

Held, also, that as the Vice-Chancellor of the county palatine had no jurisdiction to grant an injunction to restrain proceedings in the High Court, he ought not to have taken an undertaking to discontinue them, and the undertaking was accordingly discharged. Ib.

1. Where an uncle gave his nephew an unlimited power of drawing on his bankers, and the evidence left it doubtful whether goods furnished in the way of his trade were intended as gifts, or not, the estate of the nephew was held in a suit for an account and administration of the uncle's estate liable for the amount of the advances and value of the goods. Mortimer v. Trezevant, 11 Bli. N. S. 191; 4 Cl. & F. 657.

2. A son, placed by his father in business, accounted to his father for all profits, deducting only the expense of his board, having made no demand for wages during his father's life, was held not entitled as a creditor after his father's death, or if he has a demand, it was held satisfied by a will, giving him a legacy to a greater amount, and other benefits. Plume v. Plume, 7 Ves. 258.

3. A father voluntarily paid a debt due to a bank from his son, and the father afterwards died insolvent:—Held, that there was no debt from the son to the father's estate. Graham v. Wickham, 31 Beav. 478.

4. Father receives his child's earnings while living with him, and becomes bankrupt; the child, by agreement, admitted a creditor for a particular sum to avoid an inquiry, but dangerous to lay down such a rule. Exp. Macklin, 2 Ves. 675.

5. A legatee, son-in-law to the testator, was held entitled to his legacy discharged from debts due by him to the testator, and a debt for which the testator was his surety upon evidence, from the testator's accounts, letters, and memorandums, in his handwriting: parol evidence of declarations in conversation was produced for the same purpose; but the Court appeared to rely on the evidence in writing. Eden v. Smith, 5 Ves. 341.

6. A father-in-law, who paid a mortgage debt secured on his son-in-law's property and took a receipt from the mortgagee, in which the mortgagee agreed to re-convey the property when required:—Held, not to have shown an intention to exonerate the property. Fenwick v. Potts, 8 De G. M. & G. 506.

7. Where money is expressed to be given in part of a portion, though of small amount, yet it is an advancement, and must be brought into hotchpot. Morris v. Burroughs, 1 Atk. 403.

8. By a settlement of trust funds for the benefit of a husband and wife for their lives, with remainder to the children of the marriage equally, it was provided, that if the husband should, during his life, advance or pay any money for or on account of the advancement or preferment in life of any child of the marriage, or in case any lands or tenements, money, goods, or chattels should descend or come by or from him unto or for the benefit of any such child, then such moneys, goods, and chattels, and the value of such lands or tenements, should be accounted as part or in full of the portion provided by the settlement, unless the husband should by writing declare the contrary:—Held, that the advances and payments referred to in the first part of the provision should be construed advances and payments made inter vivos, perfected in the lifetime of the husband; and that the lands, tenements, moneys, goods, or chattels in the second part of the clause should be confined to matters not perfected, or not having effect until after his death: that property which, during the coverture, accrued to the husband and wife, in right of the wife, and by a settlement, to which the husband and wife were parties, was settled upon them for their lives with remainder to their children, as they or the survivor of them should appoint (but which was not otherwise received or reduced into possession by the husband), was not property to be accounted for, as part of their portion, by the children to whom the husband and wife, or the survivor of them, afterwards appointed it: that the value of a leasehold house assigned by the husband in his lifetime to one of the children of the marriage, for his more comfortable maintenance and support, did not affect the share of such child of the trust fund: and that an advance by the husband in his lifetime to one of his daughters of a sum of money for the purpose of apprenticing her son—the share of such daughter of the trust fund having been settled upon herself and her husband, with remainder to her children—did not affect the share of such daughter of the trust fund. Douglas v. Willes, 7 Hare 318.

1. Husband by marriage settlement secures a portion for daughters of the marriage, in default of issue male; there is one daughter only; the husband survives that wife and marries again; leaves issue by the second wife, and dies intestate; the daughter by the first marriage being an infant, and her portion not then due, if the daughter lives till the portion is due, it is an advancement pro tanto, and must be brought into hotchpot as to the other issue. Edwards v. Freeman, 2 P. W. 435.

A provision by a father for a child by will, not to be brought into hotchpot, nor a provision of land for an heir. Ib.

One settles a rent out of lands upon a younger child; this is an advancement pro tanto. Ib.

An annuity settled by a father upon a child, to commence after the father's death, is an advancement pro tanto, and must be brought into hotchpot. Id. 442.

A provision for a child by a father, though contingent, yet when the contingency happens, is an advancement pro tanto. So, a provision made for a child either by a voluntary settlement, or for a child either by a voluntary settlement, or for a good consideration, is an advancement pro tanto. So, though the portion be not paid, yet if secured to the child in the father's lifetime, although not payable till after the father's death. Ib.

Maintenance money for a child not taken to be an advancement, etc. Id. 449.

2. A., by a trust settlement, gave to his son "a like sum of 5,000*l.* sterling, payable, etc., after my decease, from which provision shall be deducted any sum that I have already advanced or may still advance for him to enable him to carry on his business." A. entered into a guarantee for 2,000*l.* for the firm of which his son was a partner. A. was compelled to pay that sum, and the firm afterwards becoming bankrupt, he obtained from its assets a small dividend:—Held, that this was an advance to the son which came within the description of money advanced to the son to enable him to carry on his business, and that the son could only claim the balance of the 5,000*l.* after deducting the sum thus advanced. The practice of allowing the costs in such a case to be paid out of the estate was disregarded. Berry v. Morse, 1 H. L. Ca. 71.

3. A testator gave a fund to four persons, or any of them, in such shares, etc., as A. B. should appoint, and in default equally. He directed that such four persons should bring into hotchpot the amount of advances he might make to any of them in his life:—Held, that the hotchpot clause operated only on the unappointed fund, if any. Brocklehurst v. Flint, 16 Beav. 100.

4. By a settlement executed on the marriage of a daughter a sum of 4,000*l.* was secured to her on her father's bond, to produce 200*l.* per annum, and he agreed to allow 150*l.* per annum besides. In his account books he for many years treated the 150*l.* per annum as a debt, but for some few years preceding and up to his death he entered it in his books as an advance. By his will he bequeathed a legacy of a large amount to his daughter and her husband and their children, and declared, that "inasmuch as he had already advanced to and for, and might during his lifetime advance, lend, or pay unto or for the use of his daughter or her husband, sums of money over and above what was secured to her and them by their marriage settlement, such advances with interest at 5 per cent. should be retained and deducted from the legacy;" and he directed that his "books of account should be conclusive evidence of the accounts and of the balances therein mentioned to be due and owing to him." He bequeathed the residue of his property between four of his sons. By a codicil he directed how the interest on the legacy was to be paid, "first deducting what had already been advanced." By another codicil he revoked two legacies, which he had given in a particular way and upon certain trusts to two sons, other than the four residuary legatees, and "in lieu of such legacies," he made the two sons residuary legatees:—Held, that the 150*l.* per annum agreed to be paid to the testator's daughter was not an advance, and ought not to be deducted from the legacy; and that, although the legacies to the two sons were clearly revoked, they did not take the shares of the residue in substitution for those legacies, but absolutely. Hargreaves v. Pennington, 10 L. T., N. S., 857; 34 L. J., Ch., 180; 10 Jur., N. S., 834; 12 W. R. 1047.

5. Upon the occasion of the marriage of one of his daughters, and shortly before leaving for the wedding excursion, the testator said jocularly that he would buy his son-in-law's snuff-box, and at the same time gave him with one hand 1,000*l.* in bank notes, and with the other hand took the snuff-box, saying that the notes were in exchange for the snuff-box. He had not previously expressed any intention to make such present. He shortly afterwards made his will, by which he gave to each of his daughters, for her separate use, 1,000*l.*, but provided that in case any of his daughters should, during his life, have received, by way of marriage portion or advancement, 1,000*l.*, such daughters should not receive the legacy, or any part thereof:—Held, having regard to all the circumstances attending the gift of 1,000*l.*, that the daughter was entitled to the legacy. M'Clure v. Dawson, or Evans, 7 Jur., N. S., 204; 30 L. J., Ch., 295; 9 W. R. 428; 3 L. T., N. S., 870; 29 Beav. 422.

1. A testator, who had lent money to his son, J., bequeathed his residuary estate to J. and his other children equally for life, with remainder over to their children, and declared that neither of his children should receive anything until they should have accounted for any sum lent by him to them. The testator afterwards agreed to accept a composition on his debt, but which was not paid at his death. Semble, that the son was only liable to account for the composition; but:—Held, that the son's debt was not to be deducted from his children's interest. Silverside v. Silverside, 25 Beav. 340.

2. A. bequeathed trust funds to a married daughter, and declared, that in case he should make any advance of money to any of his children, or to the husbands of his daughters, which should not have been repaid, or the interest of which, if reserved, should not have been duly paid at the time of his death, such child or children should not be entitled to receive any part or share of his property until he, she, or they should have accounted for, and brought into hotchpot, such sum or sums of money as should have been so advanced, and interest:—Held (affirming 31 Beav. 583), that money agreed to be paid for a business sold by the testator to a son-in-law, but not payable until the expiration of five years, was not an advancement, the testator having died before the money was due. Auster v. Powell, 1 De G. J. & Sm. 99; 9 Jur., N. S., 421; 8 L. T., N. S., 73.

The proof of a debt, and receipt of a dividend by the testator, under the bankruptcy of his son-in-law, did not operate as an extinguishment of the debt. Ib.

The debt, less the amount of the dividend, was an advance within the meaning of the clause. Ib.

3. A testator directed his trustees to secure 1,500*l.* to his daughter for life, and to her children in fee; but with a proviso that payment in his lifetime should go in satisfaction of the gift. She received 1,000*l.* from the testator, and pre-deceased him. The Court of Session held that the children were, nevertheless, entitled to the full 1,500*l.*, without deducting the 1,000*l.* On appeal, this decision was reversed. Hutchison v. Skelton, 2 Macq. H. L. Ca. 492.

4. A husband gave real and personal property to trustees to convert, and after the death or second marriage of his wife to hold the proceeds for his child or children living at that time, and the issue then living of his child or children dying before that period, such objects to take as tenants in common according to the stocks, and not to the number of the individuals composing the class. His real estate was to be considered as converted from his death, and it was declared that no child, to whom or to whose husband he should have paid any portion in his lifetime, should participate in the trust property without bringing the portion so paid in his lifetime into hotchpot. On the marriage of one of his daughters in his lifetime, and before the date of the will, the testator covenanted to stand seised of a freehold house for her use, her heirs and assigns, for ever. She having died leaving issue:—Held, that the hotchpot clause could not be extended to the issue of the testator's children, so that the value of the house given to his daughter was not to be deducted from the share of her issue who should be living at the death or second marriage of his widow. Hewitt v. Jardine, 14 L. R., Eq., 58; 26 L. T., N. S., 546.

5. A father gave all his property equally among his three daughters, S., M., and J., and directed J., within twelve months after attaining twenty-one, to bring into hotchpot an estate (B.) to which she was separately entitled. On her marriage, subsequently to the date of the will, her estate, at the testator's instance, was settled on herself for life, remainder to her husband for life, remainder as she should appoint among her children, and was subsequently, also by the testator's advice, sold, and the proceeds held on the same trusts. In a suit to administer the testator's estate:—Held, that J. must bring into account the proceeds (less the costs of sale) of estate B. Middleton v. Windross, 16 L. R., Eq., 212.

6. A father, before the marriage of his son, stated in a letter to the father of the intended wife, "I will give C. one-third of my business, which will at present be sufficient to support them respectably and something to spare; and at my death he will have half the business and a child's share of what property I may be worth." The father in his lifetime, in consideration of love and affection, assigned a mortgage to the son, to take effect at the father's death, with a power of revocation reserved thereby to the father, which he did not exercise. He also advanced other property to others of his children at different periods during his life. By his will he left to his son C. "one shilling in full of all claims in reference to my property, having already given to him what I consider fair and reasonable;" he directed his debts to be paid, and divided his property among his widow and other children:—Held, that by the letter the father contracted a debt payable out of the assets which he left at his death, but that the son was bound to bring into account and give credit for the value of the mortgage which the son insisted on retaining. Keays v. Gilmore, 8 Ir. R., Eq., 290; 22 W. R. 465.

Held, also, that the other children were not bound to bring into account the advancements made to them. Ib.

7. A father gave to three of his sons, Thomas, John, and Peter, legacies of 500*l.* each, and to his daughter 200*l.*, and directed that neither of his sons, to whom he should have advanced any sums of money in his lifetime, should be entitled to receive his legacy without bringing such sums into hotchpot. The residue of his property he divided between his four sons, Charles, Thomas, John, and Peter, and his daughter. The father had advanced to Charles, at different periods before the date of his will, 500*l.*, 170*l.*, and 58*l.*, and to Thomas, after the date of his will, 500*l.* and 380*l.*:—Held, that the advances to Charles should not be taken into account against him, but that the sum of 500*l.* to Thomas was a satisfaction of his legacy, and the 380*l.*, being advanced after the date of the will, must be deducted from his share of the residue. Re Peacock Owen v. Peacock, 14 L. R., Eq., 236; 27 L. T., N. S., 472.

1. When a testator, who, before the date of his will, made advances to his sons, for some of which he took security, declared by his will "in case I shall at any time during my life" advance any sum, the sums so advanced shall be brought into hotchpot:—Held, that the words did not necessarily imply futurity, and that the advances made before the date of the will must be accounted for. Davies v. Atkinson, 18 W. R. 1016; 23 L. T., N. S., 41.

2. A husband gave the residue of his estate to trustees to pay the income of one moiety to his wife, and to divide the other moiety equally among his children. Subsequently to the date of his will, the testator advanced considerable sums to some of his children:—Held, that the widow was entitled to the income of a moiety of the actual residue only, but that in settling the shares of the children, they must account for the sums advanced to them by the testator in his lifetime. Meinertzhagen v. Walters, 26 L. T., N. S., 469; 4 L. J., Ch., 407; 20 W. R. 505. Affirmed 7 L. R., Ch., 670; 41 L. J., Ch., 801; 27 L. T. 326; 20 W. R. 918.

3. A father being indebted to the trustees of his daughter's settlement upon a covenant contained in the settlement, by his will directed his estate, after payment of debts, to be divided amongst his children equally; but if the net produce of his estate exceeded 40,000*l.*, then his sons were to have one-twentieth part more than the daughters; and he declared that the moneys due on the covenant should be taken in satisfaction pro tanto of the daughter's share, and should be brought into hotchpot, and accounted for accordingly. Upon realising the testator's estate, it was found that, if the moneys due upon the covenant were not to be brought into account for the purpose of distribution, but were to be treated as a debt, the estate would be under 40,000*l.*:—Held, that the moneys due upon the covenant must be brought into account and treated as part of the daughter's share, and that the sons were therefore entitled to one-twentieth more than the daughters. Fox v. Fox, 40 L. J., Ch., 182; 11 L. R., Eq., 142; 19 W. R. 151; 23 L. T., N. S., 584.

4. A deed of gift by father to son, whereby the father purports to deprive himself of everything which he has in the world, cannot be supported as an advancement. Hughes v. Seanor, 18 W. R. 108.

A deed purporting to be a sale cannot be supported as an advancement. Ib.

A deed which, on the face of it, does not show a fair and reasonable consideration, cannot be supported in equity. Ib.

An inadequate money consideration cannot be combined with a consideration of natural love and affection for the purpose of supporting a deed. Ib.

5. Life and reversionary interests must be brought into hotchpot under the usual hotchpot clause. Eales v. Drake, 1 L. R., Ch. D., 217; 45 L. J., Ch. D., 51; 24 W. R. 184. And see Williamson v. Jeffreys, 18 Jur. 1071.

6. By a deed of separation the husband covenanted to pay an annuity of 200*l.* to each of his daughters during their respective lives such annuities to cease if he should again cohabit with his wife, which event did not happen. The husband survived his wife, and died intestate. In the distribution of his personal estate among his children under the Statute of Distributions:—Held, that so much of the annuities to the daughters as were paid during their father's lifetime were not in the nature of advancements; and that the value of each annuity must be estimated as at the death of the intestate, and the amount brought into hotchpot. Hatfeild v. Minet, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 136; 47 L. J., Ch. D., 612; 38 L. T., N. S., 629; 26 W. R. 701.

7. Bequest of residue to A. for life with power thereout to advance her eldest son and a gift after A.'s death of the said residue to A.'s children equally:—Held, on the context, that the amount advanced to A.'s eldest son was not to be taken into account in the ultimate division of the remainder amongst A.'s children. Upjohn v. Upjohn, 15 Beav. 152.

8. A father directed that in the division of his property an estate belonging to one of his children should be brought into hotchpot. After the date of his will he acquiesced in the sale of this estate and the settlement of the proceeds on the child for life, with remainder to her children:—Held, that the condition was not thereby waived, and that in the division of the testator's property the estate must be brought into hotchpot. Middleton v. Windross, 42 L. J., Ch., 555; 16 L. R., Eq., 212; 21 W. R. 822.

9. A father directed his trustees to pay his son 3,000*l.* and to invest 28,000*l.* upon trust, as to 10,000*l.* for his widow during widowhood, and as to six sums of 3,000*l.* upon trust for his daughters and their children. The 10,000*l.* was to fall into the residue at the death or marriage of his widow. And the testator directed his trustees to divide the residue into as many equal shares as he should have children living at the time of the death or second marriage of his wife, or then dead leaving issue, and upon trust as to one of such shares to invest 1,000*l.* for his son and his son's widow and children, and he gave directions as to the settlement of the share given to one of his daughters; and the will provided that any money advanced to his children and not repaid at his death should be set off against their share of the residue. The testator's son was indebted to him for advances in a sum nearly equal to his share of the residue:—Held, that the legacy of 3,000*l.* to the son was not to be set off against his debt, but was to be paid immediately. Smith v. Crabtree, 6 L. R., Ch. D., 591; 25 W. R. 824.

Held, also, that the words in the will directing the residue to be divided between the children living "at the death or second marriage of his wife" must be struck out as being manifestly inconsistent with the form of the will and the intention of the testator; and that all the children living at the death of the testator took vested interests in the residue. Ib.

Evidence of.] 1. A testator by his will, dated the 22nd day of November 1872, declared for the information of his trustees that the amount or values expressed in his ledger and entered on the twenty-first page and signed by him and dated the 8th November 1872, were, and were the only, advancements either by way of gift or loan made by him to any of his children before the 8th November 1872. The twenty-first page of the ledger was not admitted to probate. The sums entered therein were not in all instances the true amounts actually received by the children:—Held, that the will must be read as if the entries in the ledger were incorporated into it, and that the entries were conclusive for the purposes of the will. Quihampton v. Going, 24 W. R. 917.

2. A father gave his residuary estate upon trust for his two sons and four daughters equally, and declared that all such sums of money as he had then already advanced, or should thereafter advance, to or for the benefit of either of his children, as should appear in any account in his handwriting kept by him for that purpose, or as should be shown in any other manner, should be considered and taken in full for or, as the case might be, in part of his or her share of and in the trust estate. Subsequently to the date of his will the testator advanced to one of his sons 1,575*l.*, and to the other 1,560*l.* He afterwards wrote letters to each of them stating that it was his intention to make a present to them of sums of 640*l.* and 650*l.*, part of the 1,575*l.* and 1,560*l.* respectively, and requiring them to send him promissory notes for the balance:—Held, that these letters were not admissible in evidence to vary the operation of the proviso contained in the will, and that the sums of 640*l.* and 650*l.* must be brought into account by the sons. Smith v. Conder, 47 L. J., Ch. D., 878; 9 L. R., Ch. D., 170; 27 W. R. 149.

3. Testator directed that "all and every such sums of money which I have already advanced or covenanted to pay or may hereafter advance to my children as will appear in a statement in my handwriting, shall be brought into hotchpot." An unattested document signed by the testator and enumerating the advances made to his children was found amongst his papers:—Held, that this unattested document was admissible as primâ facie, but not as conclusive evidence of the advances made, the words in the will, "such sums of money," referring to the clause, "which I have already advanced," where the word "which" was clearly used instead of "as." Whately v. Spooner, 3 K. & J. 542.

For Proviso for Deduction of Advances in Case of Portions.] See PORTION, XI. IV.

2. Interest on Advances.

4. Interest at 4 per cent. directed to be computed on advancements made by a father to his children from the time when the father's property was divisible amongst them. Andrewes v. George, 3 Sim. 393.

5. A father gave to several of his eight children real estates, and bequeathed his residuary personal estate to all the eight, with a direction that their portions should be equal, and to that end that those of them to whom he had given the real estates should respectively take them on account of their shares at the estimated values mentioned in his will. The executor absconded with the personal estate in his hands, but after many years a considerable part of it was recovered:—Held, that the amount recovered must be treated as consisting of a principal sum, with interest thereon at 4*l.* per cent. per annum from the testator's death; that the devisees of the real estates must bring into account their estimated values as part of the principal; and that, the shares of principal having been thus ascertained, the part apportioned as interest must be divided between them in proportion to those shares. Ackroyd v. Ackroyd, 18 L. R., Eq., 313.

6. A father, after bequeathing a share of mixed residue to one of his sons, stated that he had advanced sums amounting to 2,550*l.* to the son, and directed his trustees and executors to deduct that sum from the share so bequeathed:—Held, that the son was chargeable with interest at 4*l.* per cent. on the sum from the death of his father, and not merely from the end of a year after the death. Field v. Seward, 5 L. R., Ch. D., 538.

7. A testator gave his residuary estate to trustees (whom he also appointed his executors) in trust for sale, and to stand possessed of the proceeds in trust for his six children, nominatim, in equal shares, including two sons, F. and J.; and after reciting that he had already advanced 4,000*l.* to his son F. and 500*l.* to his son J., he declared that "neither of my said sons, nor any of my children who shall receive from me any sum of money for their advancement in the world, shall be entitled to any part of my residuary estate without bringing the said sums of 4,000*l.* and 500*l.*, and all other sums so given to any of my said children, with interest thereon at 5*l.* per cent. per annum from the times of advancing the same respectively, into hotchpot." By a codicil the testator revoked the provision made by his will in favour of his son J., thereby causing a lapse of J.'s one-sixth of the residue. The testator died leaving his widow and his six children his next of kin:—Held, that the codicil must be read as if it expressly declared a trust in the executors of the lapsed share of residue for the testator's wife and children according to the Statute of Distributions; and accordingly (reading the will and codicil as one instrument) that the hotchpot clause applied to the shares taken by the children under the codicil, but that it did not apply to the widow so as to increase her share under the codicil. Re Stewart, Stewart v. Stewart, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 539; 49 L. J., Ch., 763; 43 L. T. 370.

The 4,000*l.* and 500*l.* advanced to F. and J. respectively, together with interest at 5 per cent. up to the testator's death, and interest at 4 per cent. on the aggregate amount in each case from the death, were therefore ordered to be brought into hotchpot in ascertaining their shares of residue. Ib.

In the absence of any direction by a testator to the contrary, advancements to his children on account of their portions bear no interest up to his death, but from his death they bear interest at 4 per cent. Ib.

1. A husband by his will gave his property to his wife for life, and after her death equally between his children, subject to a proviso directing that his trustees should deduct from the share of his daughter B. 200*l.*, which he had advanced to her, and add it to his personal estate; and that if, at the period of distribution, B. "should be indebted to any or either of her brothers or sisters in respect of advances made to her, his trustees should be empowered to deduct all or any such debts or advances from her share, and pay the same to the brother or sister to whom the same might be owing." B. had borrowed from one brother 100*l.*, on a promissory note bearing interest, and had borrowed other sums from another brother. Nearly all these debts had, before the time of distribution, become barred by the Statute of Limitations:—Held, that the trustees were authorised to deduct from B.'s share all the debts, though barred by the statute, but that the intention of the testator was to put advances by brothers and sisters on the same footing as advances by himself, and that interest, therefore, ought not to be deducted. Poole v. Poole, 7 L. R., Ch., 17; 20 W. R. 133; 25 L. T. 770.

2. A testator gave his residuary estate to his widow for life, with remainder to his children equally, with a proviso, in the common form, for bringing into hotchpot all sums advanced to any of them by him during his lifetime. The testator made advances to some of his children. In distributing the residuary estate among the children after the death of the widow:—Held, that the advanced children must bring their advances into hotchpot, with interest at 4 per cent. per annum up to the distribution of the estate; such interest to be computed from the death of the widow, and not from the dates of the respective advances or from the death of the testator. Re Rees, Rees v. George, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 701; 50 L. J., Ch., 328; 44 L. T. 241; 29 W. R. 301.

3. Statute-barred Debts or Advances.

3. A testator directed his residuary estate to be divided amongst his six children. "And I direct that, in order to equalise my said residuary estate amongst my six children, in case it shall appear by my private ledger, that any, or either of them my said children, or the present or any future husband of any of my said daughters, are indebted to me at my decease in any sum of money, such debt shall be considered as forming part of my residuary estate, and the shares of my said children shall respectively become liable to pay such debt." One of his sons owed him a large debt, but part of it was barred by the Statute of Limitations:—Held, nevertheless, that the whole must be paid out of his share, and that the clause amounted to a hotchpot clause. Rose v. Gould, 15 Beav. 189; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 360.

4. A husband by his will gave his property to his wife for life, and after her death equally between his children, subject to a proviso directing that his trustees should deduct from the share of his daughter B. 200*l.*, which he had advanced to her, and add it to his personal estate; and that if, at the period of distribution, B. "should be indebted to any or either of her brothers or sisters in respect of advances made to her, his trustees should be empowered to deduct all or any such debts or advances from her share, and pay the same to the brother or sister to whom the same might be owing." B. had borrowed from one brother 100*l.*, on a promissory note bearing interest, and had borrowed other sums from another brother. Nearly all these debts had, before the time of distribution, become barred by the Statute of Limitations:—Held, by the Vice-Chancellor of the Duchy Court of Lancaster, that the trustees were authorised to deduct from B.'s share all the debts, though barred by the statute. Poole v. Poole, 7 L. R., Ch., 17; 25 L. T. 770; 20 W. R. 133.

4. Inquiry as to.

5. In administering the estate of an intestate who has made advances to his children in his lifetime, the inquiry as to advances should follow the words of the Statute of Distributions. Re Ennis, Waterton v. Ennis, 28 W. R. 885; 43 L. T. 748.

5. Other Cases.

6. A., having seven children, makes an executor in trust, and devises to each child one-seventh of his personal estate; one of the children dies in A.'s lifetime, and one of the six surviving children has been advanced in his lifetime; yet this child shall take his full share of the seventh part, without bringing what he had received before into hotchpot. Cowper v. Scott, 3 P. W. 124.

7. A testator gave his residuary estate to trustees (whom he also appointed his executors) in trust for sale, and to stand possessed of the proceeds in trust for his six children, nominatim, in equal shares, including two sons, F. and J.; and after reciting that he had already advanced 4,000*l.* to his son F. and 500*l.* to his son J., he declared that "neither of my said sons, nor any of my children who shall receive from me any sum of money for their advancement in the world, shall be entitled to any part of my residuary estate without bringing the said sums of 4,000*l.* and 500*l.*, and all other sums so given to any of my said children, with interest thereon at 5*l.* per cent. per annum from the times of advancing the same respectively, into hotchpot." By a codicil the testator revoked the provision made by his will in favour of his son J., thereby causing a lapse of J.'s one-sixth of the residue. The testator died leaving his widow and his six children his next of kin:—Held, that the codicil must be read as if it expressly declared a trust in the executors of the lapsed share of residue for the testator's wife and children according to the Statute of Distributions; and accordingly (reading the will and codicil as one instrument) that the hotchpot clause applied to the shares taken by the children under the codicil, but that it did not apply to the widow so as to increase her share under the codicil. Re Stewart, Stewart v. Stewart, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 539; 49 L. J., Ch., 763; 43 L. T. 370; 29 W. R. 275.

1. A husband directed his trustees to pay the income of one moiety of his residuary estate to his widow during her life, and to divide the other moiety between his children in equal shares, as tenants in common. Advances were made by the testator to some of his children after the date of his will:—Held, that the advances could only be brought into account for the benefit of the children among themselves, and that the widow was not entitled to have her income increased by having the advances brought into account in estimating the residue. Meinertzagen v. Walters, 7 L. R., Ch., 670; 41 L. J., Ch., 801; 27 L. T. 326; 20 W. R. 918. Affirming 41 L. J., Ch., 407; 20 W. R. 505.

2. A testator having directed an allotment of his residuary estate into particular shares among his children, recited that he had made provisions by advancement for some of them on marriage, and proceeded to direct that "such advances should be brought into hotchpot," adding a declaration of the principle on which the money was to be brought into hotchpot upon a statement of figures and calculation of the amount of advancement, and of his residuary property:—Held, that the calculation of the testator was only an illustrative example of his meaning, and that the bringing into hotchpot should be according to the legal meaning of that term. Maclaren v. Stainton, 7 Jur., N. S., 715; 30 L. J., Ch., 723; 9 W. R. 908; 4 L. T., N. S., 715.

3. By will, a testator divided his property between his son and two married daughters, and he declared that the debts due to him from his son and his two sons-in-law should be "paid or accounted for to his executors," before his children should receive any part of his estate. By a codicil he cut down his son's interest to a life estate, and gave interests in share to his wife and children:—Held, that the son was not bound to pay his debts for the benefit of his wife and children, but only to bring the amount into hotchpot as regarded his two sisters. White v. Turner, 25 Beav. 505.

4. A husband gave real and personal property to trustees to convert, and after the death or second marriage of his wife to hold the proceeds for his child or children living at that time, and the issue then living of his child or children dying before that period, such objects to take as tenants in common according to the stocks, and not to the number of the individuals composing the class. His real estate was to be considered as converted from his death, and it was declared that no child, to whom or to whose husband he should have paid any portion in his lifetime, should participate in the trust property without bringing the portion so paid in his lifetime into hotchpot. On the marriage of one of his daughters in his lifetime, and before the date of the will, the testator covenanted to stand seised of a freehold house to her use, her heirs and assigns for ever. She having died leaving issue:—Held, that the hotchpot clause could not be extended to the issue of the testator's children, so that the value of the house given to his daughter was not to be deducted from the share of her issue who should be living at the death or second marriage of his widow. Hewitt v. Jardine, 14 L. R., Eq., 58; 26 L. T., N. S., 546.

II. SATISFACTION OF DEBT TO CHILD BY ADVANCES INTER VIVOS.

5. Father having to pay a legacy to his daughter, gives her a greater sum on marriage, and no demand of the legacy, though knowledge of it during the daughter's life. This held a satisfaction, and the husband not entitled. Seed v. Bradford, 1 Ves. 501.

6. Implied satisfaction of a debt from a father to his child by a marriage portion of a greater amount. Chave v. Farrant, 18 Ves. 8.

7. The doctrine of satisfaction does not apply to a gift by a father to his daughter, when he had in his hands, by permission of the executor, a legacy bequeathed to the daughter by the executor's testator. Acheson v. Fair, 2 Con. & L. 208; 3 Dr. & War. 512.

8. A father, administrator dur. minor. of his daughter, who was executrix and the residuary legatee of her grandmother's estate, agreed, that when she married plaintiff she should have 800*l.*, which, in the settlement, was called a portion. Ld. Hardwicke refused to decree an account of the grandmother's estate, as she had been dead twenty years, but directed that the father's representative should account for his personal estate as to the 800*l.* only, and interest at 4*l.* per cent. from the marriage. Wood v. Briant, 2 Atk. 521.

9. A. being indebted, as his father's executor, to the trustees of his sister's marriage settlement, settled on her and her children a sum to a larger amount, in consideration of the natural love and affection he bore them:—Held, that this was not a satisfaction of the debt. Drewe v. Bidgood, 2 Sim. & S. 424; 4 L. J., Ch., 33.

10. A sum of 1,000*l.* was, by deed of 1805, vested in A. in trust for his daughter G. until she attained the age of twenty-five years, or married; and after attaining that age or day of marriage, to permit G. to receive the interest during her life, and after her decease for her issue, as she should appoint; and in default of appointment, equally; but in case she should die previous to twenty-five, or day of marriage, or without issue, then over to the other children of A. On the marriage of G., A. by settlement of 1824 vested in trustees securities for money exceeding 1,000*l.*, upon trust for the separate uses of G. for her life, and after her decease for the use of the children of the marriage, as the intended husband should appoint; and in default of appointment, equally; and in default of such issue, for the intended husband, his executors, etc. This settlement did not refer to the deed of 1805:—Held, that the provision made for G. by the settlement of 1824 was a satisfaction of her claims under the deed of 1805, though it did not appear that the husband was aware of his wife's claim thereunder. A provision by a father, on the marriage of his daughter, of a greater sum than he owes her, is in general to be deemed a payment of the debt, and it is not necessary that there should be an express stipulation to that effect, or to show that the husband knew of the debt. Hayes v. Garvey, 2 J. & L. 268; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 90.

11. A legacy of 150*l.* given by a collateral ancestor to the daughter of A., which was paid A., and who after gave her 1,000*l.* portion, settled a church lease on her, and maintained her and her husband fourteen years, yet held no satisfaction. Chidley v. Lee, Pre. Ch. 228.

1. The assumption by a father of a debt due from his son to a partnership, in which the father and the son, along with other persons, were partners, was deemed an advancement of a portion to a less amount, to which the son would have been entitled upon the father's death. Ansley v. Bainbridge, 1 Russ. & M. 657.

2. Where a fund in trust for the father for life, remainder to his son and daughter, was sold out by the father, and who, on the marriage of the daughter, settled funds of much larger amount than the daughter's interest in the trust fund:—Held, to be presumed in satisfaction of her interest, and that such presumption was not affected by the ignorance or knowledge of her husband as to the rights of his wife in the trust fund; semble, that evidence might, however, be adduced to support or rebut the presumption. Plunkett v. Lewis, 3 Hare 316. And see S. C. 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 295; 8 Jur. 682.

III. Release or Bequest of Debt due from Child to Parent.

3. Semble, the cases in which the Court has held a debtor liberated from his obligation to pay a debt which once existed, and from which he has not been discharged by any testamentary instrument, are, first, where the act or declaration relied on creates an immediate discharge, which the debtor might plead as a release, or by way of accord and satisfaction at law, or which he might enforce in equity as against the creditor; second, where the discharge, though not immediate and absolute, but conditional, becomes perfect by the condition having in the event been performed; third, where the creditor intended to discharge the obligation at his death, and communicated that intention to those who would, under this disposition, take or represent his interest upon his death, and relied upon their fulfilment of his intention; and fourth (in strictness belonging to another class of cases), where the transaction supposed to create the debt or obligation is rather in the nature of an advancement by one in loco parentis, or is part of a family arrangement. Peace v. Hains, 11 Hare 151; 17 Jur. 1091.

4. In 1841 4,500*l.* was advanced by a testatrix to her son B., but no security or acknowledgment was executed by B. No interest was directly paid, but an allowance covenanted to be paid to B. by the testatrix was set off against the interest, which, at 4 per cent., came to the same amount. In 1843 the testatrix made a codicil, containing a declaration that the 4,500*l.* was due and owing from B., and that his appointment as executor was not to have the effect of cancelling the debt. In 1854 a further codicil was made, revoking the appointment of B. as executor but confirming the will and codicils in all other respects. In 1855 the testatrix wrote to B. as follows: "You must know when I gave you the money I never could intend it as a loan, but as an absolute gift; and I hope you will live many years to enjoy it":—Held, that this letter being written under a misapprehension of the nature of the original transaction, and being inconsistent with the previous conduct of the parties, did not discharge the debt thereby created. Knapp v. Burnaby, 8 W. R. 305.

5. C., being indebted to his mother, and being under an obligation to execute a security to her, refused to do so. The mother then promised to bequeath the debt to her son if he would execute the security. This was done, but the mother died without having bequeathed the debt:—Held, that the promise to bequeath could not be enforced in equity, and that the debt formed part of the mother's estate. Luxmore v. Clifton, 17 L. T., N. S., 460; 16 W. R. 265.

6. Destruction by father of securities given by sons:—Held, under circumstances, an advance and release of debts thereby secured. Gilbert v. Wetherell, 2 Sim. & S. 254; 3 L. J., Ch., 138.

7. Testator gave to his son "all sum and sums of money due to me, from him, on bond or bonds, or any other security." The son was indebted to testator by bond at the date of the will, and afterwards became indebted to him by another bond. The bequest does not include the subsequent bond. Smallmen v. Goolden, 1 Cox 329.

8. Testator bequeathed his residuary estate in trust for son and daughter equally, and declared that certain sums which he had lent to his son should be deducted from his share of the residue, and that certain sums which he had lent to C. W., his daughter's husband, on bonds, should be taken and allowed in account as part of her share; and, if the balance should appear to be against C. W., the trustees were to refrain from putting the bonds in force against him, and to take a security from him for payment of the balance by instalments:—Held, nevertheless, that C. W. was released from the debts due from him, and was answerable only for the excess (if any) of those debts beyond the amount of a moiety of the residue. South v. Williams, 12 Sim. 566; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch. 410; 6 Jur. 332.

9. A testator by his will, after reciting that there was due to him from his son 1,440*l.* or thereabouts, secured to him by bills or notes, or otherwise, released his son from payment of any interest up to the time of his death, and directed that he should have time for payment of the principal by instalments. Some years after he made a codicil not containing any reference to the release. At the date of the will the son was indebted to his father in 1,400*l.*, and between the dates of the will and codicil that sum was paid off and a subsequent advance of 1,291*l.* was made to the son by the testator, which was owing at the time of his death:—Held, that the release of interest was equivalent to a specific legacy of the interest on the debt due at the date of the will; that the legacy had been adeemed, and that the release did not extend to the interest on the subsequent debt due at the date of the codicil. Sidney v. Sidney, 17 L. R., Eq., 65; 43 L. J., Ch., 15; 22 W. R. 101; 29 L. T., N. S., 569.

10. A father, after reciting that his son was "now indebted" to him in various sums of money in respect of advances, and that he was desirous that his son should be released from the said several sums, and that the securities held in respect thereof should be given up to him, bequeathed to his son all the aforesaid several moneys, with the securities then in the testator's custody relating thereto, and also released him from all claims in respect of the aforesaid moneys, "and all other moneys due from him" to the testator. By a codicil the testator released the son from another specified debt for moneys misappropriated by the son: —Held, that the will must be construed as speaking from the death of the testator; and that the son was released from the repayment of money advanced to him by his father between the date of his codicil and of his death. Everett v. Everett, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 428; 47 L. J., Ch., 367; 26 W. R. 333: 38 L. T., N. S., 580. Reversing 25 W. R. 765; 6 L. R., Ch. D., 122; 36 L. T., N. S., 913.

IV. Set-off between Debt due from Child and Legacy from Parent.

1. A testator, who had advanced money to his son, and paid large sums on his account, bequeathed him a legacy without making mention of the debt:—Held, that the loan and unascertained balance must be set off against the legacy. Smith v. Smith, 3 Giff. 63; 7 Jur., N. S., 1140; 5 L. T., N. S., 302.

2. Executors of a testator, who was surety upon two promissory notes drawn by his son, borrowed 4,000*l.* to take up the notes, and stop proceedings by the creditors to obtain payment:—Held, that the share, to which the son was entitled as one of the residuary legatees under his father's will, was bound, as against subsequent mortgagees, to repay to the trustees, not only the principal due upon the notes, but also the interest upon the amount for which they were originally drawn. Willes v. Greenhill, 30 L. J., Ch., 808; 9 W. R. 217.

3. The testator gave his residuary personal estate to trustees, and directed the income to be paid to his son and three other persons during their joint lives; and that on the decease of his son, "the share of the income of the said residuary estate to which he would from time to time, if living, be or become entitled," was to be paid to his wife, Ann, for life; and on the decease of the survivor, "such a part or share of the principal as his said son would, if then living, from time to time, for the time being, be entitled to of the income," was to be for all the children of his said son. In another part of his will the testator, reciting that he had advanced his said son 284*l.* 10*s.*, declared that it should be treated as a debt due by him, and that he should account for it to his executors, who were to retain the same out of the share of his said son of the income of the said residuary estate. The son survived the testator, but died before his share of income (which had been duly retained by the executors) sufficed to satisfy the 284*l.* 10*s.*: —Held, that the executors were to retain the balance out of the income given to the wife. Knight v. Sterry, 18 Jur. 928.

V. Other Matters.

4. A parent's duty to provide for all his children will extend to posthumous ones. Wallis v. Hodson, 2 Atk. 116.

5. The father is the only judge of what is a proper advancement for his child. Cook v. Arnham, 3 P. W. 285.

6. Mother gave bond to son, conditioned to surrender copyhold estate to him, of which she was heiress:—Held, that she became a trustee for her son. Alison's case, 9 Mod. 62.

7. A second husband having, by letters in his lifetime, declared he was willing the daughter of his wife by her first husband should have the mother's whole fortune; as he is dead, these letters are to be taken as an appropriation of the fortune for the benefit of the infant. Grosvenor v. Lane, 2 Atk. 181.

The daughter is entitled to a provision out of her mother's fortune. Ib.

8. A son died before his father, leaving a widow, to whom he gave all his property. The son's estate being insufficient for the payment of his debts, the father, by a codicil to his will, directed his trustees and executors to pay the son's debts, and named the son of his son residuary devisee and legatee. The true construction of the father's codicil is, that he intended only the payment of such portion of the debts of the son as his son's estate would be insufficient to pay. Walker v. Lodge, 3 Russ. 459.

9. A father, by agreement, took all his son's property, undertaking to pay his debts:—Held, that, in the absence of proof to the contrary, the son was entitled to the surplus, if any. May v. May, 33 Beav. 81.

10. The Court will supply a defective conveyance in favour of children; but there is no case where the Court would decree satisfaction out of assets, if the father had no title to the thing he conveys to his child. Saltern v. Melhuish, Ambl. 251.

11. The word "parishioners" takes in not only inhabitants of the parish, but occupiers of land that pay tithes and duties. Att.-Gen. v. Parker, 3 Atk. 577.

The word "inhabitants" takes in all housekeepers though not rated, and also such as have gained a settlement and so become inhabitants, though not housekeepers. Ib.

12. Under a charity scheme, sanctioned by the Court, by which a parish was empowered to elect children for Christ's Hospital, it was provided that no child should be eligible unless born in the parish, or unless his parents or one of them should be or should have been parishioners or a parishioner of the parish:—Held, that the word "parishioner" must be taken in its ordinary sense of a person occupying premises which are liable to be rated in the parish. Etherington v. Wilson, 1 L. R., Ch. D., 160; 45 L. J., Ch., 153; 24 W. R. 303; 33 L. T., N. S., 652. Reversing 20 L. R., Eq., 606; 44 L. J., Ch., 637; 32 L. T., N. S., 789.

Therefore, when a man took a house temporarily, before the election, for the purpose of obtaining a qualification for his son, for which he paid rent and rates, and his son was elected by the parishioners:—Held, that the qualification was good, and the election valid. Ib.

1. The circumstance that property situate on the sea-shore, between a sea-side town and the sea, has not been assessed to the poor's rates of the parish in which the town is situate, is very slender evidence of the property not being within the parish. Perrott v. Bryant, 2 Y. & Coll. 61; 6 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 26.

2. Land had been in the possession of the parish officers for nearly sixty years, and no evidence that it had ever been in the possession of any other person since the will of the testator, the date of which was unknown. There was some slight evidence of a house which once stood on it having been an almshouse. The Court treated it as parish land, and directed a mortgage to be made to repay funds borrowed for its improvement. Re Dixon's Trust, 1 W. R. 244.

3. Under the statute 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, lands belonging to the parish are vested in the churchwardens and overseers of the parish, as a corporation. Therefore, where feoffees to charitable uses were empowered to sell and convey their lands to the commissioners under the Improvement Act:—Held, that the petition for the investment of the purchase-money should be presented in the names of the churchwardens and overseers of the parish in which the charity was established. Exp. Annesley, 2 Y. & Coll. 350; 6 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 81.

Semble, that churchwardens and overseers, having no corporate seal, have no power to execute a power of attorney, authorising a party to continue receiving the dividends of stock, notwithstanding fluctuations in the number and identity of the numbers of the corporation. Ib.

4. An account cannot be decreed against a parish: and a parish cannot, therefore, be made responsible for charity property applied during a long period to parish purposes under orders of the vestry. Exp. Fowlser, 1 Jac. & Walk. 70.

5. Parishioners are a body, and the churchwardens are only a name to sue by in personal actions, for the property is in the parishioners, and in all actions brought by churchwardens, it must be laid ad damnum parochianorum. Whitmore v. Bridges, 2 Eq. Abr. 204, pl. 5.

6. Bond given by parish officers for parish purposes, and under the authority of a vestry, not relieved against, and bill for contribution by the vestry dismissed. Jacquet v. Lewis, 1 Jur. 511.

7. Bill by a former churchwarden (trustee for an estate of the poor of the parish and forty-five inhabitants) against the parish officers to be reimbursed money laid out on account of the trust under an order of vestry, his accounts being passed and ordered to be paid on demand; Lord Chancellor expressed a strong inclination against the bill, and it not being signed by counsel, it was taken off the file. Plaintiff to pay costs. French v. Dear, 5 Ves. 547.

8. Where churchwardens, by order of the parish, commence a suit, the consent of the parish shall bind it, and the vestry book shall be allowed as evidence of the consent. Radnor Parish case, 4 Vin. Abr. 529, pl. 10.

9. Persons being churchwardens, overseers, and trustees of the poor, directed, in consequence of a resolution of the vestry, a prosecution to be instituted against certain persons accused of having concurred in the misapplication of parochial moneys: one of them having been compelled to pay the bill of costs of the attorney employed in the prosecution is entitled to contribution from the others. Wrightston v. Masterman, 5 L. J., Ch., 14.

10. It is not sufficient that the receiver-general swears to his accounts before the 5th of April to enable him to set insuper upon a parish, unless the account is declared and passed within that time. Exp. Liskeard (Borough), Wightw. 97.

11. The inhabitant of a parish where a modus is insisted on, is primâ facie a bad witness: if he occupies no tithable land, he must show it. Watson v. Lindsel, Bunb. 40.

12. Where there is a dispute touching money given to parishioners, none of the inhabitants of the parish can be witnesses. Dowdeswell v. Nott, 2 Vern. 317.

I. Privilege of Members of.

13. If a member of parliament sues at law, and a bill is brought to be relieved against that action, the Court will grant an injunction till answer, or further order. Anon., 1 Vern. 329.

1. A parliamentary appearance may be entered against a member of parliament, under the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 78, and the Thirteenth General Order. Denny v. O' Connell, Sau. & Sc. 116.

2. Member of parliament refusing to enter an appearance, the Court appointed a clerk in court to enter an appearance for him under stat. 45 Geo. 3, c. 124. Read v. Phillips, 16 Ves. 436.

Trader having privilege of parliament, by not paying money under an order of Court, commits an act of bankruptcy by stat. 45 Geo. 3, c. 124. Ib.

3. Bill against a member of parliament, praying relief, may be taken pro confesso, under 45 Geo. 3, c. 124, which Act is not confined to bills of discovery only. Logan v. Grant, Madd. 626.

4. The authority to take the bill pro confesso, against a defendant having privilege of parliament, standing out process of contempt under stat. 45 Geo. 3, c. 124, s. 5, is confined to bill for discovery only. Jones v. Davis, 17 Ves. 368. But see Logan v. Grant, 1 Madd. 626.

5. Process may be entered, and the suit prosecuted against a member of the House of Commons during the session of Parliament. Holmes v. Cave, 2 Jones 104.

6. During sitting of parliament, members are considered as being in town: therefore service at house in country considered bad. Att.-Gen. v. Stamford, Dick. 744.

7. Subpœna served during sitting of parliament at a friend's house in town where member staying, though he lived in the country and had no regular town residence, held good. East India Co. v. Rumbold, Hind's Pr. 92.

8. Ne exeat to restrain member of parliament going to Ireland, refused. Bernal v. Donégal (Marquis), 11 Ves. 43.

9. Member of parliament committed for contempt in writing threatening letter to Master. Lechmere Charlton's case, 2 Myl. & C. 316; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 185.

10. Privilege of parliament is no protection against an attachment for any contempt which is of a criminal kind. Wellesley v. Beaufort, (Duke), 2 Russ. & M. 639.

11. The course against a member of parliament for non-payment of money is first to move for a sequestration nisi, upon notice. Crawley v. Clarke, 3 Bro. C. C. 373.

12. A judgment-debtor summons will not lie against a member of parliament, and the privilege of parliament is not affected by the circumstance that the member has not been sworn in. European and American Finance Corporation v. M. P., 14 W. R. 135; 13 L. T., N. S., 447.

13. In cases where the process is sought against a member of parliament, it must be, that a distress may issue; instead of "that he may stand committed to the Fleet." Re Harrey, 6 L. J., N. S., Bky., 92.

14. Privilege of parliament exists at common law, and is not taken away by implication because a statute makes persons enjoying it subject to the law of bankruptcy, and does not specially reserve the privilege. Newcastle (Duke) v. Morris, 4 H. L. Ca. 661; 19 W. R. 26; 23 L. T., N. S., 569; 40 L. J., Bky., 4.

Before the Bankruptcy Act of 1861, traders having privilege of parliament were rendered liable to the bankrupt laws, but the privileg of freedom from personal arrest was expressl reserved to them. By s. 69 of that Act a debtors (non-traders as well as traders) wer made liable to the bankrupt laws. Nothin was said in the Act to reserve to debtors wh had privilege of parliament their freedom fro personal arrest:—Held, that the statute in cluded all debtors whatever, but that suc debtors as were entitled to privilege of parlia ment still continued to enjoy its protection. Ib.

15. The provisions of the Bankruptcy Ac 1869, ss. 121, 122, relating to the vacating o his seat in parliament by a member of th House of Commons who had been adjudge bankrupt, do not apply to the case of a membe whose affairs are in liquidation by arrangement Exp. Pooley, Re Russell, 41 L. J., Bky., 67; L. R., Ch., 519; 20 W. R. 735; 26 L. T., N. S., 81

The duty cast upon the Court of Bankruptc by s. 122, of certifying a member's bankruptc to the Speaker, is an ex-officio duty as betwee the Court and the House of Commons, and a application for such a certificate should not b made by a creditor. Ib.

16. On a motion for attachment of a membe of the parliament which was dissolved on th 24th of March, for contempt in not obeying a order of the Court to pay certain moneys, etc. to the liquidator of the company:—Held, tha the rule laid down in Goudy v. Duncombe (Exch. 430), that a member of parliament wa entitled to privilege from arrest for forty day both after and before the meeting of parlia ment, and whether after a prorogation or dissolution, applies to a person who was member of the old, but is not a member of th new parliament. Re Anglo-French Co-opera tive Society, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 533; 49 L. J., Ch. 388; 28 W. R. 580.

II. Qualification. Conveyances for

17. The Court will not assist a party in re covering an estate conveyed by him for a illegal purpose, such as to enable the grante to vote at an election, or sit in parliament Groves v. Groves, 3 Y. & J. 163.

18. Injunction granted to restrain the de fendant from suing for a rent-charge, grante to qualify him to sit in parliament, the purpos never having been answered. Platamone v Staple, Coop. 250.

19. Bill for re-conveyance of qualificatio to sit in parliament, given by father to his son dismissed with costs. Curtis v. Perry, 6 Ves. 747

20. Where a father assigned property to son for the purpose of giving a qualification and by a letter the son promised to pay th father a rent charge out of the lands equivalen to the rents, the Court refused to enforce th arrears of the rent-charge, holding the trans action to be only colourable. Re Johnstone, Ir. Eq. R. 227; 2 J. & L. 222.

21. P. being seised of an estate in a lease o lives renewable for ever, subject to a head-ren equal in amount to a rent which a sub-tenan of a moiety thereof held at, executed a agreement in writing to let the other moiet thereof, which was in his own possession, t D., his brother, for the lives of D. and tw others, and the life of the survivor, free fro rent and assessments during D.'s life, and after that to be subject to a yearly rent of 350*l.*; leases to be executed at the request of either party. There was evidence that the object of this gift was to enable D. to qualify as member of parliament for the City of Cork, where the lands lay. P. died intestate, in possession, and without having executed the lease:—Held, that this agreement could not be enforced against the heir of P., the object of it being to give D. a qualification for parliament, and that there was no agreement for valuable consideration, and that as an imperfect gift the Court of Equity could not enforce it. Callaghan v. Callaghan, 8 Cl. & F. 374. And see 4 Ir. Eq. R. 441.

Courts of equity do not decree specific performance of incomplete gifts. Ib.

Courts of equity will not decree specific performance of an agreement, the object of which is uncertain. Ib.

3. Where a person acting on behalf of the subscribers to a railway, who were then soliciting a bill in parliament, for the purpose of forming themselves into an incorporated joint-stock company, entered into a contract with the trustees of a road, whereby it was stipulated, that in consideration of the trustees withdrawing their opposition in parliament, and consenting to forego certain clauses, of which they had intended to press for the insertion in the Act, a formal instrument to the effect of the clauses should be executed under the seal of the company when incorporated, and the bill was accordingly allowed to pass unopposed, and without the clauses, an injunction was granted at the suit of the trustees, to prevent the company from violating the provisions contained in the omitted clauses. An agreement to withdraw or withhold opposition to a bill in parliament is not illegal, and a court of equity will enforce a contract founded on such a consideration. Edwards v. Grand Junction Railway Co., 1 Myl. & C. 650; 7 Sim. 337; 6 L. 4. A bill being introduced into parliament according to which the line would pass through Lord H.'s estates, and near his mansion, it was agreed between the plaintiffs (in error) and Lord H., that if he withdrew his opposition they would endeavour to deviate the line, and would, in six months after the bill passed, pay Lord H. 5,000*l.* for damage done to him by the railway made according to the deviated line, exclusive of compensation to be made to him if the deviated line was not adopted. Lord H. withdrew his opposition, and the bill passed; and, six months afterwards, Lord H. brought an action for the 5,000*l.* The plaintiffs (in error) pleaded that the agreement was secret and concealed from divers individuals through whose lands the railway was to pass, and from the legislature during the passing of the Act, and that Lord H. was a peer of parliament:—Held, that the agreement was valid, as Lord H., though a peer, had a right to bargain in his individual character for compensation for injury to his property, and it was not shown that the money was promised in consideration of giving or withholding his vote, or that any concealment was intended, or any fraud intended or committed by any body. Simpson v. Howden (Lord), 9 Cl. & F. 61. Affirming 10 Ad. & Ell. 793; 2 P. & D. 714; 8 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 281; and, removing doubts raised in S. C. sub nom. Simpson v. Howden (Lord), 3 Myl. & C. 97; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 315; 1 Jur. 703; which overruled 1 Keen 583; 1 Jur. 117; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 315.

5. The S. & B. R. Co. opposed a bill brought into parliament by the L. & N. W. R. Co., seeking to authorise a lease to that company of a scheme by the S. U. R. Co., whereupon an agreement in writing was come to between the companies, that, in consideration of the withdrawal of the opposition by the S. & B. R. Co., an account should be kept of the profits received from the traffic on the lines of the S. & B. R., and S. U. R. Co., and that the profits to be received in respect of the traffic should be divided between them in certain proportions. By reason of the withdrawal of the opposition the bill was passed:—Held, that the agreement was not a fraud on parliament, the public and their subscribers, or illegal. Shrewsbury & Birmingham Railway Co. v. London & North-Western Railway Co., 2 Macn. & G. 324; 2 H. & Tw. 257; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 90; 14 Jur. 921, 1125.

Held, also, that an agreement entered into by two companies, by which one of those companies agreed that it would not prejudice, or by an indirect or circuitous course interfere with the traffic passing on the direct line of the other company, was not illegal. Ib.

Held, also, on the construction of the Act of Parliament, that the operation of the agreement was not postponed until all the contemplated lines were completed; but that the rights and liabilities of the two companies inter se, on which the agreement with the third company depended, arose on the completion of any one of the contemplated lines.. Ib.

An Act of Parliament recited three other Acts, one only of which had relation to an agreement entered into between the plaintiffs and defendants. By the first section, on the completion of the works of the three lines of railways, by the recited Acts authorised to be made, so as to be opened for public traffic, or at such other period as might be agreed upon, the S. U. R. Co. were empowered to grant to the L. & N. W. R. Co. a lease in perpetuity of the undertaking. By the eleventh section of the same Act, it was enacted, that as each of the lines of railway should be completed, the same should be worked and used by the L. & N. W. R. Co., and for the purposes of such working, the L. & N. W. R. Co. were to exercise the powers before given by the Act to the S. U. R. Co. in relation to every such completed railway. Other sections of the Act spoke of the "lease of the said railways," and the "making of such lease":—Held, that, according to the true construction of the Act, there was no postponement of the rights of the parties to the benefit of the provisions of the lease, until the whole of the three lines had been completed. Ib.

1. A company will not be bound by the contract of its promoters, where the thing contracted to be done is ultra vires of the company, and to that extent Lord Cottenham's doctrine, that a company is bound by the engagements of the promoters, must be taken to be overruled. Shrewsbury (Earl) v. North Staffordshire Railway Co., 12 Jur., N. S., 63; 1 L. R., Eq., 593; 35 L. J., Ch., 156; 14 W. R. 220; 13 L. T., N. S., 648.

An agreement by the promoters of a railway to pay a sum of money to a landowner, through whose estate their line is to pass, for his countenance and support to the scheme, is ultra vires of the company when incorporated, and though adopted and acted on, will not be enforced against the company. Ib.

It is not illegal for the promoters of a railway to agree personally with a landowner, even (so long as there is no proof of corrupt influence on his vote) though he is a member of either house of parliament, to pay him a sum of money for withdrawing his opposition to their bill, or giving his countenance and support to their scheme; but such a payment is not an "expense incurred in obtaining the special Act, or incident thereto," within s. 5 of the Companies Clauses Act, and cannot so be upheld as a liability of the company. Ib.

2. In 1846, two competing lines of railway, the D. N. and the L. & Y., being before parliament, L. agreed with eleven persons (the promoters of the D. N. railway) to give them certain portions of land, at different prices; to withdraw all parliamentary opposition from them, and offer every description of opposition to the L. & Y. railway; and that if an amalgamation took place on any grounds, he would not oppose the amalgamated company. In case of the amalgamated company obtaining their bill, they were to adopt this agreement and all the covenants, etc., one of which was, that the D. N. Railway Company were to build a station near T., at a point to be approved by L., at which station all trains should stop. The two companies did amalgamate by the name of "the G. N. Railway Company." Litigation took place, both in equity and at law, upon the construction of the agreement, the validity of which was never impeached in such litigation. The G. N. Company now refused to stop their express trains at the T. station:—Held, first, that the agreement was legal in itself, and was now decided by authority; but semble, that if such authority had been wanting, it would not have been open to the defendants now to impeach it after having brought it forward as a defence in former litigation. Secondly, that the balance of inconvenience on stopping such trains was in favour of a specific performance of the agreement, and that the Court would not hesitate to interfere to restrain a breach of it on interlocutory application. Thirdly, that the amalgamated company's Act having been passed without opposition by L., which might reasonably be supposed to be in consequence of the agreement, acts done by the company under their Act were to be looked at as if done under the agreement. Lindsay (Earl) v. Great Northern Railway Co., 17 Jur. 522; 22 L. J., Ch., 995; 10 Hare 665.

3. An agreement to give a sum of money as a bribe to buy off opposition to a railway bill in parliament cannot be enforced. Scottish North-Eastern Railway Co. v. Stewart, 3 Macq. H. L. Ca. 382.

2. Liability of Companies or Promoters.

4. The projectors of a railway pending a bill in parliament for incorporating them made an agreement on behalf of the proposed corporation, in consequence of which a threatened opposition to the bill was withdrawn:—Held, that the corporation having received the benefit of the agreement were bound by it. Edwards v. Grand Junction Railway Co., 7 Sim. 337; 1 Myl. & C. 650; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 47.

The directors of a company, for the incorporation of which a bill was pending in parliament, had projected a railway to cross a certain turnpike road. The trustees of the road had taken measures for opposing the bill, unless clauses, restricting, with regard to such road, the general powers proposed to be granted in the bill, were introduced. The company, by their agent or manager, entered into an agreement with the trustees that, instead of such clauses being inserted in the Act, they should be embodied in an agreement between the company and the trustees. One of the terms was, that the trustees should not oppose the bill; and they accordingly made no opposition to it. The Act passed without the restrictive clauses originally contemplated by the trustees:—Held, that the incorporated company could not, as against the trustees, exercise a power conferred by the Act, in violation of the terms of the agreement. S. C. 1 Rail. Ca. 173.

5. The committee of certain subscribers applying for an Act to authorise the formation of a railway agreed with the plaintiff, a peer of parliament, through whose estates the railway had to pass, that in consideration of his withholding his opposition to their bill, the incorporated company, in the event of the railway being, under the powers of their Act, made to pass through the plaintiff's estates, in the line laid drawn on their parliamentary plan, should previous to entering thereon pay to the plaintiff the sum of 120,000*l.* for the value of the land, and for compensation; and that the company should, within three weeks after their incorporation, ratify the agreement. The plaintiff withheld his opposition to the bill, and it passed into an Act. The incorporated company refused to ratify the agreement; and, being empowered by their Act to take compulsorily the plaintiff's land in the line mentioned in the agreement, served on him a notice to treat for the same. Injunction granted, restraining the company from proceeding to assess the value of the land; and continued, notwithstanding the tender of an undertaking on the part of the company, not to enter on the land until the further order of the Court; and notwithstanding the time during which the company was authorised to take lands for the railway would have expired before the hearing of the cause. Petre (Lord) v. Eastern Counties Railway Co., 1 Rail. Ca. 462.

1. A company associated for the formation of a railway were proposing to solicit a bill in parliament. Some communication passed between their agents and the plaintiff, as to the manner in which the railway was to interfere with a field and plantation belonging to him, situate near his mansion-house. The plaintiff, understanding that the railway would not pass through a certain part of his field and plantation, and that his field would not be taken for a terminus station, took no immediate steps for opposing the bill; but subsequently, in the absence of the plaintiff from England, his agent, in answer to a notice served on the plaintiff's land-steward, requiring the whole of the field for the purposes of the railway, returned a written dissent to the bill, and the plaintiff was treated as a dissenting landowner throughout the progress of the bill. The Act having passed, the company, in exercise of the powers thereby conferred, required of the plaintiff the whole of his field and plantation:—Held, that, inasmuch as the plaintiff, in the communication between him and the company's agent, did not preclude himself from opposing the bill; and as he was, by the act of his agent, treated as a dissentient landowner, the company were not bound by any representation made by their agents, for which they had received no consideration. Hargreaves v. Lancaster & Preston Railway Co., 1 Rail. Ca. 416.

2. A railway company, wishing to obtain a bill for another railway, with a diverging line, which latter they could not make without the purchase of a particular property, which by their Act they had not the power to obtain, entered into an agreement with the tenant for life to purchase the same, and to perform all such acts as might enable him and the parties in remainder to sell the estate. All opposition to the proposed bill was withdrawn, and it passed, but with the omission of the diverging line, and the powers to buy this property. The tenant for life filed a bill for the specific performance of the agreement; and the company objected, that the plaintiff, being only tenant for life, had no title. The objection was overruled, and a decree for specific performance was made, and the defendants were ordered to pay the purchase-money into court. Hawkes v. Eastern Counties Railway Co., 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 243; 15 Jur. 979. Affirmed 22 L. J., N. S., Ch., 77; 16 Jur. 1051; 1 De G. M. & G. 736.

3. An agreement was entered into between A., a landowner, and B., chairman of the provisional committee of a projected railway company, whose line A. apprehended would injure his property, that, on A. withdrawing his opposition to the bill for the formation of the company when it was before Parliament, he should be at once paid his costs of such opposition by the promoters, and that he should also be paid, within one month after the passing of the Act, 250*l.*, and before the construction of the railway was commenced a further sum of 1,750*l.*, as for ascertained consequential damages. The Act passed, and A. brought an action against B., for the amount of his costs of opposing the bill before parliament, and for the 250*l.* In that action the company consented to a judge's order being made against them for the sums for which the action was brought. The company also commenced the construction of their railway without having paid A. the 1,750*l.*; whereupon A. filed a bill to enforce payment:—Held (overruling 24 Beav. 339; 3 Jur., N. S.,1014), that the company, by consenting to the judge's order, had adopted the agreement made between A. and B., and that the company was bound thereby, whether it would have been otherwise binding on them or not, and that it was not vitiated by one of its terms being that the company should pay the costs of the landowner's opposition to the bill. Williams v. St. George's Harbour Co., 2 De G. & J. 547; 4 Jur., N. S., 1066; 27 L. J., Ch., 691.

4. A railway company, having applied for an Act to extend their line, was opposed by a landowner; whereupon an agreement was entered into between the solicitor of the company and the landowner that the latter should withdraw his opposition, and if the Act passed, that the company should purchase his land on certain terms. Neither the appointment of agent, nor the agreement, was under the seal of the corporation. The Act passed, but the company did not take the land. The Court, considering that the company had done no act to take the benefit of the contract, refused a decree for specific performance, and declined to order the company to admit the validity of the contract, in order to enable the plaintiff to try his right at law. Gooday v. Colchester, etc., Railway Co., 17 Beav. 132.

5. Where the projectors of a railway company, in order to induce a landowner to withdraw his opposition to their bill, enter into a contract with him, in which the stipulation is that the contract is to be performed by the company after the company has obtained an act of incorporation from parliament, such contract to be valid ought to be one which might be lawfully made by the company after incorporation. Preston v. Liverpool, Manchester, & Newcastle-upon-Tyne Junction Railway Co., 5 H. L. Ca. 605; 2 Jur., N. S., 241; 25 L. J., Ch., 421; 4 W. R. 383.

It is ultra vires of a corporation established for the purpose of making a railway, to enter into a covenant to pay a large sum of money to an individual for not opposing the passing of the company's bill in parliament. Ib.

P. was a landowner; a railway company was projected, and for the intended railway some of his land would be required. He threatened to oppose the bill. The projectors entered into an agreement with him, that "in case the company shall obtain an Act of incorporation, the company should pay him 1,000*l.* for all lands required by the company for the due making of the railway, and 4,000*l.* for consequential injury to his estate and hall;" that a tunnel should be constructed in a particular manner through a part of his property, and that a passenger station should be made, etc. P. withdrew his opposition, and the bill passed; the railway was not made, nor were the lands required:—Held, that this was not a contract which on the mere passing of the bill entitled him to claim from the company payment of the money. Ib.

The cases of Edwards v. Grand Junction Railway Co. (1 Myl. & Cr. 650), and Petre (Lord) v. Eastern Counties Railway Co. (1 Rail. Ca. 462), impugned. Ib.

Afterwards, the projectors agreed to join with a rival company, calling itself the Liverpool, Manchester, & Newcastle Company, in applying for an Act for making a railway, the line of which, so far as the plaintiff's estate was concerned, was the same as the line of the projectors; and the two companies agreed to adopt the agreement with the plaintiff. The Act passed, and by it the two companies were incorporated by the name of the Liverpool, Manchester, & Newcastle Railway Company:—Held, that the incorporated company must be taken to be the parties on whose behalf the projectors entered into the agreement with the plaintiff. S. C. 1 Sim., N. S., 516; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 61.

The Court also was of opinion that, as the plaintiff had withdrawn his opposition to the bill in parliament, the company, according to the true construction of the agreement, were bound to pay the sums agreed to be paid to him, although they had not taken possession of any part of his estate. But the question as to the construction of the agreement being a legal one, a case was directed for the opinion of a court of law. Ib.

1. A landowner, being a peer of parliament, entered into an agreement with the projectors of a railway, stipulating among other things that they should take certain portions of his land, and pay him certain specified sums for the same, and by way of compensation for permanent injury to his mansion and estate, that they should execute certain works of utility and ornament on his property, and make and maintain a station adjoining or near to a particular road, at which all trains passing along the railway should stop for the accommodation of passengers, and for the receiving and unloading of goods, luggage, carriages, and horses; with a provision that the landowner should withdraw his opposition to the bill of the projectors and co-operate with them, and use his best endeavours to prevent the bill of a rival company from passing into law, but that if the bill of the rival company should pass, then the first-mentioned company should pay the plaintiff certain sums for the land the rival company might take, and recover from the latter and pay to the first-mentioned company the largest amount of price and compensation which could be obtained, and a provision that either of the parties might determine the agreement by notice to the other, if the bill of the first-mentioned company should not pass within six months: and a further provision that if the two projected companies should be amalgamated, the amalgamated company should pay certain sums to the plaintiff s purchase money and compensation; and tha the covenants and agreements concerning th purchase and taking of land, not makin deviations without the plaintiff's consent, an the making and maintaining such station, an all other the covenants and agreements ther inbefore contained on the part of the firs mentioned company, so far as the same shoul be applicable, should be performed by th amalgamated companies. By an Act passe within six months, the subscribers to the tw projected companies were incorporated in on body, and authorised to make certain of th projected lines of railway, and it was enacte that the shareholders of each company shoul be entitled in certain rates or proportions t the shares of the united company:—Held, tha notwithstanding the bill of the first-mentione company did not pass, the agreement could no be determined by a notice given by the pro jectors who were parties to the agreement, o by the amalgamated body. The amalgamate company having then taken the land referre to in the agreement, and paid for it the pric thereby stipulated, and having, in a suit i equity brought against them by the landowne claimed the benefit of the agreement, he filed hi bill for a specific performance of his contrac with the projectors of the first-mentione company, and moved for an injunction t restrain the incorporated company from per mitting any of their trains to pass a certai station near the road mentioned in the agree ment, without stopping thereat for the accom modation of passengers, etc.:—Held, that th union and incorporation of the shareholders o the two companies in one body, and the con solidation of their several shares under the Ac of Parliament, constituted an amalgamatio within the meaning of the agreement. Tha the amalgamated company was bound by th agreement entered into with the plaintiff b the projectors of the first-mentioned company That there was no objection to the agreemen in point of legality with reference to the positio of the plaintiff as a member of the legislature and that especially after the agreement had been the subject of consideration and con struction in the House of Lords and in the Court of Queen's Bench, this Court would no refuse to enforce it on any suggestion o illegality. That the plaintiff was therefore entitled to the injunction, and under the cir cumstances of the case, upon the interlocutory application before the hearing of the cause Lindsay (Earl) v. Great Northern Railway Co. 10 Hare 665; 17 Jur. 522; 22 L. J., Ch., 995.

Whether a corporation can be bound by the acts of an agent not appointed under seal, quære. But in this case the corporation was held bound at all events, as they had entered upon and taken possession of the land mentioned in the agreement, and otherwise asserted its validity. Ib.

The decision in the case of Edwards v. Grand Junction Railway Co. (1 Myl. & Cr. 650) did not proceed on the principle that the incorporated company was bound by the contract of a party acting as an agent for them prior to their corporate existence, but on the principle that the Court would not allow them to exercise powers acquired by means of such contract without carrying it into full effect; and in the absence of any adoption of the contract of such a party by the incorporated company, or of any attempt to exercise the powers thereby acquired, or of any part performance, the Court might refuse to enforce specific performance of such a contract against the incorporated company; but if they adopt or avail themselves of the contract, or exercise the powers acquired by its means, the Court will in that case not only negatively but positively interpose, and compel the performance by them of every portion of the contract. Ib.

1. A., a landowner, through whose estate a part of a projected railway was to pass, became a party to a deed with the projectors of the railway, by which he covenanted to withdraw his opposition to their bill, and to oppose a rival bill, and they covenanted to pay him a certain sum of money in case their bill should pass within six months from the date of the deed, or to pay him a different sum if the rival bill should pass within eighteen months of the date of the deed. It was then provided that, if the bill of the projectors should not be passed within six months from the date of the agreement, either party might put an end to the agreement by a notice. The deed then contained a covenant on the part of these projectors, by which they agreed, if the two companies should be amalgamated, to pay a certain sum within three months after such amalgamation. The deed was dated on the 16th March 1846. The two companies were amalgamated in June 1846; but no bill ever passed at the instance of these projectors alone. In November 1846 these projectors gave a notice to put an end to the agreement. A. declared in covenant against these projectors on that clause of the deed by which he was to receive a sum of money within three months after the amalgamation of the companies. The defendants pleaded that their bill had never passed into a law, that at the end of six months they had given notice to put an end to the agreement, but that they had not taken the plaintiff's land:—Held, that this plea was no answer to the action. Capper v. Lindsey (Earl), 3 H. L. Ca. 293.

2. Where upon an agreement for an intended railway between the proprietor of lands and the company, the latter, in consideration of withdrawing all opposition, and of the lands to be taken, and of compensation, etc., agreed to pay a certain sum in the event of the Act passing, and subsequently an opposition line was formed by another company, and upon both lines being referred by the House to decide on the more preferable, the agent of the latter company undertook that the adopted line should take the engagements entered into with the landowners by the rejected line. The line of the new company being adopted and the Act having passed without opposition on the part of the plaintiff, whose lands were taken nearly to the same extent by the new line:—Held, that the company were bound by the engagements of the original company with the plaintiff, and a demurrer to a bill for specific performance overruled. Stanley v. Chester & Birkenhead Railway Co., 9 Sim. 264; 1 Rail. Ca. 58. Affirmed 3 Myl. & C. 773; 1 Rail. Ca. 67.

3. A contract entered into by the promoters of a railway company with a landowner to pay a certain sum for the portion of his lands to be taken for the intended railway and for consequential damage, in consideration of which agreement the landowner withdrew his opposition to the bill:—Held, to be binding, although, after the passing of the Act, the intention of making the railway be abandoned, and no part of the land be taken or required. Webb v. Direct London & Portsmouth Railway Co., 9 Hare 129; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 566; 15 Jur. 697.

Specific performance decreed of an agreement to pay, for the lands to be taken for a railway, a certain sum, which included not only the purchase money of the lands, but compensation for the consequential damage to the property of the landowner; the case not being one in which compensation was, under the Act, a distinct subject of contract, but being merely an agreement by the landowner to accept a sum in full for the purchase and damage; the purchase being the substance of the agreement, and the damage an incident. Ib.

But, on appeal, specific performance was refused, as a decree would be productive of more injustice than justice in such a case. S. C. 1 De G. M. & G. 521; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 337; 16 Jur. 323.

The fact that the railway company had, by the lapse of time, lost the powers which the legislature had given them to take lands, did not deprive them of the right to hold lands which they had acquired during the existence of their powers, nor did it release them from their obligations which they had then contracted with reference to the purchase of land. Ib.

4. A bill in parliament to authorise a railway company to grant a lease in perpetuity to another railway company of certain projected lines was opposed by a third railway company, who withdrew their opposition on an agreement being come to that during the continuance of any lease to be authorised by the Act the companies should participate in portions of each other's profits, and that the two former companies should not take traffic on specified portions of their lines:—Held, differing from the opinion of Lord Cottenham on a demurrer (2 Macn. & G. 324), that the agreement was ultra vires, and ought not to be decreed to be specifically performed. Held, also, on the construction of the whole agreement, that if valid, it would have come into operation, although only a portion of the projected lines was completed. Shrewsbury & Birmingham Railway Co. v. London & North-Western Railway Co., 4 De G. M. & G. 115; 17 Jur. 845; 22 L. J., Ch., 682.

The directors of a railway company are trustees (in an important sense of the word) of their statutory powers, and an agreement entered into by the company amounting to a breach of trust will not be enforced to the prejudice, or not according to the views, of all or some of the shareholders, at the instance of parties cognisant of the circumstances. This proposition is not inconsistent with Hawkes v. Eastern Counties Railway Co. (1 De G. M. & G. 737). Ib.

5. The promoters of a railway company contracted with a landowner, the tenant for life of settled estates, and a peer of parliament, to pay him 20,000*l.* personally, for his countenance and support in obtaining their Act, such sum to be independent of the ordinary payment for land, severance, and other usual compensation. After the passing of the Act the directors of the company, when formed, ratified the contract, but having doubts whether, under the Lands Clauses Act, the landowner was entitled to the money personally, they covenanted by deed to pay interest upon the amount, which was to be retained by the company or paid into court. A separate agreement stipulated for the quantity of land to be taken for the railway, and the amount to be paid by the company:—Held, that the original contract and the contract by the directors after the formation of the company to pay a sum of money for countenance and support previously given in procuring the Act, were ultra vires of the company, and could not be enforced against the company as payment of expenses of obtaining the Act, under the Companies Clauses Act, s. 65, or otherwise. Shrewsbury (Earl) v. North Staffordshire Railway Co., 1 L. R., Eq., 593; 12 Jur., N. S., 63; 35 L. J., Ch., 156; 14 W. R. 220; 13 L. T., N. S., 648.

The doctrine laid down by Lord Cottenham, that a company after formation is bound by the contracts of its promoters, disapproved of; and so far as it applies to anything to be done which is ultra vires of the company, must be considered as overruled. Ib.

3. Enforcing.

1. In 1847 a railway company being desirous of making a branch line through lands of the Marquis of B., in consideration of his withdrawing his opposition to their bill, by their agent E. D. entered into an arrangement, termed "heads of agreement," which referred to a map annexed, by which the company agreed to purchase certain portions of the land marked A., B., C., and D. The company was to give the following sums: as to A. 400*l.* an acre for land required for the railway, and an additional 100*l.* for making a road; as to B. 1250*l.* an acre; as to C. 400*l.* an acre for what was required; as to D. 250*l.* an acre; and to pay 1,000*l.* for depreciation of homesteads. And the agreement contained the following clause:—"The above prices refer to the quantities of land required for the railway, and to the contents of the roads and severed portions, which are respectively to be accurately measured." The Marquis having withdrawn his opposition, the bill passed on the 9th of July 1847. On the 1st of September 1847 a formal draft agreement was sent by the company to the Marquis's solicitor, which endeavoured to convert the "heads of agreement" into an agreement conditional on the company requiring the lands of the Marquis. A correspondence ensued of considerable length, which ended in nothing. The Marquis died on the 18th of March 1848, having appointed the plaintiffs his devisees in trust and executors. On the 14th of October 1848 notice of the abandonment of the railway was given; but although a correspondence between the parties went on, the claim was not filed until the 18th of June 1850, and was not brought to a hearing until the 21st of February 1852. The compulsory powers of the company ceased on the 9th of July 1850, but the time to complete the construction of the railway was extendible to the 9th of July 1832:—Held, that it was not a case for specific performance, and that the plaintiff should be left to his legal remedy, the defendants entering into certain undertakings necessary for the trial at law. Stuart v. London & North Western Railway Co., 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 450; 16 Jur. 531; 1 De G. M. & G. 721. Reversing 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 451. n.; 16 Jur. 209.

2. Lessees of premises, occupied by them as a ropery, agreed to withdraw their opposition to a bill in parliament for a railway which would intersect the ropery. The agreement, among other stipulations, provided that the railway should be so constructed as that when finished the level of the ropery should not be altered, nor the surface of the ropery be in the least respect diminished:—Held, that the railway company were bound to restore the surface so as to be available for all purposes to which it might have been applied before the construction of the railway, and not for the purposes of a ropery only. Harby v. East and West India Docks and Birmingham Junction Railway Co., 1 De G. M. & G. 290.

3. The promoters of an Act for making a railway entered into a contract with a landowner, which was afterwards confirmed by the company, whereby, after agreeing, in the first nine clauses, to do or abstain from doing certain things which had sole reference to the completion of the railway, by the tenth they agreed to pay the landowner a sum of 4,500*l.* as purchase-money for the lands to be taken by the company for the formation of the railway, not exceeding eight acres, and for consequential damages to the property, and in consideration of this contract the landowner withdrew his opposition to the bill:—Held, that on the abandonment of the railway by the company, after the passing of the Act, a court of equity ought not to compel the company specifically to perform the agreement, and that the landowner ought to be left to his remedy at law to obtain damages. Principles on which the Court decrees or refuses to decree specific performance. Webb v. Direct London & Portsmouth Railway Co., 1 De G. M. & G. 521; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 337; 16 Jur. 323. II. INJUNCTION AGAINST OPPOSITION TO OR PROMOTION OF.

Opposing Bills.] 4. Under an Act of Parliament, by which the conservators of river banks were empowered to apply the funds under their control (which were raised by a rate upon the proprietors of adjacent lands) in doing, constructing, and executing all such works, acts, matters, and things, as they should, from time to time, deem necessary, proper, and expedient for putting the banks into and maintaining the same in a state of permanent stability:—Held, that they were authorised to apply a portion of the fund in watching, and, if necessary, opposing, a bill in parliament for a project lower down the river, which was likely to be injurious to the banks under their superintendence. Bright v. North, 2 Ph. 216; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 255.

1. The guardian of an infant, whose lands were intersected by railways and waggon ways, from which he received a considerable rental, obtained an order on petition, allowing him to oppose a projected company's bill in parliament, without a clause for compensation, in case of taking any of his lands, for loss or diminution in profits, by the transfer of the traffic to the company's railway. Monypenny v. Monypenny, 4 Rail. Ca. 226.

2. Semble, where the right of a party to petition parliament against a bill pending there depends solely upon his having some private interest which is likely to be affected by it, this Court has the same jurisdiction to restrain him by injunction from so petitioning as it would have to restrain him from bringing an action at law or asserting any other right connected with such interest. Stockton & Hartlepool Railway Co. v. Leeds & Thirsk & Clarence Railway Co., 2 Ph. 666; 5 Rail. Ca. 695; 12 Jur. 735. Reversing Rail. 5 Ca. 691; 12 Jur. 713.

Promoting Bills.] 3. A court of equity will not, at the instance of a shareholder, restrain a joint-stock company, incorporated by Acts of Parliament, which prescribe its constitution and objects, from applying in its corporate capacity to parliament, and from using its corporate seal and resources to obtain the sanction of the legislature to the remodelling of its constitution, or to a material alteration and extension of its object and powers. Ware v. Grand Junction Water Co., 2 Russ. & M. 470.

An injunction to restrain the Grand Junction Waterworks Company from applying to parliament for an Act authorizing the company to procure its supply of water by means of an aqueduct from the river Colne, instead of the Thames, as authorized by the existing Acts under which it was incorporated, was refused. Ib.

4. Commissioners under a local Act of Parliament, the object of which was to supply the town of S. with water, were empowered to raise funds by assessment, to be applied in certain specified ways, having immediate reference to the purposes of the Act, and in otherwise carrying the Act into execution:—Held, that although the commissioners might have properly applied the funds raised in resisting a proceeding in parliament prejudicial to the object of the Act; yet they were not justified in applying them to defray the expense of obtaining another Act of Parliament, giving more extensive powers for carrying out the object of the existing Act. Att.-Gen. v. Andrews, 2 Macn. & G. 225; 2 H. & Tw. 431; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 467; 14 Jur. 905.

5. A railway company, on the terms of being permitted to proceed with certain works, pending a trial at law of the question, whether such works were in conformity with the directions of an Act of Parliament, undertook to deal with the works as the Court of Chancery should afterwards direct. Before the trial had taken place, the company, without notice to the other parties in the cause, petitioned the House of Commons for leave to bring in a bill, one of the clauses of which proposed to provide that, in all proceedings at law and in equity, the works which had been done should be considered as a compliance with the Act of Parliament, and that there should be no power at law or in equity to compel the removal thereof. The petition was received, and the bill containing such clause was introduced into the House of Commons:—Held, that, although the conduct of the company was a violation of the undertaking entered into by them, the Court had no jurisdiction to restrain them from further soliciting the bill, which, having been entertained by the House of Commons, had become the proceeding of the legislature, and not of the petitioners. Att.-Gen. v. Manchester & Leeds Railway Co., 1 Rail. Ca. 436.

6. A corporate body, constituted for the improvement of the district under their control, by resolutions promoted a bill for the annexation of an adjoining district to their township, and caused the corporate seal to be affixed to a resolution for that purpose, which was ultra vires. The Court granted an interlocutory injunction pending the hearing of the cause, to restrain them as such corporate body from promoting the bill, and from using the corporate seal for that purpose. Att.-Gen. (Ireland) v. Rathmines and Rathgar Commissioners, 5 L. R., Ir., 114.

7. When commissioners appointed by a private Act are authorized to do all things necessary for carrying out the object of the Act, that will not give them authority to apply to parliament for a further Act, so as to allow their applying funds raised for the purposes of the first Act in discharging the expenses of obtaining the second Act. Att.-Gen. v. West Hartlepool Improvement Commissioners, 18 W. R. 685; 39 L. J., Ch., 624.

8. Applications to parliament on public and on private grounds distinguished; the latter may, in a proper case, be restrained; the former cannot, in any case, be restrained by injunction. Lancaster & Carlisle Railway Co. v. North-Western Railway Co., 2 Kay & J. 293; 25 L. J., Ch., 223; 2 W. R. 220.

The Court has undoubted jurisdiction to prevent the breach of an agreement not to apply for an Act of Parliament, but where the agreement was not to apply to parliament for a measure affecting the public benefit, the Court declined to interfere. Ib.

Quære, whether such an agreement is void, as being against public policy. Ib.

The defendants (a railway company) agreed with the plaintiffs (also a railway company) not to apply to parliament to make any line, or branch line, connecting the defendants' with the plaintiffs' railway, except a certain main line and branches, and certain deviations, for which application had been made to parliament by the defendants. And, in consideration of the premises, the plaintiffs, who had previously opposed, agreed to support the defendants' application, and, if required, to petition parliament in its favour. The plaintiffs performed their part of the agreement, and the defendants obtained their Act. The Court refused to restrain the defendants from applying to parliament for power to make a further deviation, on the ground that the bill, if passed, would be passed on public grounds, which this Court could not try, and with full knowledge of the agreement; while, if rejected, the inconvenience of opposing the bill would be compensated in damages for a breach of the agreement, assuming the agreement to be legal. Ib.

1. The Court has undoubted jurisdiction to restrain by injunction an application to parliament, but it is extremely difficult to conceive any case in which it would be proper to exercise that jurisdiction. Steele v. North Metropolitan Railway Co., 36 L. J., Ch., 540; 2 L. R., Ch., 237; 16 L. T., N. S., 192; 15 W. R. 597.

A railway company, in consideration of a landowner withdrawing his opposition, agreed to purchase his land at a stipulated price, and the agreement was confirmed by and embodied in an Act of Parliament. The company, being afterwards desirous of abandoning their line, gave notice to the landowner of their intention to apply to parliament for an Act repealing the section of the previous Act which confirmed the agreement. The Court refused, at the instigation of the landowner, to interfere by injunction to restrain the application. Ib.

2. Though it is clear that the Court of Chancery, by means of its jurisdiction in personam, can restrain an application to parliament for a private Act, it is almost impossible to conceive a case in which that jurisdiction would be exercised. Exp. Hartridge, Exp. London, Chatham, & Dover Railway Co., 17 W. R. 946; 20 L. T., N. S., 718; 5 L. R., Ch., 671.

Accordingly, where the Vice-Chancellor had restrained the directors (appointed under the provisions of a special Act) of a company from further promoting a bill in parliament, for referring the affairs of the company to arbitration, which had been passed by the House of Commons, and read a first time by the House of Lords, having been, before it was introduced into the House of Commons, approved by general meetings of the shareholders and mortgagees of the company, though very much altered in its progress through the House of Commons; on appeal, the injunction was dissolved. Ib.

An order that the directors of the company should pay into court moneys in their hands which had arisen from the tolls of the company, was also, on appeal, discharged. Ib.

3. Although the Court will in a proper case exercise its jurisdiction by injunction, touching proceedings in parliament for a private bill, or a bill respecting property, yet it has no power to interfere to deprive a party of the right of applying to parliament for a special law to supersede the rules of property by which he finds himself bound, whether arising from contract or otherwise. A party agreed with a railway company to withdraw his opposition to their bill in parliament, in consideration of their completing their line in a particular manner. The company finding themselves unable to carry out their contract gave notice of an intention to apply to parliament for authority to abandon their scheme. The Ld. Ch. dissolved an injunction granted by the V.-Ch., at the suit of the party with whom the company had contracted, restraining the company from making the application. Heathcote v. North Staffordshire Railway Co., 2 Macn. & G. 100; 2 H. & Tw. 382; 6 Rail. Ca. 358; 14 Jur. 859.

4. A company was formed in California for purposes connected with land in that country, but nearly all the shareholders were residen in England. A resolution was passed at meeting of English shareholders, authorizin the trustees to take steps for increasing th preference shares to an extent not allowed b the existing constitution of the company There was no intention to create preferenc shares, except with the sanction of the Cali fornian legislature:—Held, that an injunctio ought not to be granted to restrain the compan from acting on the resolution, for that th Court will not in general restrain parties fro applying to the legislature, whether of this c of a foreign country. Bill v. Sierra Nevad Lake Water & Mining Co., 1 De G. F. & J 177; 6 Jur., N. S., 184; 29 L. J., Ch., 176.

III. PARLIAMENTARY AGENT.

5. The lien of a parliamentary agent attache to books and papers intrusted to him by th law clerk of the trustees of a public road t obtain a renewal of their Act of Parliament Ridgway v. Lees, 25 L. J., Ch., 584.

A parliamentary agent, though nominate by the law clerk, has, in the absence of an agreement, a right to be paid his bill by th trustees directly, and not through the la clerk who nominated him. Ib.

A claim by a parliamentary agent to partici pate in the profits of a solicitor's bill wa rejected, as no such agreement was proved t have been made. Ib.

6. The opposers of a private bill had cost awarded to them under 28 & 29 Vict., c. 27 against the plaintiffs and another compan who were joint promoters, and they obtaine from the taxing officer of the house a certifi cate of the amount of such costs, but withou giving the plaintiffs any notice of the appoint ment for taxation, or any opportunity o being heard. The statute provides that th certificate shall be conclusive evidence as wel of the amount of the demand as of the titl of the party therein named to recover th same from the party therein stated to be liabl to the payment; and that the validity of th certificate shall not be called in question i any Court:—Held, nevertheless, that a cour of equity would restrain proceedings agains the plaintiffs upon a certificate thus obtained and that the other joint promoters were no necessary parties to the suit. Swansea Cana Navigation Co. v. Great Western Railway Co. 37 L. J., Ch., 238; 16 W. R. 1034; 18 L. T. N. S., 78; 5 L. R., Eq., 444.

7. Claims in respect of expenses incurred b parliamentary agents in getting the bill of projected railway company passed through parliament, and for moneys advanced by th intending contractor for the same purpose, ar debts which have been incurred on account o the promotion of the company; and the Court under the discretion given by The Railway Abandonment Act 1869, s. 5, will not hold i reasonable, as between such creditors and th surety to the bond, that their debts should b paid out of the bond, which, by the warran for the abandonment of the railway, has beer directed to be applied as part of the asset of the company. Re Brampton & Longtown

1. A Board of Trade warrant of abandonment of a railway, under the Abandonment of Railways Act 1850, and the Railway Companies Act 1867, was made with a condition that moneys deposited in the Court of Chancery as security should be applied as part of the assets of the company:—Held, that the solicitor and parliamentary agent, not being promoters of the company, were entitled to be paid thereout their costs and charges for obtaining the Act. Re Kensington Station Act, 20 L. R., Eq., 197; 23 W. R. 463; 32 L. T., N. S., 183.

2. A., a parliamentary agent, sued B. for work and services, in obtaining the passing of a private Act of Parliament. B. pleaded that it was part of A.'s employment to prepare and submit to parliament a clause in the bill for providing for the payment of the costs of passing the bill, out of moneys to be raised in pursuance of same, and that, by reason of the carelessness, negligence, unskilfulness, and default of A., the clause was so incorrectly framed, that after the passing of the Act containing such clause, it became impossible to enforce the payment of the costs in the manner thereby contemplated:—Held, that the omission of A. to prepare an efficient clause for the above purpose materially affected the quality of the entire work, so as to exclude the possibility of a part performance, and consequently, that the matter of defence was a good bar to the entire action, and did not merely go in reduction of damages. Baker v. Milward, 8 Ir. Ch. R. 514.

Held, also, that the fact of the imperfect clause having received the sanction of the legislature, did not excuse the act of A., in having prepared and submitted the same for their adoption. Ib.

IV. PRACTICE IN COMMITTEE.

3. The practice of the committees of the Houses of Parliament in not insisting on the insertion of special clauses in bills, at the instance of persons alleging grounds for their introduction, if agreements have been entered into between the promoters and the persons asking for the special clauses, whereby the promoters engage that the company when incorporated shall give to the persons asking for the insertion of the special clauses the same benefit as if such clauses were introduced into the bill, observed upon. Caledonian & Dumbartonshire Junction Railway Co. v. Helensburgh Harbour Trustees, 2 Jur., N. S., 695; 4 W. R. 671.

IV. Election Agent.

4. It is unlawful for any election agent or sub-agent, except the expense agent, to make payments on behalf of the candidate even for current disbursements, and such payments cannot be recovered from the candidate. An election sub-agent, who was a solicitor, employed canvassers for the work of the election, and paid them out of his own moneys. The expense agent having disallowed these payments, the sub-agent brought an action against the candidate in the district registry for the money expended. The candidate obtained the common order to tax the plaintiff's account as a solicitor's bill of costs, and then obtained an order to stay further proceedings in the action pending the taxation. On the taxation the candidate objected to the payments as illegal under the 2nd section of the Corrupt Practices Act 1863 (26 & 27 Vict., c. 29):—Held, that the payments were illegal; that although the sub-agent had an implied authority to employ canvassers, he had no implied authority to pay them, and, therefore, he could not recover the amount expended from the candidate. Re Parker, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 408; 52 L. J., Ch., 159; 47 L. T. 633; 32 W. R. 212.

Held, also, that the candidate could take the objection of illegality on the taxation of the bill of costs. Ib.

Whether the order to stay proceedings in the action pending the taxation was regular, quære. Ib.

V. Other Cases.

5. The committee of a projected railway company agreed to subscribe for a certain number of shares, in order to comply with the standing orders of the House of Commons, stipulating, at the same time, that in the event of the project failing, they were to receive the amount so subscribed in full, without any deduction:—Held, that such agreement was a fraud on the House of Commons, and therefore the stipulation for the repayment in full of the sum subscribed was void. Clements v. Bowes, 1 Eq. Rep. 553.

I. RETURN OF.

6. An order was made by the Vice-Chancellor on petition for payment to certain persons of a sum of money deposited on behalf of a projected railway company, in compliance with the Standing Orders of the House of Commons; but on a statement of circumstances rendering it improper that such payment should be made, an injunction to restrain the parties from receiving the sum deposited was granted by Vice-Chancellor, notwithstanding the order. Castendieck v. De Burgh, 4 Rail. Ca. 386.

7. Five of the directors of a projected railway company by petition prayed the payment out of court of a large sum standing in their names in the Bank of England, which had been paid in by them, in compliance with two standing orders, to two bankers and the gentlemen (not petitioners). The order was made. Exp. Boston & Sheffield Railway Co., 4 Rail. Ca. 230.

1. An injunction had been obtained, restraining the members of the managing committee of a railway company from obtaining payment of the deposit out of court, on account of alleged misconduct on the part of the company. It afterwards appeared that the deposit had been paid out of a fund which was the joint property of that railway company and of two others which had been amalgamated with it. The injunction was dissolved as to a part of the deposit, proportionate to that part of the fund which was the property of the other companies. Goodman v. De Beauvoir, 10 Jur. 938.

2. A railway company (whose bill at the close of a session of parliament was before the House of Lords) sought by petition to get the deposit lodged by them in the Bank of England, previously to the session, paid out to one of the five directors, in whose name the deposit had been made:—Held, that this case came within the alternative contained in s. 4 of the 1 & 2 Vict., c. 117, and the order was made for payment to the five directors, it not appearing that the one director returned in the prayer of the petition had been by all appointed to receive it. Exp. Wilkinson, Re London & Portsmouth Direct Railway Co., 4 Rail. Ca. 78.

3. Injunction granted to restrain the payment out of court to the directors of a railway company of the parliamentary deposit. Gilbert v. Cooper, 4 Rail. Ca. 396; 10 Jur. 580. Lewis v. Cooper, 4 Rail. Ca. 413; 10 Jur. 602.

4. Committee-men of a provisionally registered railway company entered into an agreement with two incorporated canal companies for the purchase of the canals by the railway company, in the event of power being obtained from parliament for that purpose, with a proviso that the committee-men should provide out of their own moneys a deposit, which was to be forfeited if no Act should be obtained. The deposit was paid by a cheque headed with the name of the railway company, signed by three committee-men, and countersigned by the secretary. It was paid by means of a credit transferred to the account of the railway company from that of another provisionally registered railway company, by some of the committee-men who were directors of both. This transaction was not within their powers in either capacity, but the money was subsequently repaid to the latter railway company out of the funds of the former. No Act was obtained, the first-mentioned railway company was dissolved, and was ordered to be wound up:—Held, that notwithstanding the unauthorized transfer of credit, the deposit was trust money of the first-mentioned railway company, as between its subscribers and the canal companies: also, that the form of the cheque, and the circumstances under which it was received, affected the canal companies with notice of the trust; and held, that a suit sanctioned by the Master under the Winding-up Act, by one of the subscribers to the first-mentioned railway company, on behalf of himself and the other subscribers, except those who were defendants, against the canal companies, the committee-men, and the official manager of the railway company for the recovery of the deposit, was properly constituted. Bryson v. Warwick & Birmingham Canal Co., 4 De G. M. & G. 711; 18 Jur. 47; 23 L. J., Ch., 133.

5. Where a bill is introduced into parliament for the construction of several railways, and the money is paid into court under the standing orders of parliament, and afterwards the bill is withdrawn as to some of the railways, the Court will not order a proportioned part of the fund in respect of the abandoned railways to be paid out to the promoters, as such withdrawal is not within the meaning of s. 5 of the 9 & 10 Vict., c. 20. Re Aberystwith Railway Co., 7 Jur., N. S., 510, 564; 30 L. J., Ch., 674; 4 L. T., N. S., 537.

6. It is not contrary to the policy of the 9 & 10 Vict., c. 20, providing for a deposit in respect of the estimated cost of works for which parliamentary authority is sought, to make the deposit with borrowed funds. Scott v. Oakley, 10 Jur., N. S., 648; 33 L. J., Ch., 612; 12 W. R. 728; 4 N. R. 258.

A bank advanced a sum of money on behalf of a railway company for the deposit required by parliament from the promoters, upon an agreement that unless the money was previously repaid, the bill should not be read a third time in the House of Lords. The money was accordingly deposited in the Court of Chancery on behalf of two persons, one of whom was named by the bank, and the other by the promoters. Afterwards the bank, without receiving the money, consented to the third reading of the bill in the House of Lords upon an understanding that the directors of the company would as soon as practicable procure a bond (upon the execution of which the deposit was by the special Railway Act made returnable) to be given to the Lords of the Treasury, and that the nominee of the company should concur in such acts as would be requisite to obtain a return to the bank of the deposit. The Act passed, and a bond was executed to the Lords of the Treasury; but the nominee of the company refused his consent to any application to obtain a return of the deposit. Upon a bill by the bank against the two nominees and the railway company:—Held, that the case was properly one for a bill in equity; that the agreement was neither illegal nor against public policy; and that the directors of the company were not necessary parties in their individual capacity. Ib.

Held, also, by the Master of the Rolls, that the mere fact of the deposit being with the Accountant-General of the Court of Chancery was sufficient to attract the jurisdiction of that Court. Ib.

7. A certificate of the withdrawal of a railway bill, signed by the Deputy Speaker, is sufficient to warrant the Court in making an order for the return of a parliamentary deposit, though there is no evidence that the certificate is signed during the illness of the Speaker. Exp. Stockbridge Railway Co., 2 L. R., Eq., 364; 12 Jur., N. S., 465; 14 W. R. 826.

The Court will, for this purpose, notice the standing orders of the House of Commons. Ib.

8. A petition for payment of the parliamentary deposit to the solicitor of a railway company, if sealed with the common seal, is sufficient authority, and a power of attorney is unnecessary. But the Court will not act upon any other documents, not being part of the petition, although sealed with such common seal. Re Dartmouth & Torbay Railway Co., 9 W. R. 609.

1. The promoters of a railway company paid their deposit into court, under the Railways Construction Act 1864, upon obtaining the usual certificate of the Board of Trade. The bill had passed through the House of Commons, and had passed the first reading in the House of Lords; but no further progress could be made, in consequence of the rules of the House requiring certain stages to be passed at an earlier period of the session:—Held, upon petition for payment of the deposit out of court, that although this case was omitted from the Railways Construction Act, the Court had power to make the order. Re Widnes Railway Co., 15 L. R., Eq., 108; 42 L. J., Ch., 352.

2. A railway company in 1873 obtained an Act of Parliament authorizing them to construct a branch line, the parliamentary deposit being paid by B., who was the principal proprietor in the company, and the Act containing the usual provisions for return of the deposit, if, as happened, the requirements of the Act were not complied with. In 1875 a receiver of the branch undertaking was appointed, and in 1876 an Act was obtained extending the time for completion of the line to May 1881. In 1880 an Act was obtained for the abandonment of the undertaking providing that rights to compensation should not be affected thereby, and that, subject to such rights, and the protection of the company's creditors, the Court might order the deposit money to be repaid to the persons named in the parliamentary warrant. There were no creditors' claims in respect of the branch undertaking, but the costs of the Act of 1876 and the Abandonment Act were owing to B., who had paid them, and the general creditors of the company had large claims. On the application of B., as representing the persons named in the warrant, for the payment to him of the deposit money:—Held, that the deposit money had become part of the general assets of the company, and must be applied for the benefit of the general creditors. Re Manchester & Milford Railway Co., 45 L. T. 129.

3. A company, incorporated under the Companies Acts, obtained a provisional order to construct a tramway. No tramway was ever commenced, and the company was ordered to be wound up. The only shareholders were the subscribers to the memorandum of association; the only debt due from the company was less than the amount of the deposit fund. The Court, on the petition of the official liquidator, under the discretion given by the Tramways Act 1870, rule 26, ordered the deposit fund to be paid out to the petitioner, to be applied by him for the benefit of the company's creditors, and refused to consider it forfeited to the Crown. Re Tynemouth Borough Tramway Co., 33 L. T., N. S., 8.

4. A private Act of Parliament incorporating a company provided that on non-completion of the proposed works or failure to pay up and expend on the works half the authorized capital, the parliamentary deposit should (if not required for compensation to landowners or for damage to public roads) be either forfeited to Her Majesty, or, "in the discretion of the Court, if the company is insolvent and has been ordered to be wound up or a receiver has been appointed," be wholly or in part paid to such receiver or to the liquidators of the company, or be otherwise applied as part of the assets of the company "for the benefit of the creditors thereof." The works were not executed, a small portion only of the capital was paid, and the company was ordered to be wound up on the ground that it was unable to pay its debts. There were no claims for compensation:—Held, that the winding-up order was not a proof that the company was insolvent within the meaning of the Act, and that the discretion to apply the deposit in payment of the company's debts would not arise until calls to the extent of the whole authorized capital still unpaid had been made upon the contributories. Re Bradford Tramways Co., 25 W. R. 88; 4 L. R., Ch. D., 18; 46 L. J., Ch., 89; 35 L. T., N. S., 827.

The order of the Vice-Chancellor (2 L. R., Ch. D., 373; 24 W. R. 815; 34 L. T., N. S., 478) directing payment to the liquidators was therefore discharged, without prejudice to any future application by the liquidators if they could show that, after using all the assets which could reasonably be got in, they were still unable to pay the debts. Ib.

5. The intention of the Board of Trade regulations under the Tramways Act 1870, relative to the ultimate disposal of the deposit made by a tramway company on obtaining a provisional order authorizing the construction of their tramway, is, first, that the promoters of the company are not, by any subterfuge or device, to get back the deposit, either directly or indirectly, if the tramway is not completed; secondly, that, on an application under the 28th rule for application of the deposit, the creditors only are to be considered, and not the shareholders; and, thirdly, that the only creditors to be considered are meritorious creditors, coming with a bonâ fide case. Otherwise the deposit will be forfeited to the Crown. Re Lowestoft, Yarmouth, & Southwold Tramways Co., 6 L. R., Ch. D., 484; 46 L. J., Ch., 393; 25 W. R. 525; 36 L. T., N. S., 578.

6. An application for payment out of a parliamentary deposit not previously payable is long vacation business. Re Wigan Junction Railway Act, 44 L. J., Ch., 774; 10 L. R., Ch., 541.

II. INVESTMENT.

7. Where, by the prayer of a petitioner, the required parliamentary deposit of a railway company is sought to be invested in Exchequer bills, the Court will give the parties liberty to lay out the same in any of the parliamentary stocks by the accountant-general, or in Exchequer bills from time to time, as may be most convenient to the parties. Re Manchester, Huddersfield, & Great Grimsby Railway Co. 4 Rail. Ca. 204.

2. A sum of money deposited in the Bank of England pursuant to 9 Vict., c. 20, is not cash under the control of the Court within the order of the 1st of February 1861, and can only be invested in consolidated or reduced bank annuities, or in Government securities, as provided by s. 4. Exp. Great Northern Railway Co., 9 L. R., Eq., 274.

An application for an order for investment of such a fund in Bank Stock or New East India Stock (in which trustees are authorized to invest by the 30 & 31 Vict., c. 132) refused. Ib.

3. An application by the promoters of a new railway that the parliamentary deposit might be invested by a private broker, who offered more advantageous terms than the paymaster-general's broker, was refused. *Exp. PARTICEPS CRIMINIS.

5. A party to a fraud cannot file a bill against his accomplice to prevent him from taking more of the spoil than his share, for the Court will not interfere to enforce honour among thieves. Hamilton v. Ball, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 191.

6. A., the proprietor of a newspaper, prevailed on B. to make and deliver to the Stamp Office, an affidavit, that he, B., was the proprietor of the paper. B. afterwards agreed to sell the paper to D. A. having become insolvent, his assignees filed a bill to set aside the sale for fraud:—Held, that as B. had, at A.'s instance violated the 38 Geo. 3, c. 78, which requires th true names of the proprietors of newspapers t be inserted in the affidavit, his assignees wer not entitled to the relief as required. Harme v. Westmacott, 6 Sim. 284.

7. A petitioning creditor fraudulently sue out a commission, and prevails upon twelv persons to make proofs on fictitious debts, fo the purpose of carrying the choice of assignee: which object was attained, in opposition t the bonâ fide creditors. These assignees ar afterwards removed, but not till one of ther absconds with a large sum belonging to th bankrupt's estate; and when the whole frau is at length discovered, the proofs are ordere to be expunged, and the dividends received o them repaid. Two of the parties, however, hav in become insolvent, are unable to repay the divi dends, and the estate in other ways sustain considerable loss from fraudulent proofs. Th fresh assignees, who had been appointed unde an order of the Court, petitioned that five of th party who had made such fraudulent proof might be ordered to make good the sum at stracted by the defaulting assignee, and all th other loss which had thus been occasioned t the estate. Semble, 1st. That as there was n proof of a general conspiracy among thes parties to put any one fictitious debt on th proceedings, but merely a conspiracy of eac individual, with the petitioning creditor, t prove his own fictitious debt, the Court coul not make the order prayed for. 2nd. That a it did not appear that any of the parties con templated the abstraction of the funds, by th defaulting creditor, at the time of their respec tive proofs, the Court had no jurisdiction t order them to make good the loss experience by his default, which was only a substantiv ground of charge against him, in his characte of assignee. Exp. Brand, 1 Dea. 308; 2 Mont & A. 707; 5 L. J., N. S., Bky., 57.

8. A person who is particeps criminis is no entitled to the costs of setting aside bond given for an illegal consideration. Morgan v Bruen, Ll. & G. temp. Sugd. 180.

9. Fraud affects only as far as it extends the Court will not say participes criminis shal have no benefit of the agreement in any par Lane v. Page, Ambl. 235.

10. Where once a fraud has been committe not only is the person who has committed th fraud precluded from deriving any benefit fro it, but every innocent person is so likewise unless there has been some consideratio moving from himself. Scholefield v. Templer 1 Johns. 155; 5 Jur., N. S., 619; 28 L. J., Ch. 452.

By seeking to derive any benefit under suc a transaction, or to retain any benefit resultin therefrom, a third person, however innocent o the fraud in its inception, becomes particep criminis. Ib.

It is otherwise when there has been con sideration moving from the innocent party Ib.

11. Stock was settled on a wife, for her sepa rate use, for life, with a power of appointmen by will. The trustees, at the request of hus band and wife, sold out the stock, and pai the proceeds to the husband, who afterward became bankrupt. The wife filed a bill t compel the trustees to replace the stock, an obtained a decree, under which the trustees transferred part of the stock into court, and they were allowed time to transfer the remainder. The wife died, having by her will appointed the stock to her husband, and appointed him her executor. He filed a bill of revivor and supplement against the trustees and his assignees, claiming the stock under the appointment, and praying the same relief as his wife might have had. But, as he had received proceeds of the stock sold out, his bill was dismissed. Nail v. Punter, 5 Sim. 555.

1. This Court will entertain a bill for a discovery, and to perpetuate evidence, in aid of a defence to an action at law on a contract, although the discovery and evidence are to establish that the contract was void, as corrupt, illegal, and unconstitutional, and that both parties were in pari delicto. Longfield v. Aubrey, 1 Hog. 300.

2. The Court would not enforce the terms of a contract between two solicitors, whereby the one, who was solicitor for minors in a matter and several causes, agreed, without notice to the Court or the friends of the minors, to hand over to the other, and the other to undertake, the business on behalf of the minors, to be conducted by the latter in the name of the former, on the terms of getting half the profits, although the latter had, in pursuance of the contract, conducted the business for a year, and made large expenditures, such contract being at variance with the interests of minors and the policy of the Court. Both parties to such a contract being in pari delicto, the Court would not act for either of them. Exp. Leech, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 371.

3. An agreement between an insolvent debtor and his assignee, by which an estate of the insolvent is to be held in trust by the assignee, to pay out of the rents and profits, annuities to the insolvent and his wife, and the surplus towards the extinction of a debt owing to the assignee, is a transaction which, being brought before a court of equity, at the instance of the insolvent himself, must be rescinded, on the ground of public policy. M'Neill v. Cahill, 2 Bligh. 229.

4. Parties to a fraudulent assignment by trader, cannot sue out a commission of bankruptcy founded thereon. Exp. Kilner, Buck. 104.

5. The commission of a petitioning creditor, who with the knowledge of two or three of the creditors, received his debt from the bankrupt, superseded under the stat. 5 Geo. 2, c. 30, s. 24, at the petition of a creditor privy to the transaction. Whether that creditor will be permitted to sue out a new commission, quære. Exp. Brine, Buck. 19.

6. Party assenting to deed creating act of bankruptcy is incompetent as petitioning creditor. Back v. Gooch, 1 Holt 13. But see Doe v. Anderson, 1 Stra. 262.

7. Creditor assenting and acting under absolute bill of sale for benefit of creditors, but who do not sign deed, cannot sue out commission against debtor, on ground of bill of sale or commission of bankruptcy. Exp. Shaw, Madd. 598.

8. The rule "in pari delicto melior est conditio possidentis" preventing suit is not universal, admitting degrees of guilt by concurring in the same criminal act. Osborne v. Williams, 18 Ves. 379.

9. In general cases, where a debt is cut down by the policy of the law, the complaint may be by particeps criminis. Exp. Kirk, 15 Ves. 469.

10. Relief given to particeps criminis on ground of public policy. Hatch v. Hatch, 9 Ves. 292; 1 Smith 226. But no costs. Debenham v. Ox, 1 Ves. 277.

11. Smuggling transactions, or illegal dealings in stock, shall be brought into an account, though the Court would not execute the contract. Watts v. Brooks, 3 Ves. 613. But see Knowles v. Haughton, 11 Ves. 168; 1 Ball. & B. 360.

12. Where parent had objected to daughter's marriage with an individual, and she entered into a secret bond to forfeit 500*l*. if she did not marry him in thirteen months after parent's death: on her application for relief against bond, decreed that it should be cancelled, such a transaction being encouragement to disobedience and fraud on parents. Woodhouse v. Shepley, 2 Atk. 535.

13. This Court will decree money overpaid in pursuance of an usurious contract to be accounted for, notwithstanding the agreement of the oppressed party to allow such payments. Bosanquett v. Dashwood, Forrest. 38.

In the case of money lost at gaming and paid, possibly this Court will refuse relief, the plaintiff in equity being particeps criminis. Ib.

14. Particeps criminis, in the case of fraud, is the most proper person to discover and prove it, especially when what he so proves turns to his own prejudice. May v. Harman, 4 Bro. P. C. 156.

15. A., entrusted by B. to receive the interest on tallies, receives the principal and fails, and afterwards compounds with his creditors; but B. would not come in without having a greater composition than the rest, which A. agrees to give; A. brings a bill to be relieved against this underhand agreement, but he having been guilty of a great fraud and breach of trust, and having agreed to make some satisfaction, the Court would not relieve him, but dismissed the bill. Small v. Brackley, 2 Vern. 602.

16. Account decreed where one party had freighted ship with contraband goods. Dover v. Opey, 2 Eq. Abr. 7.

17. Parties to a contract which is against public policy or illegal, are not always regarded as being in pari delicto, but public policy is sometimes considered as advanced by allowing either or the more excusable of the parties to sue for relief against the transaction. Reynell v. Sprye, Sprye v. Reynell, 8 Hare 275. Affirmed 1 De G. M. & G. 660; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 633.

18. Where a party filed a bill to be relieved from a deed, made in consideration of future cohabitation, and in pursuance of an alleged contract to provide for the woman only during the connection, and the bill was so framed as to make it the gist of the complaint, that the immoral contract had not been performed on the part of the woman, the bill was dismissed. Batty v. Chester, 5 Beav. 103.

19. Merchants who, by the direction of an executor, their commercial correspondent, applied a fund which they knew to be part of testator's assets, in satisfaction of advances made by them in the course of trade to relieve the embarrassments of their correspondent, were held to be responsible for the fund so applied, to general pecuniary legatees, under the will of the testator. Wilson v. Moore, 1 Myl. & K. 337.

1. Where the time for opening a fiat expires by the voluntary act of the petitioning creditor, and it appears that it was issued under suspicious circumstances, namely, for effecting a compromise with the creditors, and not with a bonâ fide intention of working it; and a second fiat is issued by another creditor under Lord Loughborough's General Order, the Court will not supersede the second fiat merely because it was issued by a creditor who was a party to the intended compromise under the first; unless it is clearly for the advantage of the general creditors that the first should stand and the second be superseded. Exp. Anger, 2 Dea. & Ch. 67.

2. If, at a meeting of creditors, one of the creditors dissent from the execution of a deed of assignment, quære, whether he can issue a commission upon it. Exp. Bayly, Mont. & M. 438.

3. Where a liability arises from the wrongful act of several parties, each is liable for all the consequences, and there is no contribution between them, and each case is distinct, depending upon the evidence against each party. Att.-Gen. v. Wilson, Cr. & Ph. 1; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 53; 4 Jur. 1174. And see S. C. on demurrer, 9 Sim. 30; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 76; 1 Jur. 890.

4. Contribution between co-trustees for breach of trust. Robinson v. Evans, 7 Jur. 738.

5. One makes a lease, and the lessee covenants to pay the rent and to repair; the lessee makes 100 under-leases. The rent is behind, and the premises out of repair; the original lease is avoided for non-payment of rent. Some of the under-lessees bring a bill to be relieved against the forfeiture; equity will not apportion the rent; but the plaintiffs must pay the whole rent in arrear and repair all the houses, and may compel the other under-lessees to contribute. Webber v. Smith, 2 Vern. 103.

6. Contribution enforced among assignees in bankruptcy, to reimburse a payment by one under an order for a loss occasioned by their joint act; and the objection that the defendants acted only for conformity upon the representation and advice of the plaintiff, did not prevail. Lingard v. Bromley, 1 Ves. & B. 114.

No contribution between wrongdoers upon entire damages, for a part. Ib.

7. The principle that no rights of indemnity and contribution exist as between wrongdoers is confined to cases where the transaction is actually illegal or void, or where the fraud is so great that on moral grounds the Court will not entertain a suit for the relief of the malfeasors. The principle is further limited to cases where the fraudulent or illegal transaction is itself the basis of the claim, and does not apply where the transaction, though leading to that which is the basis of the claim, is separable from it. Power v. Hoey, 19 W. R. 916.

8. M. wrote to B. to the effect that he had forged B.'s name by putting it with his own to a bill of exchange for 100*l.*, which would become due in a few days. He implored B. to meet the bill, and offered, if he would d so, to give him a bill of sale of all his propert to secure what he owed him. B., who wa already an unsecured creditor of M. for 100*l* paid the 100*l.* bill, and took a bill of sale o all M.'s property to secure 200*l.* Three week later B. entered and sold the property an satisfied his debt. The following month M was adjudicated a bankrupt, the act of bank ruptcy alleged being the execution of the bil of sale. The trustee applied for an order tha B. should refund the proceeds of sale receive by him, on the ground that the bill of sal was void as being given only for a past debt and as being the price of a bargain for th concealment of a felony:—Held, that th wrong done not being an offence against th bankrupt law, the trustee was in no bette position than the bankrupt would have been and that, the latter having been a party t the wrong, the maxim In pari delicto potio est conditio possidentis would have applied and no action could have been maintained Exp. Butt, Re Mapleback, 46 L. J., Bky., 14; L. R., Ch. D., 150; 13 Cox C. C. 374; 35 L. T. N. S., 503; 25 W. R. 103. Reversing 35 L. T. N. S., 172.

Semble, that the transaction did not amoun to compounding a felony, or to misprision o felony. Ib.

XI. CONVEYANCES 5419.

XII. OTHER MATTERS, 5420.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

1. Decree for partition is matter of right. Parker v. Gerrard, Ambl. 236.

2. A series of decisions has settled that a commission of partition is due of common right to every tenant in common, however minute his share, even though the division might diminish, or possibly destroy the value to both. North v. Guinan, Beat. 342.

3. Difficulty in making a partition no objection to a decree for it. Warner v. Baynes, Ambl. 589.

4. The estate of a tenant in common cannot be so settled on marriage as to prevent the right of the others to make partition. Abel v. Heathcote, 2 Ves. J. 100; 4 Bro. C. C. 276.

5. Partition is a proceeding at common law; but chancery entertains suits for it, though no original jurisdiction, and no express authority is given by the statute as to joint tenants. Mundy v. Mundy, 2 Ves. J. 124.

6. No objections to partition that other persons may come into esse and be entitled. Wills v. Slade, 6 Ves. 498.

7. On bill for partition and account of rents and profits, a decree for that purpose will be made, and relief will not be confined merely to a partition. Lorimer v. Lorimer, 5 Madd. 363.

8. Partition between tenants in common and joint tenants, by statute 31 Hen. 8 (extended by statute 32 Hen. 8), though limited interests, for life or years; and the same right in equity, by bill, as at law by writ. Baring v. Nash, 1 Ves. & B. 555.

Bill for partition by lessee for years. Id. 551.

No objection to a partition from the minuteness of the interest, the inconvenience, difficulty, or reluctance of the other tenants in common. Id. 554.

Equity has a concurrent jurisdiction in partition. Id. 555.

Partition is discretionary in court in case of suspicious title; but if clear it is a matter of right. Ib.

9. Jurisdiction in cases of partition confined to statute 31 Hen. 8. Scott v. Fawcett, Dick. 299.

10. On a partition in chancery, every part of the estate need not be divided, but sufficient if each tenant in common, etc., have an equal share of the whole. Clarendon v. Hornby, 1 P. W. 446.

11. On a bill for a partition, when there is a small failure in proof of title, or when the shares of the parties are alone doubtful, the Court will grant an inquiry; but where there is a material omission in the proof, the plaintiff's title to the bill will be dismissed with costs. This course was pursued, though the plaintiff had recovered in ejectment a portion of the estate from the defendant, it not appearing what were the circumstances of that proceeding, or whether the plaintiff's title, as alleged, was therein proved. Jope v. Morshead, 6 Beav. 213; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 190.

12. Difference between partition at law and in equity. The former operates by the judgment of a court of law, conclusive on the parties, the latter proceeds on conveyances to be executed between the parties, and cannot be effectual if the parties be incompetent to execute. Whaley v. Dawson, 2 Sch. & Lef. 372.

13. A partition will be decreed in equity only where the plaintiff would be entitled to a partition at law. O'Hara v. Strange, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 262.

14. Where in a suit for partition the defendants are desirous that there shall be no partition of their several shares, the partition may be confined to the aliquot share of the plaintiff. Hobson v. Sherwood, 4 Beav. 184.

15. A court of equity, in decreeing a partition, does not act ministerially and in obedience to the call of those parties who have a right to the partition, but upon its general jurisdiction, and will therefore adjust the equitable rights of all the parties interested in the estate, and for that purpose give special instruction to the commissioners of partition, and even in cases of necessity nominate the commissioners. A court of equity, in decreeing a partition, will have regard to the provisions of the stat. 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 31, s. 4. Story v. Johnson, 2 Y. & Coll. 586.

II. IN WHAT CASES.

1. Of what Property, 5402.
2. Where Remedy at Law, 5402.
3. Where Power of, or Trust for, Sale or Exchange, 5403.

1. Of what Property.

1. A commission for partition of a house decreed. Turner v. Morgan, 8 Ves. 143.

2. Decree for partition among several joint proprietors; and no objection from a covenant not to enclose without general consent, rights of common, and the inequality and uncertainty of the shares, in proportion to other estates. The decree directed a reference to the Master to inquire whether the plaintiff and defendants, or any and which, are entitled; and in what shares, according to the respective values of the other estates; and then a commission to divide accordingly; the costs of the partition to be borne by the parties in proportion to the value of their respective interests; and no previous or subsequent costs, by analogy to the proceeding at law. Agar v. Fairfax, 17 Ves. 533.

3. Bill for partition will lie as to tithes, demurrer overruled. Gibson v. Montfort, 1 Ves. 494.

4. In the year 1809 S. O. S. died in the possession of a fee simple estate, intestate and leaving one sister, M. A. B., and four nieces him surviving; in the following year an ejectment upon the title was brought, on the part of the four nieces, for a moiety of the estate; to this ejectment defence was taken, but no further proceedings were had. In 1834 a new ejectment was brought by the same parties. The defendants set up as their defence, first, that S. O. S. and his sister (the mother of the four nieces) were illegitimate; secondly, the Statute of Limitations. A verdict was found for the lessors of the plaintiff, but was subsequently set aside as to one-fourth, on the ground that, as to such one-fourth, a party, in whose name a devise in the ejectment ought to have been laid, had been omitted. In 1837 an ejectment was brought for this one-fourth, in the name of the omitted party: a verdict was obtained for the lessor of the plaintiff, but was set aside, in consequence of the misdirection of the judge upon the question of adverse possession. In 1839 a third ejectment was brought, and a verdict for the lessor of the plaintiff; and this latter verdict was subsequently, upon argument, supported by the Court of Exchequer: —Held, upon a bill filed on the part of some of the nieces for a partition, that, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, neither of the questions could be considered as open to the defendants, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree for a partition. O'Sullivan v. M'Sweeny, 1 Dr. 213; 2 Con. & L. 486. And see S. C. at law, Jon. & C. 295; L. & T. 111.

5. Four persons bought some land with the view of selling it in lots as building ground according to a specified plan, and agreed that none of the four should dispose of his share except in a certain manner:—Held, in a suit by the representatives of one of the four against the survivors, that the agreement barred the right to a partition. Peck v. Cardwell, 2 Beav. 137.

Copyholds and Manors.] 6. Chancery has no jurisdiction to grant partition between tenants in common of copyhold. Scott v. Fawcet, Dick. 299.

Jurisdiction in cases of partition confined to statute. Ib.

7. A bill in equity will not be for a partition of copyholds. Horncastle v. Charlesworth, 11 Sim. 715; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 35; 4 Jur. 1179.

8. On a bill for a partition, when there is a small failure in proof of title, or when the shares of the parties are alone doubtful, the Court will grant an inquiry; but where there is a material omission in the proof of the plaintiff's title, the bill will be dismissed with costs. This course was pursued, though the plaintiff had recovered in ejectment a portion of the estate from the defendant, it not appearing what were the circumstances of that proceeding, or whether the plaintiff's title, as alleged, was therein proved. Jope v. Morshead, 6 Beav. 213; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 190.

Independently of the 4 & 5 Vict., c. 35, s. 85, a court of equity has no jurisdiction to direct the partition of copyholds, nor of customary freeholds. Ib.

9. A specific performance of an agreement between joint tenants of copyhold estate for partition enforced, and a decree for mutual surrenders, although no jurisdiction to decree partition of copyholds before 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 35. Bolton v. Ward, 4 Hare 530; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 361; 9 Jur. 591.

10. The partition of a manor may be compelled in equity. Hanbury v. Hussey, 14 Beav. 152; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 557; 15 Jur. 596.

11. Commission of partition to divide a manor. Sparrow v. Fiend, Dick. 348.

Lands abroad.] 12. A commission to make partition, cannot be awarded into Ireland. Cartwright v. Pettus, 2 Ch. Ca. 214.

13. On a bill for a partition of lands in Ireland, and an account of waste committed there, a demurrer was allowed as to the partition, and overruled as to the account. Kennedy v. Cassillis (Earl), 2 Swan. 323.

2. Where Remedy at Law.

14. A plaintiff filed a bill for a partition (as between the defendant and himself) of real property devised by the will of the testator in the cause. The defendant had for some time been in exclusive receipt of the rents and profits:—Held, that his remedy was at law, and that the bill must be retained for a year, with liberty to the plaintiff to bring an action against the defendant. Bolton v. Bolton, 17 L. T., N. S., 556.

The Court, intimating an opinion adverse to the plaintiff upon the construction of the will, dismissed the appeal with costs. S. C. 19 L. T., N. S., 298.

15. A person claiming to be legally entitled to an undivided share in a freehold estate, filed a bill for partition, raising the question whether, upon the construction of the settlor's will, the estate passed under a specific or under a residuary devise:—Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction to try such a question in such a suit, and the bill was ordered to be retained for a year, with liberty to the plaintiff to bring such action as he might be advised. Slade v. Barlow, 7 L. R.,

Application that the defendant might be put on terms not to set up the defence of the Statute of Limitations was refused. Ib.

1. A bill in equity for partition ought not to be made the means of trying a title, which should properly be tried at law. But, although a plaintiff on such a bill must prove his title to that part of the property which he seeks to have divided, there is no rule that a bill for a partition cannot be maintained, if the defendant denies the title of the plaintiff, and that title is purely a legal one. If, in such a case, the partition of the property is the primary object of the bill, and the establishment of the plaintiff's title is incidental only to that relief, the Court will make a decree for a partition, and with costs. Giffard v. Williams, 38 L. J., Ch., 597; 8 L. R., Eq., 494; 18 W. R. 56; 21 L. T., N. S., 575.

When in a partition suit the question is one of disputed legal title, and the plaintiff has not established his claim by clear and satisfactory evidence, the Court will not decide on his claim, but will retain the bill for a year, with liberty to him to bring such action as he may be advised. S. C. 39 L. J., Ch., 735; 5 L. R., Ch., 546; 18 W. R. 776.

2. Where the title was disputed, a demurrer was overruled and the bill retained for a year, that the plaintiff might take the necessary steps to confirm her title. Ward v. Ward, 18 W. R. 87; 21 L. T., N. S., 699.

3. A bill alleging that the plaintiff is entitled to an undivided share in certain lands, and the entirety of certain other lands, and that he had been ousted by one of his co-tenants, and praying a partition, discovery, and account of profits is demurrable, the remedy being at law. Moore v. Kempston, 18 W. R. 803.

4. In a suit for partition a question of law arose; but the Court, no one objecting, exercised jurisdiction, but ordered the decree to be prefaced with a statement of the desire of all parties, other than that of an infant, that the case should be decided. Burt v. Hellyar, 14 L. R., Eq., 160.

3. Where Power of, or Trust for, Sale or Exchange.

5. Power of sale not well executed by a partition. M'Queen v. Farquhar, 11 Ves. 467.

Power of exchange or partition does not include a power of sale. Id. 473.

6. Partition of an estate in common a good execution of a power to sell or exchange. Abel v. Heathcote, 2 Ves. J. 98; 4 Bro. C. C. 278.

7. Semble, that a devise on trust to sell and dispose of property, consisting partly of an undivided share, does not authorise the trustees to concur in a partition. Brassey v. Chalmers, 4 De G. M. & G. 528; 16 Beav. 223.

But where trustees had under such a trust concurred in a partition which was shown to be beneficial to the cestuis que trustent, who were infants, the Court, on a claim to which the infant cestuis que trustent were parties, made a decree that the lands should be taken to be divided according to the partition already made. Ib.

8. A power to sell and exchange merely, does not so clearly authorise a partition that the Court will force on a purchaser a title taken under it. Bradshaw v. Fane, 3 Drew. 534; 24 L. J., Ch., 413; 4 W. R. 422; 2 Jur., N. S., 247.

But where a power was to make sale and dispose of, or convey in exchange, and the powers to revoke and limit new uses for carrying these powers into effect also referred to disposition, and the declaration as to the application of the money to be obtained referred also in terms to partition:—Held, that on the whole context there was a good power to partition, and the title taken under it was a good title. Ib.

10. The Court has no jurisdiction at the instance of the tenant for life and reversioners, sui juris and beneficially interested to the extent of a moiety, to direct a sale or partition under the Partition Acts of property, over which there is a discretionary power of sale in trustees still subsisting. Biggs v. Peacock, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 200; 51 L. J., Ch., 555; 46 L. T. 582; 30 W. R. 615. Affirmed 52 L. J., Ch., 1; 47 L. T. 341; 31 W. R. 148; 22 L. R., Ch. D., 284.

A testator directed the trustees of his will, at such times and in such manner as they should think fit, to sell his copyhold estate, and to hold the proceeds in trust for his widow for life, and after his death for his children. He left six children, all of whom attained a vested interest and were sui juris. The widow and three children brought an action for partition of the estate; the other children, who were defendants, demurred:—Held, that the trustees had a trust for sale, and not a mere power; and that it was not put an end to by all the reversioners attaining a vested interest; and therefore the Court had no jurisdiction to decree a partition under the Partition Act. Ib.

11. When the testator has himself fixed the period at which the trustees of his will are to sell his real estate and divide the proceeds, the Court has no jurisdiction to anticipate that period by directing a sale in a partition action at the request of persons equitably entitled to an undivided moiety of the property. Swaine v. Denby, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 326; 49 L. J., Ch., 734; 28 W. R. 622.

12. Semble, a power to exchange does not warrant a partition. Att.-Gen. v. Hamilton, 1 Madd. 214.

13. A power of exchange of lands is properly executed by a partition. Re Frith and Osborne, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 618; 35 L. T., N. S., 146; 45 L. J., Ch., 780; 24 W. R. 1061.

Therefore, where an undivided moiety of lands was vested in A., B., and C., as trustees of a settlement which expressly authorised a partition, and the other moiety was vested in D., E., and F., as trustees of a settlement, with power to sell, dispose of, convey, and assign the hereditaments for such a price in money, or for such an equivalent or recompense in lands and hereditaments as to the trustees should seem reasonable, and for that

II. IN WHAT CASES.

1. Of what Property, 5402.
2. Where Remedy at Law, 5402.
3. Where Power of, or Trust for, Sale or Exchange, 5403.

1. Of what Property.

1. A commission for partition of a house decreed. Turner v. Morgan, 8 Ves. 143.

2. Decree for partition among several joint proprietors; and no objection from a covenant not to enclose without general consent, rights of common, and the inequality and uncertainty of the shares, in proportion to other estates. The decree directed a reference to the Master to inquire whether the plaintiff and defendants, or any and which, are entitled; and in what shares, according to the respective values of the other estates; and then a commission to divide accordingly; the costs of the partition to be borne by the parties in proportion to the value of their respective interests; and no previous or subsequent costs, by analogy to the proceeding at law. Ayar v. Fairfax, 17 Ves. 533.

3. Bill for partition will lie as to tithes, demurrer overruled. Gibson v. Montfort, 1 Ves. 494.

4. In the year 1809 S. O. S. died in the possession of a fee simple estate, intestate and leaving one sister, M. A. B., and four nieces him surviving; in the following year an ejectment upon the title was brought, on the part of the four nieces, for a moiety of the estate; to this ejectment defence was taken, but no further proceedings were had. In 1834 a new ejectment was brought by the same parties. The defendants set up as their defence, first, that S. O. S. and his sister (the mother of the four nieces) were illegitimate; secondly, the Statute of Limitations. A verdict was found for the lessors of the plaintiff, but was subsequently set aside as to one-fourth, on the ground that, as to such one-fourth, a party, in whose name a devise in the ejectment ought to have been laid, had been omitted. In 1837 an ejectment was brought for this one-fourth, in the name of the omitted party: a verdict was obtained for the lessor of the plaintiff, but was set aside, in consequence of the misdirection of the judge upon the question of adverse possession. In 1839 a third ejectment was brought, and a verdict for the lessor of the plaintiff; and this latter verdict was subsequently, upon argument, supported by the Court of Exchequer: —Held, upon a bill filed on the part of some of the nieces for a partition, that, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, neither of the questions could be considered as open to the defendants, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree for a partition. O'Sullivan v. M'Sweeny, 1 Dr. 213; 2 Con. & L. 486. And see S. C. at law, Jon. & C. 295; L. & T. 111.

5. Four persons bought some land with the view of selling it in lots as building ground according to a specified plan, and agreed that none of the four should dispose of his share except in a certain manner:—Held, in a suit by the representatives of one of the four against the survivors, that the agreement barred the right to a partition. Peck v. Cardwell, 2 Beav. 137.

Copyholds and Manors.] 6. Chancery has no jurisdiction to grant partition between tenants in common of copyhold. Scott v. Fawcet, Dick. 299.

Jurisdiction in cases of partition confined to statute. Ib.

7. A bill in equity will not be for a partition of copyholds. Horncastle v. Charlesworth, 11 Sim. 715; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 35; 4 Jur. 1179.

8. On a bill for a partition, when there is a small failure in proof of title, or when the shares of the parties are alone doubtful, the Court will grant an inquiry; but where there is a material omission in the proof of the plaintiff's title, the bill will be dismissed with costs. This course was pursued, though the plaintiff had recovered in ejectment a portion of the estate from the defendant, it not appearing what were the circumstances of that proceeding, or whether the plaintiff's title, as alleged, was therein proved. Jope v. Morshead, 6 Beav. 213; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 190.

Independently of the 4 & 5 Vict., c. 35, s. 85, a court of equity has no jurisdiction to direct the partition of copyholds, nor of customary freeholds. Ib.

9. A specific performance of an agreement between joint tenants of copyhold estate for partition enforced, and a decree for mutual surrenders, although no jurisdiction to decree partition of copyholds before 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 35. Bolton v. Ward, 4 Hare 530; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 361; 9 Jur. 591.

10. The partition of a manor may be compelled in equity. Hanbury v. Hussey, 14 Beav. 152; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 557; 15 Jur. 596.

11. Commission of partition to divide a manor. Sparrow v. Fiend, Dick. 348.

Lands abroad.] 12. A commission to make partition, cannot be awarded into Ireland. Cartwright v. Pettus, 2 Ch. Ca. 214.

13. On a bill for a partition of lands in Ireland, and an account of waste committed there, a demurrer was allowed as to the partition, and overruled as to the account. Kennedy v. Cassillis (Earl), 2 Swan. 323.

2. Where Remedy at Law.

14. A plaintiff filed a bill for a partition (as between the defendant and himself) of real property devised by the will of the testator in the cause. The defendant had for some time been in exclusive receipt of the rents and profits:—Held, that his remedy was at law, and that the bill must be retained for a year, with liberty to the plaintiff to bring an action against the defendant. Bolton v. Bolton, 17 L. T., N. S., 556.

The Court, intimating an opinion adverse to the plaintiff upon the construction of the will, dismissed the appeal with costs. S. C. 19 L. T., N. S., 298.

15. A person claiming to be legally entitled to an undivided share in a freehold estate, filed a bill for partition, raising the question whether, upon the construction of the settlor's will, the estate passed under a specific or under a residuary devise:—Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction to try such a question in such a suit, and the bill was ordered to be retained for a year, with liberty to the plaintiff to bring such action as he might be advised. Slade v. Barlow, 7 L. R.,

Application that the defendant might be put on terms not to set up the defence of the Statute of Limitations was refused. Ib.

1. A bill in equity for partition ought not to be made the means of trying a title, which should properly be tried at law. But, although a plaintiff on such a bill must prove his title to that part of the property which he seeks to have divided, there is no rule that a bill for a partition cannot be maintained, if the defendant denies the title of the plaintiff, and that title is purely a legal one. When in a partition suit the question is one of disputed legal title, and the plaintiff has not established his claim by clear and satisfactory evidence, the Court will not decide on his claim, but will retain the bill for a year, with liberty to him to bring such action as he may be advised. S. C. 39 L. J., Ch., 735; 5 L. R., Ch., 546; 18 W. R. 776.

2. Where the title was disputed, a demurrer was overruled and the bill retained for a year, that the plaintiff might take the necessary steps to confirm her title. Ward v. Ward, 18 W. R. 87; 21 L. T., N. S., 699.

4. In a suit for partition a question of law arose; but the Court, no one objecting, exercised jurisdiction, but ordered the decree to be prefaced with a statement of the desire of all parties, other than that of an infant, that the case should be decided. Burt v. Hellyar, 14 L. R., Eq., 160.

3. Where Power of, or Trust for, Sale or Exchange.

5. Power of sale not well executed by a partition. M'Queen v. Farquhar, 11 Ves. 467.

Power of exchange or partition does not include a power of sale. Id. 473.

6. Partition of an estate in common a good execution of a power to sell or exchange. Abel v. Heathcote, 2 Ves. J. 98; 4 Bro. C. C. 278.

7. Semble, that a devise on trust to sell and dispose of property, consisting partly of an undivided share, does not authorise the trustees to concur in a partition. Brassey v. Chalmers, 4 De G. M. & G. 528; 16 Beav. 223.

But where a power was to make sale and dispose of, or convey in exchange, and the powers to revoke and limit new uses for carrying these powers into effect also referred to disposition, and the declaration as to the application of the money to be obtained referred also in terms to partition:—Held, that on the whole context there was a good power to partition, and the title taken under it was a good title. Ib.

9. A decree for the partition of property can be granted notwithstanding the existence of a power given to trustees to sell the property for the purpose of a division. Boyd v. Allen, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 622; 53 L. J., Ch., 701; 48 L. T. 628; 31 W. R. 544.

10. The Court has no jurisdiction at the instance of the tenant for life and reversioners, sui juris and beneficially interested to the extent of a moiety, to direct a sale or partition under the Partition Acts of property, over which there is a discretionary power of sale in trustees still subsisting. Biggs v. Peacock, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 200; 51 L. J., Ch., 555; 46 L. T. 582; 30 W. R. 615. Affirmed 52 L. J., Ch., 1; 47 L. T. 341; 31 W. R. 148; 22 L. R., Ch. D., 284.

A testator directed the trustees of his will, at such times and in such manner as they should think fit, to sell his copyhold estate, and to hold the proceeds in trust for his widow for life, and after his death for his children. 12. Semble, a power to exchange does not warrant a partition. Att.-Gen. v. Hamilton, 1 Madd. 214.

Therefore, where an undivided moiety of lands was vested in A., B., and C., as trustees of a settlement which expressly authorised a partition, and the other moiety was vested in D., E., and F., as trustees of a settlement, with power to sell, dispose of, convey, and assign the hereditaments for such a price in money, or for such an equivalent or recompense in lands and hereditaments as to the trustees should seem reasonable, and for that purpose to revoke the old uses and to limit other uses and trusts, and a partition deed, purporting to be in exercise of the powers, was executed by the trustees of the two moieties:—Held, that the partition was properly effected by D., E., and F., under their power. Ib.

III. PARTIES INTERESTED.

1. In General, 5404.
2. Absent, 5404.
3. Infants, 5405.
4. Lessees, 5405.
5. Lunatics, 5406.
6. Tenants for Life and Remaindermen, 5406.
7. Tenants in Tail, 5407.
8. Married Women, 5407.
9. Mortgagors and Mortgagees, 5407.
10. Trustees, 5408.

1. In General.

1. Right of defendants under a decree reserving costs, to a continued representation of all the original plaintiffs (though not necessary parties), as a security for costs. Blackburn v. Jepson, 3 Swan. 138.

Objections for want of parties, removed by acts of defendants. Id. 139.

Parties to a bill for a partition. Ib.

2. The bill alleged that the plaintiff had purchased the entirety of a messuage, but that the defendants claimed a moiety thereof, and refused to produce the instrument under which they claimed; and that the plaintiff, believing their claim to be good, had joined with them in granting a lease; and it prayed a discovery and partition. Demurrer for want of equity overruled. Potter v. Waller, 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 480; 11 Jur. 464.

3. In decreeing a partition, the Court will have regard to the convenience of any subpurchasers from either of the parties. Story v. Johnson, 2 Y. & Coll. 586.

4. Tenants or persons having partial interests not necessary parties to suit for partition. O'Reilly v. Vincent, 2 Moll. 330.

5. One tenant in common having leased his share on a bill for partition, the lessee is a necessary party, and his costs must be borne by the lessor. Cornish v. Gest, 2 Cox 27.

6. A reversioner in fee expectant on a lease of lives renewable for ever is a proprietor within the meaning of the 5 Geo. 2, c. 9, and must be served with a copy of the petition to divide bog. Kelly v. Shelton, 1 Jones 555.

The Court has jurisdiction to amend a petition order and commission of partition, under the 5 Geo. 2, c. 9, by inserting therein the name of the party served with the conditional order. S. C. 2 Jones 351.

7. A bill in equity for partition is an analogy to the proceedings at law, and should be so framed that there shall be a party substantially interested, plaintiff and defendant. Lowe v. Franks, 1 Moll. 137.

8. It is essential to partition to have the legal title before the Court. Miller v. Warmington, 1 Jac. & Walk. 493. But see Swan v. Swan, 8 Price 518.

9. Semble, a partition may be made as between more than two tenants in common or coparceners. Bradshaw v. Fane, 4 W. R. 422; 3 Drew. 534; 25 L. J., Ch., 413; 20 Jur. 247.

10. In a partition suit, where the plaintiff and defendant, each claiming a moiety of the estate, produce evidence of title, the Court will not, at the instance of co-defendants who set up a claim to the property, and produce no evidence of title, but allege illegitimacy on the part of the defendant, adjourn the question for further inquiry. Backhouse v. Paddon, 14 W. R. 273; 13 L. T., N. S., 625.

2. Absent.

11. The 31 & 32 Vict., c. 40, does not render it compulsory upon the Court to pronounce a decree in the absence of any of the parties interested. Dodds v. Gronow, 17 W. R. 511; 20 L. T., N. S., 104.

12. The Court will not allow a sale, which has been decreed under the Act, to be proceeded with until all persons interested have been served with notice of the decree, but will allow such service to be effected by advertisement upon persons out of the jurisdiction, and who cannot be found, with liberty for the plaintiffs to apply as to proceeding with the sale in case the absent parties do not come in after the advertisement. Peters v. Bacon, 38 L. J., Ch., 571; 8 L. R., Eq., 125; 17 W. R. 782.

Certain persons interested in property ordered to be sold under the provisions of the Partition Act 1868, had not been made parties to the suit, and were out of the jurisdiction, their addresses being unknown:—Held, that the provisions of the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 86, s. 42, rule 8, and the Consolidatad Order XXXV., rule 18, as to the service of notice of decree, applied to such a case. S. C. 20 L. T., N. S., 729.

13. The Court has jurisdiction to direct an immediate sale in a partition suit in the absence of parties interested in the property, but shown to be out of the jurisdiction. But where it was uncertain whether such absent parties were or were not within the jurisdiction, an inquiry was directed as to the persons interested in the property and their shares therein, and whether such persons were out of the jurisdiction. Silver v. Udall, 9 L. R., Eq., 227; 39 L. J., Ch., 118; 18 W. R. 665; 21 L. T., N. S., 660.

14. When one of the parties, entitled to a small fraction of an estate, was out of the jurisdiction, and had not been served, and it did not appear that any attempt had been made to serve him:—Held, that a decree for sale could not be made in his absence. Hurry v. Hurry, 10 L. R., Eq., 346; 39 L. J., Ch., 824; 18 W. R. 829; 22 L. T., N. S., 577.

15. An immediate decree for sale may be made, although one of the parties interested is out of the jurisdiction; but the decree must be served on the absent party before the sale is proceeded with. Teall v. Watts, 11 L. R., Eq., 213; 40 L. J., Ch., 176; 23 L. T. 884; 18 W. R. 317.

16. The Court will not make an order for payment out to trustees of money produced by a sale under the above Act, where it has been paid into court, and some of the persons interested are married women, and resident in Australia. Aston v. Meredith, 13 L. R., Eq., 492; 26 L. T., N. S., 281.

17. On the further consideration of a partition suit it appeared from the chief clerk's certificate that it was not known whether one of the parties who, if living, would be entitled to one-twenty-fourth of the property was alive or dead. He had not been heard of for fourteen years. All the other persons interested appeared and asked for a sale. A sale was ordered accordingly. Jackson v. Lomas, 23 W. R. 744.

1. An order for sale of real estate under the Partition Act 1868 cannot be made at the hearing, unless all persons interested in the property are parties to the cause. Mildmay v. Quicke, 20 L. R., Eq., 537.

2. The decree in a partition suit may order a sale, if all parties interested in the estate are parties to the cause, or have been served with notice of decree, and none of them object to a sale. Harper v. Bird, 32 L. T., N. S., 428; 23 W. R. 646.

3. In a suit for partition or sale the minutes of decrees should contain a direction for sale if it appears that all persons interested are before the Court, and that those representing a moiety of the property desire a sale. Underwood v. Stewardson, 20 W. R. 668; 26 L. T., N. S., 688.

3. Infants.

4. An infant being entitled to one-ninth of a real estate, and it being for her benefit, the Court, instead of directing a partition, declared the cost a charge on the infant's share, and ordered a sale of the whole estate. Davis v. Turvey, 32 Beav. 554; 2 N. R. 151.

5. Partition decreed at the hearing without a commission upon the affidavit of two surveyors, with evidence of the partition of the property, showing the fairness of the proposed division, all parties except an infant defendant desiring it, and his father deposing that the proposed partition was for the infant's benefit. Stanley v. Wrigley, 3 Sm. & G. 18; 1 Jur., N. S., 695; 24 L. J., Ch., 176; 3 W. R. 202; 3 Eq. Rep. 448.

6. A partition decreed without a commission, in a case in which infants were interested, upon satisfactory evidence of the value. Greenwood v. Percy, 26 Beav. 572.

7. In a suit for the partition of property in which infants are interested, the Court will refuse to enforce a partition not made under a commission; even at the instance of the infants, and on the allegation of their counsel that it will be for their benefit. Semble, in such a case, the proper course is to direct a commission to issue. Howard v. Barnwell, 1 N. R. 172.

8. On a suit for the partition of property in which an infant is interested, the Court will direct a reference to chambers without a commission. Bull v. Bull, 18 L. T., N. S., 870.

9. Where part of an estate held in undivided shares (one share belonging to an infant), is contracted to be sold, and a bill is filed to carry out that contract and incidentally asks a partition: the Court will direct a sale of the whole by consent, the infant's costs being a charge on his share. Smith v. Birch, 18 L. T., N. S., 174.

10. In a suit under the Partition Act 1868, for the confirmation of a conditional contract for sale of land to which the infant plaintiff and the infant defendant were entitled as coheiresses, subject to the dower of their mother, an order was made confirming the original contract and directing a sale, and the decree was prefaced by a recital that a sale appeared more beneficial than a division, and that the infant plaintiff requested a sale. Grove v. Cowyn, 18 L. R., Eq., 387; 22 W. R. 723.

11. When infants prayed for a declaration that premises were divisible amongst them and a defendant, and that the costs of the suit might be taxed, and the plaintiffs' costs declared to be a charge on their shares; for a partition, or sale, and, after payment of the costs, for a division of the proceeds; the Court made a declaration as to the rights of the parties, and directed a sale, but declined to make any order as to the costs until the further consideration of the cause. Davey v. Wietlisbach, 15 L. R., Eq., 269.

12. In a partition action the request for sale on the part of an infant (Partition Act 1876, s. 6) may be made by his next friend or guardian ad litem, as being the "person authorised to act" on his behalf in the action: the word "guardian" in the section meaning guardian ad litem. Rimington v. Hartley, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 630; 43 L. T. 15; 29 W. R. 42.

The Court will not comply with a request for sale made on behalf of an infant under the above section unless it is satisfied that a sale is for the benefit of the infant. Ib.

13. The consent required by s. 6 of the Partition Act 1876, of an infant to a sale must be made by the infant's guardian, and not by a next friend or a guardian ad litem. So, where a sale was desired in a partition action, and the infant parties had no guardian, the Court intimated that it would appoint their mother on an affidavit of fitness, and directed that the order should appoint the guardian, and recite that the infants by their guardians requested a sale, and go on to order a sale accordingly. Platt v. Platt, 28 W. R. 533.

14. When a partition suit was instituted by the owners of three undivided sevenths of freehold premises for a sale of the whole, and such sale was not opposed by the guardian ad litem of three minors, who, under their father (who directed that no sale should take place until the youngest attained twenty-one), were owners of the remaining four-sevenths, and one of them had come of age before the hearing of the suit, and also desired a sale; the Court made a decree as prayed, directing an inquiry as to whether the acceptance of an offer for the premises would be for the benefit of the minors, and ordered the costs of all parties to be paid ratably out of the purchase money, according to their respective interests. Thompson v. Richardson, 6 Ir. R., Eq., 596.

4. Lessees.

15. Partition between tenants in common, and joint tenants by stat. 31 Hen. 8, extended by stat. 32 Hen. 8 to limited interests, for life or years; and the same right in equity by bill as at law by writ. Baring v. Nash, 1 Ves. & B. 555.

1. A partition of a house, held under a lease for the unexpired residue of a term of years, subject to a rent and covenant, refused, the nature of the property and the interest of the parties not warranting a partition. For if it were decreed, the landlord might immediately apply for an injunction to restrain the parties from executing it by any act amounting to waste, and the Court could not protect one of the tenants in common from a breach of covenant, which might be committed by the other. North v. Guinan, Beat. 342.

Under the English stat. of 32 Hen. 8 the termor of an undivided share might have a partition, though it would only bind during the term. Id. 345.

2. One of two tenants in common of an estate agreed to grant a lease of the mines under it:—Held, that the lessee was entitled to a decree for specific performance, and for a partition of the estate. Heaton v. Dearden, 16 Beav. 147.

5. Lunatics.

3. The circumstance of a tenant in common being a person of weak intellects, will not prevent the Court from making a decree for a partition as against such party. Hollingworth v. Sidebottom, 8 Sim. 620; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 2.

One of three tenants in common was incapable, through weakness of intellect, of making a conveyance, but no commission was in force against her; a commission of partition was nevertheless granted at the suit of the other two tenants, so that the lands might be held in severalty. Ib.

4. A bill for a partition or a sale cannot be filed on behalf of a person of unsound mind not so found by inquisition. Halfhyde v. Robinson, 43 L. J., Ch., 398; 22 W. R. 448; 9 L. R., Ch., 373; 30 L. T., N. S., 216.

When in the case of a small estate it is desired to deal with a lunatic's realty, without incurring the expense of an inquisition, the proper course is to proceed under the summary powers of the Lunacy Regulation Act 1853, s. 120. Ib.

5. Under the Partition Act 1876 (39 & 40 Vict., c. 17), s. 6, a person of unsound mind not so found by inquisition may, by his next friend, be plaintiff in an action instituted for the purpose of obtaining a sale. Watt v. Leach, 26 W. R. 475.

6. The Court, under its lunacy jurisdiction, has power to bar the estate tail of a lunatic tenant in tail; but it is the duty of the Court so to exercise it as not to affect the rights of the persons entitled in remainder to the estate. Where a lunatic was tenant in tail of an undivided share of an estate, and an action was brought for the partition of the estate, the Court, under s. 6 of the Partition Act 1868, authorised the committee of the lunatic to request a sale and to join in conveying the estate to the purchaser, but directed that the proceeds of the sale should be subject to the same uses as the lunatic's estate was subject to before the sale. Re Pares, Lillingston v. Pares, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 333; 41 L. T. 574; 28 W. R. 193.

6. Tenants for Life and Remaindermen.

7. A tenant for life of an undivided share of an estate with remainders to his unborn sons in tail, may file a bill for a partition, and the decree will be binding on the sons when in esse. Gaskell v. Gaskell, 6 Sim. 643.

8. A party having a life estate determinable on his marriage in one-fifth of an estate is entitled to a decree for partition. Hobson v. Sherwood, 4 Beav. 184.

Where in a suit for partition the defendants are desirous that there shall be no partition of their several shares, the partition may be confined to the aliquot share of the plaintiff. Ib.

9. Partition between tenants in common, and joint tenants by stat. 31 Hen. 8, extended by stat. 32 Hen. 8 to limited interests for life or years; and the same right in equity by bill as at law by writ. Baring v. Nash, 1 Ves. & B. 555.

10. A joint tenant or a tenant in common, in reversion or remainder, cannot maintain a suit for partition. Evans v. Bagshaw, 39 L. J., Ch., 145; 5 L. R., Ch., 340; 18 W. R. 657. Affirming 8 L. R., Eq., 469.

Where the wife of a bankrupt was entitled in fee to an undivided share of real estate, and she and her husband joined in mortgaging it, and afterwards she, her husband, and the mortgagee filed a bill for partition against the owners of the other shares:—Held, that the suit could not be maintained, although the mortgagee, after bill filed, got in the estate outstanding in the assignee of the bankrupt, and the bill was amended by stating this fact. Ib.

11. Under a will two persons were equally entitled to real property for life, with remainder to their children and issue, who were not yet ascertained. The trustees of the will had, during the lives of the tenants for life, powers of working a quarry on the estate, and making roads, etc., over the property for the purpose, and were directed to work the quarry, and divide the profits among the persons entitled:—Held, that while the over-riding power and trust existed, the Court had no jurisdiction to make a decree for partition or sale under the Partition Acts. Taylor v. Grange, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 223; 49 L. J., Ch., 24; 28 W. R. 93; 41 L. T. 465.

12. The Court, under its lunacy jurisdiction, has power to bar the estate tail of a lunatic tenant in tail; but it is the duty of the Court so to exercise it as not to affect the rights of the persons entitled in remainder to the estate. Where a lunatic was tenant in tail of an undivided share of an estate, and an action was brought for the partition of the estate, the Court, under the 6th section of the Partition Act 1868, authorised the committee of the lunatic to request a sale and to join in conveying the estate to the purchaser, but directed that the proceeds of the sale should be subject to the same uses as the lunatic's estate was subject to before the sale. Re Pares

1. The Court will not, in a partition case, order the party objecting to the non-service of reversioner to disclose his name, etc., to the petitioner, but will not give him the costs of the day, unless he undertakes to do so. Kelly v. Shelton, 1 Jones 555.

The petition will be allowed to stand over to give the petitioner time to effect such service. Ib.

7. Tenants in Tail.

2. Partition between tenants in tail, though only by parol, shall bind the issue. Thomas v. Gyles, 2 Vern. 233.

3. Bill for writings and a partition, defendant insists the plaintiff has no title, and there is an entail subsisting. The Court gave the plaintiff a year's time to try his title. And upon a trial in ejectment, verdict for the plaintiff, upon coming in upon the equity reserved, it was insisted, this being a matter of right of inheritance, defendant ought not to be bound by one trial, sed non allocat', it being a decree only for a partition. Sed quære. Blynman v. Brown, 2 Vern. 232.

Conveyances.] See XI. post.

8. Married Women

4. A sale was directed in a partition suit of a freehold estate in which a married woman was interested, for her separate use without power of anticipation; the Court having first made her costs a charge on her share, and directed them to be raised by a sale. Fleming v. Armstrong, 34 Beav. 109; 11 L. T., N. S., 470; 5 N. R. 181.

5. In a partition action by a married woman and her husband her request for sale may be made by her counsel authorised to act on her behalf. Crookes v. Whitworth, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 289; 27 W. R. 149; 39 L. T. 348. S. C. nom. Crookes v. Whitaker, 27 W. R. 149; 39 L. T., N. S., 348.

6. In a partition action a request for sale on the part of a married woman, under s. 6 of the Partition Act 1876, should be made by a person especially authorised to act on her behalf in the action: a request by her counsel is not sufficient. Crookes v. Whitworth (10 L. R., Ch. D., 289) not followed. Wallace v. Greenwood, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 362; 50 L. J., Ch., 289; 43 L. T. 720.

7. In a partition action a request for sale on behalf of a married woman was directed to be made in writing, signed by her, authorising and requesting her solicitor to instruct counsel to ask for a sale. Grange v. White, 18 L. R., Ch. D., 612; 50 L. J., Ch., 620; 45 L. T. 128; 29 W. R. 713.

8. A wife must be separately examined in order to request a sale. Leigh v. Edwards, 42 L. J., Ch., 892.

9. A decree for sale having been made in a partition suit in which a married woman had been erroneously described as single, leave was given to amend by adding a next friend as plaintiff and making the husband a defendant, he consenting to be bound by all the proceedings. Sherratt v. Sherratt, 21 W. R. 572.

10. The share of a married woman in the proceeds of the sale of real estate devised to her in fee, which has been sold under an order in a partition action, may be paid to her husband on her electing by examination in Court to take the money as personal estate. Standering v. Hall, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 652; 48 L. J., Ch., 382; 27 W. R. 749.

11. The Court will under the Partition Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict., c. 40), make a decree for sale, instead of partition, at the request of a feme coverte. Higgs v. Dorkis, 13 L. R., Eq., 280; 41 L. J., Ch., 150; 25 L. T. 903; 20 W. R. 279.

9. Mortgagors and Mortgagees.

12. Person entitled to only part of money due on mortgage, cannot file bill of foreclosure for that part only of mortgaged premises. Palmer v. Carlisle (Earl), 1 Sim. & S. 423.

13. Mortgagee is not a necessary party to bill for partition. Swan v. Swan, 8 Price 518.

14. Where one tenant in common has mortgaged his interest in the property to another tenant in common, the mortgagor cannot enforce a partition or sale of the property against the will of the mortgagee, except on the terms of paying off the mortgage, and this rule is not affected by sub-s. 2 of s. 25 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act 1881. Gibbs v. Haydon, 47 L. T. 184; 30 W. R. 726.

15. Mortgagees to the extent of one moiety in value of certain property, in a partition action, desired a sale of the property and a distribution of the proceeds instead of a division of the property. The owners of the equity of redemption opposed:—Held, upon further consideration, that the mortgagees were "persons interested" under ss. 3 and 4 of the Partition Act, and that being "persons interested to the extent of one moiety or upwards," it was the duty of the Court, under s. 4 of the Act, at their request, to order a sale of the property; also that the Court in any case had a discretion under s. 3 of the Act. Davenport v. King, 49 L. T. 92; 31 W. R. 911.

16. Where a tenant in common of real estate, which was subject to a mortgage in fee, procured an assignment of the mortgage, and obtained possession under it:—Held, in a partition action, that this did not take away the right of his co-tenant to a decree for sale, subject to the incumbrance. Waite v. Bingley, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 674; 51 L. J., Ch., 651; 30 W. R. 698.

10. Trustees.

17. Ord. XVI., r. 7, of the Rules of Court 1875, enabling trustees to represent their beneficiaries in an action, applies to an action under the Partition Acts 1868 and 1876. Simpson v. Denny, 10 L. R., Ch., 28; 27 W. R. 280.

18. In an action for sale and partition, the plaintiffs were trustees for sale of two-thirds of leasehold property, and the defendants were trustees for sale of the remaining third part after the death of a tenant for life. The cestuis que trustent not being parties:—Held, that the trustees for sale sufficiently represented their cestuis que trustent, and a sale and partition were directed without notice to the parties beneficially interested. Stace v. Gage, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 451; 47 L. J., Ch., 608; 26 W. R. 605; 38 L. T., N. S., 843.

IV. AGREEMENTS FOR.

1. Bond given by parceners to pay to the other parcener, his executors or administrators, an annual sum during the life of J. S. for owelty of partition, shall go to the executor and not to the heir. Hulbert v. Hart, 1 Vern. 133.

2. Partitions between tenants in tail, though only by parol, shall bind the issue. Thomas v. Gyles, 2 Vern. 233.

3. The agreement of husband for partition of his wife's estate was not binding on her. Ireland v. Rittle, 1 Atk. 542.

A parol agreement for an equality of partition of a long standing, by persons who had right to contract, and accordingly put in execution, will be established. And if a joint tenant upon equality of partition think proper to accept of a contingent uncertain advantage, where one moiety is of superior value to the other, it will not vacate the agreement. Ib.

4. Two tenants in common of a copyhold estate in tail agree upon a partition; each surrenders the part allotted to the other:—Held, the entail was barred only as to a moiety. Oakley v. Smith, Ambl. 368; 1 Eden 261.

5. Agreement for a partition established against a conveyance and against a device, it operating as a revocation by depriving the testatrix of all interest in the estate devised. Knollys v. Alcock, 5 Ves. 648.

6. Conveyance to trustees in trust to sell and purchase other estates, to be settled. Those entitled under the limitations directed of the estates to be purchased, have equitable interests co-extensive until sale. Therefore a specific performance was decreed of an agreement for partition, against an objection to a title under a fine by a person who would have been tenant in tail of the estates to be purchased, the effect being an election to keep the estate, binding the trustees; though it may be questionable, whether they could take upon themselves to convey in fee to a person entitled to an estate tail only. Pearson v. Lane, 17 Ves. 101.

7. A. and B., devisees in common under their father's will, make a verbal agreement, which is afterwards carried into effect and acted on during their joint lives, to divide the land devised to them, A., the elder brother, taking the larger share in consideration of a right alleged on his part to take the whole by virtue of a supposed entail. A. was actually at the time so entitled, with remainder in tail to his brother B. Upon the death of A. without issue, B., whose title under the entail thereby accrued, and who was not proved to have been aware of such title till after the death of A., repudiated the agreement and brought ejectment for the whole of the lands. He was decreed, at the suit of A.'s devisees, to carry into effect the agreement by cutting off the entail, on the ground that it was a family arrangement acted on for many years, and that A. was prevented by the agreement from inquiring further, and so discovering and enforcing his title to the whole. Neale v. Neale, 1 Keen 672. Affirmed Id. 684. n.

8. The Court might enforce the specific performance of an agreement between joint tenants of a copyhold estate to divide the land and hold the respective parts in severalty, and decree the parties to make mutual surrenders for that purpose; although before the stat. 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 35, the Court had not jurisdiction, in a mere suit for partition, to decree the partition of copyholds. Bolton v. Ward, 4 Hare 530; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 361; 9 Jur. 591.

9. A partition by parol and separate possession cannot be questioned after being acted on for more than twenty years. Paine v. Ryder, 24 Beav. 151.

V. COMMISSION.

1. Issue of, 5408.
2. Commissioners' Powers, Duties, and Return, 5409.
3. Fees, 5410.

1. Issue of.

10. In a suit for partition, if a reference is necessary to ascertain the interest of the parties, the direction for the commission ought to be postponed until the hearing for further directions. Cole v. Sewell, 15 Sim. 284.

11. After decree in a partition suit, and before the return of the writ of partition and commission of perambulation, one of the commissioners, and one of the defendants who was entitled to a part of the lands, died. The cause having been revived by suggestion, and the Master having approved of a new commissioner, the Court on motion directed a renewal of the writ and commission, and directed the part allotted by the decree to A. to be allotted to his widow and children, pursuant to his will as stated in the suggestion. Valentine v. Middleton, 2 Ir. Ch. R. 93.

12. The Court will not make a decree for a partition of copyholds, without directing a commission. Bowles v. Rump, 9 W. R. 370.

13. The Court, in a suit for partition, will not in general direct a commission to issue, but will make a declaration that the estate ought to be divided, with liberty to the parties entitled to bring before the judge at chambers proposals for a partition. Clarke v. Clayton, 2 Giff. 333; 6 Jur., N. S., 1238.

14. The usual and proper course in a summons to have commissioners appointed for a partition where the parties cannot agree, is for each side to name a certain number (generally two), and for a portion of them to be struck out by the opposite side, and, if necessary, in order to secure an uneven number, for one commissioner to be appointed by the Court. Howard v. Barnwell, 2 N. R. 414.

See also III. 3 ante.

2. Commissioners' Powers, Duties, and Return.

1. Commissioners making different returns, a new commission of partition ordered; but the defendants should not have excepted but moved to suppress the returns; the deposit therefore ordered to be paid to the plaintiff. Corbet v. Davenant, 2 Bro. C. C. 252. See 6 Price 332. n.

2. Under commission of partition to four commissioners, two different returns were made by each two commissioners; the Court would not act on either, but directed new commission to five commissioners. Watson v. Northumberland, 11 Ves. 153.

3. On a commission under a partition decree as between co-heiresses, the eldest has no right of choice. The commissioners are to exercise their own discretion, and may take into account, in allotting, eldership or any other circumstance, and should only draw lots if they cannot on any grounds make a discretionary allotment. Canning v. Canning, 2 Drew. 43; 18 Jur. 640; 23 L. J., Ch., 879; 2 Eq. Rep. 1147; 2 W. R. 661.

Upon their continuing to disagree, a new commission was directed, and a third commissioner appointed, in order to avoid the necessity of making a partition by drawing lots. S. C. 23 L. J., Ch., 879.

4. Commissioners of partition have no power to award sums to be paid for owelty of partition. Mole v. Mansfield, 15 Sim. 41.

5. Surveyors in partition having allotted by mistake a piece of land to one to whom it belonged previously, and several allotments having been sold, before mistake discovered, Court decreed pecuniary compensation to be made to him. Dacre v. Gorges, 2 Sim. & S. 454; 4 L. J., Ch., 50.

6. Commissioners of partition may annex to one allotment a new right of way over another allotment, the right of way being occasional and for the purpose of repairs, may direct new fences to be made to divide the allotments at the expense of the different parties entitled, and may award the mansion house to the heir at law, though the rest of his allotment was at a distance. Lister v. Lister, 3 Y. & Coll. 540.

The Court will not suppress or vary the certificate of commissioners by reason of alleged irregularity in the allotments, except on the ground of fraud or of negligence amounting to fraud. Ib.

7. Jurisdiction and practice of the Court with respect to proceedings under commissions of partition. Manners v. Charlesworth, 1 Myl. & K. 330; Coop. temp. Brough. 52.

8 Exceptions will not lie to the return of commissioners in a suit for partition, on the ground of inequality of value in the lots. In all cases of improper conduct in the commissioners, a motion must be made to suppress the return. Jones v. Totty, 1 Sim. 136; 5 L. J., Ch., 105.

Where schedule written on paper was returned with commission of partition, the plaintiff's clerk in court was allowed to engross it on parchment and file engrossment, with return, in analogy to practice where foreign depositions are returned on paper. S. C. 2 Sim. & S. 219.

9. Where commissioners of partition are directed to divide lands equally between the parties entitled, it is their duty, after dividing the lands into proportions of equal value in the market, to assign them to those parties respectively to whom they would be of most value, with reference to their respective situations in relation to the property before the partition took place. Therefore where commissioners were directed to divide lands equally between A., B., and C., and they accordingly divided the lands into portions of equal value in the market, but assigned to A. an inn of which C. had been for many years the occupier, upon which he had expended money in improvements, and adjoining to which he had purchased property for the purposes of his occupation:—Held, that the adjudication of the commissioners was wrong, and that a commission should be directed to the new commissioners, to be approved of by the Master. Gross error in judgment, without positive proof of impartiality, is sufficient to enable the Court to set aside an adjudication made by the Commissioners of partition. Story v. Johnson, 1 Y. & Coll. 538; 5 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 9.

A court of equity in decreeing a partition does not act ministerially, and in obedience to the call of those parties who have a right to the partition, but founds itself upon the general jurisdiction given to courts of equity. It will, therefore, on a bill of partition, adjust the equitable rights of all the parties interested in the estate, and will for that purpose give special instructions to the commissioners of partition, and even in cases of necessity nominate the commissioners. And in decreeing partition will have regard also to the provisions of the 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 31, s. 4. Ib.

10. After a petition under a decree, the Court cannot give a party any right as to the property which the certificate of the commissioners and the deeds of partition do not give him, nor will it interfere to reform the deeds in order to give a party the more convenient and complete use or enjoyment of his portion of the premises. Burley v. Moore, 5 L. J., Ch., 120.

11. A road was set out by two tenants in common of property, for the convenience of their respective dwelling houses for ever; the Court, in a partition suit, though of opinion that it ought not to be interfered with, declined giving any special direction on the subject to the commissioners. Morris v. Timming, Beav. 411.

12. On a partition in Chancery, every part of the estate need not to be divided, but sufficient if each tenant in common, etc., have an equal share of the whole. Clarendon v. Hornby, 1 P. W. 446.

13. On a suit previous to the 4 & 5 Vict., c. 55, s. 85, for a partition of freeholds and copyholds, the Court directed the copyholds to be allotted in entirety to one of the parties. Dillon v. Coppin, 6 Beav. 217. n.

1. On a bill for partition, there is no occasion to examine witnesses before the hearing. Said arguendo, that the commissioners may examine witnesses under the commission ore tenus, or take their depositions in writing, as they shall think fit, and found their partition on such evidence. Meers v. Stourton (Lord), Dick. 21.

2. The Court will interfere and direct partition commissioners in the exercise of their discretion in case of miscarriage by them; but an application to the Court to give such directions must be made by one of the tenants in common, and be founded on something the commissioners have done, or on some dealing between the tenants in common. The Court has no jurisdiction to interfere upon the application of a stranger, or of a tenant in common, founded on dealings between one of the tenants in common and such stranger. Wright v. Vernon, 1 Dr. & Sm. 231; 8 W. R. 724.

3. A partition will not be set aside on light grounds, or for light matters, or for mere inequality of value of the allotments, if, in making it, the commissioners have honestly exercised their own judgment. Peers v. Needham, 19 Beav. 316. S. C. nom. Pearse v. Needham, 2 W. R. 514.

It is not necessary that, in making a partition, an aliquot share of each species of property, or of each house, if it be house property, should be allotted to each of the tenants in common. But where, under a decree for partition amongst three tenants in common, which did not empower the commissioners to order owelty of partition, the commissioners, upon some previous understanding that two of the tenants in common were willing to take one of the two houses comprising the property without severance, allotted that house to them, and the other to the third tenant in common, the return was suppressed. Ib.

4. Objections being made to a partition, first, because a leasehold estate forming part of the property had been divided and the rents apportioned; and secondly, because the commissioners had not directed or permitted the parties to draw lots:—Held, that both objections were untenable. Ames v. Comyns, 16 W. R. 74; 17 L. T., N. S., 163.

3. Fees.

5. Commissioners under a commission of partition, have no lien on the commission for their charges. Young v. Sutton, 2 Ves. & B. 365.

See III. ante.

1. When Ordered.

6. Circumstances under which a sale will be ordered, instead of a partition of real estate. Form of order when one of the defendants is an infant, and another is out of the jurisdiction. Hubbard v. Hubbard, 2 Hem. & M. 38; 9 L. T., N. S., 606.

7. The Court refused to make a decree for the sale of freehold estate to which several persons were beneficially entitled as tenants in common, unless all the tenants in common concur in the sale, though it will always decree a partition at the instance of any or either of them. Griffies v. Griffies, 11 W. R. 943; 8 L. T., N. S., 758.

Where one of the tenants in common is in the occupation of the estate, he cannot be made liable for rent or for waste. Ib.

The costs of the partition to come out of the estate up to the decree, and afterwards according to the relative interests of the parties. Ib.

8. The Court has power to order a sale instead of a partition where it would be difficult to divide the property, and it would be to the advantage of the parties interested, even where some of them are infants. Richards v. Richards, 15 W. R. 380; 36 L. J., Ch., 176; 16 L. T., N. S., 562.

9. In a partition suit the Court may under the statute direct a sale of part of the property and a partition of the remainder. Roebuck v. Chadebet, 38 L. J., Ch., 488; 8 L. R., Eq., 127; 20 L. T., N. S., 940.

10. If the majority of the parties entitled to an estate desires a partition, it is for the minority to prove, if they wish a sale, that it will be more to the advantage of all. To succeed in that, they should show that the majority is either perverse in their views, or has mistaken their true interests, otherwise a partition will be decreed. Allen v. Allen, 42 L. J., Ch., 839.

11. A husband left, by his will, his real estate to his wife for her life, or until her second marriage; on her death or marriage the estate to be sold and the proceeds to be divided amongst his three daughters. One daughter married and her share was settled; the other two daughters were of age, and filed a bill for sale or partition, the widow consenting:—Held, that the Court had no jurisdiction to order a sale. Cass v. Wood, 30 L. T., N. S., 670.

12. A father devised freeholds to his daughter and all the children he might have by his then wife; in case all his children should die without issue, then over. He left issue three daughters. On a bill for partition and sale being filed by two of the daughters, who were married and had issue living, against the other daughter who was unmarried, the Court decreed a sale, subject to the executory devise. Groves v. Carbert, 29 L. T., N. S., 129.

13. Under a will two persons were equally entitled to real property for life, with remainder to their children and issue, who were not yet ascertained. The trustees of the will had, during the lives of the tenants for life, powers of working a quarry on the estate, and making roads, etc., over the property for the purpose, and were directed to work the quarry and divide the profits among the persons entitled:—Held, that, while the overriding power and trust existed, the Court had no jurisdiction to make a decree for partition or sale under the Partition Acts. Taylor v. Grange, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 223; 49 L. J., Ch., 24. Affirmed 15 L. R., Ch. D., 165; 49 L. J., Ch., 794; 43 L. T. 233.

1. In a suit for partition a question of law arose; but the Court, no one objecting, exercised jurisdiction, but ordered the decree to be prefaced with a statement of the desire of all parties, other than that of an infant, that the case should be decided. Burt v. Hellyar, 14 L. R., Eq., 160; 41 L. J., Ch., 430; 26 L. T. 833.

2. When a partition suit was instituted by the owners of three undivided sevenths of freehold premises for a sale of the whole, and such sale was not opposed by the guardian ad litem of three minors, who, under their father (which directed that no sale should take place until the youngest attained twenty-one), were owners of the remaining four-sevenths, and one of them had come of age before the hearing of the suit, and also desired a sale; the Court made a decree as prayed, directing an inquiry as to whether the acceptance of an offer for the premises would be for the benefit of the minors, and ordered the costs of all parties to be paid ratably out of the purchase money, according to their respective interests. Thompson v. Richardson, 6 Ir. R., Eq., 596.

2. Under Partition Act 1868, s. 4.

3. The fact that the owner of a portion of an estate is in occupation of part of the premises, and carrying on a business there for which it would be impossible to obtain other suitable premises in the neighbourhood, is not a sufficiently "good reason" within s. 4 of the Partition Act (31 & 32 Vict., c. 40), for the Court to decree a partition in opposition to the wish of an owner to the extent of one moiety, who desires a sale. Roughton v. Gibson, 25 W. R. 269; 36 L. T., N. S., 93; 46 L. J., Ch., 366.

4. The plaintiff and B. purchased nineteen leasehold houses as tenants in common. B. died, having bequeathed his moiety to trustees on trusts under which his widow was entitled to the rents in specie for her life. The plaintiff brought this action against B.'s trustees, and as owner of a moiety claimed a sale. It appeared that there would be no difficulty in effecting a partition, that the effect of a sale would be to diminish the income received by B.'s widow by one half, and that the action would probably not have been brought but for ill-feeling existing between the parties:—Held, that those circumstances were a "good reason to the contrary" within the meaning of the Partition Act, s. 4, and in the exercise of its discretion the Court directed a partition instead of a sale. Saxton v. Bartley, 48 L. J., Ch., 519; 27 W. R. 615.

5. Under s. 4 of the Partition Act of 1868 (31 & 32 Vict., c. 40), it is the right of a plaintiff entitled to a moiety of the property to have a sale instead of a partition, notwithstanding the opposition or disability of a defendant who is entitled to the other moiety, unless such defendant shows "good reason to the contrary." Rowe v. Gray, 5 L. R., Ch. D., 263; 46 L. J., Ch., 279; 25 W. R. 250.

Upon the request of a plaintiff so entitled, the Court decreed a sale instead of a partition of ten leasehold houses held under one lease, although it was objected on behalf of an infant defendant entitled to the other moiety that his income would be thereby materially diminished. Ib.

6. An estate consisting of a mansion house and 185 acres belonged to the plaintiff and the defendant in equal moieties. It was almost surrounded by a larger estate, of which the plaintiff was tenant for life, and with which it was formerly united as part of the same family estate. In an action for partition or sale, the plaintiff desired a partition under which the mansion house and part of the land contiguous thereto should be allotted to him, alleging that its value would be depreciated if severed from the larger estate; he offering to pay what should be necessary for equality of partition. The defendant, who was also a neighbouring landowner, desired a sale, and had offered, on the writ being issued, to submit to an immediate decree for sale:—Held, that under s. 4 of the Partition Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict., c. 40), as "no good reason to the contrary" of a sale had been adduced, a sale must be directed. Porter v. Lopes, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 358; 37 L. T., N. S., 824.

7. The dissent of one of six joint owners, though an important matter for consideration, is not, per se, good reason against a sale instead of a partition, within the Partition Act 1868, s. 4; and in the absence of good reason to the contrary, the section is mandatory to the Court. Re Langdale, 5 Ir. R., Eq., 572.

8. The fact that the owner of one moiety of an estate is yearly tenant of the whole property, and occupies it for commercial purposes, and also resides thereon, is no sufficient reason why a sale of the property should not be decreed under the Partition Act 1868, s. 4. Wilkinson v. Joberns, 16 L. R., Eq., 14; 42 L. J., Ch., 663; 21 W. R. 644; 28 L. T., N. S., 724.

9. The 4th section of the 31 & 32 Vict., c. 40, is retrospective. Lys v. Lys, 7 L. R., Eq., 126; 17 W. R. 394; 19 L. T., N. S., 409.

Accordingly in a partition suit instituted before the passing of the Act by the owners of two undivided fourths of the property and praying a sale, which was opposed by the owners of the remaining fourths:—Held, that the onus was thrown upon the parties opposing, and in the absence of any sufficient cause shown against it a sale was ordered. Ib.

10. Where the owners of a moiety of the estate desire a sale, the Court is bound under the Partition Act 1868, s. 4, to decree a sale, unless it sees good reason to the contrary, however large the estate may be, and notwithstanding the opposition of the parties entitled to the residue. Pemberton v. Barnes, 40 L. J., Ch., 675; 6 L. R., Ch., 685; 25 L. T., N. S., 577; 19 W. R. 988.

3. Sale or Valuation (Partition Act 1868, s. 5).

11. The 3rd and 4th sections of the Partition Act 1868 are not controlled in their operation by s. 5. Drinkwater v. Ratcliffe, 20 L. R., Eq., 528; 44 L. J., Ch., 605; 33 L. T., N. S., 417; 24 W. R. 25.

The undertaking to purchase mentioned in s. 5 cannot be given by a married woman whose husband does not join therein. Ib.

Property consisting of a farmhouse and buildings and thirty acres of land was divisible into thirty-six shares; fifteen of them were vested in eight persons who desired a sale, six of them being entitled to one-thirty-sixth share each; the remaining twenty-one were vested in a married woman living apart from her husband. She was in occupation of the farm and opposed a sale, and was willing to give an undertaking to purchase the fifteen shares, but her husband did not join therein. There was evidence that the property would sell advantageously for other than agricultural purposes:—Held, that the owners of the fifteen shares were entitled to a sale, because the owner of the remaining shares could not give a valid undertaking to purchase their shares. Ib.

Held, also, that a sale ought to be directed under the 3rd section, on account of the nature of the property and the number of the parties interested, and because in the opinion of the Court a sale would be more beneficial for the parties interested than a division among them. Ib.

1. When in a partition suit one of the part owners asks for sale and others ask for partition, the Court has not, under 31 & 32 Vict., c. 40, s. 5, power to order that the part owner who asks for a sale shall sell to the others his share at a valuation, and to order that a partition amongst the others shall then be made. Williams v. Games, 10 L. R., Ch., 204; 44 L. J., Ch., 245; 32 L. T., N. S., 414; 23 W. R. 779.

2. A plaintiff in a partition action was owner of one-fourth of the property, the subject of the action; he claimed a right to purchase at a valuation under the 31 & 32 Vict., c. 40, s. 5:—Held, that the owner of the other three-fourths was entitled under s. 4 to have a sale by auction. Roughton v. Gibson, 46 L. J., Ch., 366.

The larger owner in case of purchase by her was directed to pay into court one-half the purchase money only. Ib.

3. Owners of three-sixteenths of a property sought to have a sale of it; owners of thirteen-sixteenths of it objected to a sale and offered to purchase the shares of the others at a valuation. In the Court of the Vice-Chancellor a valuation was ordered under the provisions of the 5th section of the 31 & 32 Vict., c. 40. The Court of Appeal decided that the case fell under the 3rd section of the Act; that the 5th section did not qualify or control the third nor operate as a proviso upon it, and so the decision below was reversed, and a sale was directed:—Held, that the decision of the Court of Appeal was correct, and must be affirmed. Pitt v. Jones, 5 L. R., App. Cas., 651; 49 L. J., Ch., 795; 43 L. T. 385; 29 W. R. 33. Affirming S. C. sub nom. Gilbert v. Smith, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 78; 48 L. J., Ch., 352; 27 W. R. 719; 40 L. T. 635. And reversing 8 L. R., Ch. D., 548; 26 W. R. 905; 38 L. T., N. S., 706.

A party asking for a sale is not compellable to part with his share on a valuation. Ib.

4. Having regard to the decision of the House of Lords in Pitt v. Jones (5 L. R., App. Cas., 651), that the remedies granted by ss. 3 and 5 respectively of the Partition Act 1868 are entirely distinct from each other, a plaintiff in a partition action, who desires a sale instead of a partition, must expressly state in his pleadings that a sale will be more beneficial, so as to give notice to the opposite party that this is the relief which he is claiming under s. 3. The mere statement of facts which tend primâ facie to show that a sale will be more convenient, but which do not exclude the operation of s. 5, will not debar the defendant from insisting, under the latter section, on a partition, on his offer to buy up the plaintiff's interest. Evans v. Evans, or Evans v. Jones, 52 L. J., Ch., 304; 48 L. T. 567; 31 W. R. 495.

4. On Admissions in Pleadings.

5. An order for sale may be made in a partition action on a motion upon admissions in the pleadings under Rules of Court 1875, Ord. XL., r. 11. In such an order the Court will direct an account of rents and profits received by the plaintiff, where he has been in possession, and adjourn further consideration. Burnell v. Burnell, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 213; 48 L. J., Ch., 412; 27 W. R. 749.

6. When in an action for partition the plaintiff's title and that of the other parties had been admitted on the pleadings, the necessary inquiry as to the persons interested, for effecting a sale, was ordered on motion under Rules of Court 1875, Ord. XL., r. 11. Gilbert v. Smith, 2 L. R., Ch. D., 686; 45 L. J., Ch., 514; 35 L. T. 43; 24 W. R. 568.

5. Judgment for and Proceedings thereon.

7. On a sale by auction under a decree, the Court will, under certain circumstances, allow the party having the conduct of the sale to bid. Pennington v. Dalbiac, 18 W. R. 684.

8. The Court has authority to order trustees to sell an estate and divide the purchase money between the parties entitled, direct, without directing the sale to take place in Chambers. Haywood v. Smith, 20 L. T., N. S., 70.

9. Where inquiries are directed, the Court will not make an order for sale on the hearing of the cause. The order must be made on further consideration. Buckingham v. Sellick, 22 L. T., N. S., 370.

10. Form of judgment in an action under the Partition Acts where the parties to the action are persons entitled to less than a moiety of the property and request a sale. Sykes v. Schofield, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 629; 49 L. J., Ch., 833; 42 L. T. 822; 29 W. R. 68.

Where such an action is intituled in the Chancery Division and a district registry, the usual inquiries may be made in the district registry, but the application for a sale should be made in the Chambers of the judge of the Chancery Division to whom the action is attached. Ib.

11. When in a partition action, parties claiming under a derivative title proposed to take a judgment directing inquiries, as to the persons interested, with an order for sale of the estates dependent upon the result of those inquiries:—Form of judgment in such an action. Senior v. Hereford, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 494; 25 W. R. 223.

12. The power given to the Court of Chancery by the Partition Act 1868, to order a sale, cannot be exercised until the inquiries directed by the decree have been made. Powell v. Powell, 23 W. R. 70; 31 L. T., N. S., 467.

Therefore, when a sale is made before the finding of the chief clerk's certificate, the purchaser may refuse to complete, whatever may be the state of facts disclosed by the certificate. Ib.

A decree, directing the usual inquiries and ordering a sale if it shall appear that it would be more beneficial than a partition and that all the persons interested are bound, is not improper, although the Act in terms contemplates the order for sale as being made on "further consideration." Ib.

1. When a sale has been directed by the Court, and the conduct of it given to one party, no other party has a right to interfere in any way in the sale without the leave of the Court. Thus, where the Court directed a sale and gave the conduct of it to an independent solicitor, both plaintiff and defendant having liberty to bid, the plaintiff was restrained by injunction from issuing and circulating advertisements that the sale was about to take place. Dean v. Wilson, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 136; 48 L. J., Ch., 148; 27 W. R. 377.

2. When real estate was held by a complicated title under which the parties interested were very numerous and unborn issue might become entitled to legal estates:—Held, that all persons in existence who were interested in the estate being parties to a suit for partition, and the title being proved at the hearing, an immediate decree for sale might be made without any preliminary inquiry; that a declaration might be made that the parties to the suit were, and that unborn issue upon coming into existence would be, trustees of their shares and interests, within the meaning of the Trustee Act 1850; but that the appointment of a new trustee, and consequent vesting order, ought to be the subject of a subsequent application, and ought not to be made by the decree. Lees v. Coulton, 20 L. R., Eq., 20; 44 L. J., Ch., 556; 23 W. R. 544.

3. In a partition action the Court cannot, in addition to dispensing with service on parties out of the jurisdiction, dispense also with the advertisements directed by s. 3 of the Partition Act 1876. Hacking v. Walley, 51 L. J., Ch., 944.

4. In a partition action, the Court, or indering a sale at the request of the parties to the action, will not, in the absence of the other parties interested, preface the judgment order for sale with an expression of its opinion that a sale is more beneficial than a partition. Form of judgment order for sale in a partition action providing that service of the judgment may be dispensed with under s. 3 of the Partition Act 1876. Re Hardiman, Pragnell v. Batten, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 360; 50 L. J., Ch., 272; 43 L. T. 749; 29 W. R. 495.

6. Operation of Judgment for.

5. Under a will an undivided share of real estate stood limited in remainder after certain life estates and estates tail to the right heirs of A. In a partition suit to which A. was a party, a decree for sale was made under the Partition Act 1868:—Held, that the interests of the persons or person who on the death of A. would become the right heirs or right heir of A. were bound in equity by the decree. Basnett v. Moxon, 20 L. R., Eq., 182; 44 L. J., Ch., 557; 23 W. R. 945.

Held, also, that such persons were "unborn" persons within the meaning of the Trustee Act 1850, s. 30. Ib.

6. A decree in a partition suit directed inquiries as to the persons interested, and whether a sale would be more beneficial than a partition, and if so found directed a sale. The sale took place before the certificate was made:—Held, that the purchaser was entitled to be discharged, but that the decree was not wrong in directing a sale without reserving further consideration. Powell v. Powell, 10 L. R., Ch., 130; 44 L. J., Ch., 122; 31 L. T., N. S., 737; 23 W. R. 201.

7. By a decree for administration in a county court a sale of real estate devised to A. and six other persons, parties to the suit, was ordered, and an inquiry was directed before the registrar of the court as to A., who had not been heard of for many years. On an affidavit being produced to the registrar showing that A. had not been heard of for seventeen years, the sale was effected without any certificate as to the result of the inquiry being made. The sale produced more than 500*l.*, and the cause was transferred to the Court of Chancery. On motion by the purchaser to be discharged and to have his costs paid, on the ground that the sale was invalid as having been made before a certificate in answer to the inquiries had been made:—Held, that A. must be presumed to be dead without issue; and that as all parties interested were in fact before the Court at the hearing, and were willing to convey, and a good title could be made independently of the Partition Act 1868, the purchaser was bound to accept such a title, and could not rely upon the technical informality in the decree. Rawlinson v. Miller, 1 L. R., Ch. D., 52; 46 L. J., Ch. D., 252.

8. In 1864 a decree was made for a partition, liberty being given to carry in proposals for a sale before the commission should be issued. No commission was issued, and after the Partition Act of 1868 had come into operation a supplemental bill was filed praying for a sale or a partition:—Held, that the rights of the parties under the decree were not taken away by the Partition Act, and that the Court had not now power to compel a sale. Pryor v. Pryor, 10 L. R., Ch., 469; 44 L. J., Ch., 535; 32 L. T., N. S., 713; 23 W. R. 738 Affirming 19 L. R., Eq., 595; 32 L. T., N. S., 146; 23 W. R. 483.

9. Under an order of the Court in a partition action, leasehold property settled upon trust for A. for life with remainders over was sold, and the proceeds paid into court, and invested in consols, the dividends of which were much less in amount than the yearly rents received from the leaseholds:—Held, that A. was not entitled to any allowance out of the corpus to make up the deficiency in her annual income. Langmead v. Cockerton, 25 W. R. 315.

10. On a sale by the Court, in a partition suit, one of the conditions of sale provided that if any purchaser should make any objection or requisition which the vendors should be unable or unwilling for reasonable cause to remove or comply with, the vendors should be at liberty, with the leave of the judge, and notwithstanding any intermediate negotiation, or attempt to comply with or remove such objection or requisition, to cancel the contract, which should thereupon be delivered up, and the deposit returned without interest and without costs on either side. The sale was held to be irregular, and a purchaser thereupon took out a summons to be discharged from his purchase with a return of his deposit, and 4*l.* per cent. interest and his costs. The vendors submitted to the purchaser being discharged, but contended that under the condition he was only entitled to a return of his deposit without interest and costs:—Held, that the condition did not apply, and that the purchaser was entitled to be paid the consols, in which his deposit had been invested, and the dividends which had accrued thereon, and his costs. Powel v. Powel, Exp. Bevan, 23 W. R. 482; 32 L. T., N. S., 148; 19 L. R., Eq., 422; 44 L. J., Ch., 311.

VII. COMPENSATION AND ACCOUNT.

1. On bill for partition and account of rents and profits, a decree for that purpose will be made, and relief will not be confined merely to a partition. Lorimer v. Lorimer, 5 Madd. 363. And see Twiner v. Morgan, 8 Ves. 143.

2. Commissioners of partition have no power to award sums to be paid for owelty of partition. Mole v. Mansfield, 15 Sim. 41.

3. Where it is stated, by answer to bill for partition, that defendant has laid out money in improving premises, Court will not decree partition without reference to Master to take an account. Money laid out in improving premises does not, however, in strictness, create a lien on premises; but it is sufficient ground for equity to refuse to interfere. Swan v. Swan, 8 Price 518.

4. Surveyors in partition having allotted by mistake a piece of land to one to whom it belonged previously, and several allotments having been sold before mistake discovered, Court decreed pecuniary compensation to be made to him. Dacre v. Gorges, 2 Sim. & S. 454; 4 L. J., Ch., 50.

5. By a deed between A. and B., A. was to pay B. a sum of money in four months, which he also secured by confessing a judgment; A. did not pay it, and B. had him arrested; the deed provided for the attendance of the parties before the arbitrators and their examination:—Held, that the imprisonment of A. being the consequence of his own breach of contract, gave him no better equity. Dimsdale v. Robertson, 7 Ir. Eq. R. 536; 2 J. & L. 58.

Compensation was to be awarded to A. out of X., for any inequality in a partition of Y.; X., by an event contemplated at the time, became insufficient:—Held, that A. could not be relieved on that ground. Ib.

6. The Court will not make any special directions in a partition suit, because a party has laid out money on property in which he has no legal right, it being his wife's, who ha only a life interest in it. Heath v. Bostock 5 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 20.

7. A., one of several tenants in commor had been in the personal occupation of par of the property. In a suit by another tenan in common, for partition and an account o rents:—Held, that unless A. was charged wit an occupation rent, he could not be allowe for substantial repairs and lasting improve ments made by him on any part of the prc perty. Teasdale v. Sanderson, 33 Bea 534.

8. Freehold and leasehold property belong ing to two sisters, as tenants in common, wa settled upon their respective marriages in th usual way. An agreement was afterward come to by which the property was to be pai titioned and held in severalty on the trusts o the two marriage settlements, a sum of mone being paid for equality of partition. Tha sum was never paid, but interest was paid o it. The parties entitled under each settle ment took possession of the property allotte to them, and expended money in improving i and, as the result of larger expenditure on th property which was originally the most valu able, its value increased to a greater exten than did that of the less valuable property Children having been born of each marriage an action for partition on the basis of th agreement was commenced:—Held, that i calculating the amount to be paid for equalit of partition, one moiety of the differenc between the present values of the propertie should be taken, expenditure by both sides o permanent improvements having been firs deducted. Watson v. Gass, 51 L. J., Ch., 480 45 L. T. 582; 30 W. R. 286.

VIII. CUSTODY OF DEEDS.

9. There is no general rule as to which o the co-parceners is entitled to the custody o a partition deed. The custody was given t three of the co-parceners to whom one-fourt of the estate had been allotted, upon thei entering into joint and several covenants fo production, and with a direction that the dee should be inrolled in Chancery. Bayly v Elton, Elton v. Elton, 6 Jur., N. S., 136; 2 Beav. 632.

Where the parties are equally interested the practice is to give the custody of the deed to the plaintiff; but where they are not, the they are usually given to the person having th greatest interest. Ib.

Many persons being interested in a par tition deed, it was directed to be enrolled with liberty to any party to have a duplicat at his own expense. Ib.

10. The plaintiff in a partition suit was en titled to six-sevenths of the estate, and ha the title deeds:—Held, that the proper form of decree as to the documents of title wa for the delivery to the defendant of such o them as related exclusively to the land whic should be allotted to him, and for the retaine by the plaintiff of the rest, he undertaking t abide by any order which the Court migh make as to the same, with liberty for eithe party to apply. Jones v. Robinson, 3 De G. M & G. 910.

IX. SETTING ASIDE.

1. A partition will not be set aside on light grounds, or for light matters, or for mere inequality of value of the allotments, if, in making it, the commissioners have honestly exercised their own judgment. Peers v. Needham, 19 Beav. 316.

It is not necessary that, in making a partition, an aliquot share of each species of property, or of each house, if it be house property, should be allotted to each of the tenants in common. But where, under a decree for partition amongst three tenants in common, which did not empower the commissioners to order owelty of partition, the commissioners, upon some previous understanding that two of the tenants in common were willing to take one of the two houses comprising the property without severance, allotted that house to them, and the other to the third tenant in common, the return was suppressed. Ib.

2. Objections been made to a partition, first, because a leasehold estate forming part of the property had been divided and the rents apportioned; and secondly, because the commissioners had not directed or permitted the parties to draw lots:—Held, that both objections were untenable. Ames v. Comyns, 16 W. R. 74; 17 L. T., N. S., 163.

See III. ante.

1. Pleading.

3. A bill in equity for partition is in analogy to the proceeding at law, and should be so framed that there shall be a party substantially interested, plaintiff and defendant. Lowe v. Franks, 1 Moll. 137.

4. On a bill for a partition, plaintiff must show a title in himself, and not allege generally that he is in possession of a moiety. Cartwright v. Pulteney, 2 Atk. 380.

5. Bill for a partition against D.; D. by his answer sets up a partition made several years ago, as evidence whereof (amongst other things) he states that plaintiff acted upon a moiety of the premises, as his several estates, and particularly that he made a lease of part thereof to C.; plaintiff amends his bill, making C. a party, charging, that the lease to him was made under circumstances of fraud and imposition, and praying, as against C., that the lease may be set aside, still praying a partition only as against D.; demurrer by D., to the whole bill, for that it is exhibited against several persons, for several and distinct matters, allowed; plaintiff ought first to have filed his bill against C., only to impeach the lease. Whaley v. Dawson, 2 Sch. & Lef. 367.

6. The bill stated that the lands of B., part of which contained 159 acres, and part 46 acres, had been for many years previous to 1794 held by the same tenants, so that the boundaries became confused; that, in 1804, A. was seised in fee of the 159 acres, and held the 46 acres under a lease of H. for a term; that the measurings and boundaries of the 46 acres had not since been ascertained, the entire of the lands having been since the lease, as they had been for 100 years before, held by the same persons who were owners of the fee-simple lands; that they had been so mixed up, that it was impossible to discover the boundaries, or to ascertain where the 46 acres were situated. The bill, after reducing the title of the plaintiff from it, stated that the defendant claimed to be entitled to the 46 acres as assignee of H., and that the plaintiff's interest under the lease had determined, and prayed a partition, or a commission to ascertain the boundaries:—Held, on a demurrer, that it could not be sustained for a partition, as no title to a partition at law was shown, nor as a bill to ascertain boundaries, as the parties were independent proprietors, the inference being, that the defendant was in possession of the 46 acres, and that the owner of the fee-simple lands, and not the defendant, was responsible for the confusion of boundaries. O'Hara v. Strange, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 262.

7. In a suit for a sale under the Partition Act 1868, the bill ought to pray for partition as well as sale. Teall v. Watts, 11 L. R., Eq., 213; 40 L. J., Ch., 176; 23 L. T., N. S., 884; 19 W. R. 317.

8. A sale may be decreed although the bill contains no prayer for partition. Aston v. Merodith, 11 L. R., Eq., 601; 40 L. J., Ch., 241; 24 L. T., N. S., 128.

9. A bill for a sale of property under the same Act ought to pray for a petition also. Holland v. Holland, 13 L. R., Eq., 406; 41 L. J., Ch., 220; 20 W. R. 290; 26 L. T., N. S., 17.

2. Evidence.

10. On a bill of partition no occasion to examine witnesses previously to hearing. Meers v. Stourton (Lord), Dick. 21.

11. On a bill for a partition, where there is a small failure in proof of title, or when the shares of the parties are alone doubtful, the Court will grant an inquiry; but where there is a material omission in the proof of the plaintiff's title, the bill will be dismissed with costs. This course was pursued, though the plaintiff had recovered in ejectment a portion of the estate from the defendant, it not appearing what were the circumstances of that proceeding, or whether the plaintiff's title, as alleged, was therein proved. Jope v. Morshead, 6 Beav. 213; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 190.

12. When in a partition action, parties claiming under a derivative title proposed to take a judgment directing inquiries as to the persons interested, with an order for sale of the estates dependent upon the result of those inquiries:—Held, that the only evidence necessary (in addition to the will whereby the tenancy in common was created) was a general affidavit concisely verifying the statement of claim. Senior v. Hereford, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 494; 25 W. R. 223.

Form of judgment in such an action. Ib.

3. Costs.

1. If a bill be brought in equity for a partition, there can be no costs given on either side, because it is an amicable suit. Anon., 6 Vin. Abr. 332, pl. 31; it being for the benefit of both parties to have their shares in severalty. Metcalfe v. Beckwith, 2 P. W. 377.

On a bill to settle the boundaries of a manor, it was decreed that each party should give to the other a note of their boundaries, and that it should be tried in a feigned issue; and the issue being found for the defendant on the first, second, and third trials the defendant was not only allowed the costs of all the trials at law but also the costs in equity, in regard the defendant had no bill, and the plaintiff might have tried it at law without coming into equity: on a bill of partition no costs on either side, because it is for the benefit of both parties. Ib.

2. On a bill for partition, the costs of executing the commission, and of all necessary proceedings in the cause, must be defrayed by the parties in proportion to their interests. Calmady v. Calmady, 2 Ves. J. 567.

3. The question was as to the costs of one of the parties, and it was held that they must be paid by his landlord, who was the occasion of his being brought before the Court. Cornish v. Gest, 2 Cox 27.

It is perfectly settled that each party pays his own costs on a bill of partition, and that without reference to the quantity of interest that each has in the estate. Ib.

4. In cases of partition where the parties entitled unequally, if the plaintiff be entitled to the smaller share, the costs shall be borne equally. Sed quære if the plaintiff be entitled to the larger share. Hyde v. Hindley, 2 Cox 408.

The Master of the Rolls said, that if a party entitled to forty-nine fiftieths of an estate were to bring the party entitled to the other fiftieth into court for a partition, he should hesitate much before he made such a defendant pay half the costs. Ib.

5. In a partition suit costs at law are not given on either side at the hearing; but where a defendant set up an agreement in bar of the right of the plaintiff to a partition, he was directed to pay so much of the costs as were occasioned by that part of the defence. Morris v. Timmins, 1 Beav. 411.

6. One tenant in common leased his undivided share subject to partition being made. The lessee was made a party to a bill for partition:—Held, he was not entitled to his costs as against his lessor. Cornish v. Gest (2 Cox 27) observed on. Herbert v. Eyre, 2 Jones 803.

7. On a bill for partition, the costs of executing the commission, and of all necessary proceedings in the cause, must be defrayed by the parties in proportion to their interests. St. Paul's (Canons) v. Crickett, 2 Ves. J. 567.

8. In Nevis v. Levene (Ambl. 237), it is said that partition was to be at the expense of both parties; but Mr. Beames (Costs, 48. n.) suggests that this may be the same case with Norris v. Le Neve, 3 Atk. 82, and that, though stated by Ambl. as a case of partition, it was a case respecting settling boundaries.

9. Though the interest of one party is more inconsiderable than that of the other, yet they shall equally bear the expense a commission for settling boundaries, a separating freehold from copyhold. Nor v. Le Neve, 3 Atk. 83.

10. In a partition suit, the parties m contribute to the costs of inrolling the fi decree, though it be a proceeding before t issuing of a commission. Brunker v. Stein Hay & J. 410.

11. In partition suits in future all parties a to abide their own costs until the issuing the commission, but the costs of issuing a executing same, and of the final hearing a decree, are to be bound by the parties in p portion to their respective interests. M'Br v. Malcomson, 2 Dr. & Wal. 700.

12. The general rule as to costs of partiti seems to be, that as the party comes into equ for his own convenience instead of going law, the rule of law should be adopted, a therefore, no costs should be given until t commission, that the costs of issuing, executi and confirming the commission should borne by the parties in proportion to t value of their respective interests; and th should be no costs of subsequent proceedi Agar v. Fairfax, 17 Ves. 533, 558.

13. Held, the habit of Court is not to g costs to hearing; and to divide expense conveyance, and partition in proportion interests. Baring v. Nash, 1 Ves. & B. 554.

14. A moiety of an estate was devised, subj to legacies, to A. for life, remainder to his fi and other sons in tail:—Held, that the tena for life, tenant in tail, and legatees were bear their own costs of a partition suit, a that the tenant for life had no equity to c on the tenant in tail to contribute to the co of the suit. Greer v. Mercer, 4 Ir. Eq. R. 7(

15. Where a bill being filed for a partitic a purchaser of an undivided moiety of the d fendant is made a party by amendment, he entitled to have his costs paid by the plainti Williams v. Williams, 10 W. R. 609.

16. In partition suits the costs up to and i cluding the costs of the first hearing are bor by the parties to the suit respectively, and t costs of all parties properly and necessari incurred after the first hearing and up to a including the second hearing, should be taxe and the total amount of such costs should borne ratably by the parties, according their respective interests. Leslie v. Dunganu (Lord), 12 Ir. Ch. R. 205.

17. Where an order has been made in a su for partition, and the costs of the suit are be paid, some of the parties entitled bei under disability, the Court will order an inqui whether it is for their benefit that the estat or any and what part of it, should be so before partition. Capewell v. Lawrence, L. T., N. S., 603.

18. Subsequent costs in a partition su ordered to be borne by the parties accordi to the value of their respective shares. Elt v. Elton, 27 Beav. 632.

19. In a suit for partition the plaintiff claime as heir of a deceased tenant in common. Th defendant ignored the plaintiff's title as hei and at the original hearing an inquiry as the fact was directed, which was found i favour of the plaintiff:—Held, that the defen ant was not liable to pay the costs of th inquiry, except so far as they might have bee increased by independent evidence adduced by the defendant in opposition to the plaintiff's title. Lyne v. Lyne, 21 Beav. 318.

On the case coming on for further consideration the defendant, who was entitled to a moiety, insisted that she was a purchaser for valuable consideration of the other moiety:—Held, that although no such point had been raised by her answer, she was still entitled to make it available, and an inquiry was directed. Ib.

1. A respondent in a partition suit resisted the petitioner's claim, alleging that the petitioner was not seised of any portion of the land in question. Considerable expense was thus imposed on the petitioner: but that expense was entirely incurred before, and at the first hearing at which a decree for partition was made, and further directions and costs reserved. At the hearing, on the return to the writ of partition and further directions:—Held, that the petitioner was not entitled to be paid by the respondent any portion of his costs up to and including the first hearing. Knox v. May, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 265.

2. In a suit for partition and an account, the defendant improperly disputed the plaintiff's title: ordered to pay so much of the costs as related to the account, and to the proof of the plaintiff's title. Hill v. Fullbrook, Jac. 574.

3. Where a defendant to a partition suit contests the plaintiff's title, he will be decreed to pay so much of the costs as have been occasioned by such contest, but the remaining costs must be borne by the parties themselves. Wilkinson v. Castle, 16 W. R. 501.

4. Where the property was held in equal shares, the costs of all parties, on a decree for sale, were ordered to be paid out of the estate. Miller v. Marriott, 7 L. R., Eq., 1; 19 L. T., N. S., 304; 17 W. R. 41.

5. The Partition Act has not altered the practice of the Court with respect to the costs of a partition suit. Landell v. Baker, 6 L. R., Eq., 268.

Where, therefore, at the hearing of a partition suit a sale was ordered under the Act:—Held, nevertheless, that each party must pay his own costs up to the hearing. Ib.

6. A and B. being entitled to fourteen freehold houses as tenants in common in undivided moieties, entered into an agreement for partition, by which A. was to take and hold in severalty seven of the houses, and B. the other seven. Both died before a deed of partition was executed. The survivor specifically devised the seven houses agreed to be held in severalty by him, but allowed the legal estate in one moiety of the other seven houses to devolve on his heir-at-law:—Held, that the costs of carrying the agreement for partition into effect (including the costs incurred in getting in the outstanding legal estate) must be borne by his devisees, and not by his personal estate. Re Tann, Tann v. Tann, 7 L. R., Eq., 434.

7. When a sale was directed under 31 & 32 Vict., c. 49, and the property was divisible in unequal shares, the Court ordered the costs of all parties to be paid out of the estate. Leach v. Westall, 17 W. R. 313.

8. In the absence of special circumstances, the entire costs of a partition suit ought to be borne by the parties in proportion to the value of their respective shares. Cannon v. Johnson, 40 L. J., Ch., 46; 11 L. R., Eq., 90; 19 W. R. 175; 23 L. T., N. S., 583.

9. Since the passing of the Partition Act the Court is no longer bound by the old rule as to the costs of partition suits. Simpson v. Ritchie, 16 L. R., Eq., 103; 42 L. J., Ch., 543; 21 W. R. 666; 28 L. T., N. S., 548.

In a suit for sale under the Partition Act the plaintiffs were owners of one moiety, and the defendants of one-fourth of the estate; and the owners of the remaining fourth were served with the decree:—Held, that the costs of all parties ought to be paid out of the estate. Ib.

10. A firm of solicitors were employed throughout the proceedings in an action for partition and sale of certain hereditaments of which the defendants were in possession, and for an account of the rents and profits of one-third part thereof for six years prior to the issue of the writ. By the decree the plaintiffs were declared entitled to one-third part of the hereditaments, and to an account and payment by the defendants of one-third of the said rents and profits, and the premises were ordered to be sold, and the plaintiffs' costs up to and including the hearing were ordered to be costs in the action. The account was not completed and the property was not sold when the plaintiffs threatened to change their solicitors and to compromise the action. The share of the plaintiffs in the property and rents was insufficient to pay the plaintiffs' costs. On a petition by the plaintiffs' solicitors asking for a declaration that they were entitled to a charge on the whole property in respect of the plaintiffs' costs, as such costs had been made costs in the action:—Held, that no order having been made for payment of the costs of the action out of the proceeds of sale, the Court could not anticipate such order, and that the solicitors could only be treated as having a lien on the plaintiffs' share recovered by them in the action. An injunction was granted to prevent the plaintiffs from receiving any money in the action, or by way of compromise, without notice to the solicitors. Lloyd v. Jones, 27 W. R. 655; 40 L. T. 514.

11. In a suit for partition under the Partition Act 1868, the plaintiffs and defendants were together absolutely entitled to the whole of the legal and equitable fee of the estate, and the relief asked and obtained was partition and not sale:—Held, that the whole costs of the action should be borne by the parties ratably and in proportion to the value of their respective shares. Bowes v. Bute (Marquis), 27 W. R. 750.

12. As a general rule, the costs of a partition action should be borne by the parties in proportion to their interests as declared by the judgment. Ball v. Kemp-Welch, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 512; 49 L. J., Ch., 528; 43 L. T. 116.

The costs of a partition action can be taxed as between solicitor and client only by the consent of the parties; otherwise they must be taxed as between party and party. Ib.

13. A wife and her husband had severed in their defence, and the wife's solicitors had obtained a charging order and stop order on the fund in court for the costs due to them in the suit, and appeared on the present hearing on further consideration:—Held, that they must bear their own costs of appearance by counsel as well as of the stop order. Mildmay v. Quicke, 20 L. R., Eq., 357; 46 L. J., Ch., 667.

1. Certain estates were, as to one undivided fourth part, limited to C. B. in tail, the tenant in possession; remainder to J. D. B. in tail, an infant; remainder to E. C. and others in tail, in co-parcenery; remainders over in tail. C. B. was found a lunatic by inquisition. In a suit for partition by A. S., who was entitled to one other undivided fourth part, E. C. and her husband were made parties. On objection, that inasmuch as a conveyance could be obtained from the lunatic under the Trustee Act 1850, they were unnecessary parties, the Court held that the powers given by the Act to the Lord Chancellor were discretionary, and that E. C., the tenant in tail in remainder, was not an unnecessary or improper party. Where C. B., the first tenant in tail in possession, was a lunatic, the second tenant in tail in remainder an infant, and E. C., the third tenant in tail in remainder, being made a party to the suit, by her answer did not disclaim, but said that she made out the interest which she claimed by referring to the statements in the plaintiff's bill, in which such interests were stated to be correctly set forth, and the prayer of the bill was for a conveyance of the shares, when allotted, to the parties nominatim, including E. C., the Court held that E. C. was not an unnecessary party; but inasmuch as E. C. could not derive any present benefit from the suit, her costs up to the hearing were decreed to be a charge upon the fourth part which should be allotted to the lunatic, in respect of which E. C. was interested. The costs of C. B., the lunatic, and of the infant tenant in tail in remainder, were also decreed to be a charge upon the lunatic's fourth part of the estates. Singleton v. Hopkins, 1 Jur., N. S., 1199; 4 W. R. 107; 25 L. J., Ch., 50.

Quære, whether a Vice-Chancellor has in such a case jurisdiction to make an order charging a lunatic's estate with costs. Ib.

Where Infants Interested.] 2. In a suit for partition, costs of infants, including as well the costs incurred for the issuing of the commission as those incurred subsequently thereto, charged upon and ordered to be raised out of the shares allotted to such infants respectively in severalty. Cox v. Cox, 3 Kay & J. 554.

3. In a suit for partition of property in which an infant was interested, the estate was sold:—Held, that the costs subsequently to the first decree ought to be borne by the aggregate amount of the purchase-moneys. Coventry v. Coventry, 34 Beav. 572.

4. In a partition suit, where some of the parties interested were under disability, the Court declared the costs of each party to be a charge upon their respective shares; and it appearing to be for the benefit of the infants, the Court ordered a sale of the entirety, without partition, for the purpose of raising and paying costs. Davis v. Turvey, 9 Jur., N. S., 954; 11 W. R. 679; 8 L. T., N. S., 378; 2 N. R. 151.

5. Where some of the parties to a suit for partition are under disability, and it appears to be for their benefit that the costs of the suit be raised out of the estate before partition, the shares of all parties being properly chargeable with their costs, the Court will direct a sale of the entirety of the estate for the purpose of paying costs. Thackeray v Parker, 8 L. T., N. S., 602; 1 N. R. 567.

6. When a partition suit was instituted by the owners of three undivided sevenths of freehold premises for a sale of the whole, and such sale was not opposed by the guardian ad litem of three minors, who, under their father (which directed that no sale should take place until the youngest attained twenty-one), were owners of the remaining four-sevenths, and one of them had come of age before the hearing of the suit, and also desired a sale the Court made a decree as prayed, directing an inquiry as to whether the acceptance of an offer for the premises would be for the benefit of the minors, and ordered the costs of all parties to be paid ratably out of the purchase money, according to their respective interests Thompson v. Richardson, 6 Ir. R., Eq., 596.

7. Where part of an estate held in undivided shares (one share belonging to an infant) is contracted to be sold, and a bill is filed to carry out that contract and incidentally asks a partition: the Court will direct a sale of the whole by consent, the infant's costs being a charge on his share. Smith v. Birch, 18 L. T., N. S., 174

8. When real estate of an infant is ordered to be sold for payment of costs or any other special purpose, and more is sold than is required, the surplus proceeds of sale are converted into personal estate, and on the death of the infant go to his personal representatives Steed v. Preece, 18 L. R., Eq., 192; 43 L. J. Ch., 687; 22 W. R. 432.

9. Where the defendants were infants the Court, on making a decree for sale under the Act, ordered the costs of all parties to be paid out of the estate. Osborn v. Osborn, 6 L. R. Eq., 338; 37 L. J., Ch., 656; 18 L. T., N. S., 678

10. On a bill filed by infants against an infant for partition or sale of land, an order was made for sale, and the infants' costs were charged on the respective shares. France v. France, 41 L. J., Ch., 150; 13 L. R., Eq., 173 20 W. R. 230; 25 L. T., N. S., 785.

11. When infants prayed for a declaration that premises were divisible amongst them and a defendant, and that the costs of the suit might be taxed, and the plaintiffs' costs declared to be a charge on their shares; for a partition, or sale, and, after payment of the costs, for a division of the proceeds; the Court made a declaration as to the rights of the parties, and directed a sale, but declined to make any order as to the costs until the further consideration of the cause. Davey v. Wietlisbach, 15 L. R., Eq., 269.

4. Receiver.

12. A receiver will not be granted on a bill of partition filed by one tenant in common against another, unless a case of exclusion is shown. Spratt v. Ahearne, 1 Jones 50.

13. In an action for partition, where one of the co-owners is in occupation, though not in exclusive occupation, of the property, the Court has jurisdiction under the Judicature Act 1873, s. 25, sub-s. 8, to appoint a receiver until the hearing. Porter v. Lopes, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 358; 37 L. T., N. S., 824.

XI. CONVEYANCES.

1. It is essential to partition to have the legal title before the Court. Miller v. Warmington, 1 Jac. & Walk. 493.

2. Difference between partition at law and in equity. The former operates by the judgment of a court of law, conclusive on the parties, the latter proceeds on conveyances to be executed between the parties, and cannot be effectual if the parties be incompetent to execute. Whaley v. Dawson, 2 Sch. & Lef. 372.

3. On a partition between A., B., and C., A. refused to execute a conveyance to B. unless B. and C. executed a conveyance to him:—Held, that he was only entitled to require a conveyance from B. to himself as the condition of his executing a conveyance to B. Orger v. Parker, 9 W. R. 180.

4. A right merely dependent on ownership cannot be reserved over the entirety after partition. Charlesworth v. Garsted, 3 N. R. 54.

5. Under a power to make a partition in a marriage settlement, certain lands in Wales ("mines and minerals" excepted) were partitioned by an agreement, and deeds of partition were afterwards executed carrying out the agreement upon a valuation and report of two surveyors. The property was divided into moieties, one moiety consisting to a great extent of limestone rock, which, though of small value when the partition was made, became afterwards very valuable. The plaintiffs, who were now the owners of the other moiety, claimed a participation in the royalties and rents arising from the lime pits or quarries, on the ground that lime-rock was included in the term "mines and minerals;" and on bill filed to determine the question whether lime-rocks were minerals:—Held, that they were not, and bill dismissed. Semble, a mineral refers to the mode in which the substance is worked, a mine being a covert working; a quarry, sub dio. Darvel v. Roper, 3 W. R. 467; 3 Drew. 294; 3 Eq. Rep. 1004.

6. Upon a partition, the shares of the parties were very minute and complicated. The Court, to save expense, and instead of directing a conveyance of the several shares, declared each of the parties trustees as to the shares allotted to them, and then vested the whole trust estate in a single new trustee, under the Trustee Acts, with directions to convey to the several parties their allotted shares. Shepherd v. Churchill, 25 Beav. 21.

7. After a sale under a decree for partition in a suit under the Partition Act of 1868, it appeared that one-sixth of the estate was vested in B. (one of the parties to the suit), a bachelor, for life, with remainders to his issue in tail, with ultimate remainders to the right heirs of the plaintiff:—Held, that the power (to make declarations as to the interests of unborn persons, and that such persons on coming into existence would be trustees) given by the Trustee Act 1850, s. 30, which is incorporated in the Partition Act 1868, enabled the Court to make an order to appoint a person to convey the legal estate in the one-sixth limited to the right heirs of the plaintiff. Basnett v. Moxon, 44 L. J., Ch., 556; 20 L. R., Eq., 20; 23 W. R. 544. And see Lees v. Coulton, 20 L. R., Eq., 20; 44 L. J., Ch., 556; 23 W. R. 544.

8. Section 1 of the Trustee Extension Act 1852 (15 & 16 Vict., c. 55), applies to sales under the Partition Acts 1868 and 1876, and is not limited to cases of persons under disability. Beckett v. Sutton, 19 L. R., Ch. D., 646; 51 L. J., Ch., 432; 46 L. T. 481; 30 W. R. 490.

Infants.] 9. Partition between an adult and the infant, the latter having time till of age to show cause, Court orders the conveyance from the adult to be respited till that time. Luckfield v. Buller, Ambl. 197.

10. There being on bill for partition, infant cestuis que trustent, conveyance respited till they come of age. Att.-Gen. v. Hamilton, 1 Madd. 214.

11. Lands conveyed to trustees in trust, as to one moiety to B. (who is of age) in tail, A., the infant, brings a bill for a partition. Decreed a partition, but the trustees not to convey till the infant is of age, that he might join in confirming the partition. Brook (Lord) v. Hertford (Lord), 2 P. W. 518.

12. In a partition suit to which minors are parties, they may be declared trustees of the portions not allotted to them, and their proportion of the costs declared a charge upon the estate of the minors in the land. St. Leger v. Ferguson, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 488.

13. Where infants are parties to a suit for a partition, the form of the decree since the stat. 13 & 14 Vict., c. 60, is to declare that, after partition, the infant is a trustee of the parts allotted in severalty to the other parties. Bowra v. Wright, 4 De G. & Sm. 265; 15 Jur. 981; 20 L. J., Ch., 216. S. C. nom. Bowra v. Whight, 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 216; 15 Jur. 981.

Lunatics.] 14. Where a decree had been made by a Vice-Chancellor for a partition of lands of which a lunatic was entitled to an undivided share as tenant in tail in possession, the Court, on the committee appearing and expressing his opinion that the partition would be for the benefit of the lunatic, made an offer, intituled in the Trustee Act 1850, the Lunacy Regulation Act, 16 & 17 Vict., c. 70, the matter of the lunacy, and the suit in which the decree had been made, directing the partition to be carried out, and a conveyance to be executed by the committee. Singleton v. Hopkins, Re Blomar or Bloomar, 2 De G. & J. 88; 4 Jur., N. S., 546; 27 L. J., Ch., 173; 6 W. R. 178.

15. Where, in a suit for partition of lands to which a lunatic was entitled to an undivided share, a partition had been made, and the lunatic had been declared a trustee within the Trustee Act 1850:—Held, on a petition by the owner of the other undivided moiety, that the Court had jurisdiction to carry out the petition by a vesting order under the Trustee Act 1850, notwithstanding the doubt attributed to the Court in Re Bloomar (2 De G. & J. 88). Re Molyneux, 10 W. R. 512; 4 De G. F. & J. 465.

16. A decree having been made for partition of lands, an undivided share in which was vested in a lunatic, as tenant-in-tail, an order was made in lunacy and in Chancery, directing the committee to execute all necessary assurances for giving effect to the partition. Re Sherard, Lowther v. Cuffe, 1 De G. J. & Sm. 421.

17. It is irregular for a bill to be filed by a person of unsound mind not so found by inquisition, by his next friend, for the purpose of dealing with the real estate of the person of unsound mind. Halfhide v. Robinson, 9 L. R., Ch., 373; 22 W. R. 448; 30 L. T., N. S., 216.

A bill was filed by a person of unsound mind not so found, by his next friend, for a partition or sale of real estate, and a decree for sale was made. A petition was afterwards presented under the Trustee Act 1852 for an order vesting the estate of the plaintiff in the purchaser. The Court refused to make the order, considering that the suit was irregular, but as the plaintiff's share was only 200*l.*, and she had no other property, the Court directed an application to be made in lunacy, under the Lunacy Regulation Act 1862, s. 13, for a sale, and permitted the petition to be amended for that purpose. Ib.

1. The Court, under its lunacy jurisdiction, has power to bar the estate tail of a lunatic tenant in tail; but it is the duty of the Court so to exercise it as not to affect the rights of the persons entitled in remainder to the estate. Where a lunatic was tenant in tail of an undivided share of an estate, and an action was brought for the partition of the estate, the Court, under the 6th section of the Partition Act 1868, authorised the committee of the lunatic to request a sale and to join in conveying the estate to the purchaser, but directed that the proceeds of the sale should be subject to the same uses as the lunatic's estate was subject to before the sale. Re Pares, Lillingston v. Pares, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 333; 41 L. T. 574; 28 W. R. 193.

XII. OTHER MATTERS.

2. By long custom, four measures of corn were distributed to the poor of two parishes by the owners of the M. estate. In 1795 a bill for partition was filed, and subsequently an Act of Parliament to effect the same was passed, and lot 2 in the schedule was allotted to W., and in the same schedule the above measures of corn were mentioned as attaching to that lot, though it was not expressly said that they were a charge on the land. For thirty years the owner of lot 2 paid a sum of money in respect of the measures of corn, and on F. W., the son of W., succeeding to lot 2, he opposed further payment, though for two years later the money had been paid by the agents of F. W. On an ex officio information being filed against F. W. he insisted that the payments had been all along merely voluntary, and for the last two years without his authority, but Romilly, M. R., declared the value of the measures of corn were a charge on the land in lot 2, which was affirmed on appeal. Att.-Gen. v. West, 27 L. J., Ch., 789; 5 Jur., N. S., 77.

Waste and Trespass.] 3. After a decree has been made in a partition suit there is juisdiction in the suit, upon motion, to restrain by injunotion one of the parties to the suit from wasting the property, or doing anything amounting to an alteration of it. Bailey v. Hobson, 18 W. R. 124; 5 L. R., Ch., 180; 39 L. J., Ch., 270; 22 L. T., N. S., 594.

But where, after a decree for sale had been made in a partition suit, one of the parties, who was in possession of the whole property, but not under any tenancy, was about to sell off the property certain crops, and there was evidence only to show that by the custom of the country, as between landlord and tenant, those crops could not be sold by the tenant off the land:—Held, that no injunction to restrain the sale could be granted. Ib.

4. Pending a partition suit, the Court will not interfere with the property, nor allow it to be interfered with by the parties, until the partition has been completed; and, therefore, it refused an injunction to restrain the defendant, who was in occupation of the portion allotted to the plaintiff, from proceeding with an action of trespass against the plaintiff for a forcible entry. Hughes v. D'Arcy, 8 Ir. R., Eq., 71.

Previously to the execution of the mutual conveyances on partition, one of several tenants in common will not be restrained from distraining for his proportion of the rent which had accrued due before the certificate, embodying the partition, has been made. Ib.

Incorporation of s. 23 of Settled Estates Act 1856 (19 & 20 Vict., c. 120).] 5. The words of the 23rd section of the Settled Estates Act when imported into the 8th section of the Partition Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict., c. 40), are not to be restricted to a sale of estates in settlement, but apply to all sales effected under the Partition Act. Re Barker, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 241; 50 L. J., Ch., 334; 44 L. T. 33; 29 W. R. 873.

The payment of the money into court to the credit of the lunacy was not a payment "to a person becoming absolutely entitled" within the meaning of the 23rd section of the Settled Estates Act. Ib.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. Partner without participation of profit by lending his name, though contracting that he shall suffer no loss. Exp. Langdale, 18 Ves. 300.

2. Where A.'s name is used in partnership by other partners as a partner, but he receives no part of profits, etc., nor are any articles of partnership entered into by A. and others:—Held, but a nominal partnership. Jacobsen v. Hennekenius, 5 Bro. P. C. 482.

3. A draft of articles of partnership, together with a stated account and payment of money by acting partner to others:—Held, sufficient evidence of partnership to ground decree for account. Worts v. Pern, 3 Bro. P. C. 548.

4. A partnership cannot be established by the evidence of the partners and their private communications. The fact must be proved aliunde. For want of such proof a commission against the ostensible partners only was sustained. Exp. Benfield, 5 Ves. 424.

5. A public declaration in an advertisement of dissolution constitutes a partnership. Exp. Matthews, 3 Ves. & B. 125.

6. Part owners of a ship are tenants in common, but jointly interested in her use, and the law as to the earnings of a ship follows the general law of partnership. Green v. Briggs, 6 Hare 395; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 323; 12 Jur. 326.

7. A. being as a partner entitled to a share of extensive iron works, and of the lands and premises on which they were carried on, agreed for valuable consideration to assign to B. his interest in the property and business: B. interfered and acted as a partner, but afterwards he assigned his share and gave notice to the other partners that he had withdrawn from the business, and when called on to complete his purchase, resisted the performance of the contract successfully, on the ground that a good title could not be shown:—Held, that B., as between him and his other partners, was to be treated as a partner, and was to contribute to the partnership losses until the time when he gave notice of his withdrawal from the concern, and assigned his share; that his liability ceased upon his assigning his share and giving notice to the other partners of his withdrawal from the concern; that the assignment of his share, though made to an insolvent person, was not for that reason the less effectual in putting an end to his liability; that the assignee not having been acknowledged a partner or permitted to act as such did not, by his acceptance of the assignment, incur any liability as between himself and the co-partners. Jefferys v. Smith, 3 Russ. 158.

8. A. by his will (after declaring his intention to assign the lease of a hotel in which he carried on business, and the effects therein and the business thereof, in trust for his son and daughter, in consideration of an annuity to be paid to him for life), bequeathed the residue of his personal estate and effects to his son and daughter in equal shares. The testator died without having effected the purpose declared in his will. The daughter, being executrix, carried on the business until she married in 1819. In the following year, the son filed a bill praying an account of the profits of the business from the death of the testator until 1819, and that half the profits and half the assets might be paid to him as residuary legatee and partner. The Vice-Chancellor and Lord Chancellor decided that a partnership existed from the death of the testator to the marriage of the daughter. Against this decree the defendants appealed to the House of Lords, and insisted that an issue should be directed to try whether a partnership existed. The House affirmed the decree, on the ground that it was then too late to ask for such an issue. Burnand v. Nerot, 2 Bli., N. S., 215; 4 Russ. 247; 6 L. J., Ch., 81.

1. R., being in possession of mines and iron-works, under leases of unequal duration, by will bequeathed 25,000*l.* to B. "as a capital for him to become partner with my executors of one-fourth share in trade of all those works so long as the lease endures," with a devise to H. and his wife of residue of his estates, real and personal. By codicil testator gave to W. three-eighths of concern of iron-works: "the partnership will stand at my death, W. three-eighths, H. three-eighths, B. two-eighths." After R.'s death W., H., and B. carried on works for two years, selling iron manufactured not only from the produce of the mines, but from other sources:—Held, that codicil revoked residuary clause in favour of H.'s wife as to the trade, and that concern was a partnership in trade. Cranshay v. Maule, 1 Swan. 495; 1 Wils. 181.

2. Interests in partnership trade, under articles, for widows of the partners for their respective lives, and after the decease of the widows to be equally divided among their respective children:—Held, not vested in children who died in life of mother on account of nature of the subject; the primary object being to constitute a partnership and ascertain the succession, and a provision for the family being only a secondary object through that medium. Balmain v. Shore, 9 Ves. 500.

3. Joint ownership of property accompanied with joint occupation distinguished from partnership, and one of the joint owners held not entitled to a lien on the property for money advanced by him and laid out on it. Duties of guardians of infants, whether wards of court or not, stated. Kay v. Johnston, 21 Beav. 536.

4. Semble, that a company for building a corn exchange is not a partnership so as to affect the shareholders with unlimited liability. Worcester Corn Exchange Co., 1 W. R. 171; 22 L. J., Ch., 593.

5. A., who was the proprietor of a wholesale woollen and cloth establishment in Dublin, entered into an agreement with B. to become the managing partner in a separate and larger concern in the same trade, in Huddersfield, which had been previously conducted by B. the sole owner. B. having offered to become a partner in the Dublin establishment of A., it was arranged, though upon no definite or conclusive agreement, that B. should superintend the Dublin concern, with the object of testing its capacity, and ascertaining whether it was sufficiently profitable to be continued. It was further agreed that, at the expiration of a year, B. should have the option of entering into a partnership in the Dublin business, and should be entitled to a share of the profits of that year, but should not receive any remuneration or any portion of the profits, if, at the end of that time, he elected not to become a partner. B. came to Dublin, and for some time took part in the superintendence and management of the Dublin establishment. He never exercised, however, his option of becoming a partner but having apparently abandoned all interest in the concern, died before the expiration of the year of trial:—Held, that a partnership in the Dublin business did not exist between A. and B.; and that consequently a claim made by the executors of B. to be admitted as creditors of the estate of A., on his bankruptcy, for goods sold and cash supplied by the Huddersfield house to the Dublin concern, should be disallowed. Re Hall, 15 Ir. Ch. R. 287; 11 L. T., N. S., 579.

6. A covenant by B. to admit a nominee of C. as a partner with him will not of itself create a partnership between them. Exp. Davis, Re Harris, 9 Jur., N. S., 859; 32 L. J., Bky., 68; 8 L. T., N. S., 745; 4 De G. J. & S. 523.

An agreement was entered into between A. and B., whereby in effect A. was to carry on a certain business in the name of A. & Co., for the benefit of himself and any person whom B. might at any time within eight years nominate; B. was to make certain advances to A. for the purpose of the business, and become surety for him to a certain company; A. was to give B. promissory notes for his advances and any sums he might pay as surety, and to carry on the business in partnership with B.'s nominee for twenty-one years on certain specified terms: the profits of the business were to be for the first eight years applied in paying A. 100*l.* a year, and then in paying B. his advances with interest; and the residue was to be divided between A. and B.'s nominee in certain specified proportions, and losses were to be borne in the same proportions. The agreement gave B. a right to see the accounts relating to the business, and contained other special clauses under which B. might at any time within the eight years have nominated himself a partner. Before the eight years had elapsed, and before any nomination had been made by B., A. became bankrupt, being indebted to B. for advances. There being no person who claimed to be a joint creditor of A. and B.:—Held, that B.'s executor was entitled to prove against A.'s estate for the advances, the agreement not having constituted A. and B. partners as between themselves. Ib.

7. E. experimented in sewage, B. in yeast, and W. supplied both of them with money for the purpose. The three traded ostensibly as partners under the names of Stuart & Co., Ward & Co., and Hofmann & Co., and ultimately under that of Hofmann, Bowing, Ellis, & Co. Prior to 1869, the terms of the ostensible partnership subsisted in parol only, the two businesses being speculative and hazardous; but in 1869, success in the yeast manufacture appearing to have been at last obtained, a draft deed of partnership was prepared, but before its execution a rupture occurred among the partners or intending partners, and the deed remained unexecuted. B. and W. expelled E. forcibly from the premises, and subsequently took out a patent for the yeast invention in their own names. E. filed a bill claiming to be restored to the partnership and to have the benefit of the patent, and an injunction and an account. It was proved that no yeast had ever been sold:—Held, that these circumstances showed no partnership between E. and W. and B. Ellis v. Ward, 21 W. R. 100.

8. J. gave to a bank a guarantee for 1,000*l.* in favour of A. & Co., representing at the time to the bank manager that he was a partner in fact in that firm, but that he wished the fact of his partnership to be kept secret. The guarantee described him as a partner in the firm. Some time afterwards A. alone, as A. & Co., filed a liquidation petition, and the bank tendered a proof in the liquidation for advances which they had made to A. & Co. after the guarantee. After this the bank sued J. for 5,659*l.*, alleging him to have been a partner with A. J. filed a bill in chancery to restrain the proceedings in the action, denying the alleged partnership. A compromise was entered into between the bank and J., by which 2,818*l.* was paid to them in satisfaction of their claim against J. and of a claim which they made against S., who had also given them a guarantee on behalf of A. & Co. J.'s guarantee was given up to him, a receipt for 1,000*l.* being indorsed on it by the bank manager "in payment and discharge of the within guarantee, and also of all claims against J. in reference to or in connection with A. & C.":—Held, that J. must be taken to have been an actual partner with A., but that the receipt did not operate to release J., so as to preclude the bank from maintaining a proof against A.'s estate. Exp. Good, Re Armitage, 5 L. R., Ch. D., 46; 46 L. J., Bky., 65; 25 W. R. 422; 36 L. T. 338.

1. An ordinary partnership is a partnership composed of definite individuals, bound together by contract between themselves to continue combined for some joint object, either during pleasure or during a limited time, and is essentially composed of the persons originally entering into the contract with one another. A company is the result of an arrangement by which parties intend to form a partnership which is constantly changing, a partnership to-day consisting of certain members and to-morrow of some only of those members, along with others who have come in; so that there will be a constant shifting of the partnership, and with the intention that, so far as the partners can, by agreement between themselves, bring about such a result, the new partnership shall succeed to the assets and liabilities of the old partnership. Semble. Smith v. Anderson, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 273; 50 L. J., Ch., 39; 43 L. T. 329; 29 W. R. 21.

Statute of Frauds.] 2. An agreement to become partners in a colliery which was to be demised upon royalties, and the royalties to be divided in certain proportions, is an interest in land within the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. 2, c. 3, and must be in writing, signed by the parties. Caddick v. Skidmore, 3 Jur., N. S., 1185; 6 W. R. 119.

Receipts signed by the party sought to be charged, which partly disclosed the nature of the agreement, held not sufficient to take the case out of the statute. Ib.

3. A partnership agreement between A. and B. that they shall be jointly interested in a speculation for buying, improving for sale, and selling lands, may be proved without being evidenced by any writing signed by, or by the authority of, the party to be charged therewith, within the Statute of Frauds, and such an agreement being proved, A. or B. may establish his interest in land, the subject of the partnership, without such interest being evidenced by any such writing. Dale v. Hamilton, 5 Hare 369; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 126; 11 Jur. 163. And see S. C. on appeal, 2 Ph. 266; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 397; 11 Jur. 574.

An agreement between B. and C. was communicated by one of the parties to A. After applications in writing from A., for the signature of the other parties to a memorandum, expressing his interest as a partner in the transaction relating to the land, the subject of the agreement, the Court held that the agreement so communicated must be taken, not as an original proposal, but as an acknowledgment of a pre-existing right in A., and that A. might avail himself of the acknowledgment, notwithstanding the agreement between B. and C. was res inter alios acta, and notwithstanding A. objected to some of the terms in that agreement, as not truly expressing his partnership contract. Ib.

II. BY SHARING PROFIT AND LOSS.

4. Partnership by agreement for participation in profits or their application. Exp. Langdale, 18 Ves. 300.

5. Partner constituted by a share in profits without interest in capital. Exp. Hodgkinson, 19 Ves. 291.

6. Agreement between two traders, that one shall advance the fund and the other superintend the business, the profit to be equally divided, but the entire loss, if any, to be borne by the latter, not usurious, but nudum pactum as to the last clause, and such an agreement ought to be construed as constituting a partnership, the loss to be borne, as well as the profits shared equally. Brophy v. Holmes, 2 Moll. 1.

7. A. and B. were tailors; A. employed B. to obtain orders for him, and agreed to allow him a share of the profits by way of commission upon such orders. B. carried on the business with A., but his name was not joined with that of A. All goods were ordered and paid for by A., and all debts were paid to him alone. B. set up a partnership:—Held, that a right to a share of the profits did not necessarily create a partnership, and there was no evidence to prove a partnership on the part of B. Andrews v. Pugh, 24 L. J., Ch., 58.

8. An agreement between underwriters to act in concert, and share equally the profit and loss of all insurances, constitutes a partnership, though each underwrote policies in his own name for distinct sums. Brett v. Beckwith, 3 Jur., N. S., 31; 26 L. J., Ch., 130.

The 35 Geo. 3, c. 63, requiring the names of insurers to be written upon policies, will not prevent the insured from recovering from persons engaged as partners in underwriting though each of the partners signed in his own name in distinct sums, and not on behalf of a firm. Ib.

9. The proper test of liability as a partner is not whether the party sought to be charged has stipulated for the participation in profits as such, but whether the person by whom the trade was actually carried on, carried it on in the capacity of agent for him. Wheatcroft v. Hickman, Cox v. Hickman, 8 H. L. Ca. 268; 7 Jur., N. S., 105; 30 L. J., C. P., 125.

A. and B., who carried on the business of ironmasters in co-partnership by a deed, purporting to be made between A. and B. of the first part, five persons named as trustees of the second part, and the several persons whose names were contained in a schedule as creditors for the sum therein mentioned, and who should execute the deed of the third part, reciting that A. and B. were indebted to the several persons, parties thereto of the third part, and that they had agreed to assign all their estate and effects for the benefit of such creditors, assigned the works and all their property and effects to the trustees upon trust to carry on the business under the name of the Stanton Iron Company, and out of the profits to pay interest on mortgages, etc., and to pay and divide the net income of the business remaining after answering the purposes aforesaid, unto and among all and singular the creditors of A. and B. in ratable proportions according to the amount of their respective debts:—Held, that, under this deed, the creditors executing it did not become liable as partners for debts contracted by the trustees in carrying on the trade. Ib.

1. A policy-holder, participating in the profits of the society, is not necessarily a partner in it. Cox v. Hickman (8 H. L. Ca. 268) followed. Re English and Irish Church and University Assurance Society, 2 N. R. 107.

2. At a meeting in 1852 between A. and B., two solicitors, it was agreed that the professional business connected with the formation of a new line of railway should be apportioned between them; that they should co-operate as solicitors in getting up the company, and obtaining an Act of Parliament at their own risk; that each should provide the cash for his own disbursements, such disbursements to be repaid in the first instance, and any profits should be equally divided between them. The company was formed, and the Act obtained; and at a meeting of the company in March 1855, a proposal in writing was made by A. and B., and confirmed by the company, that they should be allowed 1,500*l.* in paid-up shares, in addition to their disbursements, such 1,500*l.* to be received in full for all professional business up to that time, but to be subject to revision in case the line should be completed. In 1856 part of the line was commenced, but the works were stopped for the want of funds. These funds were afterwards supplied by B. and others, A. not being able to contribute. In 1858 a small part of the line was completed, and A., early in 1859, pressed the company for payment on account of his costs. In May 1859 the company paid him 450*l.* in cash and 740*l.* in paid-up shares, and took from him a release of all claims. From that time A. ceased to act as solicitor to the company. B. said that some time in 1858 he told A., when he was pressing the company, that he (B.) should henceforth decline undertaking any fresh business of the company in co-operation with him; and that since the date of the release he had had nothing whatever to do with A. He admitted A.'s right to have the profits attending obtaining the Act of Parliament, but insisted that the memorandum of March 1855, and the payments and release of May 1859, settled all questions between A. and himself. He denied that any partnership was ever constituted. Stuart, Vice-Chancellor, held, that the parties were entitled to share equally in all profits derived from all business transacted by them, or either of them, for the company from the meeting in 1852 up to the date of the decree. On appeal, held, that the release did not put an end to the agreement between the parties, and that A. was entitled to a decree for an account to April 1859. Hanslip v. Kitton, 8 Jur., N. S., 835, 1113; 7 L. T., N. S., 291.

3. Where two solicitors, who are not in partnership, are employed in the same matter for a client, as in the defence of an action, the primâ facie inference of law is, that they are partners as to that particular matter, and entitled to an equal share of the joint profits, irrespective of the quantity of work performed by each. Robinson v. Anderson, 20 Beav. 98; 7 De G. M. & G. 239.

Where the contrary is alleged, the burden of proof is on him who alleges it. Ib.

4. A company was formed in India to carry on the business of insurance, and A., residing in the Mauritius, gave special verbal instructions to B., who was the agent for the company in India, to execute the partnership deed for A., which was done, and A.'s name appeared in the list of shareholders. Afterwards, on the insolvency of the company, A. set up the defence that he was not a shareholder, for no power by deed was given to B. to execute the deed in his name:—Held, that a partner might become liable in that character without having executed the partnership deed, if his name was put on the list of shareholders with his consent, so as to entitle him to share in the profits. Leishman v. Cochrane, 12 W. R. 181; 9 L. T., N. S., 104.

5. From 1849 R. resided with his father, and assisted him in his business. The sign-board, the invoices, and the banking account were in the name of "R. & Son." They drew and accepted bills under the same title, and executed a deed which described them as co-partners:—Held, nevertheless, after the death of the son, in 1862, that they were not partners inter se. The circumstances relied on were, the absence of any division of profits in the books, which were kept by the son; the absence of proof of the son's having any capital or being entitled to receive any share of the profits; the fact of his having, when he ceased to reside with his father, made no request for an account of the profits, but accepted 1*l.* a week as a remuneration until his death, six months afterwards; and the testimony of the members of the family. Rudcliffe v. Rushworth, 33 Beav. 484.

6. When an association of two or more persons is formed for the purpose of carrying on or continuing to carry on business, and those persons are to share indefinitely the profits of the business, they are to be treated as partners in that business, unless there are surrounding circumstances to show that they are not really partners. Pooley v. Driver, 36 L. T., N. S., 79; 4 L. R., Ch. D., 458; 46 L. J., Ch., 466; 25 W. R. 162.

In the absence of something in the contract to show a contrary intention, the right to share profits, as profits, constitutes, according to English law, a partnership. Ib.

7. Although a right to participate in the profits of a trade is a strong test of partnership, and there may be cases where, from such perception alone, it may as a presumption, not of law, but of fact, be enforced; yet, whether that relation does or does not exist, must depend on the real intention and contract of the parties. Mollwo v. Court of Wards, 4 L. R., P. C., 419.

1. A father, whose son was about to become a member of Lloyds and to commence the business of an underwriter, became security for him, in compliance with the rules of Lloyds, to the amount of 10,000*l*. The son executed a written agreement, which contained a recital of the security given by the father, and by which the son covenanted with the father that S., and no other person, should underwrite at Lloyds in the name of the son; that S. should be paid 200*l*. a year and one-fifth of the net profits of underwriting; that the father should be at liberty to withdraw the whole of his security on notice being given to the son and other necessary parties, and immediately after such notice S. should cease to underwrite for the son or in his name; and that half the net profits of underwriting, deducting the share of S., should, together with 25*l*. per annum, be considered as owing, and should be paid to the father by the son. The business was carried on in the son's name alone, the creditors not knowing that the father was in any way connected with it:—Held, that no partnership was constituted between the father and the son. Exp. Tennant, Re Howard, 6 L. R., Ch. D., 303; 25 W. R. 854; 37 L. T., N. S., 284.

Participation in profits is not conclusive evidence of the existence of a partnership. It is very cogent evidence, and, if it stands alone, may be conclusive evidence of a partnership. But the effect of participation in profits may be outweighed by other circumstances. Ib.

2. An agreement to share the profit and loss of a business entitles each party as against the other to the general rights of a partner, including an interest in the good-will; and the agreement would have this legal effect notwithstanding a stipulation that the parties should not be partners. Pawsey v. Armstrong, 18 L. R., Ch. D., 698; 50 L. J., Ch., 683.

3. An agreement to share profits and losses is not, at any rate as between the parties to the agreement, conclusive as to their being partners; the question of partnership depends on the intention of the parties as shown by the agreement. Pawsey v. Armstrong (18 L. R., Ch. D., 690) observed upon. Walker v. Hirsch, 27 L. R., Ch. D., 460; 51 L. T. 581; 32 W. R. 992.

III. JOINT ADVENTURES.

4. A. and B., etc., were common carriers from L. to F., a separate portion of the road being allotted to each, and it having been stipulated also, that no partnership should exist between them; A. for himself and the other parties, agrees with the Mint to carry coin from L. to F., and afterwards makes another agreement with the Mint to carry other coin to places not on the road:—Held, that all the parties were entitled to share in the profits of this agreement. Russell Austwick, 1 Sim. 52.

5. Where a bill was brought for the cu tomary tithes of oysters, alleging the customa payment to be in the owners and occupiers boats employed in the fishery and usuall moored within the parish:—Held, that it wa not necessary to make the dredgers for th oysters, who had no interest in the boats, bu who shared in the profits of the oysters, parti to the bill. Oyster dredgers agreeing receive from the owners of the boats, wh were their employers, a stipulated share the profits arising from the sale of the oyster —Held, not to be co-adventurers with th owners. Perrott v. Bryant, 2 Y. & Coll. 61 6 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 26.

6. The plaintiffs and four other firms merchants, by a written memorandum, whic was signed by them all, and stated that th plaintiffs had ordered their agents to contra for 1,200 tons of sugar, agreed that they shou have one-fifth interest each: that as the bil would be drawn on the plaintiffs they shou have a power of sale; that the various parti interested agreed to pay their shares of th marginal drafts; and finally, that "the pu chase should be at the risk of the undersigne in the proportion of one-fifth each." Th cargo arrived, but the result was a heavy los and two of the firms became unable to me their engagements:—Held, that this was joint mercantile adventure on the part of a five firms, and that the deficiency arising fro the failure of two of them was a loss whic must be borne equally by the three solve firms, and not by the plaintiffs alone. M'Inr v. Hargrove, 16 L. T., N. S., 509; 15 W. R. 77

7. By an agreement entered into in 18 between M. and the trading firm of Schach Brothers, M. agreed to pay them 2,000*l*., whic was to be invested by them in the purchase a steamer, to be used for purposes of trad For this sum M. was to receive interest at th rate of 5 per cent. per annum, and to ha one-eighth interest in the steamer; i.e., have one-eighth of the annual results aft there had been deducted therefrom the abov mentioned 5 per cent., all expenses of equi ment, and a further sum of 10 per cent. account of the annual depreciation in value the steamer. M. also agreed to pay Schach Brothers, within a year from the date of th agreement, a further sum of 4,000*l*.; and, payment of the last-mentioned sum, M. w to become interested in all the business of th firm of Schacher Brothers to the extent three-sixteenths of the whole, and was cease to have the said one-eighth interest the steamer. M. duly paid to Schach Brothers the 2,000*l*., and also paid them, different times, various sums, not howev amounting altogether to 4,000*l*:—Held, th the agreement did not constitute M. a partn with the firm of Schacher Brothers in respe of the special venture, i.e., the one steam Meyer v. Schacher, 38 L. T., N. S., 97.

8. Two defendants, who carried on busine in partnership as ship and insurance broke and the plaintiff, who carried on business alo as a merchant and commission agent, joint agreed to supply arms to a foreign governmer In the first contract with that governme the defendants were described only by the partnership name, and it was signed on their behalf in that name. The second contract was signed by an agent of the plaintiff and the defendants, who was described in it as acting on behalf of the defendants (giving only the name of the firm) and the plaintiff, and as "agent of the two houses above named":—Held, that on the form of these contracts, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the adventure must be considered to have been undertaken by the defendants as one person and the plaintiff as another person, and not by the three as individuals, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a moiety of the profits. Warner v. Smith, 1 De G. J. & Sm. 337; 32 L. J., Ch., 573; 11 W. R. 392; 8 L. T., N. S., 221.

1. An agreement between two persons to divide the profit or loss upon a sale of goods which are to be bought and paid for by one of them does not create a joint property in the goods. Alfaro v. De la Torre, 24 W. R. 510; 34 L. T., N. S., 122.

Y., a merchant in Costa Rica, obtained from A. an introduction to T., a merchant in London, upon an agreement that A. should share the profit or loss upon all consignments made by Y. to T. Y. purchased produce with his own moneys and consigned it for sale on his account to T., drawing bills against the consignments, and at the same time informing T. of the interest which A. had in the transaction. A. (without the knowledge of Y.) wrote a letter to T., pledging his interest in the consignment to secure an antecedent debt of his own to T. T. having failed to meet the bills, and the goods consigned not having been resold, T. claimed an interest in the goods under the pledge by A.:—Held, that the arrangement between Y. and A. constituted no such partnership as to entitle A. or any one claiming under him to an interest in the goods themselves as against Y. Ib.

2. A. entered into an agreement with B., that B. should work his patent at A.'s expense, first by way of experiment; and if A. was satisfied, and expressed his satisfaction in writing, then the patent was to be worked on certain terms of payment to B., B. undertaking to devote his time; and there were provisions for terminating the agreement in case the profit of the manufacture fell below a certain sum. A bill, filed in equity, made a case that experiments had been made; that the defendant represented the invention would answer, and led the plaintiff into expense; but it did not allege that the plaintiff was satisfied, or had expressed his satisfaction in writing, nor did it distinctly allege any fraudulent misrepresentation by the defendant; it prayed a dissolution of the joint concern, and a lien on the patents for the money expended by A.:—Held, on demurrer, that there was no partnership; that the agreement was merely for an experiment until A. should have expressed his satisfaction in writing. Osborne v. Jullion. 3 Drew. 596; 26 L. J., Ch., 6.

3. Certain persons joined together for the purpose of forming a company, and with that view purchased property, and incurred debts and expenses. The project became abortive; and upon a bill filed for an account on the footing of a partnership:—Held, that this was not a partnership, and the bill was dismissed. Hamilton v. Smith, 28 L. J., Ch., 404.

4. An agreement in reference to a building speculation upon the S. estate, bought with the money of A., provided that B., in consideration of his services to enable A. to realize the estate, should be paid one-half of the profits after A. had made certain payments; that B. should bring in a third of certain fees which he might receive from builders, and bear one-half of any losses, and generally it was agreed that he should receive and bear one-half of the profits and losses upon the whole transaction; but the agreement was not in any way to be construed into a partnership between the parties, and should wholly and solely relate to the S. estate. B.'s services were to be the consideration for the agreement, and he was not to charge for his time and trouble, but only actual disbursements made by him for the benefit of the estate and for realizing it for A. and B.'s mutual benefit:—Held, that the agreement constituted a partnership between the parties, and a dissolution was declared. Moore v. Davis, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 261; 27 W. R. 335; 39 L. T. 60.

IV. BY LOANS.

5. Where there had been a treaty for a partnership between the bankrupt and A., and articles drawn up which A. had refused to sign, but one of such articles was that A. should advance a sum of 2,000*l.*, and A. did in fact make such an advance, and the addition of "and Co." was made to the name of the firm, the advance appearing to have been taken as a loan, and the addition to have been made without the concurrence of A.:—Held, that there was no partnership. Exp. Turquand, Re Vanderplank, 2 M. D. & De G. 339; 11 L. J., N. S., Bky., 1; 6 Jur. 67.

6. A father advanced 1,000*l.* in a partnership concern, for the benefit of his sons A. and B., reserving to himself power if they died, to substitute two other sons for them. The partner gave credit in his books to A. and B. for 500*l.* each. A. and B. both died under age; and after their death the partner, by the father's direction, transferred two sums of 500*l.* each, in his books, to C. and D., two other sons, but without adding any interest or profit thereto from the accounts of A. and B. The business was, by the father's directions, carried on in the partner's own name, and the profits carried in his books to his own account:—Held, that there was no trust created for C. and D.; that the partnership was with the father, and the share of the profits were his assets. Pilsworth v. Mosse, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 163.

7. In 1856 an agreement was entered into between H. and D., under which the former was to carry on business during twenty-one years for the benefit of himself, and of any person whom the latter might name within eight years. D. was to make advances, and to become surety to a bank for H.'s drafts, and the profits were to be applied, first, in payment of a salary and allowances to H., then in repayment of the advances made by D. with interest, and subject thereto were to belong as to one-third to H., and as to two-thirds to the nominee of D. D. died in 1861, without exercising his right of nomination, and in 1863 H. became bankrupt. On an application by the executors of D. to prove under the bankruptcy for the amount due to his estate under the arrangement:—Held, that the agreement did not constitute a partnership between H. and D.; and that the executors of the latter were entitled to prove. Exp. Davis, 32 L. J., Bky., 68; 9 Jur., N. S., 859; 8 L. T., N. S., 745.

1. K. advanced money to G. on the faith of a letter which he insisted constituted a contract of partnership in the profits of the business of the Italian Opera at Covent Garden. G. insisted that it amounted to nothing but an agreement to pay the amount of the loan and the interest on it out of the profits (if any should arise), but that the concern remained his alone. The letters which passed between the parties were held to bear this construction, and, therefore, an account as of the profits of a partnership was refused. Knox v. Gye, 5 L. R., H. L., 656. Affirming 10 Jur., N. S., 908; 12 W. R. 1125.

The advance was made with reference to the business of the Italian Opera at Covent Garden, the lease of which theatre was in the name of G. alone. That theatre was burnt down in 1856, and G. hired another theatre (the Lyceum) and carried on the business of the Italian Opera there, and in two years' time returned to a new theatre at Covent Garden which had been built in the interval, and of which the lease, as in the former case, had been granted in his name alone:—Held, that the true construction of the letters between the parties showed that the agreement between them was confined to the old Covent Garden theatre alone, and, therefore, an account of profits alleged to have arisen at the Lyceum and the new Covent Garden theatres was refused. Ib.

T. advanced 12,000*l.* to G. on the terms of partnership. T. made a will, leaving this money equally between K. and G. T. died in December 1854, before old Covent Garden was burnt, which event took place in March 1856. There had been, before December 1854, negotiations between G. and one H. to allow G. the use of Her Majesty's Theatre, but though a sum of 5,000*l.* (part of T.'s 12,000*l.*) had been paid to H. under these negotiations he had never performed his contract. G. finally brought an action against H., and recovered judgment for 5,000*l.*, but ultimately (after the death of T., yet within six years of the date of a bill filed by K. for an account) consented to accept 2,500*l.* as a compromise. K. in December 1864 filed a bill against G. for an account of profits in the partnership with T., and of what was due to K. in respect thereof under T.'s will:—Held, that the right of K. under T.'s will began in December 1854, and was barred in equity by analogy to the Statute of Limitations, the bill not having been filed till 1864. Ib.

Held, also, that the surviving partner being a trustee for the executors of his deceased partner, the payment of the 2,500*l.* from H. within six years from the filing the bill did not take the case out of the Statute of Limitations. Ib.

2. W., being in difficulties, mortgaged to M. certain patents, to secure advances previously made for the purpose of developing the patents, and paid him, out of the proceeds of the patents, 6*l.* a week:—Held, that this payment did not constitute a partnership between Exp. Macmillan, Re Whittaker, 24 L. T., N. S. 143.

3. Agreement in writing entered into between W. & Co., British merchants, carrying on business at Calcutta with a Hindoo rajah by which, in consideration of moneys already advanced, and which might be thereafter advanced by the rajah to them, they agreed to carry on the business subject to the control of the rajah in several particulars, stipulating that the rajah should receive a commission of fifty per cent. on all profits made by the firm until the whole amount of the debt due to him should be paid off, with twelve per cent interest upon all cash advances which had been or might be thereafter made by him to the firm. Further advances having been made by the rajah to the firm, W. & Co. executed to him a mortgage of certain tea plantations to secure the then amount of his advances, and the rajah by a deed released his right to commission and interest under the original agreement between them. No proceeds of the business were ever received by the rajah, although he was credited in the books of the firm with a considerable sum, that sum was never received by him, and was afterward written back in the books of the firm. The rajah did not interfere or exercise any such control in the business as to make him a ostensible partner in the firm:—Held, that having regard to the restrictions and modifications made of late in the rule of law formerly prevailing, that participation in the net proceeds of the business made the participant liable as a partner to third parties; and looking at the whole scope of the agreement the primary object was to give security to the rajah as a creditor of the firm of W. & Co., and that the participation given him in the net profits of the business was not sufficient to establish a partnership between W. & Co. and the rajah, as regarded third parties. Mollw v. Court of Wards, 4 L. R., P. C., 419.

Although a right to participate in the profits of a trade is a strong test of partnership, and there may be cases where, from such perception alone, it may as a presumption, not of law, but of fact, be enforced; yet whether that relation does or does not exist must depend on the real intention and contract of the parties. Ib.

4. In 1872 A. entered into a written agreement to lend B. 2,000*l.* as capital to enable him to develop certain coal and iron mines the lease of the mines to be deposited with A as security for the moneys advanced. The agreement also provided that A. was to be paid 3*d.* per ton on all coal and ironstone by way of commission; that B. was to receive salary, which was not to commence until all the moneys advanced by A. had been repaid that "after payment of the above, and the royalties, and rents, and costs of raising and preparing, and delivering to market the produce of the mines," A. was to be entitled to three-fourths, and B. to one-fourth, of the net profits; and A. was to be free from all liability except in respect of the money advanced by him. B. worked the mines under the name of a company. In 1874 A. died, and there was then due to him the sum of 11,000*l.*, in respec of advances made by him to B. under the agreement. The mines proved a failure, and the creditors of the company, B. being insolvent, sent in their claims to the executors of A., alleging that A. was a partner in the company by virtue of the agreement, and by reason of his interference in the management and working of the company:—Held, that, upon the agreement, no partnership existed between A. and B.; and that, upon the evidence, there was no ground for inferring that A. had held himself out in any way to any person as a partner in the company. Dean v. Harris, Harris v. Butterfield, 33 L. T., N. S., 639.

1. A loan was made to a trader at a rate of interest varying with the profits of his business, the amount of the loan and the interest being secured by a mortgage to the lender of the lease of the house where the business was carried on, and of the goodwill of the business. The trader became bankrupt:—Held, that the rights of the mortgagee under his mortgage were in no way affected by s. 5 of the Partnership Law Amendment Act 1865, 28 & 29 Vict., c. 86 (Bovill's Act). Exp. Sheil, Re Lonergan, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 789; 36 L. T., N. S., 270; 25 W. R. 420; 46 L. J., Bky., 62.

2. The Partnership Law Amendment Act does not apply to any contract unless the advance of money under it would, independently of that Act, have created the relation of debtor and creditor as distinguished from the relation of partners. Pooley v. Driver, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 458; 46 L. J., Ch., 466; 25 W. R. 162; 36 L. T., N. S., 79.

An unsigned contract for an advance by way of loan to a trader is not "a contract in writing with a person" within s. 1, though it is admissible in evidence as showing the terms upon which the advance was made. Ib.

The Act does not protect persons lending names, for partnership purposes, under agreements to share in the profits, unless the true relation of the parties towards each other is that of creditors and debtors, and not of active and dormant partners; and such agreements, in order to be effectual, must be in writing and signed by the parties. Ib.

Messrs. A. advanced a loan to a firm for the purposes of the partnership, under a deed of contract which was expressed to be made under 28 & 29 Vict., c. 86, and provided that they might inspect and take copies of the partnership account; that the partners should, during the continuance of the loan, pay to Messrs. A. on account of the profits certain proportions of the yearly profits; and that within six months after the expiration or sooner determination of the partnership (which was for a term of fourteen years) a settlement of accounts should be made by the partners, who were then to repay the loan, less any sum overpaid on account of the profit, with an arbitration clause:—Held, that Messrs. A. were liable as partners for the debts of the firm, notwithstanding the Act. Ib.

3. A., in June 1869, borrowed 250*l.* from B., and, at the time, signed a paper in the following words: "In consideration of 250*l.* this day paid to me, I hereby undertake to execute a deed of co-partnership to you for one-eighth share in the profits of the Oxford Music Hall and Tavern, to be drawn up under the Limited Partnership Act of the 28 & 29 Vict., c. 86, called an 'Act to amend the Law of Partnership'":—Held, that this paper (which contained no provision as to the date or duration of the partnership) constituted a partnership at will; and that it was not put an end to by a letter, dated in August 1872, in which A. promised to repay B. on the 1st of September 1872 the principal, together with interest thereon (treating it only as a loan) such as should, as on a calculation of one-eighth of the profits, be found to be due to B. on that day. This letter was followed by a tender, which was not accepted. Syers v. Syers, 1 L. R., App. Cas., 174; 24 W. R. 970; 35 L. T., N. S., 101.

On a bill by B. for specific performance of the agreement to execute a partnership deed for one-eighth share of the profits, A. put in an answer in which he denied that there had been a partnership at all, but submitted that if any partnership had ever existed it was only a partnership at will, of one-eighth share of the profits (payment of which he offered to make), and he submitted that this partnership had been determined by the letter of August 1872:—Held, that it had not been determined by that letter, but that the answer had the effect of putting an end to it; and that accounts must be directed to be taken as up to the day of filing the answer, and that these accounts must include the principal, the eighth share of the profits, and also the eighth share of the assets up to that day. Ib.

A co-partnership in profits is a co-partnership in the assets by which the profits are made. Ib.

In order to bring a case within the 28 & 29 Vict., c. 86, there must be a contract in writing, and the document must show on the face of it that the transaction is one of loan: and parol testimony to vary it is inadmissible. Ib.

4. The effect of s. 5 of the Partnership Law Amendment Act is to prevent the lender of money to a trader, on the terms of receiving a share of the profits of his business, from proving for the loan in the bankruptcy of the borrower in competition with any of his creditors—not merely those creditors whose debts were contracted in relation to the business in respect of which the loan was made, or while that business was being carried on, but any of the creditors who are entitled to prove in the bankruptcy. Till all the other creditors have been paid in full, such a lender is not entitled to prove for any purpose whatever. Exp. Taylor, Re Grason, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 366; 41 L. T. 6; 28 W. R. 205.

5. M. lent certain sums to T., a trader, under a written agreement pursuant to 28 & 29 Vict., c. 86, by which he was to receive, in lieu of interest, 40*l.* per cent. on the profits of T.'s business, and after a certain period was to have liberty to determine the agreement at any time, in which event the money was to be repaid by instalments secured by bills of exchange. While this agreement was in force M., in conjunction with H., lent T. other sums of money, for which interest at 10*l.* per cent. was to be paid. M. determined the agreement, and T. gave M. bills of exchange for the moneys advanced under it, except certain profits, which were carried over to the 10*l.* per cent. account; but M. and H. went on advancing to T. other sums on the 10*l.* per cent. account. After all the trade debts of T. which had been due during the pendency of the agreement had been paid, T. became bankrupt. M. carried in a proof for the moneys advanced under the agreement, and M. and H. carried in another for the balance on the 10*l.* per cent. account:—Held, that M. could not prove for the moneys advanced under the agreement, though all other debts existing during its continuance had been paid. Exp. Mills, Re Tew, 8 L. R., Ch., 569; 28 L. T., N. S., 606; 21 W. R. 557.

Held, also, that M. and H. could prove for all moneys lent at interest without any stipulation as to profits, whether such moneys were advanced before or after the determination of the agreement, and that although there could not have been a proof for the whole of the balance if it had in part consisted of profits, yet, as according to the ordinary mode of attributing payments in an account current the profits carried to this account had been discharged by payments made by T. on account, the balance could not be treated as in any measure arising from profits, and the proof must be for its whole amount. Ib.

1. Though an agreement is expressed to be an agreement for a loan to a partnership under 28 & 29 Vict., c. 86, s. 1, and contains a declaration that the lender shall not be a partner, he will nevertheless be a partner if the result of the agreement, fairly construed as a whole, independently of the reference to the Act and the declaration, is to give him the rights and impose on him the obligations of a partner. Exp. Delhasse, Re Megevand, Re D'Hauregard & Co., 7 L. R., Ch. D., 511; 47 L. J., Ch., 65; 38 L. T., N. S., 106; 26 W. R. 338. Affirming 37 L. T., N. S., 440; 26 W. R. 20.

The Act applies only to a loan made upon the personal responsibility of the trader or traders to whom it is made, and not to a loan made on the security of the business. Ib.

Under an agreement dated in June 1869, after reciting that M. and S. had agreed to become partners together in business upon the terms with each other and with D. thereinafter contained, and that D. had agreed to lend them 10,000*l.* for the purpose of investing the same in the business, it was agreed that M. and S. should be partners together under the name of D'H. & Co. for three years, from 1st July 1869; that the capital should consist of 10,000*l.* and any further advances by either party: such 10,000*l.* and further advances to bear interest at 5*l.* per cent.; that the 10,000*l.* were advanced by D. by way of loan under the Partnership Amendment Act 1865; that yearly accounts current should be remitted to D., and the yearly profit or loss divided between D., M., and S. in certain proportions; that in case of the death of any partner, or in case his original capital should be reduced by losses to one-half, D. should have the option of dissolving the partnership; and that in case of his death his executors should not withdraw his capital until the partnership was dissolved. This agreement was renewed in 1872, and again in 1875 for three years. Upon the liquidation of D'H. & Co. in 1876, D. sought to prove against the firm for 6,717*l.*, being further advances made by him in addition to the 10,000*l.* originally advanced: —Held, that he could not prove in competition with the creditors of the firm, for that the agreement constituted him a dormant partr Ib.

2. Money was advanced to a trader in ret for a share in the profits of his business. agreement under which the advance was m was expressly under the Partnership L Amendment Act 1865, and stipulated fo mortgage of the business premises. Sub quently these premises were conveyed t trustee for the lender by way of mortgage secure the advance. The mortgagor beca bankrupt:—Held, that thereupon, by s. 5, mortgagees were postponed to the other cre tors of the mortgagor, and they were orde to concur with the bankrupt's trustee in sell the mortgaged premises for the benefit of other creditors. Exp. Macarthur, Re Ramsa 40 L. J., Bky., 86; 19 W. R. 821.

V. PARTNER OR SERVANT.

3. By a memorandum in writing, the fendant, a general merchant, agreed with plaintiff, in consideration of the general vices in business of the latter, to allow him addition to a fixed salary, one-fifth of the profits on all new business entered into throu him. Semble, a partnership was thereby c stituted between the parties:—Held, also, t at any rate the plaintiff thereby acquire right, as against the defendant, to an acco of profits, and the appointment of a recei Katsch v. Schenck, 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 386; Jur. 668.

4. Bill by A. for an account against B. C., alleging himself a partner with them. and C., by their answer, deny the partnersl and state that A. was employed by them their foreman, but that on account of its be contemplated to take A. into partnership, accounts had been made out in the joint nar of B., C., and A., the tools, etc., marked w their names. They admitted having served with a notice to dissolve partnership, and admitted a specification of certain buildi and other work which was required by th which specification described the work requi to be done as being upon the property of C., and A.:—Held, that there was suffici evidence of the existence of a partnership tween B., C., and A. Smith v. Sherwood, Jur. 214.

5. Where a bill was brought for the cust ary tithes of oysters, alleging the custom payment to be in the owners and occupie boats employed in the fishery, and usu moored within the parish:—Held, that it not necessary to make the dredgers for oysters, who had no interest in the boats, who shared in the profits of the oysters, par to the bill. Oyster dredgers agreeing to rece from the owners of the boats, who were th employers, a stipulated share of the pro arising from the sale of the oysters, held to be co-adventurers with the owners. Per v. Bryant, 2 Y. & Coll. 61; 6 L. J., N. Exch. Eq., 26.

6. An arrangement made by A. B. w C. D., to give him a moiety of the profits the business, instead of a previous salary his services, constitutes him a partner. E Digby, and Exp. Buckton, 1 Dea. 341; 2 Mc & A. 735.

1. A trader borrowed 580*l.* under an agreement, by which the lender was to become his clerk at a salary of 222*l.* 10*s.* a year; the trader agreed to produce his accounts and balance-sheet to the lender, who was to get in the debts, and alone to draw the cheques on the banking account. If the balance was in the trader's favour at any time, he might draw to the amount of it. On payment of the loan, or on proceedings being taken to recover it, the agreement was to be at an end. The lender was to have the option of becoming a partner. On the trader becoming bankrupt:—Held, that the lender was a clerk, entitled to three months' payment in full. Exp. Harris, 1 De G. 165; 14 L. J., N. S., Bky., 26; 9 Jur. 497.

2. By indenture between the plaintiff of the one part, and the defendants, who were partners in a certain manufacture of which the plaintiff had been the patentee, of the other part, it was stipulated that the plaintiff should have the conduct and management of the business, and that the remuneration which he should receive in respect of his services should be such a sum of money as would be equal to 40 per cent. upon the net profits, that a reduced amount should be paid to his executors in the event of his death, until the expiration of the licence, that the plaintiff might purchase the business on certain terms, that the defendants might determine the plaintiff's engagement as manager if he should not in every respect perform the covenants contained in the indenture, but that so long as he continued to observe them his appointment as manager should be irrevocable during the continuance of the licence, and that nothing therein contained should extend to constitute a partnership:—Held, there being an absence of every incident of partnership except that of sharing in the profits, that that circumstance alone did not constitute the indenture a contract of partnership, but that it amounted only to a contract of hiring and service. Stocker v. Brocklebank, 3 Macn. & G. 250; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 401; 15 Jur. 591.

The plaintiff being dismissed by the defendants from their service, filed his bill for an injunction to restrain the defendants from excluding him from the management:—Held, discharging the injunction which had been granted by the Vice-Chancellor, that the contract, being of hiring and service, was one of which specific performance could not be enforced. Ib.

3. In June 1844 A. entered the service of B., as book-keeper and cashier, and so continued until December 1848, without coming to any agreement as to the amount of his salary. It was stated by A. that in December 1848 it was agreed between him and B. that the salary should be at the rate of 250*l.* a year, from June 1844, and that the reason that such arrangement was not made before was that B. was engaged in making experiments in a certain manufacture, from which he hoped to derive a considerable fortune, out of which A. expected to be paid. B. became bankrupt in February 1849:—Held, that A. was a clerk, and not a partner, and was entitled to prove for his salary. Exp. Hicken, 3 De G. & Sm. 662; 14 Jur. 405; 19 L. J., Bky., 8.

4. The plaintiff and the defendant were tailors; the plaintiff employed the defendant to obtain orders for him, and agreed to allow him a certain share of the profits by way of commission upon such orders. The defendant carried on the business with the plaintiff, but his name was not joined with that of the plaintiff. All goods were ordered and paid for by the plaintiff, and all debts were paid to him alone. The defendant set up a partnership; but it was held that a right to a share of the profits did not necessarily create a partnership, and there was no evidence to prove a partnership on the part of the defendant. Andrews v. Pugh, 24 L. J., Ch., 58; 3 W. R. 50.

5. In April 1854 A. contracted with the Admiralty for conveyance of mails by steam vessels. The contract was to continue till October 1858, and should then determine, if either party should have given twelve months' notice, or it might continue longer, being determinable on similar notice at any time. On 30th November 1854 A. engaged B., during the existence of this contract, as superintending engineer of the vessels employed in performing it, at a yearly salary, and, in addition thereto, a sum equivalent to 10 per cent. on the net profits. On 20th June 1855 A.'s contract with the Admiralty was annulled, and a fresh one was entered into, determinable in 1863:—Held, that the contract between A. and B. was one of hiring and service, and not a partnership. Harrington v. Churchward, 6 Jur., N. S., 576; 29 L. J., Ch., 521; 8 W. R. 302.

Where under a contract of hiring and service, a salary is to be paid in proportion to the profits, a court of equity will entertain a bill for an account of the profits, if such account is too complicated to be taken by a jury at common law. Ib.

C. having agreed to employ H. during the existence of his contract with the Government, afterwards entered into a fresh contract with the Government for the same service, but for a longer period than the first contract; and by the second contract the first contract was annulled. C. then gave H. notice of dismissal:—Held, that the contract between C. and H. must be considered in equity as subsisting during the period of the original contract with the Government. Ib.

6. An agreement dated in August 1864 (previously to the passing of 28 & 29 Vict., c. 86) provided that an underwriting account at Lloyds' should be carried on in the name of the defendant, and the subscription paid in his name; that all policies, losses, and averages should be signed and settled by the defendant, or by the plaintiff as his agent; that the plaintiff should apply the whole or such part of his time and attention to the business as might be required for conducting the same; that proper books of accounts should be kept by the plaintiff, he obtaining such assistance from time to time as he might find necessary, subject to the approval of the defendant; that the plaintiff should be paid or allowed a salary of 150*l.* by the defendant; that the profits should be divided between the plaintiff and the defendant in the following proportions, viz., that the defendant should be entitled to four-fifths and the plaintiff to one-fifth; that if in any one year the business should not yield any profit, but a loss should accrue to the defendant, then he alone should bear and pay the loss, and the plaintiff should be entirely exempt from bearing or paying any part or proportion thereof, and any profit arising from the business of any one year should not be set off against or reduced by the loss in any other year; and that if after the division of profits in any one year any unexpected claim or demand should be made upon the partners, they should advance and pay their respective proportions, nevertheless so that the plaintiff be not called upon to pay any greater sum of money in respect of the business of any one year than the amount of the sum he should then have received as and for his share of the profits in respect of the business for that same year:—Held, that the contract was one of hiring and service, and not of partnership. Ross v. Parkyns, 20 L. R., Eq., 331; 44 L. J., Ch., 610; 24 W. R. 5; 30 L. T., N. S., 331.

1. Where a former servant claims to be a partner, his case must be made out by strong evidence. Pawsey v. Armstrong, 18 L. R., Ch. D., 698; 50 L. J., Ch., 683.

VI. PARTNERSHIP AS TO THIRD PARTIES.

2. A., induced by the fraudulent representation of B. as to the profits of his business, gives him a certain sum of money for a share of it; on the discovery of the fraud, A. files a bill in equity for an account, to have the partnership declared void, and for a receiver. The receiver was ordered. B. becomes bankrupt; petition by A. to be admitted to prove under his commission refused, with liberty to make a claim. Exp. Broome, 1 Rose 69.

Although A., as against B., might have an equity to say he never was a partner, it would be difficult to say so as against third persons. Ib.

3. Persons may be partners towards the world without being partners between themselves, but if they be partners between themselves they are undoubtedly partners in respect of the public. Re Stanton Iron Co., 21 Beav. 164; 2 Jur., N. S., 130; 25 L. J., Ch., 142; 4 W. R. 159.

A. and B., who had carried on business in partnership as ironmasters, having become embarrassed, executed an assignment of all their works and other property to trustees, upon trust to carry on their business under the style of "the Stanton Iron Company," with power to take fresh leases of the property, to erect new buildings as occasion might require, to keep down the interest upon mortgages and other incumbrances out of the gross income, and to divide the net profits ratably among the creditors, parties thereto, according to the amount of their debts. The trustees were to keep books of account, which were to be open for the inspection of the creditors. The creditors were empowered, at a meeting to be held as therein provided, to direct the discontinuance of the business, which was then to be wound up accordingly; and after payment of the costs of management and other liabilities, the trustees were to divide the residue ratably among the creditors; and when and so soon as the whole of the debts of the creditors were satisfied, the trustees were to hold the residue of the trust estate in trust for A. and B.:—Held, that this deed d not constitute a partnership between the pa ties within the Winding-up Acts. Ib.

4. The proper test of liability as a partn is not whether the party sought to be charg has stipulated for the participation in profi as such, but whether the person by whom tl trade was actually carried on carried it on the capacity of agent for him. Wheatcroft Hickman, and Cox v. Hickman, 9 C. B., N. 47; 8 H. L. Ca. 268; 7 Jur., N. S., 105; L. J., C. P., 125; 8 W. R. 754.

A. and B., who carried on the business iron-masters in co-partnership by a deed, pu porting to be made between A. and B. of t first part, five persons named as trustees the second part, and the several persons who names were contained in a schedule as cre tors for the sum therein mentioned and wl should execute the deed of the third part, reciting that A. and B. were indebted to t several persons, parties thereto of the thi part, and that they had agreed to assign their estate and effects for the benefit of su creditors, assigned the works and all the property and effects to the trustees upon tru to carry on the business under the name the Stanton Iron Company, and out of t profits to pay interest on mortgages, etc., a to pay and divide the net income of the bu ness remaining after answering the purpos aforesaid, unto and among all and singul the creditors of A. and B. in ratable prop tions according to the amount of their resp tive debts:—Held, that, under this deed, t creditors executing it did not become liable partners for debts contracted by the trust in carrying on the trade. Ib.

The law as to partnership is a branch the law of principal and agent. A partn embraces both characters; and where a m orders another to carry on trade, whether his own name or not, to buy and sell, and pay over all the profits to him, he is t principal, and the person so employed is t agent; and the principal is liable for t agent's contracts. This is the true princi of partnership liability. Semble. Ib.

5. Partnership is only a branch of the l of agency. Ernest v. Nicholls, 6 H. L. 417; 3 Jur., N. S., 919.

6. L., a broker, was introduced to P. & Co pany by A., and was at the interview direct by P. & Company to make purchases under t superintendence of A. Thereupon L. ma large purchases under the sole order a direction of A., sending him the bought a sold notes and contracts, and receiving fr him the necessary moneys for payments, a generally treating him as principal, no dir communication taking place between L. a P. & Co., and such course of dealing was mitted by P. & Co. to have been according their intentions up to a certain period, and notice was given by them to L. of any deter nation of the authority of A.:—Held, that had a right, from what took place at the int view, and the uniform course of action on part of A., to consider him as the authori agent or a partner of P. & Co., until expres informed of the determination of his author or of the partnership. Pole v. Leask, 33 L. Ch., 155; 9 Jur., N. S., 829; 8 L. T., N. S., 6

7. The law of partnership is a branch of law of agency, and the test of partnership is not simply whether the alleged partner was to receive a share of profits, but whether he constituted his alleged co-partners his agents for carrying on business. The receipt of profits is only important as a consequence of such agency, and a ground for inferring it in certain cases. Re English and Irish Church and University Assurance Society, 1 Hem. & M. 85; 11 W. R. 681; 8 L. T., N. S., 724.

Under a deed of settlement of an insurance society, the directors had power to contract debts, and a fund was to be set apart for the payment of the general liabilities of the society. There were two classes of policy holders: those holding common policies, and those holding policies with a clause of participation in the profits of the company. There was a deficiency of assets, and the company was in process of winding-up:—Held, that the general creditors of the company had no priority over the claims of policy holders against the specific fund. Ib.

Held, also, that policy-holders with a right to participation of profits were not necessarily partners in the concern. Ib.

1. A company was formed in India to carry on the business of insurance, and A., residing in the Mauritius, gave special verbal instructions to B., who was the agent for the company in India, to execute the partnership deed for A., which was done, and A.'s name appeared in the list of shareholders. Afterwards, on the insolvency of the company, A. set up the defence that he was not a shareholder, for no power by deed was given to B. to execute the deed in his name:—Held, that a partner might become liable in that character without having executed the partnership deed, if his name was put on the list of shareholders with his consent, so as to entitle him to share in the profits. Leishman v. Cochrane, 12 W. R. 181; 9 L. T., N. S., 104; 1 Moo. P. C., N. S., 315.

2. S., a builder, who was engaged in building eight houses, under an ordinary building contract, entered into an agreement (dated in 1877) with H., which recited that S. was indebted to H. in the sum of 88*l.*, and had requested H. to supply him with 50,000 bricks at a certain price, and to make further advances, and had agreed to enter into that agreement for the purpose of giving security for the re-payment of the moneys then owing and for the 50,000 bricks, and any further advances, and also "certain benefits to H., as a consideration for such advances," and whereby it was agreed that S. would, on demand, pay the 88*l.*, the price of the 50,000 bricks, and the further advances; that S. would forthwith proceed with two of the eight houses, and keep accounts of his expenditure in respect of them, which accounts were to be open to the inspection of H.; that S. would deposit his building contract with H. as security; that S. would use the 50,000 bricks in the erection of the two houses only; that S. would procure the leases of the two houses to be granted to the nominees of H.; that the leases should be sold at prices to be fixed by H., and the proceeds applied in payment of the moneys owing from S. to H.; that H. "should be entitled also, as a further consideration, and in addition to the said advances thereinbefore mentioned, absolutely to one moiety of the profit on the said two houses," such profit to be the difference between the net cost price of erection and the proceeds of sale; and that if the proceeds of sale of the two houses should be insufficient to pay the moneys owing to H. and the moiety of the profit before mentioned, the remaining houses should be charged therewith. The plaintiffs had supplied S. with timber for the erection of the two houses:—Held, that (independently of the statute 28 & 29 Vict., c. 86, s. 1), the agreement entered into between S. and H. did not constitute H. a partner with S. in respect to the two houses, so as to render H. liable to the plaintiffs for the timber supplied by them. Kelly v. Scotto, 49 L. J., Ch., 383; 42 L. T. 827.

I. ARTICLES.

1. Variation of, 5433.
2. Expiration of Term, Operation of Old Articles on, 5434.

1. Variation of.

3. Partners may be held, by their conduct, to have changed the terms of a written agreement, into which they have entered, for carrying on the concern, and to have substituted the terms to which they have adhered, instead of the terms contained in the original agreement. Const v. Harris, T. & R. 523.

Parties claiming under a partner who has assented to the substituted terms, cannot revert back to the original terms. Where in carrying on a concern, there is any material change to be made, notice must be given to all parties of what the change is, and at what time it is to be taken into consideration. Id. 524.

Articles agreed on to regulate a partnership, cannot be altered without the consent of all the partners; but the continuance or discontinuance of a practice not stipulated for, nor made the subject of covenant, must be decided by the majority of the partners. The negative of the minority, in such cases, of no avail, if they have had a proper opportunity of considering the matter. An agreement by a majority of partners, to overrule the minority, will not be permitted. The Court will not interfere on every breach of adherence to the rules of a partnership concern. Id. 518.

4. The transactions of partners with each other cannot be considered merely with respect to the express contract between them. The duties and obligations arising from the relation between the parties are regulated by the express contract between them so far as it extends and continues in force; but if it, or so much of it as continues in force, does not reach to all those duties and obligations, they are implied and enforced by law. And it is often matter to be collected and inferred from the conduct of the parties whether they have held themselves, and ought or not to be, bound by the particular provisions in the express agreement. Where it is insisted that the conduct of one partner entitles the other to a dissolution, the Court must consider, not merely the specific terms of the express contract, but also the duties and obligations which are implied in every partnership contract. Smith v. Jeyes, 4 Beav. 503.

1. Partners may make constant variations in the terms of their partnership agreement, which may be evidenced not only by writing but by their conduct. England v. Curling, 8 Beav. 129.

2. A clause of a partnership deed, however precise, may be waived by the conduct of all the partners; but a waiver of the stipulations of a company's deed by the directors is not sufficient, unless it is shown that the body at large made the directors their agents for that purpose. Keene's Executors' case, 3 De G. M. & G. 272.

3. Bonds executed by partners to each other, relating to their rights as partners, of the same date as the partnership deed, read with the deed as part of the partnership contract. Morison v. Moat, 9 Hare 260; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 513; 15 Jur. 787. And see 16 Jur. 321.

4. Where the terms of the partnership were unduly onerous to the surviving partner, and a more beneficial arrangement offered for the estate of the deceased partner, infants being interested, the articles of partnership were ordered to be varied. Martindale v. Martindale, 1 Jur., N. S., 932.

5. A father took his two sons into partnership under articles, by which it was agreed that the business should be carried on with the father's capital, which should remain his, that yearly stock-taking should be made, that the partners should share profits and loss equally in thirds, that each of the sons besides his own share of the profits should have 150*l.* a year out of the father's share, but repairs and other outgoings in respect of the business premises should be paid out of the profits, that before division of the profits, the father should have interest at 4*l.* per cent. on his capital, and that in estimating profits a certain discount should be taken off the mills and machinery. The partnership lasted ten years, during the whole of which time in the yearly stock-taking the mills and machinery were valued as they stood without any discount, as provided in the articles, and without distinguishing the increase of value arising from additions and improvements, and the expenses of additions and improvements were charged against the partnership; the 150*l.* a year to each son was charged against the business, not against the father's share of profits; each partner was credited with interest on the capital standing to his credit at the beginning of the year, and the profit was then divided into thirds, and the shares carried to the credit of the partners respectively:—Held, that this mode of keeping the accounts, and the division of profits according to it, evidenced a new agreement between the parties, and tha the account must be taken on that footing, an not on the footing of the articles; and tha whether the mills and machinery were, accord ing to the articles, the property of the fathe or of the partnership, they must be treated a being under this agreement the property o the partnership. Pilling v. Pilling, 3 De G. J & S. 162.

The bill made no reference to the accoun having been kept in a mode inconsistent witl the articles, and the decree directed an accoun of all dealings between the parties as partner under the articles dated 30th December 1850 —Held, that this was not a direction to tak the accounts according to the articles, an that they ought to be taken according to th books. Ib.

The partners being entitled by agreement t interest on their capitals:—Held, that suc interest must run till the principal was paid although the partnership had been dissolve for several years. Ib.

6. Although articles of partnership may be presumed from the dealings of the partners t have been waived, a single instance of depar ture from them is not sufficient for such a presumption. Austen v. Boys, 2 De G. & J 626; 4 Jur., N. S., 719; 27 L. J., Ch., 714; W. R. 729.

7. When articles of partnership are clea and distinct, then partners are bound by them when they are ambiguous or silent, the cours of dealing between the partners regulates the mode by which the Court must deal with them and in some cases the Court has allowed the constant usage of partners to supersede the articles. Coventry v. Barclay, 33 Beav. 1; 2 N. R. 375. And see S. C. on appeal, 3 N. R 224; 12 W. R. 500; 3 De G. J. & S. 320; 9 Jur., N. S., 1331; 9 L. T., N. S., 406.

8. By articles of partnership it was agreed that the settlement of accounts should be made half-yearly, at Lady-day and Michaelmas and that on the death of a partner his share of the assets should be taken at the amount settled by the last half-yearly account preceding his death. By a subsequent parol agreement it was arranged that the accounts should be settled once a year only, viz., at Michaelmas:—Held, that this variation in the partnership articles did not affect the money interests of the partners; and that upon the death of a partner in the month of May the accounts must be settled up to the previous 25th of March. Lawes v. Lawes, 9 L. R., Ch. D. 98; 38 L. T. 709; 27 W. R. 186.

2. Expiration of Term, Operation of Old Articles on.

9. Articles of partnership do not survive for the benefit of executors, etc., without an express provision for such purpose. Pearse v Chamberlain, 2 Ves. 33.

10. The trade duly continued by surviving partner to wind up the concerns is not the partnership trade, but in the nature of a trust and if carried on otherwise as a continuing trade, it is at the risk of the surviving partner liable to the option of the representative of the deceased partner. Partnership by deed continued by the partners after the expiration of the original partnership term, without a new agreement, the effect is that all the old covenants are infused into the new relation, with the exception of the clause for duration; for either party may instanter dissolve the prolonged partnership, but all the other original stipulations are continued. Booth v. Parks, 1 Moll. 465.

1. Surviving partners held, by inference deduced from their conduct, to have carried on their business on the same terms as the original partners. King v. Chuck, 17 Beav. 325.

In a partnership between A., B., and C., there was a stipulation, that if one died the survivor should take the business and pay his executors his capital, as appearing on the last account. A. died, and B. and C. continued to carry on the business without articles. B. afterwards died. The Court, from the conduct of the parties, inferred that B. and C. carried on their business on the same terms, as to winding-up on the death of either, as those which applied to the first partnership between A., B., and C., and decreed C. to pay to B.'s executors his capital, as appearing on the last account. Ib.

2. When partners carry on business under a deed of partnership, if they continue it after the period fixed for its duration, they will, in the absence of any other agreement, be held to continue it upon the terms of the original deed, and in the event of dispute the business will be wound up under its provisions. Parsons v. Haward, 8 Jur., N. S., 474, 924; 31 L. J., Ch., 666; 10 W. R. 531, 654; 6 L. T., N. S., 523, 628; 31 Beav. 199; 4 De G. F. & J. 474.

If a partnership is carried on beyond the term fixed for its duration, it can only be dissolved by special notice, and in its absence no notice to dissolve will be implied. Ib.

A. and B. entered into a partnership for seven years; the business was carried on by and in the name of A. alone, B. being a mere sleeping partner. A. continued the business, after the expiration of the term, on the same premises:—Held, that B. was entitled to a share of the subsequent profits. Ib.

3. Where a partnership for a term is continued after its expiration without express renewal, although the assumption is that it is continued on the same general footing as before, this only extends to such of the stipulations in the original articles as are properly applicable to the new contract. Clark v. Leach, 9 Jur. N. S., 165; 11 W. R. 227; 32 Beav. 14. Affirmed 9 Jur., N. S., 610; 32 L. J., Ch., 290; 11 W. R. 351; 8 L. T., N. S., 40; 1 De G. J. & S. 409; 1 N. R. 155.

A provision that a negligent partner should upon notice quit the business for the benefit of the other, is not applicable after the original term has run out. Ib.

Where one of the articles of a partnership for a term provided that either partner might, in the event of specified conduct on the part of the other, dissolve the partnership by notice, and that the latter partner should in that event, be considered as quitting the business for the benefit of the former, this article is not properly applicable to a continuation of the partnership after the expiration of the term without any agreement for renewal. Ib.

4. At the expiration of articles of partnership the partnership was carried on without new articles. A particular mode of sale of the partnership assets had been provided by the articles at the expiration of the term, or upon notice of dissolution by any of the partners:—Held, that such mode of sale was not applicable to the determination of the continuing partnership at will. Woods v. Lamb, 35 L. J., Ch., 309.

5. A., being seised in fee of warehouses and land on which he carried on his trade, upon taking his son into partnership, for twenty-four years, conveyed to him in fee certain shares in the houses and land; and by the articles of partnership, it was stipulated that the shares in the land given to the son, as also those reserved by the father, should be taken as part of the joint-stock in the trade, and in the event of either party dying before the expiration of the twenty-four years without disposing of his shares, the same were to be sold, a right of pre-emption being reserved to the survivor. Both parties outlive the twenty-four years, and continue after that to carry on business, but without renewing the articles, when A. dies:—Held, that as between his real and personal representatives his shares in the land were not converted into personalty. Cookson v. Cookson, 8 Sim. 529; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 337; 1 Jur. 621.

6. Two persons seised of freeholds, agreed to carry on business in partnership upon the premises for fourteen years, and that if either died during that term, the survivor should purchase the freeholds at the stated price. The fourteen years having expired, they, by parol agreement, continued the partnership "on the old terms." One afterwards died intestate:—Held, that the stipulation as to purchase was binding, and that the freeholds were converted into personal estate, and did not pass to the heir. Essex v. Essex, 20 Beav. 442.

7. When, after the expiration of the term limited by partnership articles, the business is carried on by the partners without the execution of fresh articles, all those provisions of the old articles which are not inconsistent with a partnership at will continue to apply to the partnership at will thus constituted. Under such circumstances:—Held, that a provision in the articles that, on the decease of one of the partners before the expiration of the partnership term, the surviving partner should pay to his executors the sum of 1,500*l.*, as the purchase-money for his interest in the goodwill of the business, applied to the partnership at will constituted by the carrying on of the business without fresh articles after the expiration of the partnership term. Essex v. Essex (20 Beav. 442) followed; Cookson v. Cookson (8 Sim. 529) not followed. Cox v. Willoughby, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 863; 49 L. J., Ch., 237; 42 L. T. 125; 28 W. R. 503.

8. When a partnership for a term is continued after its expiration without express renewal, although the assumption is that it is continued on the same general footing as before, this only extends to such of the stipulations in the original articles as are properly applicable to the new contract. Hogg v. Hogg, 35 L. T., N. S., 792.

A. and B. entered into partnership for a term. The articles provided that, in case either partner should die before the expiration of the partnership term, the surviving partner should settle and adjust all accounts, matters, and things relating to the partnership, and should become the purchaser of the share of the deceased partner, at the amount fixed as the value, on the last annual statement of account, and should pay the same by certain instalments. On the expiration of the term, A. and B. continued to carry on the business without any reference to the partnership articles. A. died. B. then expressed his determination to carry on the business alone, and, under an arrangement with A.'s administratrix, stated an account of the value of the business as a going concern at the death of A., and took over the business and A.'s share, at the amount appearing by the account to be the value thereof, and paid sums on account. On the death of B. the partnership assets were sold at a considerable loss, and it was insisted by B.'s representatives that this loss ought to be borne ratably by A.'s and B.'s estates:—Held, that as B. had insisted on his right under the articles to purchase A.'s share at a valuation stated by himself, A.'s administratrix was entitled to prove against B.'s estate for the balance due under the stated account. Ib.

1. Partnership articles, executed in 1864, gave power to the majority, upon not less than six months' notice, to enforce the retirement of any partner if should they be so desirous, and also power to the others to expel any partner immediately on his committing certain specified offences, and also provided for partial dissolution on retirement or death of any partner, and for total dissolution, and for the taking and settlement of annual accounts by the partners, and for the ascertainment, under the provisions for taking the annual accounts, of the sum standing to the credit of any partner going out on any partial dissolution. Accounts were taken annually, but not in accordance with the articles. In 1873, a six months' notice of enforced retirement, which in fact was informal, was given to the plaintiff, who accepted an offer contained therein to become a partner again in the firm subject to a change in his position, and to certain restrictions, and to the cesser of his interest in the event of proceedings on his part similar to those which led to the notice, the existing articles to be "taken as the guide of a partnership so formed." No new articles were drawn up:—Held, that the power of enforced retirement at the desire of the majority was retained in the new partnership. Steuart v. Gladstone, 26 W. R. 657; 38 L. T., N. S., 557; 47 L. J., Ch., 423.

In 1875 the majority gave due notice of enforced retirement to the plaintiff, after he had been invited but had refused to make full disclosures as to the matters which were then giving anxiety to his co-partners. After the notice, but before the date thereby fixed for the retirement of the plaintiff, his co-partners furnished him with an account intended by them to ascertain the sum to his credit under the articles; that account was, and rightly so, taken subsequently to the giving of the notice, but it was inaccurate, and, therefore, not binding on the plaintiff, and it did not contain a valuation of the goodwill:—Held, that the goodwill ought to have been valued as part of the estate and effects of the partnership, and as being susceptible of valuation. Ib. Reversed on this point, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 626; 27 W. R. 512; 40 L. T. 145.

Held, also, that the notice being valid when given could not be invalidated by an error in accounts to be taken subsequently, and that the accounts must be taken by the Court. Ib.

II. FRAUD AND MISREPRESENTATION.

2. A., induced by the fraudulent representations of B. as to the profits of his business, gives him a certain sum of money for a share of it. On the discovery of the fraud, A. files a bill in equity for an account, to have the partnership declared void, and for a receiver. The receiver was ordered. B. becomes bankrupt. Petition by A. to be admitted to prove under the commission refused, with liberty to make a claim. Although A. as against B. might have an equity to say he never was a partner, it would be difficult to say so as against third persons. Exp. Broome, 1 Rose 69.

3. Misrepresentation of material facts is a ground for setting aside a partnership contract. Rawlings v. Wickham, Wickham v. Rawlings, 1 Giff. 355; 4 Jur., N. S., 990. Affirmed 3 De G. & J. 304; 5 Jur., N. S., 278; 28 L. J., Ch., 188; 6 W. R. 509.

B. and W., who were partners in a bank, agreed to take R. into partnership with them. W., who took no actual part in the business, and was known to R. not to do so, joined with B. in producing to R. during the negotiation, as a true account of the affairs of the bank, a paper stating the amount in which it was indebted to customers to be 11,000*l.*, the amount being in fact 20,000*l.* R. entered into the partnership without examining the books, and continued in it for four years, taking no part in the business, and never examining the books. At the end of that time the bank turned out to be insolvent. R. then filed a bill against B. and the executors of W., asking to have the agreement for partnership rescinded, and to have an indemnity against the debts of the concern:—Held, that the delivery of the paper to R. as a true account of the state of the bank was such a misrepresentation as entitled R. to have the contract rescinded. Ib.

Held, that the case as regarded W. was not varied by the facts that W. took no part in the affairs of the bank, and was known by R. not to do so, and did not know the representation to be untrue. Ib.

A representation made by a party, not knowing that it is false, is binding upon him and if the other party enters into a contract on the faith of its truth, the Court will set aside the same altogether, and not merely rectify it. Though the other party does not examine the books for four years during which the partnership continued, it not being his duty to do so, it will not bar him of relief on the score of negligence or acquiescence. Ib.

Although the means of ascertaining the truth of representations may be within the power of a plaintiff, yet he is not, in order to entitle him to rescind his contract, bound to show that he has resorted to all the means of information within his power. Ib.

Whether the guilty foundation of the con tract lay with W. or B., or with a person who was a clerk of both, was of no consequence, as both W. and B. were answerable for the effects of the falsehood. Ib.

Held, also, that R. having brought an action against B. and W. for the misrepresentation, and recovered damages against B., did not take away his right against W.'s estate. Ib.

Held, that the lapse of time was no bar to the plaintiff; for that although he had means of ascertaining the representation to be untrue, he was entitled as between him and the persons who made it to believe it to be true, and was not bound to make inquiry until there was something to raise suspicion. Ib.

The costs of the plaintiff were not allowed by the Vice-Chancellor, in consequence of his conduct not being free from blame, and in consequence of his case having been greatly overstated in the bill, but this order was varied on appeal. Ib.

1. B. entered into partnership with a merchant on representations which he alleged to be fraudulent. He afterwards found that the merchant adulterated the article of food they dealt in, but continued the partnership for two months longer, when, the business not being successful, he filed a bill to have the partnership set aside on the ground of fraud, and the capital which he had advanced returned:—Held, that he was not entitled to relief. Riddel v. Smith, 12 W. R. 899; 10 L. T., N. S., 561.

2. A person agreed to purchase a share in a partnership business, on the footing of a balance sheet prepared by an accountant employed by the vendor, which all parties believed (with the exception of slight errors) to be, and was treated as, generally correct. It turned out to be grossly inaccurate in regard to the existing liability. The Court set aside the contract. Charlesworth v. Jennings, 34 Beav. 96.

3. A partner, who superintended exclusively the accounts of the concern, agreed to purchase his co-partner's share of the business, for a sum which he knew, from accounts in his possession (but which he concealed from his co-partner), was an inadequate consideration. The agreement was set aside. Maddeford v. Austwick, 1 Sim. 89. Affirming 2 Myl. & K. 279.

4. A. and B. entered into a joint adventure for the purchase of goods to be shipped to China, to be there sold, and the proceeds of the sale invested in a homeward cargo. A. was to render himself liable for the payment of the goods purchased, and B. was to supply A. with a share of the money by a fixed time, so as to enable A. to meet this liability. At the time fixed, A. applied to B. for the money, but B. failed to supply it. In consequence of this, and after some negotiation on the subject, A. offered to allow B. to withdraw from the adventure altogether, and this offer was ultimately accepted. Down to the time when A. applied to B. for the money, A. had communicated to B. all the information which he possessed relative to the adventure and to its chances of success, which then appeared very doubtful; but while the negotiation was going on, A. received two letters from his correspondents in China, through whom the business was managed, the contents of which he did not communicate to B.:—Held, in a suit impeaching the arrangement by which B. gave up his share of the adventure, that, considering the relative situation of the parties, there was no obligation on the part of A. to communicate to B. the letters in question; and that, there being no proof of misrepresentation by A., the arrangement could not be set aside merely on the ground of the non-communication of the letters. M'Lure v. Ripley, 2 Macn. & G. 274.

5. B., a practising surgeon, took C. into partnership, having represented to him that his practice produced about 700*l.* a year. C. paid a premium. It was afterwards discovered that the practice did not amount to more than half the amount stated, and also that B. had, the year previously to the partnership, made a return to the commissioner of the property tax that his income amounted only to 350*l.* per annum. The Master of the Rolls ordered a dissolution of the partnership, and that B. should repay C. half the premium he had paid:—Held, that sufficient misrepresentation had been proved to uphold the decree. Jauncey v. Knowles, 1 L. T., N. S., 116; 29 L. J., Ch., 95.

6. A plaintiff, by his statement of claim, claimed to have an agreement for a partnership with the defendant in a land speculation cancelled, on the ground that he had been induced to enter into it by the misrepresentation of the defendant, and in ignorance of its real effect; or, in the alternative, that the partnership created by the agreement might be dissolved and the accounts taken, and the defendant restrained from interfering with the management of the works in violation of the agreement. The defendant moved for an order for the plaintiff to amend his statement of claim by confining it to one of the alternative claims:—Held, that there was no inconsistency in the alternative claims, or in the allegations in support of them: and the motion was refused. Bagot v. Easton, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 1; 47 L. J., Ch., 225; 37 L. T. 369; 26 W. R. 66.

7. The plaintiff was induced by the fraud of the defendant to purchase a share of his business, and to enter into partnership with him. Judgment being given for the rescission of the agreement, and the dissolution of the partnership:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled, in respect of the purchase-money which he had paid, to a lien on the surplus of the partnership assets after satisfying the partnership debts and liabilities, and that, in respect of any sums which he had paid or might pay in satisfaction of partnership debts, he was entitled to stand in the place of the partnership creditors to whom he made the payments. Mycock v. Beatson, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 384; 49 L. J., Ch., 127; 42 L. T. 141; 28 W. R. 319.

III. SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

8. The Court decreed specific performance of agreement to let plaintiff into partnership. The Court refused to direct an account of the profits from the time the plaintiff ought to have been admitted; his remedy for that being at law. Anon., 2 Ves. 630.

9. No specific performance of agreement for partnership. Percy v. Birch, 9 Ves. 357.

10. Agreement for a partnership decreed to be specifically performed by the execution of a proper partnership deed. England v. Curling, 8 Beav. 129.

1. Where the articles provided for the continuance of the partnership for 21 years, determinable upon the death of both partners, and also for the introduction by deed or will of a relation of either of them, but made no provision for the case (which happened) of the death of one of them during the term, or for the amount of capital to be used:—Held, that the provisions for the continuance of the partnership during the remainder of the term could not be enforced in equity against the representatives of the deceased partner. Downs v. Collins, 6 Hare 418.

2. By agreement between A., B., and C., and D. a minor, it was agreed that a partnership should be formed for nine years, unless sooner dissolved by mutual consent; C. to pay 1,000*l.* as her proportion of the capital; D. to be paid 50*l.* a year salary for his services. At the expiration of the third year, if D. should have conducted himself honestly and truly in the discharge of his duty, "and to the reasonable satisfaction of A. and B.," he should from thence become entitled to B.'s share in the capital, and be substituted for her as a partner, his salary then ceasing. If C. should cease to be a partner before the end of three years, her share to become the property of D., if he should not previously have misconducted himself in the office which he held in the partnership. After D. attained his age, and before the expiration of the three years, he was refused further maintenance and interference in the business. D. filed a bill for specific performance of the articles, and to enjoin a dissolution of the partnership:—Held, on general demurrer, first, that D., by filing his bill after his majority, was bound by the agreement, so as to make it mutual; secondly, that there was sufficient consideration moving from the plaintiff to entitle him to enforce the agreement; thirdly, that there was not such ambiguity in the services to be rendered by him as to prevent the agreement being specifically mutual; but, fourthly, that the performance of these services to the reasonable satisfaction of A. and B. was essential to the plaintiff's right, and that they alone were the judges of this, and therefore the plaintiff could not enforce the contract against them. Milliken v. Milliken, 8 Ir. Eq. R. 16.

3. Quære, whether a court of equity will enforce the specific performance of an agreement that, upon the retirement of a solicitor from a co-partnership, the remaining partner shall carry on the business in the name of the retiring partner. Thornbury v. Bevill, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 554; 6 Jur. 407.

4. In the month of May 1843 a parol agreement was entered into between A. and B., for a partnership between them, as to certain land intended to be used for building purposes; and a lease of it was afterwards executed by the lessor to B. only, the lessor declining to grant a lease to two persons. Certain acts of ownership were exercised by A. shortly after the agreement was entered into; but afterwards A. permitted B. to lay out his money in the erection of buildings on the land, without interfering therewith. After a lapse of eighteen months, A.'s solicitor applied to B. to perform the agreement, which B. repudiated. Six months afterwards A. filed his bill against B., seeking specific performance of the agreement:—Held, that the circumstances were such as to exclude A. from insisting on the specific performance of the agreement by B.; but, in the order dismissing the bill with costs, directions were given to the Master to disallow the defendant the costs occasioned by his setting up the Statute of Frauds, and disputing the parol agreement and part performance thereof. Cowell v. Watts, 2 H. & Tw. 224; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 455.

5. Agreement, dated in March 1840, for a dissolution of partnership, upon terms that the continuing partner should secure by his bond an annuity of 100*l.*, payable quarterly for three years, from the 25th March 1840, to the retiring partner, if he should so long live. A draft of the agreement was signed by both partners, and the retiring partner entered into possession of the partnership effects. No accounts were rendered, or payment in respect of the annuity made, to the retiring partner, who died in February 1843. Various accounts were afterwards rendered to the plaintiff as administrator of the retiring partner, and in June 1847, the continuing partner professed his willingness to settle his part of the account on being released by the plaintiff. In February 1849 the bill was filed against the continuing partner for the accounts, on the footing of the agreement of March 1840, and for payment of the arrears due to the estate of the retiring partner in respect of the annuity. The defendant, by his answer, admitted the agreement of 1840, but submitted, that, as the annuity was not apportionable as between the grantor and the annuitant, the last payment in respect thereof had become due at Christmas 1842, more than six years prior to the filing of the bill, and that the claim in respect of arrears was barred by the Statute of Limitations:—Held, at the hearing, that the right to an account and to payment of the annuity formed part of the agreement, which was admitted by the defendant, and which the plaintiff was, therefore, entitled to have performed in toto. Murray v. Parker, 19 L. J. N. S., Ch., 530; 14 Jur. 664.

6. The Court will entertain a bill to compel partners to act according to the provisions of instruments into which they have entered, and where it will interfere for that purpose, will take care that the decree shall not be defeated by anything done in the meantime. Thus where, in 1812, the then proprietors of Covent Garden Theatre executed a deed, by which they covenanted and agreed that the profits of the theatre should be exclusively appropriated to particular purposes, and that the treasurer, for the time being, should be irrevocably directed so to apply the profits; and in 1822, parties then entitled under the former proprietors to seven-eighths of the theatre, entered into an agreement, which provided, in some respects, for a different application of the profits, and otherwise affected the rights of a party interested in the remaining eighth, who was not consulted on the subject; the Court, upon a bill filed by that party, for the specific performance of the covenants and agreements contained in the deed of 1812, appointed a receiver. Const v. Harris, T. & R. 496.

1. Agreement between A. and B. to enter into partnership for a period of five or seven years, B. to pay into the partnership 10,000*l.* at such dates as might be agreed upon. If B. failed to carry out his agreement, he was to lend to A. 5,000*l.* at a certain rate of interest. Demurrer to a bill by A. for specific performance allowed, with costs. Sichel v. Mosenthal, 8 Jur., N. S., 275; 31 L. J., Ch., 386; 10 W. R. 283; 5 L. T., N. S., 784.

2. As a general rule, the Court will not decree specific performance of a contract for partnership. Scott v. Rayment, 7 L. R., Eq., 112; 38 L. J., Ch., 48.

Where the plaintiff's appropriate remedy is an action, where there are no legal difficulties in his way which the Court can remove, and where there has been no part performance, the Court will not decree specific performance of a contract for partnership. In a case in which, before Lord Cairns' Act (21 & 22 Vict., c. 32), the Court would not have interfered, it will not, since that Act, assess damages. Ib.

3. A bill does not lie for specific performance of a partnership agreement, where the sole relief sought is the payment of a sum of money, for which there is a remedy by action. Bagnell v. Edwards, 10 Ir. R., Eq., 215.

4. An agreement to become partners in a colliery which was to be demised upon royalties, and the royalties to be divided in certain proportions, is an interest in land within the Statute of Frauds, 29 Car. 2, c. 3, and must be in writing, signed by the parties. Caddick v. Skidmore, 3 Jur., N. S., 1185.

Receipts signed by the party sought to be charged, which partly disclosed the nature of the agreement:—Held, not sufficient to take the case out of the statute. Ib.

III. Illegal Partnerships.

5. Quære, whether a legal partnership could exist in the profits of the offices of a sworn clerk or side clerk of the Court of Exchequer, as those offices were formerly constituted, or whether such a partnership can at present exist in the profits of the office of clerk of the rules of that Court. Where a personal office or employment is purchased with the partnership funds for the benefit of the partnership, the partner in whose name it is purchased is not necessarily a trustee of the profits of the office for the other partners, after the term of the partnership has expired. Clarke v. Richards, 1 Y. & Coll. 351; 4 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 49.

6. An agreement for a secret partnership is a contravention of the laws made for regulating the business of a pawnbroker, and no legal partnership is thereby constituted. Armstrong v. Armstrong, Lewis v. Armstrong, 3 Myl. & K. 45; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 101.

7. Profits of partnership in underwriting was illegal by 6 Geo. 1., c. 18, s. 12, and could not be subject of account in equity; but that part of statute is repealed by 5 Geo. 4, c. 114. Knowles v. Haughton, 11 Ves. 168. See also Watts v. Brooks, 3 Ves. 612, and Ottley v. Brown, 1 Ball & B. 360.

8. Upon the dissolution of partnership between H. and A., solicitors, it was agreed that H., continuing the business on his own account, should grant to A. an annuity, and be at liberty to continue his name in the firm, guaranteeing him against all liability by reason thereof:—Held, that such an agreement is not void as being against public policy. Aubin v. Holt, 2 Kay & J. 66; 25 L. J., Ch., 36; 4 W. R. 112.

9. A joint-stock company, formed for working gold mines in North America, the shares of which might be increased to an unlimited extent, and were made assignable at the discretion of the holders, was held to be illegal and fraudulent, and a demurrer to a bill filed by one of the shareholders against the others, for the purpose of carrying into effect a dissolution of the company, was allowed. Blundell v. Windsor, 8 Sim. 601; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 364; 1 Jur. 589.

10. The Courts of this country will not refuse to administer justice between joint importers of any article of commerce, merely upon proof that, in the production or exportation of such article, some fiscal law of the country of produce has been violated. Sharp v. Taylor, 2 Ph. 801.

One of two partners who has possessed himself of the property of the firm cannot be allowed to retain it by merely showing that, in realising it, some provision of some Act of Parliament has been violated or neglected. Ib.

11. Two persons entered into an agreement to be partners in the business of pawnbrokers, to be carried on under the firm of one of them; and, in pursuance of the articles of agreement, that one's name alone was painted over the door of the premises; the licence also was taken out, and the tickets to the customers were issued in his sole name; while the other partner (carrying on another business) attended occasionally to inspect the books of the firm, and drew a percentage on his share of the capital out of the profits:—Held, that the agreement constituted a secret partnership, and was therefore illegal and void, as being in contravention of the policy of 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 99. Gordon v. Howden, 12 Cl. & F. 237.

12. No play can lawfully be acted for hire, gain, or reward, within twenty miles of London, without the authority of letters patent from the king, or of a licence from the Lord Chamberlain; and no such letters patent or licence can be granted, so as to authorise the performance of plays at any place, except within the city or liberties of Westminster, or where the king may happen to reside. An agreement, therefore, for a partnership in acting plays at a theatre situated within twenty miles of London, but not within the city or liberties of Westminster, or in the place of the king's residence, is one to which the Court will not give effect. Ewing v. Osbaldiston, 2 Myl. & C. 53; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 161; 1 Jur. 50.

13. A contract of partnership in blockade-running is not contrary to the municipal law of this country. Exp. Chavasse, Re Grazebrook, 6 N. R. 6; 4 De G. J. & S. 655; 11 Jur., N. S., 400; 34 L. J., Bky., 17; 13 W. R. 627; 12 L. T., N. S., 249.

IV. Premium.

I. When Due and Payable, 5440.
II. Return of, 5440.

I. WHEN DUE AND PAYABLE.

1. Where A., carrying on business alone, took B. and C. into partnership, which was covenanted to be carried on for eighteen years, in consideration of a sum of money to be paid to A. by B. and C. by instalments; and within six months after the commencement of the partnership, and when one only of the instalments had become due, A. became bankrupt:—Held, that notwithstanding the bankruptcy, B. and C. were liable to pay the remaining instalments at the times when they would have become due if the partnership had continued. Akhurst v. Jackson, 1 Wils. C. C. 47.

2. Articles for a co-partnership, by which the plaintiff agreed to take the defendant as a partner, and give him half the interest in the lease of the house, to commence from and after the 29th September; the defendant covenanted to pay 300*l.* on or before that day, as a premium to be admitted a partner; on nonpayment of the money at the day the plaintiff may sue, averring his readiness to have taken the defendant as a partner, without executing or tendering articles of co-partnership or a conveyance of the lease. Walker v. Harris, 1 Anstr. 245.

II. RETURN OF.

3. Where A., an attorney, had prevailed on B., a young man about to be admitted, to become his partner in business for a certain term, and to pay him as a consideration a certain sum of money, part to be paid on the execution of the articles, and the remainder by instalments, and A. sued out, in the character of petitioning creditor, a commission of bankruptcy against and made B. a bankrupt, whereby the partnership was dissolved; A. was restrained from proceeding for the instalments, and ordered to refund what was already received, except as far as was commensurate to the period of actual duration of the partnership. The same equity was held to apply to the assignees of A. on his bankruptcy, and to a bonâ fide creditor, to whom the security of the instalments had been assigned. Hamil v. Stokes, 4 Price 161.

4. A. and B. having entered into an agreement for a partnership, B. to pay A. a consideration of 2,500*l.*, of which a moiety was paid down, but no deed ever actually executed; personal quarrels having ensued within a few months from the commencement of the partnership, A. unjustifiably excluded B. from entering upon the premises, or taking any part in the concern; and upon a bill filed for a dissolution and account, and a return of part of the premium, in consequence of which the notice of dissolution was gazetted, but before any further step taken A. became bankrupt:—Held, that in taking the accounts with the assignees, B. was to be credited with the entire premium, but debited with the moiety unpaid, and a proportional part of the whole premium calculated upon the actual duration of the partnership. Bury v. Allen, 1 Colly. 589.

5. A. and B. entered into a partnership for ten years, A. paying 1,000*l.* premium. At the expiration of eight years, A. filed a bill for a dissolution of the partnership. The Court being of opinion that the dissolution of the partnership was rendered necessary by mutual incompatibility of temper, A. was held entitled to a return of 200*l.* in respect of the unexpired portion of the term. Pease v. Hewitt, 8 Jur., N. S., 1166; 10 W. R. 535; 7 L. T., N. S., 11; 31 Beav. 22.

6. Where, on the dissolution of a partnership, one of the partners is entitled to a return of a proportion of the premium on the ground of failure of the consideration, the Court, in determining the proportion, will not always fix it by reference exclusively to the whole period for which it was agreed that the partnership should last, but will have regard to the conduct of the partners and the amount of benefit already obtained. Bullock v. Crockett, 3 Giff. 507; 8 Jur., N. S., 502; 5 L. T., N. S., 822.

7. Where a partnership, after differences had arisen between the partners, has been dissolved by mutual consent, and without any conditions, before the efflux of the time fixed for the duration of the partnership, the partner who has paid a premium has no right to ask that any proportion of it may be returned. Lee v. Page, 7 Jur., N. S., 768; 30 L. J., Ch., 857; 9 W. R. 754.

8. Under the provisions of a partnership deed between two medical men, the plaintiff paid to the defendant 100*l.* as a premium on the purchase of one-third of his business. The defendant had offered the plaintiff, before the purchase, an opportunity of seeing the nature of the business, but of that offer he had not availed himself, and he retained out of the purchase-money so much as amounted to his estimated share of the business for the first year. Upon a bill for a dissolution of the partnership, for repayment of the 100*l.*, for assessment of the plaintiff's damages, for an indemnity, an injunction, and a receiver:—Held, both parties desiring it, that there must be a dissolution of the partnership, but no return of the 100*l.*, or assessment of the plaintiff's damages; the defendant to be receiver of the debts of the business, and an account to be taken of all the profits, but under the circumstances no costs on either side. Airey v. Borham, 4 L. T., N. S., 391; 29 Beav. 620.

9. By articles of partnership, A. agreed to enter into partnership with B. in the profession of surgeon for seven years from the date of the articles. The articles recited that A. and B. had separately practised as surgeons in the neighbourhood of C.; but that the practice of A. had been greater than that of B., and that it had been agreed that B. should pay to A. a premium of 900*l.* as a consideration for A. and B. entering into the partnership. A. became bankrupt in a year and a half after the commencement of the partnership. In a suit by B. against the assignees of A. for an account of the partnership dealings:—Held, that the consideration for which the 900*l.* had been paid having failed B. was entitled to an allowance of a sum proportionate to the period of the partnership which remained, with a lien for that amount on the partnership assets. Freeland v. Stansfield, 2 Sm. & G. 479; 1 Jur., N. S., 8; 23 L. J., Ch., 923; 2 W. R. 575; 2 Eq. Rep. 1181.

Notwithstanding the Bankrupt Act 1849, s. 152, a receiver was appointed on the motion of the insolvent partner. Ib.

Semble, that an assignee of a bankrupt partner who, by giving notice to the debtors to the partnership, prevents the payment of the debts to the solvent partner, who is answerable for the partnership debts, and thus gives occasion to a suit by the solvent partner, is liable to the costs of the suit. Ib.

1. A. and B., in 1856, enter into partnership as surgeons, B. paying A. 750*l.* premium, upon the representation that A.'s profits were 700*l.* per annum. Disputes subsequently arose, and it was alleged by B. that the profits of A. were not half the amount represented, an allegation which was supported by A.'s income tax return and other evidence. There was no evidence of the actual receipts of A. The M. R. decreed a dissolution of the partnership, and a return of one-half the premium; and this decision was affirmed on appeal, on the ground of the misrepresentation as to the amount of A.'s profits previously to the partnership. Jauncey v. Knowles, 29 L. J., Ch., 95; 1 L. T., N. S., 116.

2. A. agreed to pay 1,000*l.* for a share in a partnership for fourteen years. The partners disagreed, and the partnership was dissolved by the Court, with the assent of both the partners. There being faults on both sides, the Court directed a due proportion of the premium to be returned. Astle v. Wright, 23 Beav. 77; 2 Jur., N. S., 849; 25 L. J., Ch., 864; 4 W. R. 764.

3. Where it was provided by the articles of partnership that, if the profits of the partnership within twelve months should not amount to 1,000*l.*, the return of the premium of 500*l.* brought in by the partner who survived should be made to him, the other partner having died within that time. On a bill by the surviving partner against the administrator of the deceased partner, such return of premium was decreed to be paid out of the amount received under effected policies of insurance, this being in priority to the other debts of the intestate. Andrews v. Jones, 12 L. T., N. S., 229.

4. M. agreed with P. to pay him 1,250*l.*, part in money and part in bills, as the consideration for a partnership as a medical practitioner, for twenty-one years, P. to introduce M. to his patients, and to be allowed to be absent for three months, but to take an active part in the business for three years. P. was afflicted at the time with Bright's disease, was absent for six months, and died of apoplexy. P.'s representative sued M. upon the bills, and he filed a bill for an injunction for an account and return of part of the consideration, alleging non-introduction to patients, protracted absence of P., and ignorance that he suffered from Bright's disease:—The Court restrained the defendant from suing on the bills, and directed the usual partnership accounts, with a declaration that the plaintiff was entitled to be remitted a reasonable portion of the premium. Mackenna v. Parkes, 36 L. J., Ch., 366; 15 L. T., N. S., 500; 15 W. R. 217.

5. A. and B. entered into partnership as solicitors for a term of seven years, A. paying a premium of 800*l.* B., before entering into the partnership, knew that A. was inexperienced and incompetent in his profession, and assigned that reason for requiring the amount of premium which was paid. After the expiration of two years, B. complained that A.'s incompetence was injurious to the business, and called on him to dissolve the partnership; and A. thereupon filed a bill praying for a dissolution and for a return of a proportionate part of the premium:—Held, that he was entitled to the return of a part of the premium proportionate to the unexpired portion of the term. Atwood v. Maude, 3 L. R., Ch., 369; 16 W. R. 665.

6. Upon the dissolution of a partnership and a notice as provided in the partnership articles, if there has been no misconduct nor breach of the articles on the part of the partner so giving notice, the price originally paid by the continuing partner for his share in the goodwill will not be returned him, although the goodwill may have become valueless, and the business may have suffered by the retiring partner setting up a similar business in his own name, and on the adjoining premises. Bond v. Milbourn, 20 W. R. 197.

7. When a partnership is determined prematurely, if the incoming partner has paid a premium, he is in all cases entitled to have a proportionate part of the premium returned, except, first, where there has been actual or implied release or waiver of the right to it; or, secondly, where there has been actual or implied release of the right to be a partner, including such a deliberate and serious breach of the partnership contract as may be considered equivalent to a repudiation of it altogether. Wilson v. Johnstone, 16 L. R., Eq., 606; 29 L. T., N. S., 93; 42 L. J., Ch., 668.

In June 1869 A. entered into articles of partnership with B. for seven years, and paid a premium of 2,500*l.* The articles were strict in their provisions as to the conduct of the partners, and other matters. In November 1870 the term of the partnership was varied, and made to cease on 29th September 1875. In 1871 B. had reason to be dissatisfied with A., and, acting under a provision in the articles, called on him to sign (and in November 1871 he did sign) a notice of dissolution, which was duly gazetted. A correspondence ensued, and ultimately, B. refusing to return any part of the premium, A. filed a bill to recover it, and to have the partnership accounts taken in the usual way:—Held, that he was entitled to a return of a proportionate part of the premium, but on the footing of the partnership term being one of six years and a quarter, and not seven years. Ib.

Mere conduct entitling the other partner to a dissolution is not sufficient, inasmuch as the Court does not fine for immorality or even dishonesty in the abstract. Ib.

8. The plaintiff and defendant entered into partnership as solicitors for a term of twelve years, "the partnership to be determinable at the option of either partner" by giving three months' notice; and the plaintiff to have the option of increasing his share in the profits of the business upon payment to the defendant of 600*l*. The plaintiff paid the premium of 600*l*. Afterwards the defendant dissolved the partnership by giving a notice as provided by the articles:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the return of a proportionate part of the premium. Rooke v. Nisbet, or Daw v. Rooke, 50 L. J., Ch., 588; 29 W. R. 842.

1. When a partnership is dissolved before its natural expiration in consequence of the misconduct of a partner who has paid a premium, he is not entitled to a return of any part of the premium. And, in such a case, if the premium agreed upon has not been actually paid before the dissolution, the partner who has agreed to pay it will be ordered to pay the whole of it, notwithstanding the dissolution. Bluck v. Capstick, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 863; 48 L. J., Ch., 766; 41 L. T. 215; 28 W. R. 75.

2. Mere delay by one partner in furnishing further capital according to articles of partnership is not a ground for rescinding the partnership contract, or, in case of dissolution, for depriving the partner of the right to a return of the premium paid by him on entering into partnership. Where one partner, who has paid a premium on entering into partnership, commenced an action for dissolution, and the other partner immediately afterwards commenced a cross-action for dissolution, and the first partner then filed affidavits in his action containing imputations of misconduct against the other partner, which he did not sustain, and one decree for dissolution was made in both actions, which were practically one litigation:—Held, that the making of the imputations was not such misconduct as to disentitle the party making them to a return of his premium. Mere incompetence in a partner, however great, is not a bar to the return of any part of the premium paid by him, unless such incompetence has caused damage or injury, when it may be taken into account in determining how much of the premium shall be returned. Brewer v. Yorke, 46 L. T. 289.

Where a man with a business has taken a person into partnership with him, and has taken a less premium from him in the belief that he will be of material service in the partnership, and the new partner turns out utterly incompetent, such incompetence may possibly be a good reason for not allowing the return of the whole premium. Where an inquiry was directed to be made in chambers as to the amount of premium to be returned to one partner on a dissolution of partnership, and a certain amount was certified by the chief clerk, whose certificate was afterwards confirmed by the judge and the Court of Appeal, interest on the amount was directed to be paid from the date of the certificate. Semble. Ib.

3. In an action for dissolution of partnership on the ground of disputes between the partners, where there is no distinct breach of the partnership articles, the terms of dissolution as to return of premium and other matters are within the discretion of the judge, and his conclusions will not be interfered with by the Court of Appeal except on very sufficient grounds. Lyon v. Tweddell, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 529; 50 L. J., Ch., 571; 44 L. T. 785; 29 W. R. 689.

I. PROPORTIONS.

4. Partnership, without any stipulation as to the proportions; the partners entitled in equal moieties. Peacock v. Peacock, 16 Ves 49.

5. An equal partnership implies not only an equal participation de facto in profit and loss but a right in each partner to claim and insist on such participation. Thus, although in a case where parties had participated equally in profit and loss, the law would, in the absence of any contract, or any dealing from which a contract might be inferred, presume an equal partnership; yet this presumption would not arise if the books of the concern and the dealings of the parties showed that such could not have been the terms on which the business was carried on. Stewart v. Forbes, 1 Macn & G. 137; 13 Jur. 523. Affirming 16 Sim. 433

6. Two sets of parties having projected a railway on a similar line agreed to consolidate the project, and appointed, as solicitors of the proposed company, the plaintiff and defendant whom they had respectively consulted prior to the consolidation. The two solicitors accepted the appointment without making any definite arrangement as to the division of the business or of the emoluments of the office, and a much larger portion of the work was done by the defendant than by the plaintiff. In a conversation between them about six months after the appointment, and before the principal part of the business was transacted, the plaintiff stated, as the result of his inquiries into the practice in like cases, that the allowance for office expenses and personal trouble in such limited partnerships between solicitors was made by each party retaining, besides his expenses and disbursements, from 10 to 2 per cent. on the amount of the net charges for the business done, and which principle he considered satisfactory; and the defendant in reply, observed, that there could be no misunderstanding about it between honourable men. Upon a bill by the plaintiff, claiming an account and division of the profits of the business done by the company, upon the footing of an equal co-partnership, and offering to allow 25 per cent. upon the work done separately to the partner who did it, the Court, under the circumstances, made a decree accordingly. Webster v. Bray, 7 Hare 159.

7. A., being entitled under a parol partnership agreement with B. and C. to three-eighths of the capital and profits of the business became bankrupt; being at the time indebted to the partnership in respect of bills, in which the partnership name had been used for his personal accommodation. The assignee claimed a share of the profits made subsequently to the bankruptcy, while the continuing partners insisted, that the bankrupt's interest in the profits ceased at the time. In conse quence of this difference, no settlement of accounts between the estate and the partnership took place, and the assignees filed their bill; but B. and C., and afterwards C. alone, pending the litigation with the assignees, carried on the business for many years with the stock and capital which existed at the time of the bankruptcy, and stock and capital substituted in the usual course of trade for such former stock and capital, aided by the expenditure of considerable sums by C.:—Held, that the assignees of A. were entitled to three-eighths of the profits which had been made, or should be made, until the concern was fully wound up, and to three-eighths of the money to be produced by the sale of what remained in specie of the capital and stock; that A.'s proportion of the profits was not to be lessened nor the proportion of C. to be increased in respect of the debt which A. owed to the partnership, or of the money which C. brought into the business beyond his share of the original capital. Crawshay v. Collins, 2 Russ. 325.

Upon an exception to a Master's report, stating the capital and stock in trade of a partnership to consist, at the time of the bankruptcy of one of the partners, of the estimated value of the dead stock employed in it, it was referred back to the Master, to state what was the amount of the capital, and also of the stock in trade at that time, in order to adjust the amount of subsequent profits to which the assignees of the bankrupt partner were entitled, as against the other partners who had continued to trade with the partnership property after the bankruptcy. S. C. 1 Jac. & Walk. 267.

1. As to the shares which partners take in the partnership property from implication arising from facts of this case. Robley v. Blake, and Blake v. Brook, 7 Bli. N. S. 90.

2. The adventure was for the supply of small-arms to a foreign government; and the arrangement to tender for the supply was verbally come to without any distinct agreement respecting the division of the profits. In the contracts for supply subsequently entered into with the representative of the foreign government, A. signed separately, and B. and C. were made parties by the name of their firm, and signed in that character:—Held, that the proper inference from the form and mode of execution of the contracts was that the adventure was undertaken by B. and C. as a firm, i.e., as one person, conjointly with A. as another person, and, consequently, that the profits ought to be divided in moieties, one to A. and the other to B. and C., and it was decreed accordingly. Warner v. Smith, 32 L. J., Ch., 573; 11 W. R. 392; 8 L. T., N. S., 221; 1 De G. J. & S. 337; 1 N. R. 191. Affirming 7 L. T., N. S., 593.

3. In the absence of any evidence, the presumption is, that partners are equally entitled to the profits, and equally liable to bear the losses of the business. Collins v. Jackson, 31 Beav. 645.

4. A testator, after giving legacies to his daughters, bequeathed to his two sons C. and D. the remainder of his property, in equal proportions, of whatever kind it might consist at the time of his death. He directed the business of the mills of X. to be carried on, and a certain sum to be applied to that purpose, and the remainder of his capital to be invested in fee-simple estates, so that each of his sons should have his portion independent of the other; that they were not to be of age, for the purpose of his will, until they were twenty-five; and if one died without issue under that age, his property should go over to the other. The testator was entitled to 4,061*l.*, as a partner in the mills of Y. C. died under twenty-five:—Held, that the profits realized on the 4,061*l.* during C.'s life belonged to him, and were not capital to be invested in land. Pilsworth v. Mouse, 14 Ir. Ch. R. 163.

The testator's partner in the mills of Y., after his death, paid 5,421*l.*, which he appropriated to the payment, in the first instance, of the 4061*l.*, due at the testator's death, and the balance to subsequent profits:—Held, that the profits realized subsequently to C.'s death were divisible between his representative and D. Ib.

5. Partnership articles provided that the senior partner should receive a fixed annual sum out of the profits, and that the junior should receive the residue and bear all the losses. The senior partner was to be at liberty to retire on notice, when a deed of dissolution was to be executed containing all usual and proper provisions; and if he died without having retired, his death was to operate as a dissolution. If the junior partner died during the partnership, the senior was to pay the junior's representatives "his half-share of the stock;" but there was no corresponding provision for the event of the senior's death:—Held, on the death of the senior partner in the lifetime of the junior, that the estates of the deceased was entitled to a moiety of the stock in trade and credits of the partnership. Nelson v. Bealby, 4 De G. F. & J. 321; 30 Beav. 472; 5 L. T., N. S., 599; 8 Jur., N. S., 397.

"The business" held not to mean the capital or stock in trade. Ib.

6. Articles of partnership provided that the business should be carried on for the mutual and common benefit of the partners, and risk of profit and loss in equal shares; that A. should bring in 1,500*l.* capital, and B. 750*l.*, and that the capital in the business should carry interest: that if either partner brought in additional capital, interest should be paid upon it before any other payment of interest was made; that the partners should draw out of the partnership funds so much per year, and that the net profits in excess of the amount drawn out should remain in the business, upon which interest was to be allowed; that B. should give all his time to the business, and A. so much time as he should think proper; and that upon dissolution, after payment of debts, the remaining capital stock, moneys, and credits of the partnership should be divided between the partners according to their respective shares and interests. Upon dissolution, the capital of B. was found to have been increased to a small extent by the accumulation of profits; the capital of A. was considerably increased by accumulation of profits, and also by additional capital brought in. The assets proved insufficient to pay back the capital in full:—Held, that the assets ought to be applied first in paying to A. the additional capital brought in by him, and the balance divided between the partners in proportion to their respective capitals. Wood v. Scoles, 1 L. R., Ch., 369; 12 Jur., N. S., 555; 35 L. J., Ch., 547; 14 W. R. 621.

1. A father took his sons into partnership under articles, providing that the capital then used by him in the business should be kept in it without allowing interest, and should remain the property of the father, the sons having during the partnership a certain share in the profits. The debts due to the business were estimated at 20*l.* per cent. below their nominal amount, but very nearly their full amount was realised. The father drew out of the business large sums, which appeared to have been wholly applied in payment of trade debts due when the partnership was formed. One of the sons brought fresh capital into the business:—Held, that, in the absence of contract, the sons could not claim to treat the difference between the estimated value of the debts due to the business and the amount actually realised as profit, but that the whole amount realised was to be treated as part of the father's capital. Cooke v. Benbow, 3 De G. J. & S. 1; 6 N. R. 135.

Held, also, that the contract was, not that the father should keep in the business the moneys employed there when the partnership commenced and pay aliunde the trade debts then owing, but that the business should be carried on as it stood for the benefit of himself and his sons, and that, therefore, the payment of the old trade debts was not an improper withdrawal of the capital. Ib.

Held, also, that if the father had withdrawn capital for unauthorized purposes he could not have been charged with interest unless such withdrawal had been fraudulent and grossly excessive. Ib.

Held, also, that in the absence of contract, the son could not claim interest on the capital brought in by him. Ib.

2. By articles of partnership between the plaintiff and the defendants, it was agreed that the plaintiff should reside and manage the business abroad, and that he might draw for his private use to the extent of 500*l.* until the yearly balance-sheet was made, and the amount of profit ascertained. After payment of specified expenses, the partners were declared entitled to the gains and profits of the business in the following proportions: K. to four-tenths, H. to two-tenths, and the plaintiff to four-tenths. In case the gains should be found insufficient to pay the expenses, the deficiency was to be borne in the same proportions; and, in consideration of the plaintiff devoting his whole time to the business, the defendants agreed to guarantee to him "that the four-tenths share in the profits to be received by him during the first two years should not be less than 500*l.* per annum; and that, if the net profits should at any time, upon the division thereof, exceed 1,500*l.* a year, he should receive an additional bonus of 10*l.* per cent. upon the gross earnings":—Held, that the true construction of the articles was, that if there should be a profit, and four-tenths of that profit should be less than 500*l.*, the plaintiff was to take 500*l.*, but if there should be no profit, then that the guarantee was not to emerge. Croker v. Kreeft, Kreeft v. Croker 13 L. T., N. S., 136.

Upon the dissolution of the partnership, the chief clerk found the plaintiff to be indebted to his co-partners in certain sums on the authority of partnership books kept by the defendants. The plaintiff having alleged that the books were erroneously and fraudulently compiled, and that the debts were not partnership debts, it was referred back to the chief clerk to ascertain and certify the amounts due from and to the plaintiff and the defendants respectively, with liberty to state special circumstances. Ib.

3. A solicitor who was acting for defendants in an action was instructed by his clients to associate with himself another person, A., as the solicitor to conduct the defence, and thereupon he proposed to A. to join with him in carrying on the business, to which A. assented, and nothing whatever was said as to any division of profits, or respecting remuneration:—Held, first, that this was a partnership for the particular business. Secondly, that the presumption of law was, that the profits were to be divided equally. Thirdly, that the party alleging, and on whom therefore rested the burden of proving, that the contract as to the profits was different, having failed to prove it, the profits must be equally divided. Robinson v. Anderson, 20 Beav. 98.

4. B., who was an architect, agreed with C. and K., who were wharf-building speculators and wharfingers, to render his financial and other assistance and supervision in the construction and completion of warehouses on two wharves, of which it was proposed to procure a lease; and, in consideration of such his assistance and supervision, to receive one equal fifth part or share of the profits of the speculation and undertaking. A lease of the X. property was procured, but the negotiations for the Y. property fell through at the time. B., it was originally intended, should be one of five, the other four to consist of C. and K., and two capitalist gentlemen, whom it was intended to secure. Eventually, B. and K., in lieu of procuring two capitalists to be admitted into the partnership, borrowed 18,000*l.* on mortgage of the premises by way of raising capital for the concern. No new agreement was entered into regarding the shares of the three parties to the original agreement:—Held, that B. was only entitled to one-fifth share as fixed in the agreement, but that such share should not be liable to the mortgage debt of 18,000*l.* Bell v. Barnett, 21 W. R. 119.

The Y. property became the subject of new negotiations on behalf of the partnership, but these latter negotiations also fell through. Some years after the date of the original agreement relating to the property, B. succeeded in obtaining a lease of the property, and claimed to retain it for his own benefit. B. had not previously declared in express terms that he considered the original agreement at an end:—Held, that the property still remained subject to the partnership agreement, and that B. was entitled to one-fifth share in that property also. Ib.

5. When a voluntary society has sold some of its real property, there being no rule of the society to the contrary, the members for the time being are entitled to the proceeds of such sale in equal shares. Brown v. Dale, 27 W. R. 149; 9 L. R., Ch. D., 78.

1. S. and U. were solicitors and partners; S. was steward of a manor and receiver of rents. In the articles of partnership it was provided that steward's fees and receiver's salary of either partner should be deemed part of the profits of the partnership, but that the receipts and payments in respect thereof should be made by the partner conducting such business:—Held, that steward's fees and receiver's salary or commission are not profits on a trade or business in the ordinary sense of the term, and that, under the circumstances, balances due by S. as steward or receiver were not debts of the partnership. Alston v. Sims, 1 Jur., N. S., 438; 24 L. J., Ch., 553; 3 W. R. 431.

II. CONTRIBUTION TO LOSSES.

2. Though contribution among partners is now enforced at law, the jurisdiction of courts of equity is not ousted, and therefore though the bill was dismissed, the object having been obtained in an action directed, the Court would not dismiss it with costs. Wright v. Hunter, 5 Ves. 792.

3. In the absence of any evidence, the presumption is, that parties are equally liable to bear the losses of the business. Collins v. Jackson, 31 Beav. 645.

4. Bill for contribution by one of several partners against some of the other partners, stating that the partnership was wound up, and its debts paid, and that it only existed for the purposes of contribution; stating the number of shares which each of the partners had in the concern, and the sums subscribed by most of them, thereby showing that two of the defendants, and several of the absent parties, had paid up much more than the price of their shares; alleging that all the absent parties had either died insolvent (and that plaintiff was unable to procure administration to them), or were now wholly insolvent and out of the jurisdiction (not praying process against them); and stating a payment which plaintiff, as a partner, had been compelled to pay, and which was much more in proportion than what the defendants had paid; stating also that the defendants were the only persons who were at all capable of contributing towards payment to plaintiff of such excess; praying for such contribution, but not praying any partnership account. Demurrer for want of equity and want of parties overruled. Jones v. Morgan, 10 Jur. 238.

5. Semble, that there is no positive rule of law that losses are to be borne between partners in the same proportions in which they enjoy profits; but where partners have provided for the division of profits in certain proportions, and have made no provision as to losses, it is a fair inference that they intended to bear losses in the like proportion. Re Albion Life Assurance Society, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 83; 43 L. T. 524; 29 W. R. 109.

6. By the terms of the resolutions on the formation of a company, the object of which was to purchase land and found a colony, certain trustees had the control of an expedition to explore the district; and it was resolved that the expense of the expedition should not exceed a certain sum, and that the subscribers were not to be liable beyond a fixed amount. On the arrival in the country of the persons proceeding on the expedition, they were seized and thrown into prison, and owing to this the project failed, and the loss greatly exceeded the limit fixed by the resolutions:—Held, that the trustees could not call on the subscribers for contribution beyond the fixed amount. Gillan v. Morrison, 1 De G. & Sm. 421; 11 Jur. 861.

7. A. and B. went into partnership without written articles, the parol agreement between them being that profits should be shared and losses borne in equal shares. A. died, and on accounts of his estate being taken, it was found that he had advanced more capital than B., to the extent of 1,900*l.* The net assets of the partnership were only 1,400*l.*:—Held, that the deficiency of 500*l.* was a debt to which both estates were liable to contribute equally. Nowell v. Nowell, 7 L. R., Eq., 538.

8. A banker took three gentlemen into partnership without an inquiry being made into the accounts, and gave them a charge on all his estates by way of indemnity against all his liabilities at the time they entered into partnership:—Held, to be only an indemnity against what they should be called on to pay, on account of his liabilities, out of their private means, independent of the banking business. Grylls v. Grylls, Mann v. Kendall, 18 W. R. 85.

III. INTEREST ON.

9. A stipulation that interest should be allowed on the capital of partners presumed under the circumstances. In a partnership between A. and B., interest was allowed on the capitals; C., who was a clerk and relative, was cognisant of the terms on which this partnership was carried on; B. retired, and A. and C. continued the business; the whole capital embarked therein belonged to A.; there was an absence of all proof of any agreement between A. and C. in respect of interest on capital; D. and E. were afterwards admitted into the business, and an interest on account of capital was then resumed:—Held, under these circumstances, and from the knowledge that C. had of the terms on which the last partnership had been carried on, that it must be assumed that interest on capital was to be allowed in the second partnership. Millar v. Craig, 6 Beav. 433.

10. In a long unsettled partnership account, rendered intricate by the neglect of a party, he shall have no interest on the balance when settled. Boddam v. Ryley, 1 Bro. C. C. 239; 2 Bro. C. C. 2.

11. On a bill filed for an account on foot of the partnership transactions, one of the partners (a defendant) was, under the circumstances, decreed to pay interest upon the amount of the plaintiff's share until paid, at the rate of 5*l.* per cent. Hutcheson v. Smith, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 117.

12. In taking the accounts of all partnership dealings and transactions between A. and B., the chief clerk certified that B. had advanced all the sums required in the erection of certain houses, and that he was entitled to be allowed interest on such sums from the dates when advanced, down to the date of the certificate, and that he ought to be charged with interest on the rents received by him. But the certificate was varied by striking out the sums allowed for interest. Stevens v. Cook, 5 Jur., N. S., 1415.

1. A claim by one partner for interest on capital in the partnership business disallowed under the circumstances of the case. Hill v. King, 3 De G. J. & S. 418 ; 1 N. R. 161.

A verbal agreement for a partnership, by which it was stipulated that the capital should be advanced in equal shares, but nothing was said about interest. One of the partners advanced his share of the capital, but the other did not:—Held, that the partner who had made such advance was not entitled to interest. S. C. 9 Jur., N. S., 527; 8 L. T., N. S., 220. And see 33 L. J., Ch., 136.

2. Under the common decree in a partnership suit interest is payable on the balance found to be due from one partner to another from the date of the certificate. Bonville v. Bonville, 35 Beav. 129.

3. Upon a decree for the dissolution of a partnership, with the usual directions, the accounts are taken up to the date of the decree, upon the footing of the existing articles, but from that date they are taken in the ordinary way, simple interest being allowed on the capital of the respective partners and the profits divided in equal shares. Watney v. Wells, 9 Jur., N. S., 396; 32 L. J., Ch., 194; 11 W. R. 228.

By an agreement between two partners, each was to have interest at 5 per cent. on his share of the capital, and the profits were then to be equally divided between them. A decree was made for a dissolution and a sale of the partnership property; but the business was carried on for some time afterwards, until the property was finally sold:—Held, that after the dissolution, interest was no longer payable under the agreement; and that in the division of the proceeds of the sale each partner would take what was found to be his share of capital at the time of the dissolution, with the accumulations, and that the residue must be equally divided between them. S. C. 2 L. R., Ch., 250; 36 L. J., Ch., 861; 16 L. T., N. S., 248; 15 W. R. 621.

4. By articles of partnership it was provided that the partners shoud carry out certain contracts, and that the partnership should continue until the contracts were completed, but that if either of the partners should die, then that his executors should be bound by his obligations, and that there should be no division of the profits until the completion of the contracts. One of the partners died, and he bequeathed all his property upon trust, after conversion and investment, for his widow for life, with remainder over. The contracts were not completed until six years after his death, when his share of the partnership assets was paid to his trustees:—Held, that his widow was entitled to interest at 4*l.* per cent. from his death on the value of his share in the partnership assets. Jackson v. Jackson, 20 L. T., N. S., 354; 17 W. R. 547.

5. Where profits are left by a partner in a business, he will not, in the absence of a special agreement, be allowed interest on them. Dixham v. Bradford, 5 L. R., Ch., 519.

In ascertaining the profits of a business, the value of the partnership property is to be found, and the original capital with interest thereon (if necessary) is to be deducted; the residue will represent the profits. Ib.

6. By a clause in a partnership deed it was provided that on the death of a partner his share, as ascertained in manner specified, with interest thereon at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, should be paid to his personal representatives by four annual consecutive legal instalments:—Held, that interest was payable at the rate of 10 per cent. for one year on the first instalment when the same should become due, for two years on the second when due, and so on. Beater v. Murray, 1 W. R. 92.

7. A father took his two sons into partnership under articles, by which it was agreed that the business should be carried on with the father's capital, which should remain his; that yearly stock-taking should be made, that the partners should share profits and losses equally in thirds, that each of the sons besides his own share of the profits should have 150*l.* a year out of the father's share, but repairs and other outgoings in respect of the business premises should be paid out of the profits; that before division of the profits, the father should have interest at 4*l.* per cent. on his capital, and that in estimating profits a certain discount should be taken off the mills and machinery. The partnership lasted ten years, during the whole of which time in the yearly stock-taking the mills and machinery were valued as they stood without any discount, as provided in the articles, and without distinguishing the increase of value arising from additions and improvements, and the expenses of additions and improvements were charged against the partnership; the 150*l.* a year to each son was charged against the business, not against the father's share of profits; each partner was credited with interest on the capital standing to his credit at the beginning of the year, and the profit was then divided into thirds, and the shares carried to the credit of the partners respectively:—Held, that this mode of keeping the accounts, and the division of profits according to it, evidenced a new agreement between the parties, and that the account must be taken on that footing, and not on the footing of the articles: and that whether the mills and machinery were, according to the articles the property of the father or of the partnership they must be treated as being under this agreement the property of the partnership. Pilling v. Pilling, 3 De G. J. & S. 162.

The bill made no reference to the account having been kept in a mode inconsistent with the articles, and the decree directed an account of all dealings between the parties as partners under the articles dated 30th December 185—Held, that this was not a direction to take the accounts according to the articles, and that they ought to be taken according to the book. Ib.

The partners being entitled by agreement to interest on their capitals:—Held, that such interest must run till the principal was paid, although the partnership had been dissolved for several years. Ib.

1. A father took his sons into partnership under articles, providing that the capital then used by him in the business should be kept in it without allowing interest, and should remain the property of the father, the sons having during the partnership a certain share in the profits. The debts due to the business were estimated at 20*l.* per cent. below their nominal amount, but very nearly their full amount was realised. The father drew out of the business large sums, which appeared to have been wholly applied in payment of trade debts due when the partnership was formed. One of the sons brought fresh capital into the business:—Held, that in the absence of contract, the son could not claim interest on the capital brought in by him. Per Turner, L. J. The withdrawal by a partner of capital, in order to pay his private debts, is so far for the benefit of the other partners, as preventing the mischief that would arise from an execution against the partnership property, that, in the absence of fraud, no interest is payable to the other partners on account of the capital so withdrawn: But semble (per Knight-Bruce, L. J.). Interest may, under some circumstances, be payable between partners on account of capital brought in or withdrawn, independently of express contract. Cooke v. Benbow, 3 De G. J. & S. 1; 6 N. R. 135.

2. A testator was in trade in partnership with other persons for a term of years, under articles, by which the share of any partner dying was to be left in the concern till the expiration of the term, and then to be paid off by instalments, with interest and share of profits in the meantime. By his will he bequeathed all the residue of his real and personal estate to trustees, to get in with all convenient speed, and invest the moneys, and pay the interest or dividends to the widow for life, remainder to his children. A subsequent proviso in the will empowered the trustees to postpone any sale, at their discretion, and directed the rents and produce of any unsold part to go as the interest of the sales-moneys would have gone if such part had been sold. The books were made up half-yearly. The trustees did not get in the share in the partnership:—Held, that the widow was entitled to 5*l.* per cent. interest on the amount at which the stock in trade had stood in the books of the concern on the periodical stock-taking next preceding his decease, from the day of his death up to the day of the periodical stock-taking next succeeding his death. Johnstone v. Moore, 4 Jur., N. S., 356.

3. In taking the accounts of a partnership, interest after the dissolution will not in general be allowed to the partners on their respective capitals, though interest during the partnership with annual rests is allowed; but this rule may be varied by the terms of the articles, as, for example, by a provision treating the capital left in by a partner as an interest bearing loan. Barfield v. Loughborough, 8 L. R., Ch., 1; 42 L. J., Ch., 179; 27 L. T., N. S., 499; 21 W. R. 86.

Any sums of money received after the dissolution and retained by either partner ought to be debited to him, and applied first in reduction of the interest due to him; and secondly, in reduction of his capital. Ib.

By articles of partnership between two solicitors, it was agreed that in case either of them should at any time or times, with the consent of the other of them, advance or lend to the co-partnership or leave therein at any annual settlement of accounts any sum or sums of money, the partners respectively should be considered as creditors of the partnership in respect of such capital and advances, and should be allowed interest for the same. Upon the special terms of this contract:—Held, that in taking the accounts after dissolution, interest must be allowed to each partner on his share of the capital from time to time remaining in the business, with annual rests up to the time of the dissolution, but without rests from that time. Ib.

4. When A. retired from a partnership, but left 60,000*l.* capital in the business ostensibly as part of the partnership capital of B., such sum to be repaid at the end of three years (being the agreed term of the new co-partnership), and when B. retained and employed in the business the said sum beyond the expiration of that period:—Held, that interest at 5 per cent. per annum was payable on the 60,000*l.* from the expiration of the three years, and also on the profits from the time of the realization of the different portions of the same. Spartali v. Constantinidi, 20 W. R. 823.

Afterwards an appeal against this decision was compromised. S. C. 21 W. R. 116.

Courts of equity are not limited by 3 & 4 Vict., c. 42, s. 28, as to the allowance of interest. Ib.

IV. INTEREST ON OVERDRAFTS.

5. Partnership articles provided that neither party should draw from the partnership more than his presumptive share of the profits, but no provision was made for payment of interest in case of either partner overdrawing. Upon decree for dissolution:—Held, that one of the partners having overdrawn he could not be charged with interest upon the sums overdrawn. Meymott v. Meymott, 9 Jur., N. S., 426; 32 L. J., Ch., 218; 31 Beav. 445.

6. A simple contract debt does not carry interest, unless by virtue of some contract express or implied, and, therefore, where one partner was indebted to another for money drawn out of the firm, and there was no evidence of any contract or custom of dealing:—Held, that he could not be charged with interest in a suit for the administration of the latter's estate. Rhodes v. Rhodes, 1 Johns. 653; 6 Jur., N. S., 600; 29 L. J., Ch., 418; 8 W. R. 204.

7. A father trading alone took his sons into partnership, and undertook to bring into the business "all his capital then or usually employed therein, without any allowance of interest." In estimating the father's capital, the book-debts due to him were, according to the custom of the trade, valued at 20*l.* per cent. below their nominal amount; but they actually realised more. The father withdrew large sums from the capital, to pay trade debts incurred before the partnership was entered into, and one of the sons substituted capital of his own. In the absence of express contract:—Held, that no interest was payable to the sons on account of capital withdrawn by the father to pay trade debts due at the date of the partnership. Cooke v. Benbow, 6 N. R. 135; 3 De G. J. & S. 1.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. Possession of some owners is possession of all. Exp. Machell, 2 Ves. & B. 216; 1 Rose 447.

2. Where articles stipulate for a division of the partnership property at the end of the partnership, a sale is intended. Rigden v. Pierce, 6 Madd. 353.

3. Partnership determined by death, the legal property survives, not the beneficial interest. Right of the executor to the value of the testator's interest, to be ascertained, not by calculation but by sale. Crawshay v. Collins, 15 Ves. 227.

4. The interest of partners as tenants in common, where the estate was purchased out of the joint property, and mortgaged by the firm for a joint debt, is a joint security. Exp. Free, 2 G. & J. 250.

5. Right of survivorship between two persons, builders, with a provision for a lease of the ground, but not general partners, not interfered with. Reilly v. Walsh, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 22.

6. A. enters into partnership in fifths with three owners, for twenty-one years, in digging for mines in A.'s lands, A. to have two-fifths, and in consideration of his ownership of the land to have a tenth out of the other partners; A. dies, and his widow sets up a voluntary settlement made after marriage:—The Court inclined to the opinion that the partners were as purchasers, and that the voluntary settlement should not stand against them. Shaw v. Standish, 2 Vern. 326.

7. A bequest to the representatives of the late mercantile house of A. and K., or to such person or persons as should be entitled at testator's decease to their personal property, in satisfaction of a debt due by the testator's father:—Held, claimable by the legal representative of the surviving partner as representing the firm of A. and K., and not by the persons beneficially entitled to the properties of A. and K. Kerrison v. Reddington, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 451.

8. Trade fixtures in leasehold premises, mortgaged by a firm of traders:—Held, not within their order and disposal, so as to pass to their assignees in bankruptcy; though the lease had run out, and, pending the negotiation with the landlord for a new lease, the firm had occupied the premises from year to year. Fearenside v. Derham, 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 354; 8 Jur. 633.

9. When a partnership at will is formed, for the purpose of working an invention for which a patent has previously been taken ou by and registered in the name of one of th partners alone, the patent becomes an asse of the partnership, and each partner acquire a right to practise the invention; and thi right is not taken away by the registere owners assigning the patent to third partie who have notice of the existence of th partnership. Kenny's Patent Button-holin Co. v. Somerrell and Lutwyche, 38 L. T., N. S 878; 26 W. R. 786.

K., who had invented an improved kin of buttonhole for boots and shoes, and machine for making it, obtained a loan fro L. to enable him to meet the expense taking out a patent for the invention; and th patent having been obtained by K. in h name alone, he and L. for more than fou years worked the invention in partnershi together. After the partnership had existe for some years, K. agreed with the trustee a projected company to assign the patent t it, and, the company having been formed, th assignment was duly made and registere At the time of the agreement and assignmer respectively the trustee and directors of th company respectively knew that L. and K had been working the invention togethe Notice of the assignment was given to L., an he was warned not to infringe the patent; bu he continued to work the invention, and th company then sought to restrain him fro so doing:—Held, that by the partnership L had obtained a licence to work the invention that at the time of the assignment of th patent the company had notice of the existenc of his right; and that they could not revok the licence. Ib.

10. Where a personal office or employment purchased with the partnership funds for th benefit of the partnership, the partner in whos name it is purchased is not necessarily trustee of the profits of the office for the oth partners, after the term of the partnership ha expired. Clarke v. Richards, 1 Y. & Coll. 35 4 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 49.

II. WHETHER JOINT OR SEPARATE ASSETS.

11. A house, of which part was used as a office for the purposes of the business (r rent being charged to the partnership for it but of which the rents and profits were alwa carried to the separate account of one partn (who was the father of the other), and it wa always treated between the two as his separa property:—Held, to belong to his separa estate. Exp. Murton, 1 M. D. & De G. 25 4 Jur. 894.

12. H. takes a lease in his own name, an puts his own furniture therein, for the use the firm of H. & J.; the rent and oth expenses are paid by the partnership, th apprentices are boarded and lodged there, an the house is occupied entirely for the purpos of the trade, J. living in the house, and L himself residing elsewhere:—Held, that th furniture must be considered as in the reput partnership of H. and J., and as forming pa of the joint capital and stock of the partne ship. Exp. Hare, 1 Dea. 16; 2 Mont. & A. 47 subject being in partnership, the owners of certain ships captured by British cruisers, and the commissioners under the treaty of commerce in 1794, between this country and America, for awarding compensations to American subjects who had suffered losses by capture, for which they could obtain no redress in the ordinary tribunals, having awarded in compensation of the ship of the partnership captured certain sums to the two Americans, with express exclusion of the French citizen, as an alien enemy:—Held, the sums so awarded are not partnership property, and the creditors of the partnership have no claim on them, as against the separate creditors of the Americans. Campbell v. Mullett, 2 Swan. 551.

13. Two American citizens and a Frenc

1. A. and B. partners; A. dies, there being then joint property in hands of A. and B.'s bankers; towards execution of a previous arrangement, B., for partnership purposes, draws on bank, and hands money to trustees, and on agreement that if object of trust failed, money should be returned; it fails, and B. becomes bankrupt, money remaining in trustees' hands:—Held, that the money is the joint property of A. and B., applicable to their joint debts, and not the property of B. alone, as surviving partner. Exp. Leaf, Re Simpson, Mont. & Ch. 662; 4 Dea. 287; 9 L. J., N. S., Bky., 9.

2. A. and B. agree to dissolve partnership, and publish a notice in the Gazette to that effect, and also stating, that the debts due to and by the old firm would be received and paid by A.; no assignment is executed of the partnership effects to A., who continues to carry on the business on his own account, but under the partnership firm:—Held, upon a joint fiat issued against A. and B., that the partnership property belonged to the joint estate, and not to the separate estate of A. Exp. Cooper, Re Johnston, 1 M. D. & De G. 358; 10 L. J., N. S., Bky., 11; 5 Jur. 10.

3. Partners of a flour-mill and corn-mill supplied with water by the same mill-pond, entered into an agreement for a partition, the water to be a joint right between the two establishments, which were to be determined by lot between the parties, the party to whom the flour-mill might fall to have the right, at all times, to enter the establishment of the other, for the purpose of more effectually scouring the water-course; and either party, finding it necessary to make any proper outlay for such purpose, might claim and recover half the amount from the other; and should the water at any time prove insufficient for the working of both mills together, it was agreed that each concern should have the entire right of water during each alternate twelve hours:—Held, that the parties were entitled to a joint and equal right to the entire water, although at the date of the agreement the supply to the mills was unequal. Hamilton v. Fawcett, 9 Ir. Ch. R. 397.

4. Ships purchased by one partner, held separate property as between creditors after his bankruptcy and death of the other, upon circumstances; particularly the registry being made in the name of one partner only, and being afterwards continued for a fraudulent purpose. Curtis v. Perry, 6 Ves. 739.

5. A ship was purchased by a partner for himself, but was paid for out of the partnership assets. The firm became bankrupt:—Held, that the firm had no interest in the ship, or any lien on it for the amount of the purchase money. Walton v. Butler, 29 Beav. 428.

6. M. and W. were in partnership as solicitors. A benefit society had been formed at Worksop, where the partners resided, to last for ten years. On the formation of the society W. entered the name of M. as a subscriber for eight shares in the company, he himself having also eight shares. M. never executed the deed of the company. The subscriptions in respect of M.'s shares were always paid by W. At the termination of the ten years the affairs of the company were wound up, and W. claimed to participate in the proceeds of the company in respect of the eight shares subscribed in the name of M. as well as his own. The company had never been enrolled or registered under the 7 & 8 Vict., c. 110. M. claimed the proceeds in respect of his eight shares so standing in his name; W. resisted this, on the ground of the illegality of the company:—Held, nevertheless, on a bill by M. for the proceeds of the eight shares, that, as they had been separated and ear-marked, and were standing in the name of M., he was entitled to the benefit of these eight shares. Mason v. Watkins, 10 L. T., N. S., 453.

7. Refusal under the circumstances to interfere by injunction on behalf of partnership creditor to restrain the payment of trust moneys lent to the partnership, the firm having become bankrupt. May v. Crosswell, 7 Jur. 841.

8. Two partners had carried on business and dissolved partnership. They gave notice of the dissolution in the Gazette, and, by circular to the debtors, required the debts to be paid to one of the firm; and by the deed of dissolution the plant, etc., was assigned to the same partner, and it was stipulated that he should pay the partnership debts, and pay to the other the value of his share of the plant, etc., to be ascertained by arbitration. The partner who was thus declared entitled to the debts became bankrupt, and he had not paid the price of the other's share of the plant, etc.:—Held, that the debts remained the property of the firm, notwithstanding the agreement that they should belong to one. Exp. Brewster's Assignees, 22 L. J., Bky., 62.

9. A partnership firm of W. & G. being in insolvent circumstances, a deed of dissolution was executed, whereby G. assigned to W. all his interest in the partnership assets, and W. covenanted to pay the partnership debts and indemnify G. from the liabilities of the partnership. Fourteen days afterwards W. & G. were adjudicated bankrupts:—Held, that the deed of dissolution was fraudulent and void as against the joint creditors, and that the whole of the partnership property as it existed at the date of the deed continued to be joint property. Exp. Mayou, Re Edwards-Wood and Greenwood, 11 Jur., N. S., 433; 34 L. J., Bky., 25; 13 W. R. 629; 12 L. T., N. S., 254; 4 De G. J. & S. 664; 6 N. R. 8.

10. An agreement for the dissolution of a partnership of two persons provided that the outgoing partner should assign his share in the partnership property to the continuing partner, and that out of the share a sum which had been withdrawn from the capital by the outgoing partner should be replaced, and that the assets should be realized for the benefit of both the partners according to their respective interests. An assignment was afterwards executed whereby the outgoing partner assigned his share of all the partnership property to the continuing partner, and in less than two months afterwards both became bankrupts:—Held, that the assignment was a complete and effectual conversion of the joint into separate assets as against the joint creditors. Exp. Walker, 4 De G. F. & J. 509.

1. On the formation of a partnership it was agreed that the business should be carried on at a mill belonging to one of the partners; and he was credited in the books of the partnership with the value of the mill. From time to time sums were expended in making additions to and improvements in the mill; and in the yearly balance-sheets the mill was entered at the original value, increased by the amount so expended, but less a certain amount for depreciation, and the partners were allowed interest on the sums from time to time standing to their capital accounts:—Held, that in the absence of any special agreement the mill was an asset of the partnership, and that on a sale of the business, under which the purchase money of the mill was largely in excess of its value in the books, the difference was profit divisible in the proportions in which the profits of the business were divisible at the time of the sale. Robinson v. Ashton, Ashton v. Robinson, 20 L. R., Eq., 25; 44 L. J., Ch., 542; 33 L. T., N. S., 88; 23 W. R. 674.

2. Three brothers, tenants in common of a farm and lands in Wales, carried on farming together. One brother died, having devised his one-third share to a nephew, and he and the two surviving brothers, B. and W., continued to carry on the farming. The nephew sold his one-third share of the farm and lands to his uncles, B. and W., the conveyance being to them as joint tenants, and they continued to carry on the farming. B. died, having given all his property to his wife. The farm and lands were subsequently sold. W. claimed, as surviving joint tenant, the proceeds of sale, representing the one-third share purchased from the nephew:—Held, that the one-third share became involved in partnership dealings, and must be regarded as partnership property, and that W. was entitled to only a moiety of the proceeds of sale. Davies v. Games, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 813; 28 W. R. 16.

3. By a decree made in a suit the partnership between the plaintiff and defendant was dissolved, and a sale of the partnership property ordered. In 1869 an order was made for the sale of the partnership property to the plaintiff for a certain sum, the plaintiff to be entitled to possession, and to pay interest on his purchase money from the date of the order. The plaintiff entered into possession under this order, but never paid the purchase money, nor took any assignment of the partnership property. The plaintiff afterwards became bankrupt, the property was again sold, and part of the purchase money had been paid into court:—Held, that, as under the order of 1869 the plaintiff was in possession as sole owner at the time of his bankruptcy, the fund in court belonged to his trustee in bankruptcy, and did not form part of the partnership assets. Graham v. McCulloch, 32 L. T., N. S., 748; 23 W. R. 786; 20 L. R., Eq., 397.

4. K., a partner in the firm of K. & Co., being entitled by the articles of partnership and desiring to withdraw 4,000*l.* from the capital of the firm, which was in a state of insolvency, bills of exchange to that amount, in three sets, were bought by and made payable to the order of the firm, and the first set of bills was indorsed by K. & Co. and delivered to K. K. died without receiving payment of the bills, and the first set was lost. The surviving partners executed a creditors' deed, and the second set of bills not having been indorsed was claimed by the trustees of the deed as partnership assets, and by K.'s executors as his separate estate. By arrangement the bills were indorsed to stakeholders, and the money was paid into court:—Held, that K. was not entitled to withdraw the 4,000*l.* when the firm was insolvent, and that as the money had not actually reached his hands it belonged to the joint creditors. Re Kemptner, 8 L. R., Eq., 286; 17 W. R. 818; 21 L. T., N. S., 223.

5. D. carried on business in partnership with W. and T., under a deed which provided that D. should be a partner in the profits, but not in the capital of the business, and should not be required to bring in any capital. The deed provided that if D. died during the continuance of the partnership his share in the profits should revert to the other partners, and his representatives should receive nothing more than a proportionate part of his share of the profits of the current half-year, up to the day of his death. D. died, leaving W. and T. him surviving. Afterwards W. died, and then the business was carried on for some months by T. alone, who ultimately filed a liquidation petition. At the date of the petition there were assets existing in specie which belonged to the firm before D.'s death:—Held, that the provisions of the deed did not take away the right of D.'s executors to be indemnified out of the assets of the firm existing at D.'s death and that, therefore, the assets remaining in specie were primarily applicable to the payment of the joint debts of the three partners and that the joint creditors could not prove against the separate trade assets of W. or of T., till their separate creditors had been paid in full. Exp. Dear, Re White, 34 L. T., N. S. 631; 1 L. R., Ch. D., 514; 45 L. J., Bky., 22 24 W. R. 525.

III. LEASES.

1. Whether Joint or Separate Assets, 5450.
2. Renewal of, 5451.

1. Whether Joint or Separate Assets.

6. By agreement, dated the 29th March 1855, A., who had for some time prior to that period carried on business on his own account as a salt manufacturer at certain saltworks was entitled to have a lease thereof granted t him for twenty-one years from the 25th March 1855, at an annual rent of 1,800*l.* per annum. By deed of arrangement, dated the 29th May 1856, it was agreed that A. should admit B. into partnership, in consideration of C., B.'s brother, advancing such sums, not exceeding 7,000*l.*, as should be necessary for the purposes of the partnership; and, by way of security for the repayment of the advances to be made by C., A. by deed of even date with the deed of arrangement gave to C. an underlease of the saltworks. The deed of arrangement declared the trusts of the underlease, and provided that on repayment by A. and B. of the sums to be advanced by C., C. should assign the saltworks to A. and B., their executors, administrators, and assigns. The deed also contained a power of sale, and it was thereby declared that C. should stand possessed of the surplus moneys arising from the sale "in trust for A. and B., their executors, administrators, and assigns." The deed of arrangement also provided that the partnership between A. and B. should continue during the term of the underlease to C., if A. and B. should so long live. By an agreement, dated the 25th February 1858, and made between A., B., C., and D., after reciting that C. had agreed to purchase the fee-simple of the saltworks, and that D. had agreed to take a lease thereof from C., it was agreed, that in consideration of A. waiving his claim to a lease as above mentioned, and A. and B. giving up possession of the saltworks to D., D. should pay to A. 10,000*l.*, with interest, as therein mentioned, and that D. should also pay to A. an annuity of 750*l.* for twenty-one years from the 25th December 1857. A dispute having arisen at the sale of the lease, whether this lease did not continue the separate property of A., subject to the use of the firm while the partnership lasted: — Held, that it was a partnership asset, and for the following circumstances—viz., that the lease had been at a rack rent; the firm was to have the benefit of it, and the firm was to last during the currency of the lease; there was a provision as to what was to be done with the lease in the contingency of a dissolution; on the mortgage being paid off, the equity of redemption was to be conveyed to the firm; and on a sale of the lease at the dissolution, the surplus was to be paid over to A., and he was to repurchase B.'s interest. Hills v. Parker, 7 Jur., N. S., 833; 4 L. T., N. S., 746. Reversing S. C. sub nom. Parker v. Hills, 5 Jur., N. S., 809; 33 L. T. 46.

1. A lease acquired for the purposes of a partnership, whether in the name of one or all of the partners, and dedicated to the partnership purposes, forms part of the partnership assets; but where an owner of a lease admits another to be his partner in the use of a part only of the demised property, and afterwards dissolves the partnership, the partner has no longer any interest in the lease. But the expelled partner is entitled to an allowance in respect of any benefit that had accrued to the lessee in respect of the expenditure of partnership capital. Burdon v. Barkus, 3 Giff. 412; 8 Jur., N. S. 130; 5 L. T., N. S., 573. Affirmed 8 Jur., N. S., 656; 31 L. J., Ch., 521; 7 L. T., N. S., 116.

Where there is no agreement between partners for the stock and plant of the concern to be taken by either party at a valuation on the determination of the partnership, one partner cannot either be compelled to take, or compel his co-partner to take, the stock and plant at a valuation, but each partner is entitled to have the value of the stock and plant ascertained by sale. Ib.

The partner who had expended certain moneys upon the partnership concern, on the faith of the partnership being co-extensive with the lease:—Held, entitled to an inquiry whether he ought to be recouped such money out of the partnership assets. Ib.

2. A partnership deed of a mine provided, that in the event of the bankruptcy of any partner, an account was to be taken of his share and interest in the mine (other than his share in the lease of the mine, which was not to be valued), and the amount of such account paid to the parties entitled. A partner became bankrupt:—Held, that the clause was void as against his assignees, who were entitled to his share in the lease. Whitmore v. Mason, 2 Johns. & H. 204; 8 Jur., N. S., 278; 31 L. J., Ch., 433; 10 W. R. 168; 5 L. T., N. S., 631.

3. Articles made between three partners directed that the real and leasehold estate of the partnership should be treated as partnership stock, and that, before any division of profits, the rates, repairs, etc., should be paid, and 5*l.* per cent. interest set apart on the capital, and be paid to the partners in the proportions in which they had advanced it. They afterwards purchased other estates, the purchase money of which was, by the conveyances, expressed to be paid by the three partners in equal proportions. The partners subsequently executed a deed, reciting the fact, that the purchase money had been wholly paid by two of the partners, and declaring that, until the third partner should pay into the partnership capital a sum equal to that paid by each of the other partners, he should stand possessed of the undivided third part of the estates in trust for them (the other two partners). Upon the dissolution of the partnership, the third partner not having paid any portion of his capital, the Court held, that the real and leasehold estate was nevertheless part of the partnership capital, and that the effect of the declaratory deed was to charge the legal interest of the third partner by way of mortgage with the proportionate share of the capital which he ought to have advanced:—Held, also, that in the interim, after a dissolution, and whilst the affairs of the partnership were being wound up, the third partner had ceased to be entitled to the benefit of a provision in the articles, allowing him a salary and the occupation of a house belonging to the partnership as managing partner, and that a receiver must be appointed. Tibbits v. Phillips, 10 Hare 355.

2. Renewal of.

4. A deceased partner, having contracted in his own name for a lease of premises to be employed in the partnership trade, the Court refused to restrain the landlord from granting a lease to his representatives, but restrained the representatives from disposing of the lease when granted, except for partnership purposes, and with the assent of the surviving partner. Alder v. Fouracre, 3 Swan. 489.

1. A number of persons were partners in working a mine held under a lease for years, which expired on the 29th September 1846. The concern was managed exclusively by some of the partners, and the partnership was at will. In July 1846 the managing partners gave notice of dissolution to the others, and in August agreed with the landlord for a new lease to themselves. In September 1846 they gave the other partners notice of their intention to sell the stock-in-trade, and to apply to the landlord for a new lease to themselves exclusively. On the 11th December 1846, a new lease, in pursuance of the agreement entered into in August, was granted to the managing partners, who thenceforth carried on the concern at their own risk, and made large profits, without having any occasion to bring in fresh capital. The partners who were excluded never in any way assented to these proceedings, but, on the contrary, continually insisted on their right to a share in the benefits of the new lease; they, however, took no legal proceedings to enforce their right till 1855, when a bill was filed:—Held, that the plaintiffs, having, with the full knowledge of their rights, which were founded solely on constructive and not on express trust, allowed the managing partners to carry on a mining concern at their own risk so long without taking any steps to assert those rights by legal proceedings, could not be permitted effectually to assert them now. Clegg v. Edmondson, 3 Jur., N. S., 299; 26 L. J., Ch., 273; 8 De G. M. & G. 787.

Held, also, that the continual assertion by the plaintiffs of their rights, without taking any steps to enforce them, had no effect in removing the bar arising from lapse of time. Ib.

Held, also, that the fact that the mine had been uniformly profitable did not alter the case, for that this could not be known beforehand; and the plaintiffs, having abstained so long from making themselves liable to the risks, could not now claim to share the profits. Ib.

The circumstance that the partnership was dissoluble at will would not alone have disentitled the plaintiffs to relief, for that the principle on which the Court holds each partner entitled to the benefit of a renewal effected by one is the confidential relation which exists between partners, and which exists whatever be the duration of the partnership. Semble. Ib.

It is difficult, though perhaps not impossible, for a managing partner to contract, during the continuance of the partnership, for a new lease of the partnership property, and to secure for himself the exclusive benefit of such renewed lease. To give validity to such a transaction, the partners must all be placed upon an equal footing; and a mere notice by the managing partner to the others of his intention to apply for a new lease for his own benefit is not enough. Semble. Ib.

2. A. and B. were partners in lead mines held under a lease, which expired in 1845; after that time they continued to work the mines as tenants from year to year, until the death of A. in 1847, when B. worked them so far only as was necessary to keep the mines in operation, until 1850. In that year he received notice to quit, but before the expiration of such notice he obtained an agreement for a new lease, on the understanding that he would employ a larger amount of capital in working the mines. He continued to work the mines under the new lease until 1853, when he died intestate. On a bill filed by the assignee of C., who was entitled under the will of A. to an annuity charged on the testator's interest in the mines, against D., the legal personal representative of both A. and B., claiming that the estate of the testator had an interest in the mines after his death:—Held (reversing 24 Beav. 333), that the testator's interest did not cease on his death, but continued in the partnership for the benefit of his estate. Clements v. Hall, 2 De G. & J. 173; 4 Jur., N. S., 494; 27 L. J., Ch., 349; 6 W. R. 358.

If partnership property consists in part of leaseholds, the representative of a deceased partner may treat the surviving partner as trustee, and if the latter renews the lease, he is considered to do so for the benefit of the estate of the partner; but where the trade is one of a speculative character, requiring outlay, with an uncertain return, then, if the surviving partner continues the trade in his own name and renews the lease, the Court will not consider that the representative of the deceased partner has any interest unless he contributes a due proportion of capital Ib.

3. In 1853, articles of partnership were entered into between the plaintiff and J. H. whereby, after reciting the partnership previously existing, and that the effects consisted of a leasehold dwelling-house, workshop, and land at N., and that the plaintiff and J. H were jointly entitled to another dwelling-house at M. A., it was agreed that J. H. should stand possessed of the property at N., as to the dwelling-house and one-half of the land, for his own absolute use and benefit, and as to the workshop and other part of the land, in trust to assign the same to the plaintiff; that the property at M. A. should be assigned to the plaintiff, and that when and so soon as the plaintiff and J. H. should erect a dwelling-house at M. A of equal value with the dwelling-house at N the same should be assigned to the plaintiff who should thereupon re-assign the workshop to J. H. It was also agreed that an equal division should be made of the partnership effects, and that neither of the partners should apply any part of the co-partnership money or effects for his own private use until such division as aforesaid. A renewed lease of the property at N. was afterwards obtained from the lessor by J. H. to himself alone The partnership continued for some time, but no assignment was made, nor was any dwelling-house built, as contemplated by the agreement of 1853. J. H. afterwards assigned to G. M. the dwelling-house and half of the land at N., of which the plaintiff was then in possession, and G. M. commenced proceedings by ejectment in the county court against the plaintiff, in order to obtain possession of the premises. On a bill filed by the plaintiff against J. H. and G. M., praying for a partnership account, and for an injunction against G. M.:—Held, that, from the circumstances which had arisen, J. H. was not entitled hold the dwelling-house and half of the land at N. in severalty, but that the plaintiff had sufficient interest in the property to maintain his right to an injunction against G. M., as J. H.'s assignee, from bringing ejectment; and an injunction was granted accordingly. Hawkins v. Hawkins, 4 Jur., N. S., 1044.

1. In a partnership at will there is no implied authority at law giving to one partner, without the consent of his co-partner, power, on the expiration of the lease of the premises where the partnership business is being carried on, to take a renewed lease of the same premises, or a lease of any other premises for the purpose of carrying on the partnership business or any portion of it. Clements v. Norris, 47 L. J., Ch., 546; 8 L. R., Ch. D., 129; 38 L. T., N. S., 591.

The same rule, in the absence of stipulations to the contrary, applies to partnerships created by deed. Ib.

Semble, that the rule would equally apply where partnership premises are burnt down or otherwise destroyed, or are taken by a railway or any other corporation under the powers of their special Act. Ib.

C. and N. entered into partnership for twenty-one years as ironmongers, under articles which provided that the business should be carried on at the Great Russell Street premises, or "in such other place or places as the partners may agree upon." Afterwards the partners agreed to add to their business that of ironfounders, and took for that purpose the Great Queen Street works. The lease of these works expired during the partnership, and C. declined to concur in a renewed lease. N. thereupon took a renewed lease of them in his own name, and insisted on his right to continue to carry on the ironfounding business there on account of the partnership:—Held, that as the partnership business could only be carried on in such place as the partners agreed upon, if they did not agree upon a place it could not be carried on at all, and that one partner, in the absence of express powers for that purpose, could not, without the consent of the other, although the partnership was to continue for a definite term, renew on account of the partnership a lease of the property on which the business had been carried on. Ib.

Held, therefore, that C. was entitled to an injunction to restrain N. from employing the assets or pledging the credit of the partnership in carrying on business at the Great Queen Street works. Ib.

IV. CONVERSION.

1. In General, 5453.
2. Realty purchased out of Capital, 5454.

1. In General.

2. Real estates used for purposes of a partnership trade, shall go to the heir, not the executor; though a co-partnership agreement may alter the nature of real estate, yet it must be expressed so to do. Thornton v. Dixon, 3 Bro. C. C. 199

3. Five persons purchased from the Commissioners of Sewers, and the purchase was to them as joint tenants in fee, but they contributed ratably to the purchase, which was with intent to drain a level, after which several of them died:—Held, to be tenants in common in equity, and though one of these five undertakers deserted the partnership for thirty years, yet he was let in afterwards, but on terms. Lake v. Craddock, 3 P. W. 158.

4. Two persons occupy and stock a farm jointly. There shall be no survivorship. But if two take a lease jointly of a farm, the lease shall survive. Jeffreys v. Small, 1 Vern. 217.

Not necessary, in articles of co-partnership, to provide against survivorship. Ib.

Where two are jointly interested by way of gifts, survivorship takes place; otherwise in a joint undertaking in the way of trade. Ib.

5. Upon construction of deed for the purpose of a partnership, real estate held to be converted out and out into personal. Ripley v. Waterworth, 7 Ves. 425.

6. Partnership property of different natures, partly real, partly personal; the difficulty of disentangling and arranging it is no objection against the heir. Stuart v. Bute (Marquis), 11 Ves. 666.

7. Real property held for the purposes of a trading company is, in equity, to be deemed in the nature of personal estate, although the company is a corporation, and the shares are assignable, and one shareholder is not answerable for the acts of another in relation to the partnership concern. Bligh v. Brent, 2 Y. & Coll. 268; 6 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 58.

8. The share of a deceased partner in the freehold and copyhold estates of the partnership is not personal estate for the purpose of being included in the value or amount in respect of which probate duty is payable. Custance v. Bradshaw, 4 Hare 315; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 358; 9 Jur. 486.

9. A., being seised in fee of warehouses and land on which he carried on his trade, upon taking his son into partnership for twenty-four years, conveyed to him in fee certain shares in the houses and land; and, by the articles of partnership, it was stipulated that the shares in the land given to the son, as also those reserved by the father, should be taken as part of the joint-stock in the trade, and in the event of either party dying before the expiration of the twenty-four years without disposing of his shares, the same were to be sold, a right of pre-emption being reserved to the survivor. Both parties outlive the twenty-four years, and continue after that to carry on business, but without renewing the articles, when A. dies.—Held, that as between his real and personal representatives his shares in the land were not converted into personalty. Cookson v. Cookson, 8 Sim. 529; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 337; 1 Jur. 621.

10. Declaration that real estate, held for partnership purposes, is in the nature of personal estate. Morris v. Kearsley, 2 Y. & Coll. 139.

11. A stuff manufacturer, innkeeper, butcher, and farmer, devised his real estate, which he had employed in his several occupations, and his personal estate, to his wife for life, and then to his three sons as tenants in common. After his death the widow and sons carried on the several businesses in partnership down to the death of the widow, when the sons continued only the business of stuff manufacturers, and employed the moneys arising from the sale of one part, and the mortgage of another part of the real estate, in that business. On the death of one son intestate:—Held, that his one-third of the devised lands had been converted. Re Cooper, Cooper v. Cooper, 26 W. R. 785.

1. Three brothers, tenants in common of a farm and lands in Wales, carried on farming together. One brother died, having devised his one-third share to a nephew, and he and the two surviving brothers, B. and W., continued to carry on the farming. The nephew sold his one-third share of the farm and lands to his uncles, B. and W., the conveyance being to them as joint tenants, and they continued to carry on the farming. B. died, having given all his property to his wife. The farm and lands were subsequently sold. W. claimed, as surviving joint-tenant, the proceeds of sale, representing the one-third share purchased from the nephew:—Held, that the one-third share became involved in partnership dealings, and must be regarded as partnership property, and that W. was entitled to only a moiety of the proceeds of sale. Davies v. Games, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 813; 28 W. R. 16.

2. A testator devised and bequeathed his moiety in a partnership business (as well as other property) to trustees on trust for sale, and directed that all his trust property should form an aggregate fund, and should be held (after payment of certain legacies and annuities) upon trust for certain charitable purposes. The partnership property consisted partly of real estate:—Held, that the residuary trust in favour of charities was void, as contrary to the Mortmain Act, so far as it comprised moneys arising from the sale of the testator's moiety of the real estate belonging to the partnership. Ashworth v. Munn, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 363; 50 L. J., Ch., 107; 43 L. T. 553; 28 W. R. 965.

2. Realty purchased out of Capital.

3. If joint tenants of leasehold or freehold lay out money jointly upon it in the way of trade, there is no survivorship. Lyster v. Dolland, 1 Ves. J. 435.

4. Real estate purchased with a partnership fund:—Held, to have descended to the heir, against the claim of the residuary legatee. Bell v. Phyn, 7 Ves. 453.

5. Whether freehold estates purchased by a commercial partnership as an article of stock devolve on the death of a partner as real, or as personal estate, quære. Crawshay v. Maule, 1 Swan. 521; 1 Wils. 181.

6. Real estate purchased with partnership capital for the purposes of the joint trade is personal estate, and in respect of the share of a deceased partner, retains that character as between his real and personal representatives. Phillips v. Phillips, 1 Myl. & K. 649; 1 L. J., N. S., Ch., 214.

7. Two brothers, A. and B., entered into co-partnership without articles, and purchased lands for the purposes of their trade with money borrowed from C., and had the land conveyed to themselves in moieties to uses to bar dower. Shortly afterwards they mortgaged the land to C. in fee, to secure the money borrowed. A. died intestate, leaving B. his heir; B. then took D. into partnership. Each of the firm erected trade buildings on the land, and paid for them, and for the insurance on them, and also paid the interest on the mortgage-money out of their partnership funds. Ultimately B. and D. paid off the mortgage out of their partnership property and took a reconveyance of the land to themselves as joint tenants in fee. Previous to this the property had been in a family arrangement, to which B. was a party, treated as personalty:—Held, as against the heir of B., that it was personalty, as part of the partnership assets. Houghton v. Houghton, 1 Sim. 491; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 310; 5 Jur 528.

8. Devise of the residue of realty and personalty to testator's two sons as joint tenants. They for twenty years after the father's death carried on the business of farmers with such estates, and kept the moneys arising therefrom in one common stock, and with part of such moneys purchased other estates in the name of one of them, but never in any manner entered into any agreement respecting such farming business, or ever accounted with each other:—Held, that as to the leasehold and personal estate, which passed by the will of the father, the two sons remained joint tenants; but that as to all the after-purchased estates, they were tenants in common. Morris v. Barrett, Y. & J. 384.

9. Where two partners purchased out of the partnership effects real estate, to be used for partnership purposes, and which was in equity deemed personal estate; upon a new partner being introduced, the former partners stipulated that a rent should be payable for the premises by the firm; upon the death of one of the original partners:—Held, that the premises were to be considered part of his real estate. Rowley v. Adams, 7 Beav. 548; 8 Jur. 994.

10. A. and B., tenants in common of an estate, agreed to carry on the farming business in co-partnership, and afterwards entered in co-partnership as maltsters and biscuit bakers from time to time they made purchases of lands with the partnership moneys. Some of the lands so purchased were not conveyed to them, but others were conveyed to them, as to one moiety to A., who was a bachelor, in fee, and as to the other moiety to B., who was married, and a trustee to bar dower. The lands were used solely for farming and agricultural purposes, but all the receipts and payments in respect of them were entered into the partnership books, and carried to the account of the partnership. The farming business was continued until A.'s death, when the malting and biscuit baking had ceased several years before:—Held, that the lands were not converted into personalty. Randall v. Randall, 7 Sim. 271; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 187.

11. When land is purchased by partners out of the partnership assets, and used for the purposes of the business, it is to be considered as personalty both as between the partners themselves and as between the heir and personal representatives of a deceased partner. Holroyd v. Holroyd, 28 L. J., Ch., 902; 7 W. R. 426.

hold the dwelling-house and half of the land at N. in severalty, but that the plaintiff had sufficient interest in the property to maintain his right to an injunction against G. M., as J. H.'s assignee, from bringing ejectment; and an injunction was granted accordingly. Hawkins v. Hawkins, 4 Jur., N. S., 1044.

1. In a partnership at will there is no implied authority at law giving to one partner, without the consent of his co-partner, power, on the expiration of the lease of the premises where the partnership business is being carried on, to take a renewed lease of the same premises, or a lease of any other premises for the purpose of carrying on the partnership business or any portion of it. Clements v. Norris, 47 L. J., Ch., 546; 8 L. R., Ch. D., 129; 38 L. T., N. S., 591.

The same rule, in the absence of stipulations to the contrary, applies to partnerships created by deed. Ib.

Semble, that the rule would equally apply where partnership premises are burnt down or otherwise destroyed, or are taken by a railway or any other corporation under the powers of their special Act. Ib.

C. and N. entered into partnership for twenty-one years as ironmongers, under articles which provided that the business should be carried on at the Great Russell Street premises, or "in such other place or places as the partners may agree upon." Afterwards the partners agreed to add to their business that of ironfounders, and took for that purpose the Great Queen Street works. The lease of these works expired during the partnership, and C. declined to concur in a renewed lease. N. thereupon took a renewed lease of them in his own name, and insisted on his right to continue to carry on the ironfounding business there on account of the partnership:—Held, that as the partnership business could only be carried on in such place as the partners agreed upon, if they did not agree upon a place it could not be carried on at all, and that one partner, in the absence of express powers for that purpose, could not, without the consent of the other, although the partnership was to continue for a definite term, renew on account of the partnership a lease of the property on which the business had been carried on. Ib.

Held, therefore, that C. was entitled to an injunction to restrain N. from employing the assets or pledging the credit of the partnership in carrying on business at the Great Queen Street works. Ib.

IV. CONVERSION.

1. In General, 5453.
2. Realty purchased out of Capital, 5454.

1. In General.

2. Real estates used for purposes of a partnership trade, shall go to the heir, not the executor; though a co-partnership agreement may alter the nature of real estate, yet it must be expressed so to do. Thornton v. Dixon, 3 Bro. C. C. 199

3. Five persons purchased from the Commissioners of Sewers, and the purchase was to them as joint tenants in fee, but they contributed ratably to the purchase, which was with intent to drain a level, after which several of them died:—Held, to be tenants in common in equity, and though one of these five undertakers deserted the partnership for thirty years, yet he was let in afterwards, but on terms. Lake v. Craddock, 3 P. W. 158.

4. Two persons occupy and stock a farm jointly. There shall be no survivorship. But if two take a lease jointly of a farm, the lease shall survive. Jeffreys v. Small, 1 Vern. 217.

Not necessary, in articles of co-partnership, to provide against survivorship. Ib.

Where two are jointly interested by way of gifts, survivorship takes place; otherwise in a joint undertaking in the way of trade. Ib.

5. Upon construction of deed for the purpose of a partnership, real estate held to be converted out and out into personal. Ripley v. Waterworth, 7 Ves. 425.

6. Partnership property of different natures, partly real, partly personal; the difficulty of disentangling and arranging it is no objection against the heir. Stuart v. Bute (Marquis), 11 Ves. 666.

7. Real property held for the purposes of a trading company is, in equity, to be deemed in the nature of personal estate, although the company is a corporation, and the shares are assignable, and one shareholder is not answerable for the acts of another in relation to the partnership concern. Bligh v. Brent, 2 Y. & Coll. 268; 6 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 58.

8. The share of a deceased partner in the freehold and copyhold estates of the partnership is not personal estate for the purpose of being included in the value or amount in respect of which probate duty is payable. Custance v. Bradshaw, 4 Hare 315; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 358; 9 Jur. 486.

9. A., being seised in fee of warehouses and land on which he carried on his trade, upon taking his son into partnership for twenty-four years, conveyed to him in fee certain shares in the houses and land; and, by the articles of partnership, it was stipulated that the shares in the land given to the son, as also those reserved by the father, should be taken as part of the joint-stock in the trade, and in the event of either party dying before the expiration of the twenty-four years without disposing of his shares, the same were to be sold, a right of pre-emption being reserved to the survivor. Both parties outlive the twenty-four years, and continue after that to carry on business, but without renewing the articles, when A. dies.—Held, that as between his real and personal representatives his shares in the land were not converted into personalty. Cookson v. Cookson, 8 Sim. 529; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 337; 1 Jur. 621.

10. Declaration that real estate, held for partnership purposes, is in the nature of personal estate. Morris v. Kearsley, 2 Y. & Coll. 139.

11. A stuff manufacturer, innkeeper, butcher, and farmer, devised his real estate, which he had employed in his several occupations, and his personal estate, to his wife for life, and then to his three sons as tenants in common. After his death the widow and sons carried on the several businesses in partnership down to the death of the widow, when the sons continued only the business of stuff manufacturers, and employed the moneys arising from the sale of one part, and the mortgage of another part of the real estate, in that business. On the death of one son intestate:—Held, that his one-third of the devised lands had been converted. Re Cooper, Cooper v. Cooper, 26 W. R. 785.

1. Three brothers, tenants in common of a farm and lands in Wales, carried on farming together. One brother died, having devised his one-third share to a nephew, and he and the two surviving brothers, B. and W., continued to carry on the farming. The nephew sold his one-third share of the farm and lands to his uncles, B. and W., the conveyance being to them as joint tenants, and they continued to carry on the farming. B. died, having given all his property to his wife. The farm and lands were subsequently sold. W. claimed, as surviving joint-tenant, the proceeds of sale, representing the one-third share purchased from the nephew:—Held, that the one-third share became involved in partnership dealings, and must be regarded as partnership property, and that W. was entitled to only a moiety of the proceeds of sale. Davies v. Games, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 813; 28 W. R. 16.

2. A testator devised and bequeathed his moiety in a partnership business (as well as other property) to trustees on trust for sale, and directed that all his trust property should form an aggregate fund, and should be held (after payment of certain legacies and annuities) upon trust for certain charitable purposes. The partnership property consisted partly of real estate:—Held, that the residuary trust in favour of charities was void, as contrary to the Mortmain Act, so far as it comprised moneys arising from the sale of the testator's moiety of the real estate belonging to the partnership. Ashworth v. Munn, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 363; 50 L. J., Ch., 107; 43 L. T. 553; 28 W. R. 965.

2. Realty purchased out of Capital.

3. If joint tenants of leasehold or freehold lay out money jointly upon it in the way of trade, there is no survivorship. Lyster v. Dolland, 1 Ves. J. 435.

4. Real estate purchased with a partnership fund:—Held, to have descended to the heir, against the claim of the residuary legatee. Bell v. Phyn, 7 Ves. 453.

5. Whether freehold estates purchased by a commercial partnership as an article of stock devolve on the death of a partner as real, or as personal estate, quære. Crawshay v. Maule, 1 Swan. 521; 1 Wils. 181.

6. Real estate purchased with partnership capital for the purposes of the joint trade is personal estate, and in respect of the share of a deceased partner, retains that character as between his real and personal representatives. Phillips v. Phillips, 1 Myl. & K. 649; 1 L. J., N. S., Ch., 214.

7. Two brothers, A. and B., entered into co-partnership without articles, and purchased lands for the purposes of their trade with money borrowed from C., and had the land conveyed to themselves in moieties to uses to bar dower. Shortly afterwards they mortgaged the land to C. in fee, to secure the money borrowed. A. died intestate, leaving B. his heir; B. then took D. into partnership. Each of the firm erected trade buildings on the land, and paid for them, and for the insurance on them, and also paid the interest on the mortgage-money out of their partnership funds. Ultimately B. and D. paid off the mortgage out of their partnership property, and took a reconveyance of the land to themselves as joint tenants in fee. Previous to this the property had been in a family arrangement, to which B. was a party, treated as personalty:—Held, as against the heir of B., that it was personalty, as part of the partnership assets. Houghton v. Houghton, 11 Sim. 491; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 310; 5 Jur 528.

8. Devise of the residue of realty and personalty to testator's two sons as joint tenants. They for twenty years after the father's death carried on the business of farmers with such estates, and kept the moneys arising therefrom in one common stock, and with part of such moneys purchased other estates in the name of one of them, but never in any manner entered into any agreement respecting such farming business, or ever accounted with each other:—Held, that as to the leasehold and personal estate, which passed by the will of the father, the two sons remained joint tenants; but that as to all the after-purchased estates, they were tenants in common. Morris v. Barrett, Y. & J. 384.

9. Where two partners purchased out of the partnership effects real estate, to be used for partnership purposes, and which was in equity deemed personal estate; upon a new partner being introduced, the former partners stipulated that a rent should be payable for the premises by the firm; upon the death of one of the original partners:—Held, that the premises were to be considered part of his real estate. Rowley v. Adams, 7 Beav. 548; 8 Jur. 994.

10. A. and B., tenants in common of a estate, agreed to carry on the farming business in co-partnership, and afterwards entered into co-partnership as maltsters and biscuit bakers from time to time they made purchases of lands with the partnership moneys. Some of the lands so purchased were not conveyed to them, but others were conveyed to them, as to one moiety to A., who was a bachelor, in fee and as to the other moiety to B., who was married, and a trustee to bar dower. The lands were used solely for farming and agricultural purposes, but all the receipts and payments in respect of them were entered into the partnership books, and carried to the account of the partnership. The farming business was continued until A.'s death, but the malting and biscuit baking had ceased several years before:—Held, that the lands were not converted into personalty. Randall v. Randall, 7 Sim. 271; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch. 187.

11. When land is purchased by partners out of the partnership assets, and used for the purposes of the business, it is to be considered as personalty both as between the partners themselves and as between the heir and personal representatives of a deceased partner. Holroyd v. Holroyd, 28 L. J., Ch., 902; 7 W. R. 426.

1. G. bought a share in a co-partnership business established by S., D., & L. in New South Wales. No regular deed of co-partnership was executed, but by an agreement between them it was stipulated that some interests (the nature and extent of which were not defined) in a piece of land, wharf, and premises, upon which the partnership business was carried on, should form part of the partnership property. This property was then held by S., D., and L., under a lease, and was also subject to a mortgage. During the negotiation of the partnership, S., D., and L. paid off the mortgage, and acquired by purchase the fee of the property, and upon failure of the partnership concern sold the same, receiving the consideration money, which they refused to account for to G., or to treat as partnership assets, on the ground that the property had been acquired by them on their separate account, and not purchased with the partnership assets:—Held, first, that S., D., and L. having purchased the fee in the property during the negotiation for the partnership, and the consideration money paid by G. for his share in such partnership being based upon the fact of the property being freehold, the purchase must be treated as being for the benefit of the partnership concern, and that G. was entitled to participate and share with S., D., and L. in the freehold interest so acquired, G. contributing in the sum paid by S., D., and L. for the purchase thereof, and to the extent of his share in the partnership. Gordon v. Scott, 12 Moo. P. C. 1.

Held, secondly, that S., D., and L. were chargeable with interest from the date of the receipt by them of the purchase money, at the rate of 8 per cent., being the rate of interest allowed in the colony in the absence of a special contract. Ib.

2. There is no rule, that where lands are bought by partners in trade, and are paid for out of the partnership assets, they of necessity become part of the joint estate; nor, on the other hand, that if they are not bought for the purpose of the partnership business, they are not joint estate; nor does the form of the conveyance settle the question, which must be determined with reference to all the circumstances of the case. Exp. M'Kenna, Re England (Bank of), 3 De G. F. & J. 645; 30 L. J., Bky., 25.

One of two partners, carrying on the business of leather factor, bought lands for the purpose of erecting a residence on part of it, and selling the remainder to a railway company. He offered a share to his partner, who was also desirous of building a house out of town for his residence. The offer was accepted, and the purchase money paid out of the partnership assets, but the conveyance was to the partners in separate moieties, each of which was conveyed to the usual uses to bar dower. The partners, at their individual expense, built houses upon portions of the land set apart for the purpose; but the other expenses relating to the land were paid out of the partnership assets:—Held, that the whole of the land constituted joint estate. Ib.

L. and M., partners in trade, purchased an estate T., and paid for it with money borrowed from the partnership. The purchase money and other moneys incidental to the purchase, were entered in the ledger of the firm to an account intitled "the T. estate account." The estate was conveyed to L. and M. in undivided moieties, to uses in bar of dower. L. and M. then, each of them, built a house for himself on the estate, and laid out his own private money upon it:—Held, that the T. estate, and the houses on it, were partnership property. S. C. nom. Re Streatfield, 7 Jur., N. S., 715; 30 L. J., Bky., 25; 9 W. R. 892; 4 L. T., N. S., 601.

3. Two persons seised of freeholds agreed to carry on business in partnership upon the premises for fourteen years, and that if either died during that term, the survivor should purchase the freeholds at the stated price. The fourteen years having expired, they, by parol agreement, continued the partnership "on the old terms." One afterwards died intestate:—Held, that the stipulation as to purchase was binding, and that the freeholds were converted into personal estate, and did not pass to the heir. Essex v. Essex, 20 Beav. 442.

Held, also, that the Statute of Frauds did not apply, for that a partnership, the terms of which had been settled by parol, was as good as one the terms of which had been settled by writing. Ib.

4. Two brothers entered into a joint speculation to purchase land, with a view to reselling it in small parcels at a profit. Two freehold estates were bought and conveyed to the brothers as tenants in common. A copyhold estate was surrendered to them as joint tenants, and two other estates remained still in contract when one brother died intestate. The purchase money for these estates was paid by means of a joint credit with a banking company. Some of the land had been re-sold by the brothers:—Held, that the share of the deceased brother in these estates was, as between his real and personal representatives, to be regarded as personalty. Darby v. Darby, 3 Drew. 495; 2 Jur., N. S., 271; 25 L. J., Ch., 371; 4 W. R. 413.

Semble, a partnership involves a contract, and partnership property of whatever denomination is assets on a dissolution. Ib.

5. Co-owners of lands, partly customary freehold and partly leasehold, worked a quarry on part of them, and let the rest to agricultural tenants. Part of the undivided profits was from time to time laid out in purchases of other lands for purposes of the quarry, the lands so purchased being, in most cases, conveyed to trustees on trust for the persons expressly by name who were interested in the undivided profits constituting the purchase-moneys, their heirs and assigns, and being in other cases conveyed to trustees without any express declaration of trust. One of the co-owners (a woman) married, and on her marriage a settlement of her shares and interest in the lands and quarry, plant and machinery, was executed, by which her shares and interest in the customary freeholds were treated as real estate, and her shares and interest in the entire property, both real and personal, were settled on herself for life for her separate use without power of anticipation, with remainder to her husband for life, with remainder, in default of issue, in trust for her her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns. Further purchases of customary freehold land were, after her marriage, made from time to time out of the undivided profits of the quarry, the land so purchased being conveyed to trustees, but without any trusts being declared except in one instance, that of a purchase made in 1849, in which case trusts were expressed on the instrument of conveyance, and were for the benefit of the co-owners, by name, in undivided shares, their heirs and assigns. In the books of account kept by the manager of the business these purchases were treated as if they had been purchases of stock in trade. These accounts were from time to time submitted to the parties interested, and in particular to the husband of the married woman. She having died without issue:—Held, that her share in the purchases of land so made after her marriage devolved as real estate, and not as personalty, and having been made with savings of income, were not comprised in the settlement, but passed at once on her death to her heir-at-law and customary heir. Steward v. Blakeway, 4 L. R., Ch., 603. Affirming 6 L. R., Eq., 479; 16 W. R. 1104.

1. A. and B. carried on business in partnership from 1850 to the death of B. in 1860. In 1855 they purchased house property in the Incumbered Estates Court, which purchase was made out of the partnership funds. The conveyance from the Court was made to A. and B. and their heirs for ever. B. died in 1860, leaving two children. A. continued to carry on the business in the name of the old firm until his bankruptcy, which took place in 1868. In 1867 A. mortgaged the premises purchased to D., a creditor, who from time to time had made advances of cash and goods to him. A. also deposited with D., by way of equitable mortgage, the title-deed of other premises, which had been held, up to 1867, in the name of the mother of A. and B., and in which the partnership business had been carried on up to the bankruptcy of A. The mother of A. and B. in 1867 made an assignment of the latter premises to A., who deposed that 4,000*l.* belonging to the partnership had been expended on the premises in permanent improvements during the life of B. D. filed a charge as mortgagee, in which he sought to make both sets of premises liable for A.'s debt to him. This charge was discharged by a next friend of the minor children of B., who claimed to be entitled in right of the deceased partner to a moiety of each of the premises:—Held, that the dischargeants were entitled to a moiety of the premises purchased in the Incumbered Estates Court out of the partnership funds. Re Ryan, 3 Ir. R., Eq., 222.

Held, also, that the dischargeants had failed to establish their claim to the second set of premises, which were assigned absolutely to A. after the death of B., as it was not clearly shown that the mortgagee had distinct notice that those premises were partnership property. Ib.

2. A nurseryman devised his real estate, on part of which he had carried on his business, and his residuary personal estate, to his three sons, F., M., and J., as tenants in common. After his death they carried on the business in partnership, and out of moneys belonging to the estate completed a contract for the purchase of more land which was inchoate at the death, and employed such land in the business. Subsequently, F. and J. purchased M.'s third share in the land and business, and paid for it partly out of the estate and partly out of moneys borrowed on the land. F. and J. then continued the business on the land. F. subsequently died intestate:—Held, that both the devised and the purchased lands employed in the business were converted. Waterer v. Waterer, 15 L. R., Eq., 402; 21 W. R. 508.

3. The share of a deceased partner in lands purchased by the members of a trading co-partnership, with money belonging to the partnership, and held as part of the stock of the firm, is to be deemed as converted into personal assets, and as such passes to his personal representative. The firm of co-partners, constituted by the deed of 29th October 1862, stated in Cuffe v. Murtagh (7 L. R., Ir., 411), and which was formed to carry on the business of corn factors, flour merchants, and otherwise as the majority of the firm should agree to trade or deal in, acquired two denominations of freehold land, A. and B., purchased out of partnership assets. One of the partners farmed B., and resided there, and the accounts of the farming were entered in the profit and loss of the firm. The lands of A. were occupied by tenants, but the rents were also brought into the profit and loss account, and money was raised on the security of the lands for the purposes of the firm, on the death of one of the partners, whose share was not taken by the survivors:—Held, that the share of the deceased in the lands was personal property, which passed to his personal representative, not to his heir. Waterer v. Waterer (15 L. R., Eq. 402), observed on and distinguished. Murtagh v. Costello, 7 L. R., Ir., 428.

In such a case the dissolution will not be made retrospective, but will be ordered from the date of the judgment. Besch v. Frolich (1 Ph. 172) followed. Ib.

4. Articles of partnership between two partners as brewers, maltsters, etc., covenantin with each other that they and their respectiv executors and administrators would continu partners for twenty-one years, determinabl upon the death of both partners, unless the respective representatives should agree to con tinue the business for the residue of the tern and empowering either partner to sell his shar in the partnership property (offering it first t the other partner), so that the purchaser shoul not be entitled to the possession of the partne ship property until the expiration of the par nership without the consent of the othe partner; empowering also each partner, eith in his lifetime or under his will, to introduc one or more relations, being sons, brothers, nephews, into the partnership, to take all or portion of his share during the continuance the partnership; and providing that, in ca of the death of either or both partners durir the term, after having introduced such relation, the person so introduced should be considered as the original partner; providing, also, that in case of the death of either partner during the term, without having introduced such relation, the business should be carried on by the surviving partner and the executors, administrators, or trustees of the deceased partners, but making no provision for the case (which happened) of the death of one partner during the term, and his executors or administrators refusing to be concerned in the business with the surviving partner, and calling for an immediate dissolution and a sale and distribution of the partnership property, the surviving partner not consenting to such dissolution or sale:—Held, in a suit by the executors of the deceased partner against the survivor for a dissolution, that the provisions in the articles for the continuance of the partnership during the term of twenty-one years could not be enforced in equity, by way of specific performance of the partnership contract, against the representatives of a deceased partner, either by way of relief in a suit in which such surviving partner was plaintiff, or by way of protection in a suit in which he was defendant; and inasmuch as the articles could not be so enforced, the plaintiffs, the executors of the deceased partner, repudiating the partnership, were entitled to a decree for a dissolution, but that such relief would be given to them in equity, subject to any legal right which the surviving partner had to recover damages against the executors of the deceased partner for a breach of the covenants contained in the articles, and that the amount of any damages which might be recovered in such an action must be added to the credit side of the account of the surviving partner, to be taken under the decree. Downs v. Collins, 6 Hare 418.

1. No general rule that partners purchasing leasehold interest must be understood as entering into a partnership commensurate with the duration of lease. In this case it was held not so to be. Crawshay v. Maule, 1 Swan. 495; 1 Wils. 181.

2. The plaintiff and defendant held some powder mills on a lease, which would expire in 1831. The plaintiff filed his bill for the dissolution of the partnership; it was objected by the defendant that the partnership must last during the lease, but the Court held the partnership dissolved from the time stated in a notice given by the plaintiff to the defendant. Alcock v. Taylor, Taml. 506.

3. A partnership in trade is continued for some purposes after a dissolution. Beak v. Beak, 3 Swan 627.

4. Articles of partnership for a term were entered into between an active and a sleeping partner under the name of the former, who continued to carry on the business after the expiration of the term in the same name, but without paying off the capital of the sleeping partner:—Held, that the partnership continued, and that the sleeping partner was entitled to a share of the profits after the end of the term. Parsons v. Hayward, 4 De G. F. & J. 474.

5. Partnership after the determination of it by the contract of the partners, may continue for the purpose of winding up engagements with third persons. Crawshay v. Collins, 15 Ves. 226.

Partnership determined by death, the legal property survives, not the beneficial interest. Right of the executor to the value of the testator's interest, to be ascertained not by calculation, but by sale. Ib.

6. Where one of several partners agrees with a stranger for a sub-partnership, it is not to be implied, in the absence of any agreement, that the duration of the sub-partnership is to be co-extensive with the original partnership. Frost v. Moulton, 21 Beav. 596.

A. and B. were partners for four years of the Kingston Mill, and A. and C. were sub-partners at will. A. put an end to his sub-partnership with C. They afterwards met, and A. drew up this document: "C. to receive three-sixteenths of the Kingston Mill during the present partnership of A. and B.; if C. enters into any other business before, to renounce his interest above-mentioned, and to receive 500*l.* as a quit claim." It was taken to a solicitor to draw a formal agreement, who said it was too vague to act upon, and both parties differed as to its construction:—Held, that it was not a final concluded agreement, which could be enforced. Ib.

7. B., as principal, gave to his partner, C., a bond, which was executed by L. as surety, indemnifying him from all loss from the partnership business, it being stipulated by the articles of partnership that the business should continue for five years; that in case either partner should retire, and the other be desirous of continuing the business, the continuing partner might take the retiring partner's share of the partnership assets at a valuation; and that if at the expiration of the partnership term either of the partners should be desirous of carrying on the business, and should neglect or refuse to purchase his partner's share in the assets at a valuation as above mentioned, then the assets should be realized, the partnership debts paid out of the proceeds, and the surplus proceeds divided between the partners according to their interests. At the expiration of the partnership term neither of the partners retired from the business, but, without consulting L., continued to carry it on for about twenty months longer, at the end of which time C. retired, leaving the whole partnership assets in the hands of B., by whom the business was continued till B.'s bankruptcy, about three months afterwards. B. then absconded, leaving the concern insolvent, and C. was compelled to liquidate the liabilities of the partnership:—Held, that inasmuch as by the articles of partnership the partnership ought to have been wound up at the expiration of the term limited by the articles, it was not competent to C. to agree to its continuance without the consent of L., and yet to hold L. liable as surety upon the bond; and that C., therefore, was not entitled to put the bond in force against L. Small v. Currie, 18 Jur. 731; 23 L. J., Ch., 746.

8. A. was lessee of seams of coal for a term of years, and had abandoned the working of the upper seams as unprofitable. In 1845 he entered into partnership for working the upper seams with B., his colliery manager. In 1857, the upper seams having been worked as far as could be done from the existing pits, he, with the privity and approbation of A., sank a new pit at considerable expense, which was defrayed out of the partnership moneys. In 1858, differences having arisen, A. gave B. notice to dissolve the partnership, which notice he refused to receive, insisting that the understanding had been that the partnership should continue for the whole duration of the lease. The new pit was only just finished. No express agreement as to the duration of the partnership was proved:—Held, that the burden of establishing that there was more than a partnership at will lay upon B., and that in the absence of such proof A. was entitled to dissolve the partnership at his pleasure, and B. could not claim any interest in the seams of coal. Burdon v. Barkus, 4 De G. F. & J. 42.

Held, also, that an inquiry had rightly been directed whether any and what sum ought to be allowed to B. in respect of the expenditure on the new pit. Ib.

1. Where a partnership, originally carried on under articles for a fixed term of years, is continued after the expiration of the term without new articles being entered into, it becomes a partnership at will. Clark v. Leach, 32 Beav. 14; 9 Jur., N. S., 165; 11 W. R. 227. Affirmed 9 Jur., N. S., 610; 32 L. J., Ch., 290; 11 W. R. 351; 8 L. T., N. S., 40; 1 De G. J. & S. 409; 1 N. R. 155.

2. A., in June 1869, borrowed 250*l.* from B., and, at the time, signed a paper in the following words: "In consideration of 250*l.* this day paid to me, I hereby undertake to execute a deed of co-partnership to you for one-eighth share in the profits of the Oxford Music Hall and Tavern, to be drawn up under the Limited Partnership Act of the 28 & 29 Vict., c. 86, called an 'Act to amend the Law of Partnership'":—Held, that this paper (which contained no provision as to the date or duration of the partnership) constituted a partnership at will; and that it was not put an end to by a letter, dated in August 1872, in which A. promised to repay B. on the 1st of September 1872 the principal, together with interest thereon (treating it only as a loan) such as should, as on a calculation of one-eighth of the profits, be found to be due to B. on that day. This letter was followed by a tender, which was not accepted. Syers v. Syers, 1 L. R., App. Cas., 174; 24 W. R. 970; 35 L. T., N. S., 101.

I. SURVIVING PARTNER, RIGHTS OF.

3. There is no such principle in equity that surviving partners cannot become purchasers from the representatives of the share of a deceased partner. Chambers v. Howell, 11 Beav. 6; 12 Jur. 905.

4. Injunction to restrain a surviving partner from disposing of the joint stock and receiving the outstanding debts. Hartz v. Schrader, 8 Ves. 317.

5. Injunction against a surviving partner proceeding by ejectment to obtain possession of a farm, of which a joint lease had been made to himself and his deceased partner. Elliot v. Brown, 3 Swan. 489

6. Injunction to restrain surviving partners from using the name of a deceased partner in the firm of the trade refused. Webster v. Webb, 3 Swan. 490.

7. A surviving partner being the executor of his deceased partner, is not entitled to an allowance for carrying on the business after his partner's decease, for the benefit of the estate; nor is an executor and legatee of such surviving partner. Stocken v. Dawson, 6 Beav. 371. Affirming 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 282.

8. Acts done by one of the surviving partners, who was executor of the deceased partner, and which the surviving partners were in that character bound to do, cannot primâ facie be considered to have been done in the character of the executor. Way v. Bassett, 5 Hare 55; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 1; 10 Jur. 89.

9. One who was a member of a partnership firm appointed one of his surviving co-partners and another person his executors:—Held, that the surviving partner was not deprived of his right to retain assets in his hands in satisfaction of the liability of the testator to the firm, by the fact that the amount of the liability had not been ascertained, no accounts of the partnership having been taken. Re Morris, Morris v. Morris, 10 L. R., Ch., 68; 44 L. J., Ch., 178.

10. A surviving partner, whether to be considered as a trustee for a moiety of the profits for the representative of the deceased partner. Marjoram v. Saundeford, Romilly's Notes of Cases 110.

11. Surviving partner, trading on his own account with the debtors to the partnership, ordered that an attorney be appointed to sue for the debts, unless the surviving partner would give security to answer a moiety of the debts to the administratrix of the deceased partner. Estwick v. Conningsby, 1 Vern. 118.

12. Two partners, on the termination of their partnership, came to an arrangement for mutual convenience that a third person should collect the outstanding assets; it was acted upon for some time, and then one of the partners died:—Held, that the surviving partner could not repudiate the agreement and alone collect the debts, but that the executors of the deceased partner had a right to have a receiver appointed. Davis v. Amer, 3 Drew. 65.

13. The right of a surviving partner to the partnership assets is absolute. There is no fiduciary relation between him and the representatives of his deceased partner, but he is liable to account for the partnership assets, and, in taking such account, the Statute of Limitations is applicable. Taylor v. Taylor, 28 L. T., N. S., 188.

14. E. and H. carried on business as co-partners. The partnership articles provided inter alia, that on the death of either partner, his personal representative might, within three months, elect to take to the deceased partner's share; if he should elect not to do so, the business, etc., to be valued, and the surviving partner to take the whole, giving security for the value of the deceased partner's share. E. died, and left a widow his executrix. E.'s widow not having elected to decline to carry on the business, H. was restrained by injunction from carrying on the business during the three months from E.'s death, except under the old name and style. Evans v. Hughes, 18 Jur. 691.

1. Where an executor and surviving partner of a testator demanded an allowance from the legatees, for his professional services as an accountant, and said that he would not prove the will until the allowance was made to him, such a bargain will find no favour with the Court, and the amount of the allowance will be ordered to depend strictly upon the services rendered. McDonald v. Richardson, Richardson v. Marten, 10 L. T., N. S., 166; 1 Giff. 81; 5 Jur., N. S., 9.

2. Where partner dies, leaving partnership accounts unsettled, Ecclesiastical Court will grant administration of his effects to surviving partner, or any person claiming, if his next of kin decline it. Cawthorn v. Chalie, 2 Sim. & S. 127; 3 L. J., Ch., 125.

II. LIABILITY OF DECEASED PARTNER TO CREDITORS.

3. A. partnership composed of three persons, A., B., and C., gave a joint and several bond to a bank, to cover advances to be made to them by the bank on a cash credit; and in that bond, two estates held by A. were specially named as part securities for these advances. A. died:—Held, that by his death the partnership was dissolved, and the security, so far as his estates were concerned, was no further continued; no arrangement between the surviving partners, or between them and the bank, for the purpose of settling the general accounts, being capable of affecting that security. Scotland (Bank of) v. Christie, 8 Cl. & F. 214.

After the death of A. the bank continued as before its dealings with the partnership, then constituted by B. and C.; and at a certain period, payments made to the bank entirely balanced the debt due to it at the time of A.'s death:—Held, that the separate liability of A.'s estates was thereby discharged. Ib.

4. Where there was no evidence of an intention to abandon the claim against the estate of a deceased partner, and adopt the individual responsibility of the continuing partner, but a total absence of any consideration or object for so doing, and also conclusive evidence that the forbearance was not to press upon or injure the estate of the deceased, of whose will the creditor was himself executor and trustee, although he did not prove:—Held, that he did not lose the remedy in equity against the estate of the deceased. Winter v. Innes, 4 Myl. & C. 101.

The estate of one of two parties is not, after his death, discharged from a partnership debt by the circumstance that the creditor continues his transactions with the survivor, and forbears, for some years, at the survivor's request, to take any steps to enforce payment of his debt. S. C. 2 Jur. 981.

Secus, where the transactions show that the creditor has accepted the liability of the survivor in discharge of the liability of the partnership. Ib.

5. Where A. and B. were partners as navy agents, and A. becoming lunatic the partnership was dissolved, and the business was carried on upon the same terms by B. and C., and B. died, and the accounts of both partners were unsettled:—Held, that the account of A. and B. must be taken on the foundation of the rule in Clayton's case (1 Meriv. 572), although C., in order to establish an agreement to the contrary, set up certain affidavits made by B. in a suit brought against him by the committee of the lunatic, in which he alluded to an understanding between B. and C., which in some instances had been acted on, that the advances made to the customers of their firm should be repaid before any portion of the moneys paid in by those customers was applied in liquidation of their debts due to the original firm. Toulmin v. Copland, 3 Y. & Coll. 625. Affirmed sub nom. Copland v. Toulmin, West 164; 7 Cl. & F. 350.

Where a remaining or surviving partner, upon taking a new partner, agrees to bring a large amount of good debts into the firm, that is so advantageous a guarantee to the incoming partner as to afford a strong inference, even against evidence on the other side, that the remaining or surviving partner did not intend to waive the benefit of the rule in Clayton's case (1 Meriv. 572). Ib.

6. The claim of a creditor against the assets of a deceased partner, was held not to be barred, under the circumstances, by the Statute of Limitations. Braithwaite v. Britain, 1 Keen 206.

7. Joint creditor by simple contract may proceed against a clear residue of assets of deceased partner (the survivor being insolvent), and may set off against a debt to the deceased from the survivor and himself as his surety, a debt to the survivor from deceased which was agreed to be applied in liquidation of debt secured. Cheetham v. Crook, 1 M'Clel. & Y. 307.

8. Deposit of bills with a banking-house in D.'s lifetime, which were sold by the house, part in his lifetime, and part after his death; the estate of D. is not answerable in respect of the latter, though in this particular case, it appeared that the party who deposited them had no notice of the death of D. Devaynes v. Noble, Clayton's case, 1 Meriv. 616.

Deposit with the partnership of exchequer bills, which were sold in D.'s lifetime, and the produce applied to the use of the house. D.'s estate is responsible in respect of the breach of trust, and not discharged by subsequent acts, from which an inference might be drawn of the creditor's adopting the surviving partners as his debtors. Id. 575.

The amount of money received by the sale of the exchequer bills becomes a partnership debt, which accrued from the moment when they were sold without the consent of the creditor; and this, whether the individual partners were or were not privy to the sale; the sale of the exchequer bills amounts only to a breach of trust. Ib.

to deal with the surviving partners, by drawing out and paying in; but, having drawn sums out before they paid any in, the balance varying from time to time, but being upon the whole increased by such subsequent payments by the surviving partners, must be taken in reduction of the balance due at D.'s death, and his estate held discharged pro tanto. Id. 585.

Creditors at the death of D., who continued to deal with the surviving partners, both by drawing out and paying in money, whereby their debts were increased, but never at any time reduced:—Held, no discharge of the deceased partner's estate. Ib.

Transfer of stock to the partnership, as a security for advances, under an agreement not to sell without notice. D.'s estate liable to the full extent of stock, sold contrary to such agreement, and not only to the extent of the stock sold beyond the amount of the debt due to the partnership in respect of advances made by them. Id. 624.

Notice to the surviving partners given by a creditor of the partnership, as solicitor for the representatives of the deceased partner, that the estate of the deceased will not be liable for their future dealings, does not operate as discharging the estate from a debt previously incurred to that creditor, of which he was at the time ignorant. Payments subsequently made in respect of cash balances not to be taken as operating in extinction of such a debt. Id. 579.

No difference in principle between the case of a banking house and any other partnership, as to the equity of the creditors against the deceased partner's estate. Money paid into a banker's constitutes a debt, not a deposit. A creditor leaving money in the hands of the surviving partners in a bank, does not constitute a new contract, nor operate as a relinquishment of the old security. Id. 568.

Interest upon the exchequer bills allowed, at 5*l.* per cent. from the time of the sale, upon the ground that the claimant had a right to consider it as a debt from that time, and had elected so to consider it. Id. 580.

Creditors, in respect of stock standing in the names of the partners, which was sold in breach of trust, and the proceeds applied to the use of the partnership, entitled as against the estate of the deceased partner, either to consider it as a debt, or to have the stock specifically replaced at their option. It makes no difference that the stock stood in the name of, and was sold by, one of the partners only, the proceeds having been applied to the partnership use. Id. 611.

The creditor of a partnership in which one of the partners dies, and the surviving partners afterwards become bankrupt, has a right to resort to the assets of the deceased partner for payment, without regard to the state of the account as between such deceased partner and the surviving partners. S. C. 2 Russ. & M. 495.

1. Bankers upon a deposit of money with them gave notes bearing interest; the partnership was dissolved; one of the partners soon afterwards died, and his creditors were called by advertisement, and the partnership was formed by the survivors and others, who re-issued notes of the former partnership, and paid the interest of the deposit notes for near two years, and then failed; the assets of the deceased partner are not discharged. Daniel v. Cross, 3 Ves. 277.

2. Judgment in action against a surviving partner is no extinguishment of the partnership debt in equity. Jacomb v. Harwood, 2 Ves. 265.

3. A creditor of a partnership against whose debt the estate of a deceased partner is in a suit directly instituted against that estate entitled to the protection of the Statute of Limitations, cannot (on a bill against the surviving partners and the representatives of the estate of the deceased partner, alleging that the surviving partners are indebted to the deceased partner) recover his debt against the separate estate of such deceased partner, on the ground of the equity of the partners amongst themselves to enforce an adjustment of the partnership transactions: for the creditor can at the utmost only stand in the place of the surviving partners as against the estate of the deceased partner, and in such a case the surviving partners have no claim on the estate of the deceased. Way v. Bassett, 5 Hare 55; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 1; 10 Jur. 89.

4. Where the deceased was, at the time of his death, liable under the 7 Geo. 4, c. 46 (Banking Act), to the debts of the bank, but no suit was commenced against his executors until more than seven years after his death:—Held, that creditors of the bank were excluded from coming in under the decree for administration and taking account of his debts, and the matter not within the scope of this decree, and that the proper course for bringing their claims before the Court was by petition, and not by exception. The remedies given by the Act against the partners of such bank are not cumulative, but substitutional, for the prior liabilities of the partners. Barker v. Buttress, 7 Beav. 134; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 58; 8 Jur. 89.

5. In a suit by a joint creditor against the representatives of a deceased partner and the surviving partner, the plaintiff was held to be entitled to satisfaction out of the assets of the deceased partner, though it was not proved that the surviving partner was insolvent. The surviving partner is properly joined as a defendant in such a suit, being interested to contest the demand of the plaintiff and of all joint creditors, but the remedy against him is altogether at law. Wilkinson v. Henderson, 1 Myl. & K. 582; 2 L. J., N. S., Ch., 191.

6. Premises were demised to A. and B., who were co-partners, upon which they carried on their partnership business. A. died during the lease, and after his death his executors carried on the business in co-partnership with B. on the premises:—Held, nevertheless, that the covenants in the lease, which were joint only, were not to be considered as several as well as joint, so as to make A.'s estate liable for breaches of the covenants which occurred after his death. Clarke v. Bickers, 14 Sim. 639; 9 Jur. 678.

7. A contract to discharge a retiring partner from a debt due from the firm may be proved either by an express agreement or by facts and conduct from which it may be fairly inferred. Harris v. Farwell, 15 Beav. 31; 15 L. J., Ch., 185.

Taking a new security is not of itself sufficient to discharge the retiring partner, but there must also be an agreement, either express or to be fairly inferred, to discharge the old firm. Ib.

A banking firm, consisting of A., B., and C., were indebted to the plaintiff. A. died:—Held, that the estate of A. was not released from the plaintiff's demand by his receipt of interest from the surviving and a new partner. Ib.

A. was co-partner with B., C., and D. as banker, and was partner in another banking firm with B. and C. A. died, and E. was admitted a partner in the first bank alone. The two firms became bankrupt, and under an order of the Court the estates of the two firms were consolidated. The plaintiff (a creditor of the first bank in A.'s life) received a dividend out of the consolidated estate:—Held, that A.'s estate was not thereby released. Ib.

1. Prior to April 1872 a firm of bankers, consisting of two partners, A. and B., received money on deposit at interest, for which they gave deposit notes in the usual form to the depositors, who, when the amount on deposit was increased or diminished, gave up their old notes and received fresh ones for the new amount. In April 1872 C. and D. were admitted into the partnership, and notice of the change in the firm was given to the depositors. A fortnight afterwards A. died, and the business was carried on under the same firm by B., C., and D. In 1874 B. died, and the business was carried on by C. and D., still under the same firm, until 1875, when the bank stopped payment, and went into liquidation. The depositors all knew of A.'s death, and none of them made any claim against his estate. Some of them had not altered the amount of their deposit, but retained the notes they had received in his lifetime. They had, however, received interest from C. and D. Others had increased and others had diminished the amount of their deposit after A.'s death, receiving in each case fresh deposit notes; and they had all proved in the bankruptcy of C. and D. for the amount due on their notes as money advanced and lent to the bankrupts:—Held, that in each case there had been a complete novation, and that none of the depositors were entitled to prove against the estate of A. Bilborough v. Holmes, 5 L. R., Ch. D., 255; 46 L. J., Ch., 446; 35 L. T. 75; 25 W. R. 297.

2. As to the equity of a creditor of a partnership to obtain payment out of the separate estate of a deceased partner. Brown v. Gordon, 16 Beav. 302; 22 L. J., Ch., 65.

A creditor of a banking firm held to have accepted the surviving partners as his debtors, and to have lost, by sixteen years' delay and his conduct, the benefit of a trust contained in the will of the deceased partner for payment of his debts out of his real estate. Ib.

Where a man fills two characters, he may do an act which may affect him in one but not in the other character. Ib.

Payment of interest on a debt by surviving partners, one of whom was the executor of a deceased partner, held to have no reference to the executorial character. Ib.

R. B. deposited 110*l.* with Messrs. H. B. L., C. F., E. L. & C. S. F., bankers, upon a deposit note payable twenty days after sight. In June 1833 H. B. L. died, having, by his will, devised his real and personal estate to trustees, one of whom was his son, H. L., upon trust to raise money to pay his debts, etc., and, subject thereto, upon trust for H. L., whom he appointed sole executor. H. L. was admitted a partner in the bank. In 1835 E. L. died, and in 1843 C. F. died. C. S. F. and H. L. continued the business, but became bankrupts in 1847. R. B., from the death of H. B. L., received interest at the bank upon his deposit note until the bankruptcy, when he proved his debt against the bankrupts' estate; and on a bill filed to make the real and personal estate of H. B. L. liable to the payment of the 110*l.*:—Held, that the interest was not paid by the continuing partners, as agents of H. B. L., the testator; that no agency could be implied; that the interest was paid on account of the firm; that all claim against the real and personal estate was barred by the Statute of Limitations in six years; that R. B. had accepted the surviving partners as his debtors, and the devise made by H. B. L. for payment of debts was satisfied, and the bill was dismissed, with costs. Ib.

3. A., B., and C. jointly incurred a debt. After the death of A., the account was continued by B. and C., and a further debt incurred. Leave having been given to prove the whole debt against each of the estates of B. and C., and the earlier debt against the estate of A., dividends were received from all three estates to an amount exceeding in the aggregate the debt proved against A.'s estate. No special appropriation was made on the receipt of those dividends:—Held, that A.'s estate had no right to have the dividends from the estates of B. and C., wholly or ratably, appropriated to the earlier debt, and that the creditors were at liberty to avail themselves of the proof against A.'s estate, until either the whole debt was paid, or A.'s estate had contributed the full amount of the proof against it. Denison v. Arison, 2 Hem. & M. 647; 12 L. T., N. S., 340.

III. ADMINISTRATION.

1. Between Joint and Separate Estates and Creditors, 5461.
2. Between Deceased Partner and Firm, 5462.

1. Between Joint and Separate Estates and Creditors.

4. A joint creditor by simple contract may go against the assets of a deceased partner, but cannot before the account retain separate property of that partner in his possession. Stephenson v. Chiswell, 3 Ves. 566.

5. Where a partnership debt is by the form of the obligation joint and several, the creditor is entitled to be paid out of the assets of the deceased partner pari passu with the separate creditors; joint creditors are entitled only out of the surplus after the separate creditors have been satisfied. Lee v. Flood, 2 W. R. 26.

6. A testator carried on the business of an ironmaster on the D. estate, in partnership, until January 1851, after which time he became sole proprietor of the business and estate. During the co-partnership the partners were credited with their shares of profit and debited with their shares of loss in their private accounts with the firm; and a similar account was kept by the testator after becoming sole proprietor, as between himself and the business. This private account was debited with considerable losses at the time of the last balance before testator's death, and on carrying the account down to the death a further balance of loss appeared:—Held, as between the general personal estate and the D. estate and business, which were separately bequeathed, that the personal estate must pay both these balances to the D. estate. Guest v. Schreiber, 4 W. R. 766.

1. A. and B. were secret partners in underwriting, and their course of business was to sign policies in each of their names for separate sums. Semble, that such policies were not void as to the assured under 35 Geo. 3, c. 63, s. 11. A. died, and B. afterwards became bankrupt:—Held, that joint creditors of A. and B. were entitled to have an account of the joint estate in the hands of the executors of A. and the assignees of B. Brett v. Beckwith, 5 W. R. 112; 26 L. J., Ch., 130; 3 Jur., N. S., 31.

2. The distinction between joint and separate assets is not restricted to the cases of a distribution under a bankruptcy or insolvency; it applies equally to the case of the administration of assets of deceased partners. Ridgway v. Clare, 19 Beav. 111.

In the administration of the assets of a deceased partner, where both partners are solvent, there is no distinction made between joint and several creditors; they are all paid, and in taking the partnership accounts, the joint debts thus paid will be allowed in account by the surviving partner. Ib.

If the estate of the deceased partner be insolvent, and that of the surviving partner solvent, the joint creditors will naturally go against the surviving partner, who will then be a creditor against the separate estate of the insolvent partner for the amount paid by him to the joint creditors beyond his share. Ib.

If both the deceased and surviving partner are insolvent, then the joint creditors must resort, in the first instance, to the joint estate, and can only go against the separate estate of each partner after the claims of his separate creditors have been satisfied. Ib.

If both partners die before administration takes place, the rule is the same. Ib.

3. Where one of two partners has died, and after his death the surviving partner has become bankrupt, and the joint creditors have received a dividend under the bankruptcy out of the joint estate, but have not been paid in full, they will, in the administration in chancery of the estate of the deceased partner, be entitled to come against so much only of his estate as may remain after payment of his separate creditors. Lodge v. Pritchard, 32 L. J., Ch., 775; 1 De G. J. & S. 610; 9 L. T., N. S., 107; 2 N. R. 537. Affirming 1 N. R. 534.

4. Where in an administration of the separate assets of a deceased partner it appears that both his estate and the estate of his surviving partner are insolvent, the separate creditors of the deceased partner have a priority over the joint creditors. Whittingstall v. Grover, 10 W. R. 53.

The fact that the deceased partner has devised his estates, subject to the payment of all his debts in respect of the partnership concern, or otherwise, is not sufficient to place the two classes of creditors on an equal footing. Ib.

Interest upon those separate debts which of themselves carry interest constitutes a portion of the debts due, and must, with the principal, be paid in priority to the joint debts. Ib.

5. Four persons carried on a business in partnership under a deed which provided that the death of a partner should not dissolve the partnership, but that the business should be carried on by the survivors or survivor, and the share of the deceased partner ascertained at the next half-yearly stock-taking, and paid to his representatives by instalments. Two of the partners died, and afterwards the survivors became bankrupt. No steps had then been taken to ascertain the shares of the deceased partners:—Held, that the creditors of the four partners had no right to have the joint assets of the four which remained in specie applied first in payment of their debts. Re Simpson, 9 L. R., Ch., 572; 43 L. J., Bky., 147; 22 W. R. 697; 30 L. T., N. S., 448.

6. Business was carried on by W. and T., in partnership, under a partnership deed which provided that all the capital in the business should belong to W., and that in case of his death the share of T. in the profits should belong to W.'s representatives or nominees, and the business should thenceforth be carried on by his personal representatives or nominees, and that T. should continue in it for six months to assist such representatives or nominees. W. died, having appointed T. his executor. The business, which was greatly in debt at W.'s death, was continued by T. for fourteen months. T. then filed a petition for the liquidation of his affairs. The stock in trade at the time of the liquidation consisted partly of things which had belonged to W. and T. during their partnership and remained in specie, partly of things acquired by T. after W.'s death:—Held, that the partnership deed meant only that the capital, subject to the payment of the debts, should belong to W., and that the proceeds of such part of the stock in trade as had been in existence during the partnership, formed joint assets applicable to the payment of the joint debts of the partnership, and that so much of the stock in trade as had been acquired by T. since W.'s death, was separate assets of T. applicable to the payment of his separate debts. Exp. Morley, Re White, 43 L. J., Bky., 28; 29 L. T., N. S., 442. Affirmed 31 L. T., N. S., 491.

2. Between Deceased Partner and Firm.

7. Upon the decease of a partner in trade, the firm was indebted to him for money advanced; the business was continued by the surviving partner, who with the money of the firm made additions to the stock in trade:—Held, as the executors of the deceased partner had permitted the continuance of the business, that they had no lien upon the subsequently acquired stock in trade for the money advanced to the firm by their testator. Puyn v. Hornby, 4 Jur., N. S., 446; 27 L. J., Ch., 689; 25 Beav. 280.

1. Upon the death of T. H., in partnership with A. H., the concern was found greatly embarrassed, if not in an insolvent state. An arrangement was made by A. H. and T. R., a new partner, with the creditors and the next of kin of T. H., who died intestate (the husband of the next of kin having claims on T. H., and whose only remaining property was a lease and an agreement for another lease of other premises), whereby the creditors were to be paid a composition, and D., the husband of a sister of the deceased, a stated sum in satisfaction of his claim. Both the creditors and next of kin renounced administration, which was taken by A. H., and the arrangements, although afterwards varied, were acted upon. A. H. raised sums on mortgage of the leaseholds to meet the compositions, and upon a dissolution of the partnership, T. R. afterwards purchased the fee simple, and subsequently also mortgaged it to secure the debts to D. and others, and eventually disposed of the whole interest therein, both A. H. and T. R. during a period of thirty-seven years having dealt with the leaseholds as their own property. Upon the death of A. H., a bill having been filed by the plaintiff, as administrator de bonis non of T. H., and also as administrator of the deceased next of kin:—Held, that after such dealing, with the acquiescence of the next of kin and their representatives, an agreement to give up all interest was established, and releases would, if necessary, be presumed, and the appeal was dismissed with costs. Skeffington v. Budd, 9 Cl. & F. 219; 6 Jur. 809. Affirming S. C. sub nom. Skeffington v. Whitehurst, 3 Y. & Coll. 1; 7 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 65.

2. A. and B., who had been partners as solicitors, renewed the partnership for their joint lives, and in the agreement it was stipulated that upon the death of either, the survivor should, during his life and the life of the widow of the deceased partner, pay to the appointee of the deceased partner, either an annuity of 200*l.* or one-fourth of the profits of the business at the election of the surviving partner. A., by settlement on his marriage, appointed in favour of his intended wife, who became his widow. The partnership continued till the death of A. in 1851, and B. carried on the business till his bankruptcy in 1856. At the death of A. the firm was greatly in debt, and the debts B. paid off, but he did not pay the widow either the annuity on any share of the profits nor make any election. The widow claimed to prove under the bankruptcy, but her proof was rejected:—Held, on appeal, that the assignees had still the power of election, and they having elected to pay one-fourth of the profits, the debts of the old firm must be set off against the profits; and that, for the purposes of the proof, the business must, under the articles, be considered not a new but a continuing business, and its debts be discharged before any profits could be divided. Exp. Harper, 1 De G. & J. 180; 2 Jur., N. S., 724; 26 L. J., Bky., 74.

3. Two solicitors entered into articles of partnership, one clause of which provided that on the death of either partner his executors or administrators should be entitled to receive out of the net profits of the partnership business a certain annuity for a term of years, and that this annuity should be applied as the deceased partner should by deed or will direct, for the benefit of his widow and children, and in default of such direction should be paid to his widow if living. One of the partners died. By his will he appointed his widow sole executrix, and gave all his property to her absolutely. In an action instituted by creditors for the administration of the testator's estate, an application was made that the continuing partner should pay the annuity to the receiver appointed to get in the testator's estate:—Held, that the annuity came to the hands of the testator's legal personal representative, not as assets, but as property impressed with a trust which the Court would execute. The annuity was, therefore, ordered to be paid to the widow. Re Flavell, Murray v. Flavell, 32 W. R. 102; 25 L. R., Ch. D., 89; 53 L. J., Ch., 185; 49 L. T. 690.

4. Interest in partnership trade, under articles for widows of the partners for their respective lives, and after the decease of the widow to be equally divided among their respective children:—Held, not vested in children who died in life of mother, on account of nature of the subject, the primary object being to constitute a partnership, and ascertain the succession; and a provision for the family being only a secondary object through that medium. Balmain v. Shore, 9 Ves. 500.

5. Articles of partnership under seal containing the usual covenant by the partners to be true and just to each other in all their dealings, and by which each bound himself, his executors, etc., unto the other, his executors, etc., in the penal sum of 5,000*l.* for the due performance of the partnership articles; on the death of one partner, he was found indebted to the partnership in 11,064*l.*:—Held, that the debt was by specialty for 5,000*l.* only, there being no covenant or obligation in the deed for payment of the general balance on the settlement of the partnership accounts, but only for 5,000*l.*, the express contract for a definite sum excluding any implication for a larger sum as a specialty debt. Powdrell v. Jones, 2 Sm. & G. 305; 18 Jur. 1048; 23 L. J., Ch., 606.

Semble, an express contract as to the amount of debt under specialty, excludes any implication by which that amount may be enlarged. Unless a deed expressly binds a partner, who shall be a debtor to his co-partner, to payment, by containing an express obligation to pay, it does not constitute a debt. S. C. 2 W. R. 513; 2 Eq. Rep. 624.

6. An agreement between four partners recited that they had considerable sums employed in the business, which it might be impracticable or highly detrimental to repay from the business immediately after the retirement or death of either of them, and provided that in case of the retirement or death of either, the balance due to such retiring or deceased partner should be repaid out of the business by the continuing or surviving partners, by annual instalments of

2,000*l.* One partner died, and his share in the business was ascertained, in suits instituted for that purpose and for the administration of his estate, to be 64,000*l.*, and the instalments were directed to be paid by the surviving partners, and the survivors and survivor of them, until further order. After some years two of the surviving partners died, and then the third became insolvent:—Held, that the estates of the two were liable for the unpaid balance of the 64,000*l.* Beresford v. Browning, 45 L. J., Ch., 36; 1 L. R., Ch. D., 30; 24 W. R. 120; 33 L. T., N. S., 524. Affirming 20 L. R., Eq., 564; 33 L. T., N. S., 118.

1. Suits for. By whom.

1. If one of two partners give, by will, a sum out of share of business, the surviving partner may settle the account without the legatee. Langley v. Oxford (Earl), Ambl. 798.

2. Residuary legatees may sustain a bill for an account against the executor and the surviving partner of the testator, though collusion between the executor and the surviving partner is neither charged nor proved. Bowsher v. Watkins, 1 Russ. & M. 277.

3. A suit by parties beneficially interested in the estate of a deceased partner cannot be maintained against both his executors and surviving partners, in the absence of special circumstances; but collusion is not the only ground for such a suit; and it may be maintained where the relation between the executors and surviving partners is such as to present a substantial impediment to the prosecution by the executors of the rights of the parties interested in the estate as against such partners. Travis v. Milne, 9 Hare 141; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 665.

4. By articles of partnership the survivor of two partners was to take the whole stock, upon payment to the representatives of the other of what was due to him according to the last half-yearly rest. On the death of one, his widow, who was also a legatee, entered into an arrangement with the survivor for a distribution of the partnership effects, which agreement she afterwards filed a bill to set aside for fraud, also praying for an account of the partnership dealings and profits since the death of the testator:—Held, that she was entitled to production of the accounts of the business, as carried on after the testator's death, with reference to the relief prayed, and to which at the hearing she might be entitled. Hue v. Richards, 2 Beav. 305.

5. The administratrix of a deceased partner in a colliery executed an assignment of all his shares in collieries, and other personal estate, which were divided among and accepted by his daughters in equal shares, as their portions of the estate under the Statute of Distributions. The partnership affairs had not been wound up:—Held, that as the administratrix was still subject to the partnership liabilities, she was entitled to institute a suit against the surviving partners for the purpose of taking the partnership accounts; and that notwithstanding her children were not parties to the suit. Clegg v. Fishwick, 1 H. & Tw. 390; 1 Macn. & G. 294; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 49; 12 Jur. 993.

6. In the absence of fraud or collusion, or some other circumstance creating a privity between the parties, the only person who can file a bill against a surviving partner for an account of the partnership assets is the legal personal representative of his deceased partner. Taylor v. Taylor, 28 L. T., N. S., 188.

7. Where one of two executors was a partner with the testator, the residuary legatees may sustain a bill for an account of the partnership transactions against the executor, though collusion between them is neither charged nor proved. Cropper v. Knapman, 2 Y. & Coll. 338; 6 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 9.

8. A., B., and C. having been in partnership together, and A. and C. having died, a bill by the residuary legatees of A. against his executors, and against B. and the executors of C., for an account of the personal estate of A., was sustained under the special circumstances of the case, although collusion between the executors of A. and the other defendants was neither charged nor proved. The case of Newland v. Champion (1 Ves. 105) considered. Law v. Law, 2 Colly. 41; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 313; 9 Jur. 745. Affirmed 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 375; 11 Jur. 463. S. P. Newland v. Champion, 2 Colly. 46. n.

9. Any creditor of a deceased partner, whether joint or separate, may institute a suit to have the partnership as well as the separate estate administered in a court of equity, and the assignees of a surviving partner, who has become a bankrupt, are proper parties to the suit. Brett v. Beckwith, 3 Jur., N. S., 31; 26 L. J., Ch., 130.

2. How taken.

10. Stipulations in articles of partnership for an annual settlement of accounts, and for payment to the representatives of a deceased partner of an allowance in lieu of profits since the last annual account, proportioned to the amount of his share of profits during two years preceding, are waived in equity by omission through several years to settle annual accounts, and by engaging in business to which the stipulations cannot be applied without injustice; and an injunction was granted to restrain the representatives of a deceased partner from proceeding on a bond given by the surviving partners, for repayment of his share according to the articles, before the settlement of accounts of transactions pending at his decease, on which a loss was subsequently sustained. Jackson v. Sedgwick, 1 Swan. 460; 1 Wils. 297.

Partnership articles, containing special clauses for taking the accounts on which the parties have not acted, read in equity as if those clauses were expunged. Id. 469.

11. Partners agree that settlement of accounts should take place on the 25th March annually, and that if either should die he should not share profits accrued since the last preceding settlement day. By mutual consent settlement on 5th November is substituted for 25th March. The last settlement made was on the 5th November 1811. In February 1813 one partner dies:—Held, his representative entitled to share of profits up to November 1812, the time when last settlement ought to have been made. Pettyt v. Jameson, 6 Madd. 146.

1. Where the articles of partnership directed an account of the partnership effects and rest to be taken once a year, and, on the expiration of the partnership term, the property to be divided on the footing of the last annual rest, and, if any partner should die during the partnership term, his representatives should receive payment of his share of the capital and stock, as ascertained at the last annual rest, with interest thereon (in lieu of profits from that time), by instalments; and such representatives to have no right to look into the partnership books. The partnership continued for several years, but the partners did not make the annual account and rest as provided by the articles. One partner died:—Held, that the representatives of the deceased partner were not entitled to a sale of the partnership property, as upon a dissolution; that the rest, and not the day of the rest, was the essence of the partnership contract; and, therefore, that the representatives of the deceased partner were entitled to participate in the profits up to the time of his death; and, also, to have the account taken, by means of the partnership books, in the usual way. Simmons v. Leonard, 3 Hare 581.

2. Where A. and B. were partners as navy agents, and A. becoming lunatic, the partnership was dissolved, and the business was carried on upon the same terms by B. and C., and B. died, and the accounts of both partners were unsettled:—Held, that the account of A. and B. must be taken on the foundation of the rule in Clayton's case (1 Meriv. 572), although C., in order to establish an agreement to the contrary, set up certain affidavits made by B. in a suit brought against him by the committee of the lunatic, in which he alluded to an understanding between B. and C., which in some instances had been acted on, that the advances made to the customers of their firm should be repaid before any portion of the moneys paid in by those customers was applied in liquidation of their debts due to the original firm. Toulmin v. Copland, 3 Y. & Coll. 625. Affirmed sub nom. Copland v. Toulmin, West 164; 7 Cl. & F. 350.

3. Sale of a testator's share in a partnership trade, and the property belonging to it, by his executor to his partner, for the purpose of being resold to one of his executors, set aside, and his estate held entitled to his aliquot proportion of the subsequent profits as if the partnership had continued. Interest allowed at 5 per cent. on sums paid out to his estate. Cook v. Collingridge, 1 Jac. & Walk. 607; 1 L. J., Ch., 74.

4. Form of decree for an account of a deceased partner's interest in a mercantile firm, where, since his death, new partners have from time to time been admitted, and have retired, and have employed their services and capital therein. Wedderburn v. Wedderburn, 2 Keen 722; 4 Myl. & C. 41; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 177; 3 Jur. 596.

5. It is not to be assumed that the annual stock-taking by a partnership truly represents the interests of the several partners in the firm; but it may or may not do so, according to the purposes for which, and the mode in which, it is made up. Travis v. Milne, 9 Hare 153; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 665.

6. Under the usual decree for an account on a bill by creditors, the Master refused to proceed upon the claim of the surviving partners of the testator in respect of a debt alleged to be due to them on the balance of certain dealings between the partnership and the testator in his separate capacity; but on motion to be admitted to go in before the Master and prove this debt under the decree, it was referred to the Master to take the account. Poynter v. Houston, 3 Meriv. 297.

7. Where the accounts of a partnership between two had been carelessly kept, and, after the death of one, the other furnished to the executors of the deceased partner an account current of the partnership dealings, which afforded them the only evidence to charge the surviving partner:—Held, that they were entitled to use it for that purpose in a suit instituted by the surviving partner to have the accounts taken, without being bound by the entries on the credit side of the account current. Morehouse v. Newton, 3 De G. & Sm. 307; 13 Jur. 420.

8. A., having been in partnership with B., after B.'s death carried on the same business, and disposed of the stock and bought in new. Shortly after B.'s death a valuation was made, by which the property that had belonged to the partnership was estimated at a certain value. The business subsequently declined. On a bill filed by the representatives of B., A. was charged with the amount of the valuation and interest since B.'s death, though the bill only prayed a partnership account. Booth v. Parkes, Beat. 444.

9. A surviving partner, who had possession of the partnership books, wilfully and fraudulently refused to produce them, to have the accounts taken under a decree for that purpose. The Master, in the absence of other evidence, charged 10 per cent. per annum on the capital stock, as the net gains made during the partnership, and debited the surviving partner with a moiety thereof:—Held, he was justified in so doing; and the Court decreed accordingly. The Court must give credit to what the Master reports as occurring in his presence. Walmsley v. Walmsley, 3 J. & L. 556.

10. When articles of partnership are clear and distinct, then partners are bound by them; when they are ambiguous or silent, the course of dealing between the partners regulates the mode by which the Court must deal with them, and in some cases the Court has allowed the constant usage of partners to supersede the articles. Coventry v. Barclay, 33 Beav. 1.

By partnership articles of a brewery firm executed in 1831, it was provided that an annual account and valuation should be made and fully finished between the partners, and should, when finished and signed by all the partners, be binding on them; and that, on the death of any partner, the value of his share in the capital and profits, as appearing from the last annual account, should be paid to his representatives, with interest from that time in lieu of the profits, whereupon his estate was to be indemnified against the debts. One of the partners died two months after the taking of the annual account, without having signed or expressly approved of it. Upon a bill by his executors, alleging that the last valuation was an arbitrary one, and had not been adopted by the testator, and claiming that a new valuation ought to be made:—Held, that the account was in conformity with the previous practice, and was as binding on the testator as if he had signed it, and was binding on his estate. S. C. on appeal, 12 W. R. 500; 3 De G. J. & S. 320; 9 Jur., N. S., 1331; 9 L. T., N. S., 406; 3 N. R. 224. Varying 2 N. R. 375.

Held, also, that the estate of the testator was entitled to share in the surplus of a fund set apart in the account to meet certain contingencies or unascertained liabilities. Ib.

1. As to the proper mode, in the absence of any agreement expressed or implied, of taking the partnership accounts of bankers, as between a surviving partner and the estate of the deceased partner. Bate v. Robins, 32 Beav. 73, and Crosskell v. Bower, 32 Beav. 86.

2. By a partnership deed, interest at 5*l.* per cent. was payable on the partner's capital, and it was provided, that on death or retirement of a partner, the clear balance ascertained at the last stock-taking should be repaid, with interest at 5*l.* per cent., by instalments; but upon the death of a partner the last stock-taking was to be conclusive "as to the share and amount of interest of the deceased partner in the business, and should be the sum to be paid to his executors," with interest from the last stock-taking in lieu of profits from that time:—Held, that the estate of the deceased partner was entitled not only to 5*l.* per cent. for interest, but to 5*l.* per cent. for profits. Browning v Browning, 31 Beav. 316.

By partnership articles, "the clear balance, as ascertained from the last stock-taking" of a deceased partner, together with any additional capital (if any), was to be paid to his executors by instalments, and the last stock-taking was to be "conclusive as to the share or amount of interest of the deceased partner in the business," and was to be the sum to be paid to his executors:—Held, that as additional capital was to be taken into account, so, impliedly, capital drawn out in the interval between the last stock-taking and the death of a partner must be deducted. Ib.

3. By articles of partnership it was agreed that the settlement of accounts should be made half-yearly, at Lady-day and Michaelmas, and that on the death of a partner his share of the assets should be taken at the amount settled by the last half-yearly account preceding his death. By a subsequent parol agreement it was arranged that the accounts should be settled once a year only, viz., at Michaelmas:—Held, that this variation in the partnership articles did not affect the money interests of the partners; and that upon the death of a partner in the month of May the accounts must be settled up to the previous 25th of March. Lawes v. Lawes, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 91; 38 L. T., N. S., 370; 27 W. R. 186.

4. A. and B. carried on the business of carrying mails under a contract entered into by the Postmaster-General with B. and not assignable. A. died, B. continued to carry on the business under the contract, and refused to account for the value of the contract to the executors of the deceased partner:—Held, that as the contract was not assignable and its value could not be ascertained in the usual way by sale, it must be referred to chambers to ascertain the value, and the surviving partner must pay the value to the executors of the deceased, with a share of the profits since his death, a fair sum being allowed to the surviving partner for his services in carrying on the business. Ambler v. Bolton, 41 L. J., Ch., 783; 14 L. R., Eq., 427; 20 W. R. 934.

5. Five contractors jointly contracted to build a harbour, the building of which would take at least five years. Soon afterwards one of the contractors died:—Held, that his estate was entitled to share in the profits of the contract; and that those profits were to be the actual profits ascertained when the contract was completed, and not by valuation or by sale of the contract. M'Clean v. Kennard, 9 L. R., Ch., 336; 43 L. J., Ch., 323; 22 W. R. 382; 30 L. T., N. S., 186.

The deceased contractor named in his will three executors. Before the will was proved, the four other contractors signed an agreement, in which they, and also the executors of the will, were the parties, a blank being left for the names of the executors. The will was afterwards proved by two only of the executors, and those two executors then signed the agreement:—Held, that, though signed by two only of the executors, it was binding on the other contractors. Ib.

Held, also, that no regard could be paid to evidence that the other contractors expected the concurrence of the third executor, and would not have entered into the agreement if they had been aware that he would renounce. Ib.

6. Partnership articles provided for a balance-sheet being made out up to the 31st of December in each year, which, after a certain time, was to be binding on the partners, except that manifest errors, when discovered, should be corrected. It was also provided that a like account should be made out on the 31st of December next after the death of a partner, and that his executors should be entitled to receive by six instalments from the surviving partners the value of his interest as appearing from such balance-sheet. The uniform practice of the firm in making out their balance-sheets was to treat the loss occasioned by any asset turning out bad as attributable to the year in which it was discovered to be bad. In 1864 one of the partners died; and, after the balance-sheet had been made out, various assets which had been treated as good were ascertained to be irrecoverable, owing to the failure since the 31st of December 1864 of debtors to the firm, and depreciation of consignments, which, when the balance sheet was made out, had not been realized:—Held, that the executors of the deceased partner were entitled to receive the value of his share as appearing by the balance sheet without any deduction for the losses subsequently ascertained. Exp. Barber, 5 L. R., Ch., 687; 18 W. R. 940; 23 L. T., N. S., 230.

1. A partner died in 1857, at which time the partnership business was unsaleable. The surviving partner carried on the business, expended considerable sums on the premises, and improved the business, and in 1865 sold the goodwill for 1,700*l.*:—Held, in administering the estate of the deceased partner, that the surviving partner was chargeable only in respect of the value of the business at the date of the other partner's death. Broughton v. Broughton, 44 L. J., Ch., 526; 23 W. R. 770.

2. A deed of partnership provided that in the event of the death of any of the partners, and in the event of the surviving partners electing to continue the business, the amount at the credit of the deceased partner as at the last balance "shall be paid out to his representative by instalments of equal amount at six, twelve, etc., up to sixty months' date from the date of the surviving partners declaring their election, with interest thereon from the date of the balance." The chief partner, whose interest was about 394,340*l.* in the concern, died. The surviving partners having elected to continue the business, sought to pay his representative by ten equal instalments, with interest on the amount of each instalment from substantially the date of the death to the date of payment. In a claim by the deceased partner's representative that interest should be added to each instalment on the balance of the capital sum remaining unpaid at the date of the payment of each such instalment; thus reaping an advantage of about 2,365*l.* from the earlier payment of the larger sums of interest:—Held, that the interest to be paid with each instalment was interest calculated on the balance of principal unpaid at that date, and not interest upon the amount of each instalment. Ewing v. Ewing, or Orr Ewing v. Orr Ewing, 8 L. R., App. Cas., 822.

3. A surgeon sold one-fifth of his business, and entered into partnership with the purchaser for such term as they should mutually agree to continue. The articles provided that in the event of the death of a partner, the survivor might purchase his share and interest in the business; but if he should decline, it should be sold to any other person. The purchaser died at the end of fifteen months, and the surviving partner declined either to purchase or to admit a purchaser into the business. He was charged with the value of the deceased partner's share and interest. Featherstonhaugh v. Turner, 25 Beav. 382; 28 L. J., Ch., 812.

4. Where an allowance was made to one of two partners for his labour in making up the books of the partnership, and during the last eighteen months of his life he was incapacitated by illness from performing that duty, in an account between his executors and the surviving partner, the allowance during the last eighteen months was disallowed to the deceased partner's estate. McDonald v. Richardson, Richardson v. Marten, 10 L. T., N. S., 166; 1 Giff. 81; 5 Jur., N. S., 9.

3. Profits on Capital retained.

5. On the death of one partner, the survivor retaining his capital, and employing it in the trade, decreed to account for the profits derived from it, making him proper allowances for the management of the business. Brown v. De Tastet, 1 Jac. 284.

6. Where a surviving partner has carried on the partnership business without withdrawing from the concern the capital or share of a deceased partner, there is no absolute rule that, in taking the subsequent accounts of the partnership dealings, as between the surviving, and the estate of the deceased, partner, the division of the profits shall be determined by the aliquot shares of the several partners in the business, in their joint lifetime, or by the amount of the agreed capital which they were respectively to supply, or by the actual amount of the capital belonging to the surviving, and the estate of the deceased, partner respectively; but the principle of division may be affected by considerations of the source of the profit, the nature of the business, and the other circumstances of the case. Willet v. Blanford, 1 Hare 253; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 182; 6 Jur. 274.

7. A surviving partner, whether to be considered as a trustee for a moiety of the profits for the representative of the deceased partner. Marjoram v. Saundeford, Romilly's Notes of Cases 110.

8. A testator was in trade in partnership with other persons for a term of years, under articles, by which the share of any partner dying was to be left in the concern till the expiration of the term, and then to be paid off by instalments, with interest and share of profits in the meantime. By his will he bequeathed all the residue of his real and personal estate to trustees, to get in with all convenient speed, and invest the moneys, and pay the interest or dividends to the widow for life, remainder to his children. A subsequent proviso in the will empowered the trustees to postpone any sale, at their discretion, and directed the rents and produce of any unsold part to go as the interest of the sales-moneys would have gone if such part had been sold. The books were made up half-yearly. The trustees did not get in the share in the partnership:—Held, first, that the widow was entitled to 5*l.* per cent. interest on the amount at which the stock in trade had stood in the books of the concern on the periodical stock taking next preceding his decease, from the day of his death up to the day of the periodical stock-taking next succeeding his death. Johnstone v. Moore, 4 Jur., N. S., 356.

Held, secondly, that the widow was entitled to all the profits accruing on the testator's share from such next succeeding stock-taking up to the determination of the partnership, over and above interest. Ib.

9. Classification of the three cases in which the estate of a deceased partner is entitled to participate in the subsequent profits of a trade in which his capital has been employed. Wedderburn v. Wedderburn, 22 Beav. 84; 2 Jur., N. S., 674; 25 L. J., Ch., 710.

The estate of a deceased partner is entitled to participate in the goodwill of a business which does not belong to the surviving partners except by express agreement. Ib.

By articles of partnerships, on the death of a partner the survivors were entitled to the goodwill. A., a partner, died in 1801, having appointed his co-partners executors. They continued the trade, having made out an account, from which it appeared that the assets (consisting nearly wholly of outstanding debts) were 496,000*l.*, the liabilities 410,000*l.*, and the surplus 85,9000*l.*, of which A.'s share was 55,000*l.* The survivors carried this to the credit of the deceased partner's account, and they paid the amount with interest to the cestuis que trustent as they came of age. In 1831 the children claimed to participate in the profits of the subsequent trading, which in the thirty years had amounted to 308,000*l.*, on the ground that their capital had been employed therein. At the hearing, inquiries were directed with a view to charge them; but, on the Master's report, the Court having come to the conclusion that at the testator's death the surplus was merely nominal, that the business, to wind up, was insolvent, and that the subsequent profits were attributable to goodwill and the personal exertions and capital of the surviving partners:—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to participate in the profits, so far as those profits were attributable to the goodwill and connection in trade of the old firm, and that their share in that portion of which they would be entitled to participate could not be estimated higher than the interest already paid. Ib.

Difficulties of enforcing a cestui que trust's right (however clear) to participate in profits of trade carried on in part with trust fund. S. C. 4 Myl. & C. 41; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 177; 3 Jur. 596. Affirming 2 Keen 722.

1. A bill was filed by parties beneficially interested under the will of a partner, who had by his will made his co-partner his executor, who had, after his partner's death, improperly employed his assets in trade. Subsequently to the testator's death his executor took two persons into partnership with him. Those two partners were not made parties to the suit, but they appeared as witnesses to prove the amount of profits made by the executor in continuing the business after the death of the testator. A bill was also filed by the executor against the parties beneficially interested under the will, for the usual and other accounts:—Held, that the executor was accountable for the profits made out of the assets improperly employed, and directed him to account and pay over those profits, although the persons subsequently taken into partnership were not parties to the suit, and not before the Court in any other character than above mentioned. M'Donald v. Richardson, Richardson v. Marten, 1 Giff. 81; 5 Jur., N. S., 9; 10 L. T., N. S., 166.

2. Executors and trustees, surviving partners of a testator, directed by his will to invest an infant's legacy in Government or real securities, took a security for it in the form of a mortgage on the freehold and leasehold property and fixtures belonging to the partnership in which they were the testator's surviving partners:—Held, that they were bound to account for the profits made by so employing the legacy and interest in their trade. Townend v. Townend, 1 Giff. 201; 5 Jur., N. S., 506.

The will directed the interest to be accumulated from the testator's death, but by the partnership articles the principal not being payable, but only interest at 5 per cent. for five years after the testator's death:—Held, that the amount of interest on the legacy should be computed, with annual rests, up to the date of the security, which was dated and taken on the day when the amount of the testator's share was payable. Ib.

Held, that the entry by the executors in the partnership books of the amount of the legacy to the credit of the legatees was a sufficient admission of assets. Ib.

3. Surviving partners, and executors who are not partners, but have continued their testator's assets in the business, are liable to account for profits made in respect of the value of a deceased partner's share only where there is no absolute contract for vesting in the survivors the share of the deceased partner, or only an option to take to his share on certain conditions, and the surviving partners neglect to perform such conditions or to liquidate the affairs of the partnership. Vyse v. Foster, 44 L. J., Ch., 37; L. R., H. L., 318; 31 L. T., N. S., 177; 23 W. R. 355. Varying 42 L. J., Ch., 245; 26 L. T., N. S., 725; 20 W. R. 697.

A. was partner in a firm under articles, which provided that the surviving partners should purchase the share of a deceased partner at a valuation. There was nothing to show that time was of the essence of the contract. A. died, having by will given his real and personal estate to three executors in trust for his children on their attaining the age of twenty-five, and with trusts in the meantime for investing in real or Government securities. One of his executors was partner at the date of the testator's will, and at his death another of his executors became a partner; the third never was a partner. The value of the testator's share in the firm was ascertained in the mode prescribed, but the executors allowed it to remain in the firm until the children arrived at the prescribed age, and the children were credited in the books of the firm with the ascertained value of their father's share, with compound interest at 5 per cent. The arrangement was most beneficial to the firm, and it was very advantageous to the children:—Held, that the contract for sale and purchase of the deceased partner's share was not affected by the delay in actual payment; that the relation of debtor and creditor, purchaser and vendor, subsisted as well between the partners who were executors and their co-executors as between the other partners and the executors, and that the executors, who were or afterwards became partners, were not liable to account for the profits made by them individually or by their firm generally through the use of their testator's capital, nor were the executors who had assented to such employment under any such liability. Ib.

The articles provided that the price of a deceased partner's share should be secured by promissory notes, and also that the surviving partners should enter into a covenant to indemnify the estate of the deceased partner from all partnership liabilities, and the representatives of the deceased partners were to release their interest in the firm and its effects. The promissory notes were not given, nor were deeds of indemnity or release executed:—Held, that the purchase was not by the articles made conditional upon the execution of the release or indemnity or upon the giving of the promissory notes, and that the non-payment of the sums ad diem did not put an end to the contract. Ib.

Held, also, that the surviving partners ought to be parties to a bill seeking such relief. Ib.

The executors invested 1,600*l.* in a substantial, but not expressly authorized, improvement of their testator's property:—Held, that this sum should not be wholly disallowed them, but they might, at the option of the cestuis que trustent, take to the improved property at its original value, repaying to the estate what they had spent on the improvement. Ib.

1. A. and B. having carried on business in partnership with unequal capitals for a term of years, under articles which provided for an equal division of profits after payment of interest upon their respective capitals, continued, after the expiration of the articles, to carry on business until A.'s death upon the footing of the articles. At A.'s death his capital was more than three times as large as that of B., and B., who claimed under the expired articles the right to purchase the business, continued, without the consent of A.'s representatives, to carry it on and to use A.'s capital therein. In 1873, A.'s representatives commenced this suit against B., and at the hearing in 1875, it was decided that B.'s option to purchase ceased when the articles expired. The business was then sold under the order of the Court, after having been thus carried on for about three years:—Held, on further consideration, that after making a proper allowance to B. for managing the business, the profits earned since A.'s death must be divided between A.'s representatives and B., according to the proportion in which the partners were entitled to the capital employed in the business. Yates v. Finn, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 839; 49 L. J., Ch., 188; 28 W. R. 387.

4. Profits, whether Capital or Income.

2. By a partnership agreement accounts were to be taken and profits divided annually. If a partner died during the partnership term, his share of profits and interest on his capital were to continue to be paid to his representatives until the expiration of the term. One of the partners died, having by his will directed that his widow should, during her widowhood, have the income of his property, howsoever constituted or invested. The term expired during her widowhood. She was held entitled to the whole of the profits accrued after the annual account immediately preceding her husband's death, but to interest on his capital only as from the date of his death, so much of such interest as accrued in his lifetime being corpus. Ibbotson v. Elam, 14 W. R. 241; 1 L. R., Eq., 188.

3. Partnership articles provided that meetings of the partners should be held, and the profits should be divided annually. The partners, when reduced to two—the testator being one of them—met and resolved that the accounts should be made up half-yearly, in March and September. The meetings of the partners were held very irregularly, but when they took place it was the practice of the partners to examine the accounts, and to pass a resolution disposing of the profits, and until the passing of such resolution the profits were not carried to the separate credits. The testator, who died in August 1869, by will declared that from the day of his decease the annual income arising from his residuary personal estate should belong, in effect, to A. for life, and that for that purpose the clear profits arising from his partnership should be considered as annual income, and be paid to A. for life. In December 1869, at a meeting of the surviving partner and an executor of the testator, they resolved that the profits for the year ending March 1869 should be divided; and the testator's share was carried to the credit of his account under date 30th of September 1869, and it was in December 1869 paid to his executors. At a meeting of the same two persons in March 1870 they ordered the profits for the half-year ending September 1869 to be divided, and the testator's share was paid to his executors. In taking the account a question arose whether these shares should be distinguished as capital or as income:—Held, that the profits for the year ending March 1869 were capital, and belonged to the testator's estate; and that the profits for the half-year ending September 1869 were income, and belonged to A. Browne v. Collins, 12 L. R., Eq., 586.

4. A colliery partnership was carried on by five persons, holding seven shares transmissible on death or by sale (subject to restrictions), the affairs of the partnership being, by the partnership articles, subject to the control of the majority in value of the partners in meeting assembled. The articles contained a provision that upon the yearly settlement of accounts the clear profits, or a portion, if the majority at the meeting should so direct, should be added to the joint stock, or the same should be divided between the partners in proportion to their shares, and paid to them or passed to their separate accounts in the books of the partnership. After the death of one of the partners his share was retained under the provisions of his will and large sums advanced for the working of the colliery, which was then unremunerative. At length profits were made. They were not divided, but were carried forward from year to year in the balance to the credit of the profit and loss account, and in some years losses were debited to the same account. The profits were, as a matter of fact, employed in working and extending the colliery, but no resolution was passed to add the amount to capital. Fourteen years after the first profits were made, dividends were declared, and two years later the tenant for life under the deceased partner's will died, there being then a large sum to the credit of the profit and loss account:—Held, that the accumulated profits had been added to the joint stock, and that the tenant for life's representatives had no claim in respect of them. Straker v. Wilson, 19 W. R. 761; 24 L. T., N. S., 763; 40 L. J., Ch., 630; 6 L. R., Ch., 503. Varying 39 L. J., Ch., 463; 18 W. R. 643.

5. Profits in a partnership business partly earned in the testator's lifetime, but not ascertained until after his death, are not apportionable, but are income of the testator's estate. Lambert v. Lambert, 22 W. R. 359; 29 L. T., N. S., 878.

1. Conduct and Breach of Articles.

1. The transactions of partners with each other cannot be considered merely with respect to the express contract between them. The duties and obligations arising from the relation between the parties are regulated by the express contract between them so far as it extends and continues in force; but if it, or so much of it as continues in force, does not reach to all those duties and obligations, they are implied and enforced by law. And it is often matter to be collected and inferred from the conduct of the parties whether they have held themselves, and ought or not to be, bound by the particular provisions in the express agreement. Where it is insisted that the conduct of one partner entitles the other to a dissolution, the Court must consider, not merely the specific terms of the express contract, but also the duties and obligations which are implied in every partnership contract. Smith v. Jeyes, 4 Beav. 503.

2. Under a bill by some partners in a joint concern on behalf of themselves and the others, three hundred in number, for a dissolution, receiver, etc., and an account, alleging mismanagement by the managers, the Court refused to interfere by injunction, and the appointment of a receiver in the first instance, until they had tried the means of redress provided by the articles. Carlen v. Drury, 1 Ves. & B. 154.

3. Bill by a partner, under a parol agreement, charging misconduct in the other partner, and praying a dissolution, account, and injunction from executing securities in the name of the firm; demurrer to prayer for a dissolution, because there was no writing between them, overruled. Master v. Kirton, 3 Ves. 74.

4. The Court will dissolve a partnership where it appears that the business cannot be carried on according to the true intent and meaning of the articles of co-partnership, although one partner objects to the dissolution. Baring v. Dix, 1 Cox 213.

5. The Court will not decree a dissolution of partnership, unless it be shown that the defendant has substantially failed in the performance of his part of the partnership agreement. It is not the office of the Court to enter into consideration of mere partnership squabbles. Wray v. Hutchinson, 2 Myl. & K. 235; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 62.

6. Partnership in the Opera House dissolved by the conduct of the parties making it impossible to carry it on upon the terms stipulated. Waters v. Taylor, 2 Ves. & B. 299.

7. A. and B. and the son of B. entered into partnership as solicitors, and by articles agreed: (2) that the partners were diligently and faithfully to employ themselves in carrying on and managing all the professional business in which they or either of them might be employed or concerned; (5) that B. should use his best endeavours to obtain the appointment of the partnership firm to three offices or clerkships which were then held by B., and such offices should be partnership appointments; (6) that all other compatible offices should be obtained, if possible, in the name of the firm, and the emoluments treated as part of the profit of the partnership; (15) that if B. or his son should retire, or A. or B. or his son should die, the share of the deceased partner should accrue to the surviving partners; and if B. or his son retired they were to use their best endeavours to secure the practice to the continuing partners, and such retiring partner should not practise within thirteen miles; (16) that if either partner should not diligently and faithfully employ himself in carrying on the said partnership's practice, and should, on receiving moneys, bills, notes, etc., knowingly and wilfully omit immediately to make entries thereof; or if A. or the son of B. should absent himself more than two months in one year, the others or other of the partners, if they or he should think fit, should be at liberty to dissolve the partnership, by giving to the offending partner a notice to that effect; and the partnership should from that time, or the time specified in the notice, be dissolved, in the same manner and with the same consequence as if it had been determined by the voluntary retirement of the offending partner. B. and his son subsequently procured their own appointment or the appointment of one of them to the offices or clerkships, and did not endeavour to procure the appointment of A. It was afterwards discovered that B. was greatly involved in debt, and he absconded in January 1849, and did not return to the business. In May 1849 A. served a notice, in the manner pointed out by the articles, on B. and his son to have the dissolution declared by the Court an injunction to restrain them from practising within thirty miles, and a decree that they should resign the several offices or clerkships —Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to dissolve the partnership as to B., but not as against the other partner (the son of B.), and that he was not entitled to dissolve it by notice under the sixteenth clause, without the concurrence of his co-partner (the son); the B. not having procured or endeavoured to procure for the partnership firm the appointments to the several offices or clerkships, so to give the plaintiff at the dissolution either a share of the profits of the offices or the chance of competing for them, but such appointments having been procured for B. and his son to the exclusion of the plaintiff, B. and his son were not to be allowed to retain the offices for their exclusive benefit; that inasmuch as from the nature of the offices they could not be sold, nor could any manager or receiver be appointed to carry them on, the defendants ought to be charged with the value of the offices in the partnership accounts; that the plaintiff having given a notice of dissolution (acting under the sixteenth clause), and his co-partner having adopted it, the partnership should be treated as dissolved from the time of the notice, although not with the consequences attaching to a dissolution under the fifteenth clause; that the consequences of a dissolution, under the fifteenth clause, not having attached, the plaintiff, therefore, was not entitled to the injunction to restrain the defendants from practising within thirty miles. Smith v. Mules, 9 Hare 556; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 803; 16 Jur. 261.

An agreement, that, if any of several partners should not diligently and faithfully employ himself in carrying on the partnership practice, the others might give notice of dissolution—construed to refer to the diligent and faithful discharge by each partner of the portion of business carried on by him. S. C. 9 Hare 569: 16 Jur. 261.

A designed or wilful omission to make proper entries in the partnership books must be shown, in order to establish a case of breach of the partnership articles on the ground of an omission to make such entries. Ib.

1. A court of equity will dissolve a partnership before the expiration of the term, where the circumstances have so changed and the conduct of the parties is such as to render it impossible to carry it on without injury to all the partners. Harrison v. Tennant, 21 Beav. 482.

The Court dissolved a partnership entered into for a term of years, when, without any breach of the partnership articles, circumstances had so altered, that it could not be carried on upon the footing originally contemplated, and the confidence mutually reposed having ceased, and given place to mistrust, so that it was apparent that the partnership could not go on without mutual injury. Ib.

Where A. and B., who had been partners for some time, entered into a new partnership with C., at the same time B. took all the assets of the old firm, and covenanted to indemnify A. from the liabilities:—Held, that the partnership between the three might be determined by the Court for due cause without setting aside the deed of indemnity, which might be the subject of another suit. Ib.

2. Partnership dissolved, on the ground that the ill feeling between the partners rendered it impracticable that business could be successfully or beneficially conducted. Watney v. Wells, 30 Beav. 56.

3. The Court will not dissolve a partnership on the ground of a small infraction of the articles of co-partnership. Anderson v. Anderson, 25 Beav. 190.

Articles of partnership provided that if either of the partners should give guarantees, without consent, the other might dissolve on giving notice; one of the partners, in the course of eight years, gave a guarantee for 25*l*., and the other gave notice to dissolve:—Held, that this alone was not, in equity, a sufficient ground for a dissolution. Ib.

4. The plaintiff and defendant carried on the business of surgeons as partners under articles of partnership which provided that "in case either of the partners should be desirous of retiring, and should give twelve calendar months' notice in writing of such his desire to the other partner, the continuing partner should have the option of becoming the purchaser of the share of the retiring partner, for a sum equal to two years' purchase of the shares of the retiring partner in the next annual profits of the business, provided such option were exercised within one calendar month from the receipt by him of such notice of retirement." And they also stipulated that "each of the partners should employ himself assiduously in the business and concerns of the partnership business, and use his utmost skill, care, and diligence to promote and increase the same; and that if either of the partners should commit any breach of any of the covenants and agreements therein contained, and on his part to be respectively observed and performed, then and in any of such cases the other, if he should think fit, should be at liberty to dissolve the partnership by giving the party offending notice in writing, declaring the partnership to be dissolved and determined." On the 15th of August 1856 the defendant served upon the plaintiff the proper notice, under the articles, of his intention to retire from the business. Disputes having then arisen as to the conduct of certain portions of the business, calculated greatly to reduce the value of the annual profits of the concern, the defendant, on the 13th day of September 1856, having previously received notice, through his solicitor, that the plaintiff intended to exercise the option given him to purchase the defendant's share of the business, under the articles, served upon the plaintiff notice of a dissolution of the partnership, on the ground of an alleged breach, by the plaintiff, of the stipulations of the articles. Later in the same day the plaintiff served notice, under the articles, of his intention to exercise his option of purchase, in accordance with the intimation he had previously given to the defendant's solicitor:—Held, the evidence failing to show an actual violation of any stipulation of the partnership articles by the plaintiff, that the defendant was not entitled to a dissolution under the articles, and that the partnership business must be continued to be carried on, at whatever inconvenience, till the expiration of the twelve months after service of the plaintiff's notice of purchase. Warder v. Stilwell, 3 Jur., N. S., 9; 26 L. J., Ch., 373.

5. If a partner has been guilty of embezzlement, or has committed a breach of trust, his co-partner may, by notice, dissolve the partnership from the date of the notice, notwithstanding the articles of partnership provide for its continuance for the joint lives of the partners. Essell v. Hayward, 6 Jur., N. S., 690; 29 L. J., Ch., 806; 8 W. R. 593; 30 Beav. 158.

1. Where partners, who are so under a contract for a period, there being no specific power by the contract to dissolve, so conduct themselves that mutual confidence is impossible, the Court will, of its own authority, dissolve the partnership, against the will of one of the partners. Baxter v. West, 1 Dr. & Sm. 173.

2. If a partner neglects a business which he covenanted to manage for a salary of 200*l.* a year out of the profits, and a suit is instituted for a dissolution of the partnership, a decree will be made, and the Court will not compel him to pay the costs up to the hearing; but any neglect or breach of covenant by such partner may be considered in taking the accounts. Hawkins v. Parsons, 8 Jur., N. S., 452; 31 L. J., Ch., 479; 10 W. R. 377.

3. By articles of partnership for a term between A. and B., all bills were to be signed by A. only. B. drew a bill on a customer for the amount of his bill:—Held, that this was not a substantial violation of the articles. Cheesman v. Price, 35 Beav. 142.

The failure of one partner to enter in his accounts partnership moneys received by him is, of itself, and independent of any provisions in the articles of partnership, a sufficient ground for the other partner dissolving. Ib.

By articles of a partnership for a term each partner was to keep proper books of account and to enter all his receipts, and in default the other might dissolve the partnership. One partner had made small omissions in seventeen instances, which, in the aggregate, amounted to 9*l.* 10*s.*:—Held, that this justified the other in dissolving the partnership. Ib.

4. Immoral conduct on the part of a partner in a firm of bankers is not a sufficient ground for a dissolution as to that partner, although the articles of partnership contained a clause for dissolution in case any of the partners should do any act to the discredit or injury of the co-partnership. Snow v. Milford, 18 L. T., N. S., 142; 16 W. R. 554.

5. Articles of partnership provided that each partner (with the exception of one of them) should devote his whole time and attention to the business, and not directly or indirectly engage in any other business; should be just and faithful in all transactions, and give full information respecting his transactions on account of the firm; and that if any partner should fail to observe or perform any of the articles or stipulations therein contained, it should be lawful for the other partners to expel such partner. C., one of the partners, entered into an agreement with Z., a musical instrument maker, whereby he agreed to advance moneys, the interest on which was to consist of half the profits of the business, or at least to amount to 10 per cent. In consequence of this the other partners gave notice to the plaintiff that he had ceased to be a partner, and circulated a letter among their customers to the same effect. By the articles, in case of such expulsion, the expelled partner lost his share in the goodwill. The bill prayed that the notice of expulsion was invalid on the ground of mala fides, and because C. had no opportunity of being heard in his defence, and that his arrangement with Z. was not a breach of the articles:—Held, that his transactions with Z., although not amounting to a partnership, were a breach of the articles: that no notice of intention to expel or opportunity of defence was necessary, and the expulsion was valid. Cooper v. Page, 34 L. T., N. S., 90.

6. By the partnership articles the partners were allowed to draw a fixed sum quarterly out of net profits, with a proviso that, if at the end of the year the net profits should not have amounted to the sum drawn, each of the partners should be debited in the partnership accounts with, and should at the end of the partnership repay to the co-partnership, the difference between the amount of the sums received in respect of such quarterly payment and the sum he would have been entitled to receive as his share of net profits. The partnership for the two first years proved a dead loss, and the drawings, consequently, came out of the capital. The plaintiff wished for an immediate dissolution, but the defendant wished to carry on the partnership a little longer. The plaintiff commenced an action for dissolution, and applied for an interim injunction to restrain the defendant from drawing out of the capital until the hearing:—Held, that the drawing out of capital was, notwithstanding the proviso for repayment at the end of the partnership, such misconduct within the meaning of the partnership articles as justified the Court in granting the injunction, but that the plaintiff also must undertake not to draw out of capital. Lemann v. Berger, 34 L. T., N. S., 235.

2. Death.

7. Death of one partner held a dissolution of partnership where there is no time of duration appointed. Crawshay v. Maule, 1 Swan. 509; 1 Wils. 181.

8. The death of a partner, of itself, works a dissolution of the partnership; and the mere want of notice does not, it seems, make the estate of the deceased partner liable to the continuing partners. Secus, if one of the partners is an executor of the deceased. Vulliamy v. Noble, 3 Mer. 614.

9. Partnership for term of years is dissolved by death of one before expiration of term Gillespie or Cranford v. Hamilton, 3 Madd 351.

10. A partnership was entered into between A. and B. for a term of years, subject to a power in A. to determine it by giving three months' notice; and it was provided, that in case of the death of A. before the partnership was fully wound up, his executors should settle its affairs. A. during the term gave notice to determine, and died before the expiration of the three months:—Held, that the partnership determined on the death of A. Bell v. Nevin, 12 Jur., N. S., 935; 15 W. R. 85.

3. Lunacy.

11. If a partner is so far disordered in his mind, as to be incapable of conducting the business according to the terms of the articles of co-partnership, a court of equity will dissolve the partnership. Sayer v. Bennet, Cox 107.

1. One partner, notwithstanding a temporary disorder, considered a partner. Pearce v. Chamberlain, 2 Ves. 35.

2. Lunacy is not a dissolution of partnership. Wrexham v. Hudleston, 1 Swan. 514. n.

3. The lunacy of a partner is not ipso facto a dissolution of the partnership, but is a ground for the dissolution, if the other partner or partners come to the Court for a decree of dissolution on the ground of such lunacy. One of two partners having continued the partnership business for some time after the lunacy of the other, and having then sold the business, the representative of the deceased lunatic partner was held to be entitled to his share of the partnership profits up to the period of sale. Jones v. Noy, 2 Myl. & K. 125.; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 114.

4. Upon the lunacy of one member of a partnership firm being found by commission, the Court will decree a dissolution as against him, and an account, with a reference to the Master as to the lunacy. Milne v. Bartlet, 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 254; 3 Jur. 358.

5. During a partnership for twenty-one years, one of the parties became and was found a lunatic:—On a bill by the other partner to dissolve the partnership on account of the lunacy, to which the committee was made a party, and admitted the lunacy, a reference was made to the Master as to the competency of the partner to conduct the business according to the articles. Patey v. Patey, 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 198.

6. Decree for a dissolution of partnership on the ground of insanity as from the date of the decree. Sander v. Sander, 2 Colly. 276.

7. On a bill to dissolve a partnership on the ground of the lunacy of a partner, the Court will not make its decree retrospective, even to the filing of the bill, still less to the time when the defendant first became incapable of attending to business. Besch v. Frolich, 1 Ph. 172; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 118; 7 Jur. 73.

8. The share of a deceased partner in lands purchased by the members of a trading co-partnership, with money belonging to the partnership, and held as part of the stock of the firm, is to be deemed as converted into personal assets, and as such passes to his personal representative. The firm of co-partners, constituted by the deed of 29th October 1862, stated in Cuffe v. Murtagh (7 L. R., Ir., 411), and which was formed to carry on the business of corn factors, flour merchants, and otherwise as the majority of the firm should agree to trade or deal in, acquired two denominations of freehold land, A. and B., purchased out of partnership assets. One of the partners farmed B., and resided there, and the accounts of the farming were entered in the profit and loss of the firm. The lands of A. were occupied by tenants, but the rents were also brought into the profit and loss account, and money was raised on the security of the lands for the purposes of the firm, on the death of one of the partners, whose share was not taken by the survivors:—Held, that the share of the deceased in the lands was personal property, which passed to his personal representative, not to his heir. Waterer v. Waterer (15 L. R., Eq., 402), observed on and distinguished. Murtagh v. Costello, 7 L. R., Ir., 428.

In such a case the dissolution will not be made retrospective, but will be ordered from the date of the judgment. Besch v. Frolich (1 Ph. 172) followed. Ib.

9. Confirmed and incurable insanity is a ground for dissolving a partnership; but a mere diminution of capacity in attending to it, is insufficient for that purpose. Sadler v. Lee, 6 Beav. 324; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 407; 7 Jur. 476.

Difficulty in holding a partner who ostensibly takes an active part in the conduct of the business free from responsibility, on the ground of insanity, in respect of the acts of the firm. Ib.

10. A., B., and C. were partners. A. died, having bequeathed his residuary property to G. S. and H. S. equally. H. S. thereupon assumed to act as partner in the place of A., and employed the assets in the business. A bill was filed by G. S. to administer A.'s estate, and for an account of the assets employed by H. S. in the business. The bill alleged that the partnership was now to be wound up, denied the right of H. S. to be a partner, and stated that B., another of the partners, had been since some time before A.'s death imbecile and incapable of transacting business. This last statement, and the interrogatories founded upon it, being excepted to:—Held, that B.'s state of mind during this time was a material fact in considering whether H. S. was properly a partner, and whether it was possible now to wind up the partnership business. The exceptions were overruled. Simpson v. Chapman, 15 Jur. 1052.

11. By articles of partnership it was stipulated that, in the event of such severe illness as should oblige the defendant to quit India for more than one year, the books should be made up to the end of the partnership year, and a valuation should be made of the stock. The defendant became an incurable lunatic on his way to India. He arrived there in 1841, and was sent back:—Held, that this article contemplated a dissolution; that, according to the fair meaning of the article, the event had happened, and that his partners were entitled to a dissolution as from the end of the partnership year 1842, and not, as contended by the defendants, from the decree. Bagshaw v. Parker, 10 Beav. 532.

12. The Court will entertain a bill for the dissolution of a partnership on the ground of insanity of a partner, and will refer it to the Master to inquire into the fact; but there must be strict evidence of insanity. Kirby v. Carr, 3 Y. & Coll. 184; 2 Jur. 741. S. C. nom. Kirby v. Cox, 8 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 31.

13. Decree made for the dissolution of a partnership in consequence of the lunacy of one of the partners. Leaf v. Coles, 1 De G. M. & G. 171.

In a case where a dissolution of partnership had been decreed, in consequence of the lunacy of one of the partners, and large sums had been paid into court to the separate account of the lunatic in respect of his share of the capital and profits of the business; the Lord Chancellor, on being subsequently satisfied of the complete recovery of the lunatic, ordered the fund to be paid out to him. Id. 417.

Mode of proceeding in such cases. Ib.

14. A notice of dissolution given to a lunatic partner is sufficient to put an end to the partnership. Mellersh v. Keen, 27 Beav. 236; S. P. Robertson v. Lockie, 15 Sim. 285; 10 Jur. 533.

1. Where one of three partners in a mining concern had become lunatic, and committees of his estate had been appointed, the Court directed the partnership property to be sold as a going concern, with liberty to all parties to bid. Rowlands v. Evans, Williams v. Rowlands, 8 Jur., N. S., 88; 31 L. J., Ch., 265; 10 W. R. 186; 5 L. T., N. S., 628; 30 Beav. 302.

Where notice had been given to one of the partners to exercise his option of pre-emption, under the provisions of the partnership articles, and he afterwards became lunatic, without having exercised his option, such notice held to be binding upon the committee afterwards appointed, a sale having taken place in the meantime, and that the right of pre-emption was gone. Ib.

2. Motion for an interim injunction to restrain a partner who, six months previously, being temporarily of unsound mind, had attempted to commit suicide, from interfering in the partnership affairs, refused, the evidence not showing that, at the time of the motion, he was incompetent to conduct the business of the partnership according to the partnership articles. And a motion in a cross suit, to restrain the defendants in such cross suit from preventing the partner who had been insane from transacting the business of the partnership as a partner thereof, granted. Anon., 2 Kay & J. 441.

The circumstances, that the conduct and state of mind of the partner in question were such as at once to destroy the confidence of the other partners, and to induce customers to withdraw their custom from the firm, and that the malady under which he laboured might as easily have led him to attempt the life of one of his partners, held not to furnish sufficient ground for granting the first motion. Ib.

Examination of the authorities on this subject. They establish these propositions: first, actual insanity of a partner is not in itself a dissolution of the partnership, but there must be a decree for dissolution. Ib.

Secondly, such a decree, notwithstanding actual insanity proved to have existed before the filing of the bill, will not be made in a disputed case without a further inquiry whether, at the time when the relief is sought, the party is in such a state of mind as to be able to conduct the business of the firm in partnership with the other members, according to the articles of partnership. Ib.

Semble, the affirmative of this issue would then lie with the party who had been of unsound mind. Ib.

And thirdly, insanity existing when the relief is sought, is good ground for a dissolution. Ib.

3. In the case of a bill for the dissolution of a partnership on account of the alleged insanity of one of the partners, there can be no dissolution without a decree of the Court, and such decree is not made without further inquiry as to the state of mind of the party at the time the case comes before the Court. An injunction to restrain such a partner from interfering with the partnership business refused, there being no evidence to satisfy the Court that he was at that time incompetent to transact business, although there had been undoubted insanity some months before. Ogilvy v. Gregory; Gregory v. Ogilvy, 4 W. R. 67; 25 L. J., Ch., 32.

4. A person who has become permanently insane, but has not been so found by inquisition, may maintain a suit by his next friend for the protection of property in which he is interested as partner. Jones v. Lloyd, 18 L. R., Eq., 265; 43 L. J., Ch., 826; 22 W. R. 785; 30 L. T., N. S., 487.

Permanent lunacy of a partner is a ground of dissolution at the instance of the lunatic as well as of the other partner. Ib.

A bill was filed by a next friend on behalf of a person of unsound mind not so found by inquisition, against his partner in business, alleging that he had for some time past been suffering from softening of the brain and was of unsound mind, and that it would be for his benefit that the partnership should be dissolved; and praying that the partnership might be dissolved and accounts taken, and his share in the assets secured for his benefit, and for a receiver:—Held, that the suit could be maintained. Ib.

Articles of partnership provided that either party should be at liberty to determine the partnership at the end of the first seven years of the term, on giving previous notice to the other partner of his intention to do so. One partner having become insane, the other served on him notice of his intention to determine the partnership at the end of the first seven years of the term:—Held, that the notice could not be withdrawn without the consent of the insane partner. Ib.

4. Other Cases.

5. A partnership for ten years dissolved by decree of the Court at the end of three years, the relations between the partners being such that it could not be continued with advantage to either party. Leary v. Shout, 33 Beav. 582.

6. The Court of Chancery has jurisdiction to dissolve a partnership of which the business cannot be carried on at a profit without further capital, each partner having contributed his share of capital, and it is not necessary to show that the concern is embarrassed. Jennings v. Baddeley, 3 Kay & J. 78; 3 Jur., N. S., 108.

Dissolution of a partnership decreed on that ground in a case involving other and special circumstances, on which, however, the Court did not rely as essential to the decree. Ib.

B., owner in fee of coal mines on which he had expended 3,000*l.*, applied to J. for further capital, and both parties equally conceiving that 3,000*l.* would be sufficient to bring the mines to working order, it was agreed that a lease should be made for fifty years from 1852, at a dead rent and a royalty reserved to B. and his assigns, and that J. and B. should be partners in equal shares in the mines, and in the business of working and selling the coal, during the lease. There was no provision for raising further capital. In 1856 J. had advanced not only his 3,000*l.*, but 25,000*l.*, and it appeared that it was impossible to work the mines at a profit, and that there was no chance of being able to do so. B. was unable, and J. unwilling, to advance any more capital. J. filed a bill for a dissolution, which was ordered accordingly, on the ground that the objects of partnership had wholly failed. Ib.

1. A., B., and C. agreed to enter into a joint speculation in tea. One consignment only was made by A. to B., which was paid for by C. Disagreements arose respecting it, B. and C. insisting that it was a spurious article, and repudiating the consignment:—Held, that the partnership relations were not put an end to by the repudiation; that the rights, obligations, and liabilities of the parties could not be settled by any simple litigation at law between any two, and that the matter formed the proper subject of a suit in equity. A bill under the above circumstances, insisting on the repudiation, and in the alternative asking to have the accounts taken and the rights, etc., of the parties determined, held not demurrable on the ground of the inconsistency of the alternative relief. There are necessarily things to be done preparatory to the commencement of a partnership, and matters necessary to be done after its termination for the purpose of winding it up. These are not to be excluded in the consideration of the partnership dealings and transactions. Cruikshank v. M'Vicar, 8 Beav. 106; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 41.

2. Where a partner has a right to appoint a person to succeed upon his death to his share of the business, and the person so appointed refuses to accept that share, or to comply with the stipulation of the articles, the partnership is dissolved; but the dissolution is not a dissolution which is wrought by the exclusion of the appointee by the surviving partners. Kershaw v. Matthews, 2 Russ. 62.

3. A. having been rendered incapable of performing his partnership duties, his partner filed a bill against him for a dissolution. Afterwards and before the hearing, A.'s health improved:—Held, that there was not sufficient ground for dissolving the partnership, and all proceedings were stayed, with liberty to apply. Whitwell v. Arthur, 35 Beav. 140.

4. In February 1847 A. and B. entered into a joint contract with a company for making and for completing the works of a railway. In May 1848 execution was sued out against A. by a creditor, and the sheriff sold the moiety of his goods, etc., on the railway to B. B. then assigned his interest in the contract to the plaintiff by way of security. B. was allowed, with the knowledge of the company, to proceed with the execution of the works alone till the 25th August 1848, after which date the works were completed by the plaintiff, who gave notice of the assignment to him to the company. The company paid various sums in respect of the works to B. and the plaintiff; but on the plaintiff bringing an action, in February 1850, against the company in the names of A. and B., the company obtained a release from A.:—Held, that the partnership between A. and B. was dissolved by suing out the execution in May 1848; that the release obtained from A. was void as against B. and the plaintiff; that the assignment by B. was effectual to pass to the plaintiff all moneys payable to B. under the contract; and that B. and the plaintiff were alone entitled to payment for the works executed by them under the contract after the 10th May 1848. Aspinall v. London & North Western Railway Co., 1 W. R. 518; 11 Hare 325. See Perrens v. Johnson, 3 Jur., N. S., 975; 3 Sm. & G. 419.

II. NOTICE.

5. Partnership without any provision as to its duration may be determined without previous notice, subject to the accounts to wind up the concern. Peacock v. Peacock, 16 Ves. 49.

6. Where the contract neither expressly nor by reference limits the duration, the partnership may be terminated at a moment's notice by either party. Crawshay v. Maule, 1 Swan. 506; 1 Wils. 181.

7. Quære, whether partnership for an indefinite time, without deed, can be dissolved on notice by either party. Littlewood v. Caldwell, 11 Price 98.

8. The general right which every member of a partnership has to dissolve the partnership, will not be controlled except by clear expressions: that right will not be controlled by the partners taking a lease for years of the premises where the trade is to be carried on; nor by provisions in the articles as to the amount of capital to be brought in by the several partners in successive years; nor by provision for the event, where the partners are in number more than two, of the exclusion of one of them by the others. Barter v. Plenderleath, 2 L. J., Ch., 119.

9. A partnership without articles, and for an indefinite period, may be dissolved by any partner at any time, without previous notice, subject to the engagements of the partnership; but the existence of engagements with third persons cannot prevent the right of dissolution as among themselves. The consequence of a dissolution, where there are articles prescribing the terms, is a general sale and account of the joint property: one or more partners therefore cannot insist on taking the share of another at a valuation, or that he shall remove his proportion from the premises, thereby securing the goodwill. Partner after the dissolution of the partnership, continuing to trade with the joint property, must account for the profits. Featherstonhaugh v. Fenwick, 17 Ves. 298.

10. Determination of an agreement of the nature of a partnership at will, held to result from the animus of the parties towards each other, without any formal notice. Pearce v. Lindsay, 3 De G. J. & S. 139.

11. A person selling a share in his business, and becoming a partner with the purchaser for an indefinite period, will not in equity be permitted to dissolve the partnership immediately afterwards, and retain the premium. Featherstonhaugh v. Turner, 25 Beav. 382; 28 L. J., Ch., 812.

12. A notice of dissolution given to a lunatic partner is sufficient to put an end to the partnership. Mellersh v. Keen, 27 Beav. 236.

Notice by two partners to a third that "we shall dissolve the partnership on the 31st of December" operates as a dissolution on that day. Ib.

13. By articles of partnership between A. and B. the partnership was to be dissolved on either party giving the other six months' notice. A. gave the required notice:—Held, that it was effectual, notwithstanding B. was insane when it was given. Robertson v. Lockie, 15 Sim. 285; 10 Jur. 533.

1. If a partnership is carried on beyond the term fixed for its duration, it can only be dissolved by special notice, and in its absence no notice to dissolve will be implied. Parsons v. Haward, 8 Jur., N. S., 474, 924; 31 L. J., Ch., 666; 10 W. R. 531, 654; 6 L. T., N. S., 523, 628; 31 Beav. 199; 4 De G. F. & J. 474.

2. A partnership at will held dissolved as from the date of the filing of a bill which prayed for its dissolution. Shepherd v. Allen, 33 Beav. 577.

3. Articles of partnership provided that either party should be at liberty to determine the partnership at the end of the first seven years of the term, on giving previous notice to the other partner of his intention to do so. One partner having become insane, the other served on him notice of his intention to determine the partnership at the end of the first seven years of the term:—Held, that the notice could not be withdrawn without the consent of the insane partner. Jones v. Lloyd, 18 L. R., Eq., 265; 43 L. J., Ch., 826; 30 L. T. 487; 22 W. R. 785.

4. W. and C. entered into co-partnership for a term of twenty-one years in the trade of mill-stone makers, C. being besides cashier of the firm. Disputes of old standing existed between the partners at the commencement of the co-partnership, and ill-temper was exhibited on frequent occasions between them and afterwards. C. ultimately, and within a year from the commencement of the partnership term, took proceedings to determine the co-partnership by notice under the expulsion clause, upon the ground of W.'s alleged violations of the partnership articles in six particular items, which were specified in a notice to him, dated in March 1871. W. filed a bill to restrain C. from proceeding further with that notice, and to have such notice declared void. C. afterwards took proceedings under the arbitration clause, and W. amended his bill for the purpose of restraining these latter proceedings also. The particular alleged violations were explained away upon the evidence as entire mistakes on C.'s part attributable to the previous state of feeling existing between the partners:—Held, that W. was entitled to have the notice of dissolution declared void, and all proceedings upon such notice restrained; also, that C. must be restrained from proceeding under the arbitration clause, and that he must pay to W. his costs of the litigation. Witt v. Corcoran, 21 W. R. 47.

5. By partnership articles, one of three partners might determine the co-partnership by giving six calendar months' notice; and in that case, immediately after the expiration of the six calendar months, the assets were to be valued, and after the valuation being made and the result communicated, the partnership "shall, in regard to all the said partners, cease and determine":—Held, that the partnership was dissolved at the expiration of the six months, and not from the completion of the valuation, though it continued after the six months, for the purpose of winding it up. Griffiths v. Bracewell, 35 Beav. 43.

6. The partnership articles between two surgeons, W. and S., provided that either might give the other twelve months' notice of an intention to retire, when the party receiving such notice should have one month wherein to exercise his option of becoming the purchaser of his retiring partner's share. It was also provided, that either partner might, under certain circumstances of misconduct, declare the partnership peremptorily at an end. S. having given notice to W. of his intention to retire, the latter, within the month, signified his intention of purchasing. S. then attempted to countermand his previous notice, and declare the partnership dissolved upon various allegations of misconduct:—Held, that he was bound by his notice; that W. had the option of purchasing; and that both parties must abide by the stipulations in their partnership deed, however inconvenient in the result. Warder v. Stillwell, 5 W. R. 174; 26 L. J., Ch., 373; 3 Jur., N. S., 9.

7. Three members of a company which was unlimited as to its duration, executed a deed dissolving the company, and left a notice of it at the company's office; they then filed a bill on behalf of themselves and all other members, except the defendants, against the officers of the company, alleging that the company consisted of upwards of 400 members, and that the plaintiffs were ignorant of, and had no means of learning, their names and residences, and praying that the company might be declared to be dissolved:—Held, that all the members ought to have been served with notice of the deed, and a demurrer to the bill for want of equity was allowed. Wheeler v. Van Wart, 9 Sim. 193; 2 Jur. 252.

III. ADVERTISEMENT IN GAZETTE.

8. Inasmuch as no advertisement of the dissolution of a partnership is inserted in the London Gazette, unless it is signed by both partners, the Court, in a suit for dissolution of partnership, will make an order declaring that the defendant be decreed to do all acts necessary for procuring a dissolution of the partnership to be inserted in the Gazette. Troughton v. Hunter, 18 Beav. 470.

IV. SALE BY COURT.

9. Articles of partnership providing that upon its expiration the stock in trade should be divided, received, and taken by the partners according to their respective interests:—Held, that they could not be carried into execution literally, and that therefore by the general law of partnership the settlement must be by a sale and division of the whole. Cook v. Collingridge, Jac. 617; 1 L. J., Ch., 74.

10. Decree for sale of partnership concern, restraining the managing partner from acting, with liberty to either party to lay proposals before the Master for management until the sale. Waters v. Taylor, 2 Ves. & B. 299.

11. In a suit instituted for the dissolution of a partnership, it being clear on the bill and answer that some party is entitled to a dissolution, a sale of the partnership property may be directed on motion. Crawshay v. Maule, 1 Swan. 506; 1 Wils. 181.

If a partnership is actually ended, no person can make any use of the property inconsistent with the purpose of winding up the concern. Ib.

In the instance of a trading partnership actually dissolved, the Court orders a sale on motion. S. C. 1 Swan. 523. And see Crawshay v. Collins, 15 Ves. 227.

1. In a suit to wind up a partnership, the Court will not, on motion before decree, order a sale of the partnership effects, unless the partnership is actually and clearly dissolved. Broadwood v. Goding, 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 96.

Two partners carried on business for nearly twenty-one years, on the terms of articles, which had been prepared, but not executed. In a suit to wind up the partnership, the Court refused, upon motion immediately before the expiration of the term, to order a sale of the effects. Ib.

2. The consequence of a dissolution where there are articles prescribing the terms, is a general sale and account of the joint property: one or more partners therefore cannot insist on taking the share of another at a valuation, or that he shall remove his proportion from the premises, thereby securing the goodwill. Partner after the dissolution of the partnership, continuing to trade with the joint property, must account for the profits. Featherstonhaugh v. Fenwick, 17 Ves. 298.

3. Where there is no agreement between partners for the stock and plant of the concern to be taken by either party at a valuation on the determination of the partnership, one partner cannot either be compelled to take, or compel his co-partner to take, the stock and plant at a valuation, but each partner is entitled to have the value of the stock and plant ascertained by sale. Burdon v. Barkus, 3 Giff. 412; 8 Jur., N. S., 130; 5 L. T., N. S., 573. Affirmed 8 Jur., N. S., 656; 31 L. J., Ch., 521; 7 L. T., N. S., 116.

The partner who had expended certain moneys upon the partnership concern, on the faith of, the partnership being co-extensive with the lease:—Held, entitled to an inquiry whether he ought to be recouped such money out of the partnership assets. Ib.

4. Quære, whether, upon the dissolution of partnership not under articles, a partner has an inherent right in that character, without the assistance of a court of equity, to insist upon the sale of the partnership effects. Cragg v. Ford, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 280.

5. Several persons, who were jointly entitled to several leases of a colliery, worked it in co-partnership:—Held, on a dissolution, that one of the co-owners of the leases could not insist on a partition, though there might be no debts, but that the whole must be sold. Wild v. Milne, 26 Beav. 504.

6. Several persons, having obtained a mining lease for sixty years, entered into partnership in the business of iron ore workers for that period. The business consisted of winning and selling hematite iron in an unmanufactured state. One of them having become lunatic, the Court dissolved the partnership, and directed the concern to be sold by an indifferent person, with liberty to the parties to bid. Rowlands v. Evans, Williams v. Rowlands, 30 Beav. 302; 8 Jur., N. S., 88; 31 L. J., Ch., 265; 10 W. R. 186; 5 L. T., N. S., 628.

7. An order was made directing a reference to the chief clerk, whether it would be for the benefit of the estate of a deceased partner that the partnership property should be sold by public auction, or whether a valuation which had been made in a former suit should be adopted. A large portion of the capital of the deceased partner remained in the business. The estate of the deceased partner claimed to be entitled to profits made subsequent to the date of the valuation. The chief clerk refused to go into the question of subsequent profits, and reported in favour of the valuation in preference to a sale:—Held, that the chief clerk had acted within the scope of his authority, and had come to a reasonable conclusion. Blyth v. Blyth, 4 L. T., N. S., 536.

8. The executors of a deceased partner held entitled to have the partnership premises (the freehold of which belonged to the firm), and the business sold in the most advantageous manner, whether as a going concern, or otherwise. Hall v. Barrows, 1 N. R. 543.

9. Where the premises at which a partnership business was carried on belonged to one partner exclusively, the Court, in directing a sale of the business in an action between the partners for dissolution, ordered the sale to be conducted by an independent firm of solicitors, with liberty to either partner to bid. Pawsey v. Armstrong, 18 L. R., Ch. D., 698; 50 L. J., Ch., 683.

10. The partners in a mine being hopelessly embarrassed, and their position becoming more critical every day, the Court interfered against a dissentient partner on motion before the hearing, and ordered an immediate sale of the mine and partnership property. Heath v. Fisher, 38 L. J., Ch., 14; 19 L. T., N. S., 805; 17 W. R. 69.

12. If a retiring partner assign all his share in the concern to two of the continuing partners upon trust to pay him an annuity for his life, subject to abatement or enlargement, with the fluctuation of the profits of trade, that will not, with reference to creditors, determine the partnership. Exp. Wilson, Buck. 48.

A retiring partner assigns all his share in the concern to two of the continuing partners upon trust for his infant children, in such shares as he should appoint, and in default of appointment, upon trust for the children, to be divided amongst them when the younger shall attain twenty-one:—Held, that the contingent interest the father had in the share so assigned, depending upon the death of any of the children under twenty-one, was such an interest reserved by him in the concern, as with reference to creditor prevented the determination of the partnership. Ib.

1. After a dissolution of partnership by death or otherwise, the surviving or continuing partners of the firm are (in a suit by persons claiming to be creditors of the partnership) entitled to the protection of the Statutes of Limitation, although as between themselves and retired partners, or the estates of deceased partners, the partnership accounts are never settled; and the retired partners, or the executors of a deceased partner, are in such a suit against them entitled to the like protection. Way v. Bassett, 5 Hare 68; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 1; 10 Jur. 89.

2. A. authorised the sale of his share in a brewery to B., his surviving partner, whom he appointed one of his executors. B., conceiving he had duly become the purchaser, carried on the business until his death, and it was subsequently carried on by C., his executor. Afterwards, upon a bill filed, the sale was set aside, and the estate of A. became entitled to share in the profits made subsequent to A.'s death. C. afterwards became bankrupt, having the whole trade property in his possession:—Held, that the trade creditors during the time the business was carried on by C. had no lien for their debts on A.'s share. Stocken v. Dawson, 9 Beav. 239. Affirmed 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 282.

3. A debt due from a trading firm of four persons was, with their knowledge, assigned by the creditor to two of the partners, upon certain trusts. One of the partners (not a trustee) afterwards retired, leaving in the new firm sufficient assets to discharge all the liabilities of the old firm. The trustees, with the knowledge of the retiring partner, permitted the trust-fund to remain outstanding upon the security of the new firm. It was afterwards lost, in consequence of breaches of trust, of which the retiring partner was a consenting party:—Held, that he was answerable, quâ debtor, to the cestui que trust for the loss; but the Court would not give relief against him as a person who had concurred in the breach of trust, for the bill did not ask that relief against him. Cummins v. Cummins, 3 J. & L. 64; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 723.

4. Where to a bill for an account against a partnership, a retired partner averred by his answer that the plaintiff had adoped the successors as his exclusive debtors, but stated no facts in proof of such adoption, the account directed against him, but without prejudice to the question of his being discharged or not by the acts of the plaintiff. Benson v. Hadfield, 4 Hare 32.

5. A. and B., partners, were solicitors to the commission. More than six years back they received various sums of money on account of the estate, having a set-off in respect of their bill of costs, but which bill they did not deliver to the assignee within six years. Beyond the six years, A. and B. (upon an agreement that A. should pay all the debts) dissolved partnership, and the assignee, with knowledge of this fact, continued to employ A. alone as the solicitor to the commission, and no attempt was made to charge B. with the moneys received by A. and B. till very lately, viz., when an official assignee was appointed; nor had B. ever acknowledged any liability to account:—Held, first, that as between B. and the creditors, neither the Statute of Limitations, nor laches, nor other conduct of the assignee would operate as a bar, A. and B being solictors to the commission. But, secondly, that as the assignee was able to recoup the estate, he could not, under such circumstances of conduct on his part, call on B. to account. A. had become bankrupt. Semble, nevertheless, that he or his assignees were necessary parties. Exp. Gould, Re Robertson, 4 Dea. & Ch. 547; 2 Mont. & A. 48; 4 L. J., N. S., Bky., 7.

6. In 1780 A. and B. were partners as army agents, having been in the habit of receiving money from the government for the pay of certain regiments. In that year A. retires, and B. and C. carry on the business as before, but without coming to any account with the Crown, and without any account whatever being taken of the liability of the firm of A. and B., at the time of A.'s retiring. In 1783 B. and C. are required by the government to render the account of moneys issued for the several regiments during the period of the existence of the firm of A. and B., and of B. and C., which they do without any break appearing in them at 1780, when A. retired. But the accounts rendered do not state any debtor and creditor account as between the respective firms and the Crown, but show simply the sums issued in respect of each regiment, and how they have been applied. On the formation of the firm of B. and C., the old ledgers are used; there was no agreement to take to the liabilities of A. and B., and everything is carried on in the same manner as before, till 1783, when the 23 Geo. 3, c. 30 was passed, which directs that an estimate is to be thenceforth prepared of the amount which will be required for the purposes of the army; that the amount is to be paid from time to time into the Bank; that the paymaster of the forces is to communicate to the secretary at war the sums that will be required for the purposes of the different regiments; that the agents of the different regiments are to communicate to the secretary at war the sums that will be required for the different regiments, and an issue is then made to the agent for the particular purposes of those regiments, and annual accounts were required to be rendered by the several agents. Upon this footing matters are carried on till 1804, when B. and C. became bankrupts, and a balance of 150,000*l.* is found due to the Crown; and in 1820, and not before, it is found that 91,000*l.*, part of the 150,000*l.*, was due at the time of the retirement of A. Semble, under these circumstances, that B. and C. could not be presumed to have adopted the debt of A. and B., and that the government could not be presumed to have assented thereto had such adoption existed: and, consequently, that the government had no right to prove the entire sum of 150,000*l.* against B. and C.'s estate. But it also appearing that the assignees had, by proceedings in the Court of Session in Scotland, treated the 91,000*l.* as due from their estate: and the government having, on the other hand, sued the representatives of A. in Scotland (subsequently to the discovery of the balance being due), so as to charge A. alone as the debtor, a claim was permitted to be entered, till the result of the Crown's proceedings, which were still pending against the representatives of A., was ascertained. Exp. Sandham, 4 Dea. & Ch. 818.

1. A general devisee in trust for the testator's widow and children, having received from the widow, who was executrix, on her going abroad to recover part of the property, bonds for a debt from him and his partners to the estate, in settling the affairs of the partnership on the retirement of one partner who had notice of the trust, delivered to him the bonds to be cancelled without the privity of the cestui que trust; continuing to make remittances on that account from the funds of the new partnership: the partner who retired is not discharged. Dickenson v. Lockyer, 4 Ves. 36.

2. A. and B., partners, were indebted to the plaintiff on a promissory note. A. retired from the partnership. At the time of his retirement a large sum was due to him from the concern; for securing the payment of which B. gave him his bond; and it was agreed between them that B. should take on himself all the liabilities of the firm. For some years plaintiff received interest from B., dealing wholly with him. A. died. B. became bankrupt, and plaintiff proved his debt under the bankruptcy, and filed his bill against A.'s executor for the difference. It did not clearly appear whether the plaintiff was privy to the agreement between A. and B., or whether A. left assets in B.'s hands sufficient to meet the partnership liabilities. An issue was directed to try whether A. was indebted to plaintiff at the time of filing the bill, upon an admission that he was living at that time. Mills v. Boyd, 6 Jur. 943.

The acceptance of the sole security of the continuing partner for a debt due from the firm may be a sufficient consideration for the discharge of a retiring partner, semble. Ib.

3. A partner who had joined a firm before 1810 and continued in it up to 1820, held liable in 1835 to a suit by the representative of a creditor, for money due to him by the firm in 1810, and interest on it up to the institution of the suit. Fergusson v. Fyffe, 8 Cl. & F. 121.

4. A contract to discharge a retiring partner from a debt due from the firm may be proved, either by an express agreement, or by facts and conduct from which it may be fairly inferred. Harris v. Farwell, 15 Beav. 31.

Taking a new security is not of itself sufficient to discharge the retiring partner, but there must also be an agreement, either express or to be fairly inferred, to discharge the old firm. Ib.

A bank, consisting of three members, was indebted to A. B. In 1837 one of the members died, and a new partner was admitted. A. B. received interest from the new firm until 1841, when they became bankrupt. A. B. went in and proved against the new firm, swearing that they were indebted to him for money received to his use:—Held, that the separate estate of the deceased partner had not been discharged. Ib.

5. Where a member of a firm which is under a continuing contract retires with an indemnity, the continuing partners are his agents for carrying on the contract; and although after notice of the retirement the retiring partner is in a sense a surety, that authority will not be extended so far as to discharge him from the contract by reason of acts of the continuing partners fairly within the scope of their authority in carrying out the contract. Oakford v. European and American Shipping Co., 1 Hem. & M. 182; 9 L. T., N. S., 15; 2 N. R. 103.

Continuing partners under such a contract (which gave the firm the power of appointing an arbitrator in case of dispute) entered into an agreement by which they waived a very doubtful point of construction on the original contract, and referred differences to arbitrators, one of whom was selected by themselves, instead of by the firm, as constituted at the date of the contract:—Held, that this was not such a variation of the original contract as to discharge the retired partner. Ib.

6. Prior to April 1872, a firm of bankers, consisting of two partners, A. and B., received money on deposit at interest, for which they gave deposit notes in the usual form to the depositors, who, when the amount on deposit was increased or diminished, gave up their old notes and received fresh ones for the new amount. In April 1872 C. and D. were admitted into the partnership, and notice of the change in the firm was given to the depositors. A fortnight afterwards A. died, and the business was carried on under the same firm by B., C., and D. In 1874 B. died, and the business was carried on by C. and D., still under the same firm, until 1875, when the bank stopped payment, and went into liquidation. The depositors all knew of A.'s death, and none of them made any claim against his estate. Some of them had not altered the amount of their deposit, but retained the notes they had received in his lifetime. They had, however, received interest from C. and D. Others had increased and others had diminished the amount of their deposit after A.'s death, receiving in each case fresh deposit notes; and they had all proved in the bankruptcy of C. and D. for the amount due on their notes as money advanced and lent to the bankrupts:—Held, that in each case there had been a complete novation, and that none of the depositors were entitled to prove against the estate of A. Bilborough v. Holmes, 5 L. R., Ch. D., 255; 46 L. J., Ch., 446; 25 W. R. 297; 35 L. T., N. S., 75.

7. A firm of two partners dissolved; one retired and the other carried on the business with a new partner under the same style. A customer of the old firm sold and delivered goods to the new firm after the change but without notice of it. After receiving notice he sued the new firm for the price of the goods, and upon their bankruptcy proved against their estate; and afterwards brought an action for the price against the late partner:—Held, that the liability of the late partner was a liability by estoppel only, and not jointly with the members of the new firm; that the customer might at his option have sued the late partner or the members of the new firm, but could not sue all three together; and that having elected to sue the new firm he could not afterwards sue the late partner. Scarfe v. Jardine, 7 L. R., App. Cas., 345; 51 L. J., Q. B., 612; 47 L. T. 258; 30 W. R. 893.

2. Of Creditors of Old Firm against New Firm.

1. When a trading partnership is formed, consisting of a large number of shareholders, and the shares are made transferable, the rule of ordinary partnerships, that a new partner is only liable inter se for subsequent debts, does not prevail. Mayhew's case, 1 Jur., N. S., 566; 24 L. J., Ch., 353.

2. A firm was newly constituted, but no alteration was made in the mode of carrying on the business; the accounts were continued in the old books as if no change had taken place; and the existing liabilities were discharged or diminished either from the assets of the old firm, or from the funds of the new firm indiscriminately:—Held, this was cogent evidence that the new firm had assumed the liability to pay the debts of the old firm. Australasia (Bank of) v. Flower, 1 L. R., P. C., 27; 12 Jur., N. S., 345; 35 L. J., P. C., 13; 14 W. R. 377; 14 L. T., N. S., 144.

Where creditors of the old firm know that the new firm has arranged to assume the debts of the old firm, and go on dealing and receive payment of part of the debt out of the blended assets of the old and new firms, such creditors thereby discharge the old firm, and accept the new firm as their debtor. Ib.

Whatever may have been the origin of the rule, it is well settled, that in administration under bankruptcy the joint and separate estates of partners are considered as distinct, and a joint creditor having a security on the separate estate is entitled to prove against the joint estate without giving up his security on the ground that it is a different estate. Ib.

3. A company, being at the time indebted to a bank, was amalgamated, by a deed to which the bank was not a party, with the Société de C. The société by the deed undertook the liabilities of the company. The société, the company, and the bank subsequently went into liquidation, and, upon a claim being put in by the bank against the société for the debt owing to it by the company at the date of the amalgamation, it was decided, in proceedings in France to which the company was a party, that the société was not liable, and the claim of the bank was rejected. The bank then claimed the amount of the debt in the liquidation of the company:—Held, that it was the duty of the company in the proceedings in France to see that the société was substituted in its place as debtor to the bank, and that the company, not having performed this duty, remained liable to the bank, and the claim was accordingly allowed. Re St. Nazaire Co., 25 W. R. 424.

4. A company, with limited liability, was formed to carry on the business of a previously existing bank with limited liability, and the assets of the bank were handed over to the company, and the business was thenceforward carried on in the name of the company, which name differed but slightly from that of the bank. J. was a creditor of the bank in respect of a deposit at interest. No notice of the transfer of the business was sent to J., but the interest on his deposit was, in two successive half-years after the transfer, sent by the company to J.'s agents, and this payment was accepted by them. The company then stopped, and was ordered to be wound up. The letters in which the interest was sent to the agents were headed with the name of the company, and spoke of the deposit being with them. J. carried in a claim for his deposit against tht company, and his claim was admitted by the official liquidator, and included in the chief clerk's certificate of the debts, and a dividend of 10*s.* in the pound was paid upon it. H., a contributory of the company, afterwards moved to have J.'s claim expunged:—Held, that J. had never accepted the company as his debtors, and that his claim must be expunged. Re Commercial Bank Corporation of India and the East, 16 W. R. 958.

Held, also, that H. was not estopped, by reason of his knowledge of the objects for which the company was formed, and of the fact that the assets of the bank were handed over to the company, from disputing the claim of J. Ib.

5. When a new partner is introduced into an established firm, or a new firm is constituted in place of it, and a creditor, with knowledge of all the facts, continues his dealings with the firm, his assent to a substitution of the liability of the new firm for that of the old will be inferred upon slight circumstances; but slight circumstances will not lead to any such inference where the creditor has, four months after the substitution of the new firm, distinctly asserted that his dealings were with the old firm exclusively, and that he has no knowledge of the new firm in the transaction. Re Smith, Knight, & Co., Exp. Gibson, 20 L. T., N. S., 835; 4 L. R., Ch., 662; 17 W. R. 833.

A. lent to B. and C. divers sums of money to be expended in executing certain works for which B. and C. were contractors. B. and C., during the period in which these advances were being made, transferred all their contracts to a company, which undertook to indemnify them against all liabilities incurred by them in respect of the contracts. The money advanced by A. was actually expended by the company in the manner contemplated. A. refused to acknowledge the company as the borrowers of the money, and required the promissory notes which were given for repayment to be made by B. and C., which was accordingly done. About a year later, A. accepted from the company interest upon the loan up to date. Beyond a few letters relative to the amount of interest, no communication took place between A. and the company:—Held, that upon the company being wound up, A. could not claim to be a creditor of the company for the amount of the notes, as he had not accepted the company as his debtor. Ib.

6. Although slight evidence is sufficient in the case of ordinary firms to show that a creditor who continues his dealings with incoming partners accepts the new firm as his debtors instead of the old firm, yet strict proof will be required before it is held that a creditor of a company, under a special contract, has accepted the liability of another company with which the first is amalgamated. Re Family Endowment Society, 5 L. R., Ch., 118; 21 L. T., N. S., 775.

3. Payments after Dissolution.

1. Payments by a debtor to a firm, made to the successors after all the original partners had ceased to be members, were held not to be in satisfaction of the debt due to those original partners in the absence of any proof of consent on the part of the survivor of them to the payments being so taken. Jones v. Maund, 3 Y. & Coll. 347.

2. On the death or retirement of a partner in a business in the nature of a banking business, the rule in Clayton's case, that moneys received by the new partnership must be applied in payment of the debts of the old partnership, will be held primâ facie to apply in taking the accounts as well between the partners themselves as between the partners and third persons, and there must be strong evidence to rebut the presumption as to that mode of taking the accounts. Copland v. Toulmin, West. 164; 7 Cl. & F. 349; 3 Y. & Coll. 625.

3. The account of a customer of a firm consisted of debits and credits arising from the purchase and sale of goods. The partnership was dissolved, the customer being then greatly indebted to it, but the account was continued in the same mode by the succeeding firm:—Held, that the doctrine of appropriation of payments applied to the debtor's account. Laing v. Campbell, 36 Beav. 3.

4. Money admitted by executor to be in hands of his partners is in his own hands sufficient for the purpose of being ordered into court. Johnson v. Aston, 1 Sim. & S. 73.

5. B. & T. being partners as sharebrokers, T. contracts for the purchase of shares, and enters into arrangements with a bank to advance money to pay for them. The partnership is dissolved and notice given to the bank, after which the bank, without the authority or knowledge of B., advances money to pay for the shares, which are thereupon deposited with it, and afterwards sells the shares:—Held, that B. is bound by the acts of T. Butchart v. Dresser, 1 W. R. 178; 10 Hare 453; 4 De G. M. & G. 452.

6. One of the two partners, after the dissolution of the partnership, received the rents of a debtor to the partnership, and retained out of them the amount of the debt, and he stated that he did this on an understanding that the debtor should have credit for the sum so retained, and that he considered the debt to have been satisfied by these moneys; but no account had been settled between him and the debtor:—Held, that, as against the other partner, the debt to the partnership was not to be considered as satisfied. Pritchard v. Draper, 1 Russ. & M. 191; Taml. 332.

Declarations of one partner as to the payment subsequently to a dissolution of a debt due to the partnership, are admissible against the other partner. Ib.

4. Of Retired against Continuing Partner.

7. Distinction between capital and stock in trade, with reference to the rights of retiring and continuing partners. Crawshay v. Collins, 1 Jac. & Walk. 278.

8. Where A. and B., two partners having one interest in the return proceeds of a foreign consignment, dissolve partnership, and agree that their interest shall be vested in B., and afterwards separate fiats being issued against each the assignee of A. assigned all his interest in the said proceeds to B., though no notice of the transfer had been given to the foreign consignees:—Held, that the proceeds belonged to the separate estate of B. Exp. Birley, Re Krauss, 2 M. D. & De G. 354. And see 1 M. D. & De G. 387.

9. A partner continuing the business took an assignment of all the stock, etc., and covenanted to indemnify the retiring partner from the debts then owing from the partnership. The continuing partner became bankrupt and obtained his certificate, and subsequently an action was commenced against the retiring partner upon an acceptance of the partnership; judgment was obtained against him, and he paid the debt and costs:—Held, that no action would lie against the bankrupt upon the covenant, since under 49 Geo. 3, c. 121, s. 8, the retiring partner might, on his liability, have resorted to and proved his debt under the commission, and was therefore barred by the certificate. Wood v. Dodgson, 2 Rose 47.

10. Retired partner, with covenant of indemnity against the debts, in consideration of assigning his share of the property, admitted under a commission against the remaining partner to prove a joint debt paid by him, indemnifying the joint estate against the joint debts. Exp. Ogilby, 3 Ves. & B. 133; 2 Rose 177.

11. Lien of a retiring partner under an agreement for dissolution; not against the creditor of the other, claiming either under a title given to him, or, in case of bankruptcy, property left in his order and disposition within statute 21 Jac. 1, c. 19, s. 11. Exp. Rowlandson, 2 Ves. & B. 173; 1 Rose 416.

Joint creditors have no lien on the partnership effects until execution, which may be joint or several; their equity, after dissolution, depends on the right of the partners. Ib.

12. A former partner, there being partnership debts unpaid, cannot petition to prove the balance of accounts; à fortiori, not to stay certificate. Exp. Robinson, Re Case, 4 Dea. & Ch. 499.

13. Where upon a dissolution of partnership one partner, who was the defendant, undertook for a salary the winding-up of the affairs:—Held, that he was not solely chargeable for loss arising from delaying the sale of the effects, the other partner not having exercised the right, which the Court held he still had, of compelling a sale at the proper time. Cragg v. Ford, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 280.

14. Upon the dissolution of a partnership, a deed was executed, whereby the retiring partner assigned the debts to the continuing partners, giving them an irrevocable power of attorney to receive them, and covenanting not to interfere in their collection. The surviving partners continued their dealings with one of the debtors to the old firm, and, without the sanction of the retiring partner, took a security in their own name for the aggregate amount of the old and new debt:—Held, that they thereupon made themselves personally responsible to the retiring partner for his share of the debt; held, also, that they would have been equally liable as partners, independently of the deed. Lees v. Laforest, 14 Beav. 250.

1. If, upon dissolution of partnership, it is agreed that certain articles of partnership stock shall become exclusive property of one of the partners, and that a certain fund shall be applied in payment of debts, and that fund proves insufficient:—Held, that the other partner has no lien on those articles for the deficiency. Lingen v. Simpson, 1 Sim. & S. 600.

2. Deed by which A., B., and C., partners in trade, in consideration of 4,000*l.* paid to them by D., in augmentation of their capital, agree to admit him into partnership with them for a term; it was also agreed that A. should receive in lieu of profits a clear sum of 560*l.* per annum, and all the property of the concern was charged with the payment of this sum quarterly, and of the 4,000*l.* at the determination of the partnership; A., B., and C. were to pay rent, taxes, wages, and the other outgoings of the trade, which was to be carried on by them, and in their names only, and D. was not to be required to attend to it; D. was at liberty to retire on giving twelve months' notice, and on his retiring, or at the end of the term, the 4,000*l.* and the arrears (if any) of the 560*l.* per annum were to be paid to him by A., B., and C., by instalments to be secured by their bonds, and they were to indemnify him from the debts of the partnership:—Held, that this deed was not usurious. Fereday v. Hordern, Jac. 144.

3. Agreement, on dissolution of partnership, that the continuing partner shall, in consideration of an assignment to him of the partnership property, including a lease of the premises on which the business was carried on, secure to the retiring partner the payment of an annuity, by bond conditioned to be void on payment of the annuity, or in case he should at any time after the expiration of the then existing lease be dispossessed of and compelled to quit the premises, without any collusion, contrivance, act, or default of his own. The continuing partner obtains a renewal of the lease, and afterwards becomes a bankrupt, and the renewed lease passes under an assignment of his estate. This is not such an eviction or dispossession as was contemplated by the agreement, in the event of which the annuity was to cease. Holyland v. De Mendez, 3 Meriv. 184.

4. Plaintiff and defendant (partners) agreed to dissolve, and that the defendant, on payment of half value of effects, should take the whole; the defendant took possession, but failed to make payment, and had begun to pull down buildings. Injunction to restrain him refused. Cofton v. Horner, 5 Price 537.

5. A partner having retired under an agreement of indemnity against partnership claims was allowed a sum of money recovered by the sentence of a foreign court for customs, without examination of the merits. Kennedy v. Cassillis, 2 Swan. 325.

6. Under covenant to a retiring partner as soon as conveniently could be to pay the debts and indemnify him against them, broken by death of covenantor, leaving debts undischarged; those debts being paid by covenantee, become a specialty debt against the administrator. Musson v. May, 3 Ves. & B. 194.

7. Pinkus having claimed to be a co-proprietor with Paynter in gasworks, which the latter had erected and was about to sell to the East London Gas Light Company, then about to be formed, it was agreed between them, for the purpose of ending their disputes respecting the ownership of the gasworks, that Paynter should be at liberty to sell the works at such price as he pleased, upon accounting to Pinkus for the value of the works, at a certain rate, and that Paynter should hold shares for Pinkus in the company, to the value of 2,000*l.*, and retain them in his own name for two years. The East London Gas Light Company was formed, and purchased the gasworks from Paynter. Pinkus filed a bill against Paynter, and obtained a decree for specific performance of their agreement, which Paynter had resisted. In the meantime, before the decree was made, the East London Gas Light Company was regularly dissolved, and the gasworks were sold to the Radcliffe Gas Light and Coke Company. Pinkus then filed a supplemental bill against the Radcliffe Company, the former directors of the East London Gas Light Company, and the assignees of Paynter, he having become bankrupt, to establish a lien upon the gasworks for what should be found due to him under the former decree, as well as to carry out the former decree against all these parties. The bill was dismissed, with costs, against all the parties, except the assignees of Paynter. Pinkus v. Ratcliffe Gas Light & Coke Co., 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 244; 1 H. L. Ca. 309.

8. The partnership between A. and B. was dissolved, and A. retired. A., by deed, agreed to execute an assignment to B. of the partnership assets (part of which consisted of a policy, of which the partners were assignees), and B. was to covenant to pay the debts and indemnify A. against them. No further deed was executed. A. died, and B. afterwards assigned the policy to a purchaser who had notice of the deed. A.'s executors were afterwards compelled to pay partnership debts which ought to have been discharged by B. The policy being adversely claimed by the purchaser and by A.'s executors:—Held, that though A. and his executors were entitled to pursue any portion of the partnership property in the hands of B., and have it applied in payment of the partnership debts, yet that they had no such right as against the purchaser from B., though with notice, for he was not bound to see to the application of the purchase money. Re Langmead, 20 Beav. 20; 24 L. J., Ch., 237; 1 Jur., N. S., 198. Affirmed 7 De G. M. & G. 353; 2 Jur., N. S., 1058; 24 L. J., Ch., 589; 3 W. R. 602.

Held also that the deed of dissolution created no charge upon the policy in favour of the retiring partner. Semble, if a charge had been created, the continuing partner could have given a good discharge to the purchaser, the debts not being scheduled in the deed. S. C. 3 W. R. 260.

1. As to the equity of set-off for partnership debts paid by a continuing partner, against a legal debt due from him to a retired partner, upon a bond for a private loan. Lee v. Flood, 2 Sm. & G. 250; 2 W. R. 348.

One of two partners as bankers lent to his partner a sum of money on the joint and several bond and covenant of the borrower and another person in 1821, and died in 1833; the obligor continued to pay interest till 1843, when he died, and his executor paid interest up to 1847. On the death of the obligee in 1833, some settlement of the banking affairs was come to between his executor and the surviving partner and another subsequently admitted, which the executor alleged was final, but which was disputed. The executor of the obligee then became a partner, and other changes subsequently took place in the firm, each new firm taking on itself all the former liabilities and assets. In 1847 the firm in which the executor had continued a partner became bankrupt. In a suit for the administration of the estate of the obligor, certain creditors of the firm, on promissory notes given prior to 1833, whose debts had been adopted by the successive firms, were admitted as separate creditors of the estate. The executor of the obligee was admitted as a creditor for the loan, and no equitable set-off for contribution was allowed, none having been established in respect of the said estate of the obligee being separately liable to the creditors, although it was probable that in winding up the partnership affairs, some claim by the obligor's estate against the estate of the obligee might be established. Ib.

2. The payment of the expenses of advertisements out of partnership funds is not necessarily a ground for giving to each partner, at the expiration of the partnership, a continuing share in the advantages of publicity produced by the advertisement; the partnership having had, during its continuance, the benefit of the expenditure. Morison v. Moat, 9 Hare 266; 15 Jur. 787; 20 L. J., Ch., 513. See 16 Jur. 321.

3. In 1856 A., B., and C. were partners. B. retired in 1860, when a deed of arrangement was executed. C. retired in 1862, when another similar deed was executed. In 1863 A. filed a bill against B. and C., charging misrepresentation and fraud, and seeking to have the partnership dissolved in 1860 or in 1862, or that it might be wound up under the direction of the Court; and for other relief:—A demurrer by B. to the bill for want of equity was overruled; but one by him for multifariousness was allowed, with leave to amend. Matthews v. Reeves, 11 W. R. 528; 8 L. T., N. S., 298.

4. Upon the dissolution of a partnership between G. and one B., a deed was entered into to settle the rights of the parties. It contained a clause to the effect that, should the respondent succeed in obtaining from the Government a remission, in whole or in part, of an amount due from the firm for "timber dues," secured by a bond, he should account for, and pay to G., one-half of the amount so remitted. The Government, upon the application of B., subsequently remitted upon the bond an excess of rents paid by the firm:—Held, that the assignee of G. was entitled under the agreement to have the benefit of this remission. Burstall v. Baptist, 21 W. R. 485.

5. Where a partnership at will had been dissolved by one partner by notice, the Court restrained that partner from excluding the other partner from the partnership premises pending the winding-up of the concern, and from taking any advantage of his position with respect to the joint clients of the firm. Roberts v. Everhardt, 2 W. R. 125; 1 Kay 148; 23 L. J., Ch., 201; 2 Eq. Rep. 780.

6. The trade duly continued by surviving partner, to wind up the concern, is not the partnership trade, but in the nature of a trust, and, if carried on otherwise as a continuing trade, it is at the risk of the surviving partner, liable to the option of the representative of the deceased partner. Booth v. Parks, 1 Moll. 465.

I. POWERS OF MAJORITY.

7. The majority of partners never represent the whole body, except where there has been a voice called for from the minority. The Court will generally take the opinion of the minority to have been fairly overruled. Const v. Harris, T. & R. 527.

A partner complaining that the other partners do not do their duty towards him must be ready to do his duty towards them. Id. 524.

The act of a majority of partners is the act of all, provided all are consulted, and the majority are acting bonâ fide. Partners must act upon the joint opinion of all, and cannot exclude the judgment of any one. Id. 525.

A party taking the share of a partner in a concern cannot be let loose from the obligations that partner is under to the concern. Id. 521.

8. Partnership amongst a number of persons to be arranged by a committee of five, and by general meetings of which the vote of a majority was to be binding, with a provision that any one wishing to retire should first offer his share to the committee at a certain price, and, if they declined to buy, might sell it to any other person:—Held, that the majority were not able to sell the whole concern without the consent of all. Chapple v. Cadell, Jac. 537.

1. If six persons join in a partnership of life assurance, it seems clear that neither the majority, nor any select part of them, nor five out of the six, can engage that partnership in marine insurances, unless the contract of partnership expressly or impliedly gives that power. Natusch v. Irving, 2 Coop. C. C. 358.

But quære, if a part of the six openly and publicly profess their intention to engage the partnership in another concern, and clearly and distinctly bring this to the knowledge of one or more of the other partners, and such one or more of the other partners can be clearly shown to have acquiesced in such intention, and to have permitted the other partners to enter upon and engage themselves and the body in such new projects. Ib.

The principles which a Court would act upon in the case of a partnership of six must, as far as the nature of things will admit, be applied to a partnership of 600. Ib.

They who seek to embark a partner in a business not originally part of the partnership concern must make out clearly that he did expressly or tacitly acquiesce. Ib.

II. EXPULSION OF PARTNER.

2. It is not competent to any number of persons in a partnership (unless they show a contract rendering it competent to them) formed for specified purposes, if they propose to form a partnership for very different purposes, to effect that formation by calling upon some of their partners to receive their subscribed capital and interest, and quit the concern; and in effect, by compelling them merely to retire upon such terms, so to form a new company. Natusch v. Irving, 2 Coop. C. C. 358.

The right of a partner is to hold his partners to the specified purposes whilst the partnership continues, and not to rest upon indemnities with respect to what he has not contracted to engage in. Ib.

That a dissatisfied partner may sell his shares for double what he originally gave for them, is no reason for compelling him to part with them. Ib.

3. Articles of partnership provided that it should be lawful for the holders of two-thirds or more of the partnership shares for the time being to expel any partner, by giving him notice thereof under their hands in the form thereby prescribed; and that immediately after giving such notice, a notice of the dissolution as to the expelled partner should be signed by the partners, and published, with power to any other of the expelling partners to sign the name of the expelled partner; and it was provided, that if a partner became bankrupt, insolvent, or was expelled, his interest should cease, as to profit and loss, as if he had died on the day of such bankruptcy, insolvency, or expulsion; and that the amount of his share should be ascertained, and payment secured, by the same arrangement as would have been applicable in case of his decease; and it was also provided, that the shares of retired, deceased, bankrupt, insolvent, or expelled partners should be disposed of in such way, either to or between some or all of the continuing partners, or by the admission of a new partner or partners, as the holders of a majority of shares should determine. The articles provided, that, in the case of making certain arrangements, there should previously be a meeting of the partners in committee, but did not express that any such meeting should be necessary previous to the exercise of the power to expel. The article also provided for the adjustment of the partner's accounts within sixty days after the 30th of June in each year, when an inventory of all the stock, debts, etc., should be made, with proper allowances, so as to ascertain the partnership property, profit and loss, and the shares of the respective partners, which shares were to be carried to their respective accounts; and it was provided, that the share of any partner who might wish to retire, if his retirement were consented to by the majority of the others, was to be taken by the continuing partners at the amount at which the same stood at the time for making the yearly rest or settlement next preceding, and that the surviving partners were also to take the shares of a deceased partner at the amount at which the same stood at such next preceding yearly rest or settlement:—Held, that the power of expulsion of a partner might be exercised by two-thirds of the partners, without any previous meeting of the partners in committee upon the question, and without any cause being assigned for such expulsion; but that the power must be exercised with good faith, and not against the truth and honour of the contract. That such a power must be understood to exist, not for the benefit of any particular parties holding two-thirds or more of the shares, but for the benefit of the whole society or partnership. That it could not be exercised merely to enable the continuing partners to appropriate to themselves the share of the expelled partner at a fixed value less than the true value. That the power was not properly exercised at the exclusive instance of one partner, and, in consequence of his representation to the other partners, made without the knowledge and behind the back of the partner who was to be expelled, and without giving to such partner the opportunity of stating his case, and of removing any misunderstanding on the part of his co-partners. Blisset v. Daniel, 10 Hare 493; 18 Jur. 122; 1 W. R. 529; 1 Eq. Rep. 484.

4. Partnership articles, executed in 1864, gave power to the majority, upon not less than six months' notice, to enforce the retirement of any partner if they should be so desirous, and also power to the others to expel any partner immediately on his committing certain specified offences, and also provided for partial dissolution on retirement or death of any partner, and for total dissolution, and for the taking and settlement of annual accounts by the partners, and for the ascertainment, under the provisions for taking the annual accounts, of the sum standing to the credit of any partner going out on any partial dissolution. Accounts were taken annually, but not in accordance with the articles. In 1873 a six months' notice of enforced retirement which in fact was informal, was given to the plaintiff, who accepted an offer contained therein to become a partner again in the firm subject to a change in his position, and to certain restrictions, and to the cesser of his interest in the event of proceedings on his part similar to those which led to the notice, the existing articles to be "taken as the guide of a partnership so formed." No new articles were drawn up:—Held, that the power of enforced retirement at the desire of the majority was retained in the new partnership. Steuart v. Gladstone, 47 L. J., Ch., 423; 38 L. T. 557; 26 W. R. 657. Affirmed 10 L. R., Ch. D., 626; 40 L. T. 145; 27 W. R. 512.

Held, also, that the notice being valid when given could not be invalidated by an error in accounts to be taken subsequently, and that the accounts must be taken by the Court. Ib.

III. INTRODUCTION OF NEW PARTNER.

See also IV. infra.

1. By articles of partnership it was agreed that, except as thereinafter provided, none of the partners should hire any clerk or servant in the business, but T., one of the partners, might introduce two of his sons as pupils or clerks, at a salary, such sons to have an option of becoming partners. T. introduced two sons, the second of whom died without becoming a partner:—Held, that T. could not introduce or employ a third son as pupil or clerk. Watney v. Trist, 45 L. J., Ch., 412.

Held, also, that an action to restrain the breach of a partnership covenant would lie, though the plaintiff did not pray for a dissolution. Ib.

2. A. assigned his business to three of his clerks, reserving a share of the profits for the benefit of a son, to be nominated by him, and who, on attaining twenty-one, was to have the option of being admitted a partner. The articles of partnership, to which A. was a party, gave power to the partners to dissolve with mutual consent, and also a power to any partner to withdraw, so long as stated intervals were left between the retirement of the partners. The two existing partners (one of whom had come in under a subsequent deed), just before the son came of age, announced a dissolution of the partnership, and recommenced the same description of business under another name:—Held, that without the consent of A. the attempted dissolution was not effectual, as it was contrary to the intention of the original articles, and subversive of the rights of A. Allhusen v. Borries, 15 W. R. 739.

3. If two partners take a third partner, without specifying the terms on which he becomes such partner, he has the same rights, and is subject to the same liabilities as the two original partners; the terms and conditions of the partnership which bind them, bind him, unless a new contract be made between them, and so also, if the conditions of his becoming partner are partially set forth, then to the extent that they are not specified and involved by necessary reference therein, he will be bound by the terms of the partnership contract affecting the two original partners with whom he associates himself. Austen v. Boys, 24 Beav. 598; 3 Jur., N. S., 1285; 27 L. J., Ch., 243. Affirmed 4 Jur., N. S., 719; 27 L. J., Ch., 714; 2 De G. & J. 626.

By partnership articles entered into in 1838 between A., B., and C., it was stipulated that A. should be at liberty at any future time to introduce D. into the partnership business. The articles contained no provision for the case of a retiring partner. In 1839 A. retired from the firm without being paid anything for the goodwill of the business, and in September 1846 B. and C. entered into new articles of partnership for a period of seven years from the 1st September 1846. The eleventh clause of the articles provided that if any partner or partners retired, the continuing partner or partners was or were to pay such retiring partner or partners for his or their interest and share and goodwill in the business, the fair marketable value thereof. In 1849 A. exercised the power of introducing D. into the partnership, at which time a memorandum was drawn up the effect that from the 1st September 1850 to the 1st September 1853 D. was to take one-fifth of the profit and loss of the business, from which latter date he was to share equally with the other partners; and that in case of the death or retirement of either of the two senior partners before the 1st September 1853, his share was to be divided into thirds, the surviving senior partner to take two-thirds and D. one-third. This memorandum was signed by B. and D. simpliciter, but C. added the qualification, that so far as the memorandum fixed D.'s share and position he agreed thereto, but that as between himself and B. the memorandum was not to annul or prejudice the existing articles of July 1846, the stipulations of which, as between himself and B. were to remain in force. At the time of signing this memorandum D. was not aware of the stipulation in the articles of 1846 as to retiring partners. On the 29th August 1853, two days before the partnership would have expired by effluxion of time under the articles of September 1846, C. gave notice to dissolve the partnership on the following day, and the dissolution took place accordingly on the 30th August 1853. He filed a bill against B. and D. to take the partnership accounts, and claimed to be entitled, under the eleventh article of September 1846, to be paid for his share of the goodwill of the business:—Held, that D. was not bound by the eleventh clause of the articles of 1846. Ib.

Held, also, that as between C. and B., the articles of July 1846 remained in force; that the clause for retirement did not have any operation after the 1st September 1853; and therefore that C. was entitled to be paid for the goodwill of the business only in respect of the time which elapsed between the dissolution of the partnership and the 1st September 1853. Ib.

IV. TRANSMISSION OF SHARES.

1. By Will, 5486.
2. By Sale to Firm or Third Parties, 5488.
3. By Mortgage, 5490.

1. By Will.

1. Partnership stipulation that a son of one partner, or, in case of his minority, the executor, should, on the death of such partner, succeed to his share. The Court, on the terms of the partnership deed, considered it an option, and not an obligation. Madgwick v. Wimble, 6 Beav. 495; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 387; 7 Jur. 661.

2. Articles of partnership do not survive for the benefit of executors, etc., without an express provision for such purpose. Pearce v. Chamberlain, 2 Ves. 33.

3. Where there is a stipulation that partnership should exist for nineteen years, and in case of death of either partner, his widow, etc., should become partner, etc.:—Held, that it is not imperative on widow, etc., to be a partner, but optional with her, etc., and that she, etc., was entitled to reasonable time to look into concern, so as to elect, but not to have an account taken. Pigott v. Bayley, M'Clel. & Y. 569.

4. The option reserved to the executors of a deceased partner to enter into a partnership with a surviving partner must be accompanied by the obligation on the part of the surviving partner to admit them; and, unless the option is confined to the representatives of the partner who shall die first, the surviving partner must have the option of entering into the partnership with the representatives of the deceased partner, with the same accompanying obligation on their part to admit him. Downs v. Collins, 6 Hare 436.

5. A., B., and C., carrying on business in co-partnership for a term which would expire on the 19th February 1807, under articles which empowered A., in case of his death during the term, to bequeath his share of the trade in favour of his wife or children. A. died, having bequeathed his share of the concern to his executors, in trust for his children. The business continued to be carried on under the same firm as before, and his executors interfered in the management and shared in the profits:—Held, that the partnership which carried on the business after the death of A. was a new partnership. Pemberton v. Oakes, 4 Russ. 154; 6 L. J., Ch., 35.

6. Testator, after giving life interests in stock to each of his daughters, afterwards the principal among his grandchildren in pursuance of a power in articles of partnership, appointed his executors to carry on the trade in his room, with power to dissolve or nominate any other person; and gave them his share of the capital and all freehold and leasehold in trust to carry on the trade as long as they should think fit, and after expiration of partnership, to sell the estates, and with the produce and profits of trade and all the rest of his estate to form a fund to accumulate twelve years; then among the grandchildren living. By codicil he substituted his partner, who was his son-in-law, in the room of one executor removed, and desired that if his executors should continue trade, and his grandsons T. and J. should attain twenty-one, his executors would nominate each a partner for a quarter, when executor should think fit, with legacies at the same time to sink into the estate, if they should decline the partnership or die before twenty-one; executors to advance any further sum they might want to carry on trade; the rest of the property among all the grandchildren, except T. and J. By another codicil he left it entirely to executors to appoint J. or not; if not appointed his legacy to be void:—Held, that T. and J. were both entitled to be partners and to legacies at twenty-one, one executor (their father) being for admitting them, the other two against it; but if all had without fraud united in declaring J. unfit, they might have excluded him; in which case he could have taken nothing under this devise. Wainwright v. Waterman, 1 Ves. J. 311.

7. In 1829 A. entered into partnership with three other parties. All the capital was found by A., and he was to have eleven-twentieths of the profits, and the other parties were to take the remainder. The partnership was to continue till 1845; and, if A. died before that time, he was authorised to name one of his sons to succeed him, as to five-twentieths, and A. was to leave in the concern, or his son was to bring into it, a capital not exceeding 30,000*l.*, and the surviving partners were to give security on the property of the partnership, for such part of A.'s interest as should not be given to his son; and the amount was to be paid off by instalments. In 1832 it was agreed that A. should have only five-twentieths in the concern. A., by his will, after referring to his power of naming a son to succeed him, disposed of his interest to such one or two of his sons as his wife should appoint; and directed that part of the profits should be applied in the support of his sons during their minority, and the remainder be accumulated as part of his personal estate, and he appointed his wife and two of his partners executors. During A.'s life, the partnership borrowed money from their bankers, and deposited with them the title-deeds of the real estate belonging to the partnership; and a large amount was due to them at A.'s death. A.'s sons were minors, and the banking account was continued without any alteration. A.'s capital was continued in the concern, and a separate account was opened in the books of the firm with A.'s executors. In 1839 the firm became bankrupt, being largely indebted to the bank, but the amount which had been paid by them to the bank since A.'s death was greater than the sum due from A. and his partners at that time. Held, that, the executors were justified in continuing the testator's capital in the concern and that the lien of the bank being discharged by the payments made subsequently to A.'s death, A.'s representatives were entitled to a lien on the estate of the firm to the amount of the value of A.'s capital above 30,000*l.* Fearnside v. Derham, 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 354; 7 Jur. 633.

8. A tradesman bequeathed his residuary estate, including his stock in trade, to trustees with a direction to convert into money all such parts as should not consist of leaseholds or money in the funds; and to invest the same and pay the annual income to Sarah, his wife, and, after her decease, to Mary, his wife's sister, and after the decease of the survivor of Sarah and Mary, he gave his residuary estate to another person absolutely. After the date of the will Mary married, and her husband and the testator entered into partnership, under articles, which contained a proviso, that if the testator should die during the partnership, leaving a widow surviving, such widow might, if she should think fit, continue to carry on the partnership business with the surviving partner, and should be entitled to the testator's share in the profits and excess of capital; and if the testator should leave no widow, or his widow should not desire to enter the business, or if the other partner should die during the partnership, the surviving partner to take upon himself the partnership business and property, accounting and paying for the same as therein directed. The testator died, leaving his widow, who, under this provision, claimed his interest in the partnership:—Held, that the provision in the articles took the testator's share of the business wholly out of the provisions of the will, and that the widow became entitled under the partnership articles to such share. Page v. Cox, 10 Hare 163.

A trust may well be created in the absence of any expression importing confidence, and the obligation on the surviving partner created by the partnership articles, with reference to the legal interest in the partnership, did not in substance differ from a trust, and therefore the articles of partnership created a trust in favour of the wife, to arise on the death of the testator, leaving a widow surviving, which would attach on the property as it should then exist. Ib.

1. A testator was a member of a partnership at will in a bank, without any provision entitling the executor of a deceased partner to an interest in the goodwill of the concern. The credit in which the bank was rendered capital unnecessary, and at the testator's death the property of the concern exceeded its liabilities by a very small amount, the testator's share in which was far exceeded by the balance due from him to the bank on his private account as a customer. After his death the surviving partners admitted into the firm his son, who was his executor, but who was not admitted into the firm in that character, and the business continued to be carried on without any separation or appropriation of the partnership assets as they existed at the testator's death. In a suit against the executor for the administration of the testator's estate:—Held, that he was not accountable to the testator's estate for the profits which he had received as a partner in the bank. Simpson v. Chapman, 4 De G. M. & G. 154.

2. E. and H. were partners under articles. One of the terms was, that on the decease of either partner, his personal representative should have the power, within three months, of electing to continue the share of the deceased partner, and if he declined, then the business, stock in trade, etc., were to be valued, and the surviving partner was to take to the whole, giving security for the moiety late belonging to the deceased partner. E. died:—Held, that during the three months, or until E.'s personal representative should elect, the survivor, H., was to be prevented by injunction from carrying on the business in any other firm than what had been used in the life of E. Evans v. Hughes, 18 Jur. 691.

3. A partner destined his two sons to be taken into the partnership business, but one of them only availed himself of the intention, and entered into the partnership. There was an understanding that on the death of a partner the interest should be continued in his family. The son who had entered the concern having died, leaving several sons, and leaving his brother executor and trustee under his will, the brother nominated his own son to the business, to the exclusion of his nephews. On a bill by the widow of the deceased partner praying that the brother might be ordered to account for the benefit accrued to his son, which ought to have been enjoyed by the son of the deceased partner:—Held, that the widow, not having claimed the benefit of the nomination, and having acquiesced in the appointment made, could have no claim in equity. Vansittart v. Osborne, 20 W. R. 195.

4. By deed of the 29th October 1862, six persons, of whom the testator was one, formed a partnership by deed for seven years from the date of the deed, with a money capital of 30,900*l.*, to be contributed in equal shares. The deed provided that each partner should employ himself in or about the business, and carry on and manage the same to the greatest advantage; and that in case any of the partners should die before the expiration of the term of seven years, or in case at the expiration or other sooner determination of the partnership any of the partners should retire, and the others should be desirous of carrying on the business, the share of any partner so dying or retiring might, at the option of the others, be taken by them at a valuation, on giving a written notice of election within six months after such death or retirement; and that in case no such notice should be given, it should be deemed that the other partners had elected not to take the share of such deceased or retiring partner. Two of the partners died—one in 1865, and the other in 1867—and no notice of election to purchase either share was served by the surviving partners, but the business was continued by the survivors. By a deed of the 15th October 1869, made between the four surviving partners, one of whom was the testator, reciting the deed of 1862, the term of the partnership thereby created, and the deaths of the two deceased partners, and that the said partnership was still subsisting and consisted of the four surviving members of the firm, who were entitled to the stock in trade, etc., as expressed in the deed of 1862, it was agreed and declared that it should be competent to each of them, at any time during the continuance of the partnership, by deed or will, to nominate and appoint any male person, at his decease, to take his share in the said partnership and future profits thereof, with such amount of his capital therein as each of them respectively should think fit, such nomination to be valid though made during the minority of any such nominee, but not to take effect until he should have attained the age of twenty-one years; and that every such person should become and be accepted as a partner in the room and in respect of the share, etc., of the deceased whom he should so represent; and it was thereby also provided that, upon the expiration of the term of seven years, and upon the commencement of any new partnership between the parties, similar clauses and provisions should be inserted in the deed of partnership. The testator made his will, and thereby, having recited that under the deed of the 15th October 1869 he was entitled to nominate a successor, he appointed, in the event (which happened) of his not having male issue, his nephew, E. H., to be his successor in the firm, to the extent of 5,150*l.*, the testator's original capital in the firm; and in case the said E. H. should die, the testator, by his said will, appointed his nephew, M. H., as such successor. The testator died, leaving both his nephews him surviving, but no male issue. E. H. died during his minority. M. H. was still a minor. The partnership was wound up, and the testator's share in the partnership assets was transferred into court in the present action:—Held, (1) that though the term of seven years, created by the deed of October 1862, had expired before the testator's death, the right of nomination created by the deed of 1869 still existed, being imported into the terms of the partnership at will springing out of the former one; (2) that E. H., having died under twenty-one, did not take any vested interest in the partnership, or its capital or property; (3) that the testator had the power of appointing a substitute for E. H.; (4) that by the words "in case the said E. H. should die" the testator referred to death under twenty-one, and that on the death of E. H. under twenty-one M. H. became substituted for him, and that upon M. H.'s attaining that age he would become entitled to the sum in court, representing the amount of the testator's capital in the firm. Cuffe v. Murtagh, 7 L. R., Ir., 411.

2. By Sale to Firm or Third Parties.

1. Partnership amongst a number of persons to be arranged by a committee of five, and by general meetings of which the vote of the majority was to be binding, with a provision that anyone wishing to retire should first offer his share to the committee at a certain price, and, if they declined to buy, might sell it to any other person:—Held, that the majority were not able to sell the whole concern without the consent of all; but that if all but two were desirous of retiring, they might sell their own shares without making an offer of them to the committee. Chapple v. Cadell, Jac. 537.

2. A deed of partnership (in the Morning Herald newspaper) contained a clause that no proprietor should dispose of his share, without first offering the same for sale, by notice, in a writing under his hand, to the other proprietors, at a certain monthly meeting. It had been usual to enter at such meeting a notice of this offer in a book, open to the inspection of all the proprietors both present and absent, but not to serve any notice personally:—Held, whether regard were had to the words of the deed, or to the mode of acting, that such entry was a sufficient notice. Glassington v. Thwaites, Coop. temp. Brougham, 115.

3. A partner may give a third person an interest in his share, but cannot make him a partner. Bray v. Fromont, 6 Madd. 5.

4. By an agreement between some of the partners in a colliery, reciting that it was apprehended it would be competent for one partner to determine the joint interest, and bring the partnership property to sale, and that the death of any partner would have that effect, and that they were desirous that their interest should be so far several that the share of any partner should be transmissible to his representatives, and that the partnership interests should not be determined, and the entire property sold, without the consent of the majority in value, but each should be competent to sell his own share only; it was agreed that each of them should hold to himself, transmissible to his own representatives or assigns, an aliquot share of certain of the partnership property, and that their joint holding should not be subject to the ordinary terms applying to partnership property, so as to entitle any one of them to a sale, without the concurrence of such majority, or to dissolve the partnership, or so as to cause a total dissolution of partnership by the death of any one of them:—Held, that this was not an agreement by the parties, that the representatives of a partner after his death should continue partners with the survivors, and contribute to the working of the colliery on their joint account; but was only an agreement that none of the partners, or their representatives, should be entitled to a sale of more than his own share of the partnership property. Tatam v. Williams, 3 Hare 347.

5. Semble, that where partnership articles provide that a partner may transfer his shares, they mean that he may so transfer them as to put the transferee in his place, as to antecedent liability. Mayhew's case, 5 De G. M. & G. 837.

6. Partnership articles provided that no partner should sell his shares except as follows:—That the partner desirous of selling should offer the shares to his co-partners collectively; if they should decline, then to the partners desirous of collectively purchasing; and if none such, then to the partners individually; after which he might sell to a stranger. One of four partners offered his shares to the other three collectively (one of whom to his knowledge would not purchase). The remaining two declared their willingness to accept, and were told that no offer was made to them:—Held, that the offer to the three enured for the benefit of the two, and specific performance decreed accordingly. Homfray v. Fothergill, 1 L. R., Eq., 567; 14 L. T., N. S., 49.

7. By partnership articles between A., B., and C., it was agreed, that, upon the sale by a partner of his share in a mining concern, his co-partners should have a right of pre-emption. A. gave to B. notice of his intention to sell, after which B. became a lunatic, and the option not having been exercised for some time, A. sold to C.:—Held, that B.'s right of pre-emption was lost. Rowlands v. Evans, Williams v. Rowlands, 30 Beav. 302; 8 Jur., N. S., 88; 31 L. J., Ch., 265; 10 W. R. 186; 5 L. T., N. S., 628.

8. Two partners in a brewery, part of the property of which consisted of freehold and copyhold estates, covenanted that the survivor should have the option of purchasing the share of the deceased partner in the property of the partnership, at a valuation; and the survivor accordingly exercised such option, and paid to the executors of the deceased partner the amount at which his share was valued. The share of the deceased partner and his legal estate in part of the freehold and copyhold estates of the partnership descended or became vested in his infant heir; but the Court refused, upon petition or motion under the Trustee Act 1850, without suit, to declare the infant heir a trustee for the surviving partner. Re Burt, 9 Hare 289.

1. P., H., and J., for working a colliery, entered into a partnership, and by the articles it was stipulated, that if either should suffer his share to be taken in execution, and the others or other should thereupon give notice of their or his desire that the partnership should cease, then at the expiration of a month from the time of such notice the partnership should cease. The working of the colliery was commenced, but before the coal was reached a creditor of J. brought an action, and issued execution against him to recover 283*l.*, and his share or interest in the colliery was taken in execution under a fi. fa. Notice of dissolution of partnership was given by P. and H. J.'s share or interest was put up by the sheriff and sold by auction. At the sale P. and H. became the purchasers of J.'s share or interest for 500*l.* Of this, a balance of 164*l.*, after paying the execution creditor's claim and expenses, was received by J. The sheriff subsequently, as far as he lawfully might or could, assigned to P. and H. all the estate, share, and interest of J. A bill was filed by P. and H., praying for a declaration that the partnership was dissolved, or if it appeared that the sale did not operate as an effectual transfer, for an account of the partnership dealings. J. filed a cross bill, praying that the sale might be set aside:—Held, that the coal being nearly reached when the sale took place, some suspicion of misconduct and concealment attached to P. and H., and that the sale must be declared void. Perrens v. Johnson, Johnson v. Perrens, 3 Jur., N. S., 975. See Aspinall v. London & North-Western Railway Co., 11 Hare 325.

Semble, that in a case of this kind it is of the utmost importance to show that no suspicion or trace of misconduct can attach to the partners who have become purchasers of the share or interest of their partner. Ib.

In order to sustain the purchase by the solvent partners of their partner's share under a compulsory sale, their conduct must be free from all suspicion of unfairness. S. C. 3 Sm. & Giff. 419.

2. A prosperous company came to consist of three partners, A., B., and C., having equal shares. The contract of co-partnership contained, inter alia, a clause that it should not be in the power of any of the partners to assign all or any part of their shares or interest in the capital, stock, or profits of the concern to any person or persons, or give them a right to inspect the company's books, or to interfere in any way with the business; and should any such assignment be made the same was declared of no effect so far as regards the company. There was also a clause that on the retirement of a partner the remaining partners should have power to buy his interest at the amount standing to his credit at the last balance. A. entered into an agreement by which he sold to B. his whole interest. A.'s name remained on the books, and he signed all deeds relating to the business till his death seven years after. C. was not till then informed of the agreement. He then claimed to participate on the grounds of (1), an alleged mandate to B. to purchase for the company A.'s interest; (2), that the agreement could only be legally made under the contract of co-partnership with his consent; and (3), that B. had secretly acquired a benefit for himself within the scope of the partnership business:—Held, that in point of fact no agreement had been made between B. and C. to the effect that B. was to buy A.'s interest for the partnership. And in respect to the articles of co-partnership, they did not prevent the agreement being made, and otherwise it was perfectly legal. Therefore C. was not entitled to any benefit under it. Cassels v. Stewart, 6 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 64; 29 W. R. 636.

3. One partner may agree with retiring partner to give him a sum for concern, though they know it to be insolvent, no fraud being intended. Exp. Peake, 1 Madd. 346.

4. Articles of partnership having provided that on dissolution by death, notice, or misconduct of a partner, the remaining partner should have the option of taking his share at a valuation, payable by yearly instalments in the course of seven years; and that on the bankruptcy or insolvency of a partner, the partnership should be immediately void as to him; by a deed, four years subsequent, the partners declared (after a recital that such was their intention in the articles) that in the event of bankruptcy or insolvency, the same arrangement should be practised as on dissolution by death, notice, or misconduct: one of the partners having become bankrupt within a few months after the execution of the latter deed, his assignees are not bound by it. Whether a provision in articles of partnership, that on the bankruptcy of a partner his share shall be taken by the solvent partners, at a sum to be fixed by valuation, and payable by instalments in a course of years, is not void by the statutes concerning bankrupts, quære. Wilson v. Greenwood, 1 Swan. 471; 1 Wils. 223.

5. A partnership deed of a mine provided, that in the event of the bankruptcy of any partner, an account was to be taken of his share and interest in the mine (other than his share in the lease of the mine, which was not to be valued), and the amount of such account paid to the parties entitled. A partner became bankrupt:—Held, that the clause was void as against his assignees, who were entitled to his share in the lease. Whitmore v. Mason, 2 John. & H. 204; 8 Jur., N. S., 278; 31 L. J., Ch., 433; 10 W. R. 168; 5 L. T., N. S., 631.

6. The vendor of a share in a partnership business filed a bill against the purchaser, who had taken possession, charging that he had grossly mismanaged the property, and destroyed its value, and praying that he might be declared to have accepted the title, and might be decreed to perform the contract specifically. The Court was of opinion that the title had not been accepted, and as a good title was not shown, a specific performance could not be decreed:—Held, that upon a record so framed, no accounts of enquiries could be directed as to the defendant's possession and management of the property, with a view to ascertain whether any and what sum ought to be paid, or compensation made by him to the plaintiff. Stevens v. Guppy, 3 Russ. 171; 6 L. J., Ch., 164.

1. A. and B., being in partnership as distillers, came to an agreement whereby R. was to buy out A., and it was agreed that if B. should, during A.'s life, be desirous of retiring, he should give notice, and A. should then have an option of re-purchase, on the terms that within six months after notice by A. the premises, goodwill, stock in trade, and all such of the subsisting contracts as A. should be willing to take, should be valued in "the usual way" by two valuers, one to be named by A., the other by B., or by the umpire of the two valuers. B. gave notice of his intention to retire, whereupon A. gave notice of his intention to re-purchase, and two valuers were appointed; but after the appointment B. refused to allow his valuer to proceed with the valuation:—Held, on the authority of Milnes v. Gery (14 Ves. 400), and Wilks v. Davis (3 Meriv. 507), that there was no contract between the parties which the Court could specifically enforce. Vickers v. Vickers, 4 L. R., Eq., 529; 36 L. J., Ch., 946.

2. A. being as a partner entitled to a share of extensive iron works, and of the lands and premises on which they were carried on, agreed for valuable consideration to assign to B. his interest in the property and business: B. interfered and acted as a partner, but afterwards he assigned his share and gave notice to the other partners that he had withdrawn from the business, and when called on to complete his purchase, resisted the performance of the contract successfully, on the ground that a good title could not be shown:—Held, that B., as between him and his other partners, was to be treated as a partner, and was to contribute to the partnership losses, until the time when he gave notice of his withdrawal from the concern, and assigned his share; that his liability ceased upon his assigning his share and giving notice to the other partners of his withdrawal from the concern; that the assignment of his share, though made to an insolvent person, was not for that reason the less effectual in putting an end to his liability; that the assignee not having been acknowledged a partner or permitted to act as such did not, by his acceptance of the assignment, incur any liability as between himself and the co-partners. Jefferys v. Smith, 3 Russ. 158.

3. By Mortgage.

3. A coal mine was worked by several persons under a lease, the articles of partnership giving each a power of pre-emption in case any partner wished to dispose of his share. A partner deposited an attested copy of a lease, in order to give an equitable mortgage on his share to a stranger.—Held, the Court could not make the usual order for sale, etc., as the partnership accounts must first be taken, which this Court has no jurisdiction to do, and the case was not free from doubt. Exp. Broadbent, Re Borron, 1 Mont. & A. 635; 4 Dea. & Ch. 3; 3 L. J., N. S., Bky., 95.

4. Semble, a proprietor of a theatre having demised his share without the consent of his co-proprietor may obtain an injunction to restrain his lessees from doing any act prejudicial to such co-proprietor. Const v. Harris, T. & R. 529.

5. A partnership for a term of years having expired, L., one of the retiring partners, having occasion to borrow 20,000*l.* of the plaintiffs, wrote to them a letter, the substance being, that the amount of his capital in the late partnership, clear of claims, might be taken roughly at 25,000*l.*; and that he had been informed that a portion of the balance at credit with C. & Co. (in which firm L. was a partner), on account of the late firm, would be appropriated towards the payment of the same. By the same letter L. authorized B., one of his late partners, acting for the firm, to pay to the plaintiffs the amount of his capital, and bound himself to give the plaintiffs a full and perfect lien thereon, such as they might think necessary to secure to them an exclusive title to the balance. B. wrote to the plaintiffs, through L., stating that, in compliance with L.'s letter, he had instructed C. & Co. to transfer to the plaintiffs, from the surplus partnership assets to B. & Co. in their hands, 5,000*l.*, and he engaged to pay to the plaintiffs the remaining balance of L.'s capital with them. Shortly afterwards L. gave the plaintiffs his promissory note for 20,000*l.*, and sent B.'s letter as a collateral security. C. & Co. afterwards became bankrupt, and the promissory note of L. was afterwards dishonoured. The plaintiffs then applied to the continuing partners of the late firm of B. & Co. for payment, and they claimed to be allowed, accounting for L.'s share, to deduct the 5,000*l.* which he had authorized B. to direct C. & Co. to pay to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs, on the other hand, alleged that there never was a sum of 5,000*l.* with C. & Co. on account of the surplus assets of B. & Co., and claimed the whole of L.'s share of the assets of B. & Co., without deducting the 5,000*l.*:—Held, that they were entitled to recover the whole amount of L.'s share to the extent of 25,000*l.*, without deducting the 5,000*l.* Glyn v. Hood, 5 Jur., N. S., 1117. Affirmed 6 Jur., N. S., 153; 29 L. J., Ch., 204; 8 W. R. 248.

The bill was filed in 1855, after the deaths of L. and B.:—Held, that there were no laches. Ib.

6. A mortgagee of shares in a partnership is entitled to the usual foreclosure decree in respect of them. The mortgaged shares will only be affected by such liabilities as are thrown upon them by reason of some agreement in force at the time of the execution of the mortgage. Redmayne v. Foster, 2 L. R., Eq., 467; 35 L. J., Ch., 847; 14 W. R. 825.

Where a partnership deed gave to the several partners a right of pre-emption of any shares which might be sold, the Court, on a bill by the mortgagee of certain shares, made the usual foreclosure decree against one of the partners, but in the event of his being absolutely foreclosed, gave leave to any of the other partners to redeem the plaintiff before a given day. Ib.

Each partner being at liberty to buy the mortgaged shares is properly made a party to such a suit, on the ground that he is entitled to see that the accounts affecting the mortgaged shares are properly taken. Ib.

7. A bankrupt, while in partnership with K., deposits a lease with a creditor, and the share of the deceased partner and his legal estate in part of the freehold and copyhold estates of the partnership descended or became vested in his infant heir; but the Court refused, upon petition or motion under the Trustee Act 1850, without suit, to declare the infant heir a trustee for the surviving partner. Re Burt, 9 Hare 289.

1. P., H., and J., for working a colliery, entered into a partnership, and by the articles it was stipulated, that if either should suffer his share to be taken in execution, and the others or other should thereupon give notice of their or his desire that the partnership should cease, then at the expiration of a month from the time of such notice the partnership should cease. The working of the colliery was commenced, but before the coal was reached a creditor of J. brought an action, and issued execution against him to recover 283*l.*, and his share or interest in the colliery was taken in execution under a fi. fa. Notice of dissolution of partnership was given by P. and H. J.'s share or interest was put up by the sheriff and sold by auction. At the sale P. and H. became the purchasers of J.'s share or interest for 500*l.* Of this, a balance of 164*l.*, after paying the execution creditor's claim and expenses, was received by J. The sheriff subsequently, as far as he lawfully might or could, assigned to P. and H. all the estate, share, and interest of J. A bill was filed by P. and H., praying for a declaration that the partnership was dissolved, or if it appeared that the sale did not operate as an effectual transfer, for an account of the partnership dealings. J. filed a cross bill, praying that the sale might be set aside:—Held, that the coal being nearly reached when the sale took place, some suspicion of misconduct and concealment attached to P. and H., and that the sale must be declared void. Perrens v. Johnson, Johnson v. Perrens, 3 Jur., N. S., 975. See Aspinall v. London & North-Western Railway Co., 11 Hare 325.

Semble, that in a case of this kind it is of the utmost importance to show that no suspicion or trace of misconduct can attach to the partners who have become purchasers of the share or interest of their partner. Ib.

In order to sustain the purchase by the solvent partners of their partner's share under a compulsory sale, their conduct must be free from all suspicion of unfairness. S. C. 3 Sm. & Giff. 419.

2. A prosperous company came to consist of three partners, A., B., and C., having equal shares. The contract of co-partnership contained, inter alia, a clause that it should not be in the power of any of the partners to assign all or any part of their shares or interest in the capital, stock, or profits of the concern to any person or persons, or give them a right to inspect the company's books, or to interfere in any way with the business; and should any such assignment be made the same was declared of no effect so far as regards the company. There was also a clause that on the retirement of a partner the remaining partners should have power to buy his interest at the amount standing to his credit at the last balance. A. entered into an agreement by which he sold to B. his whole interest. A.'s name remained on the books, and he signed all deeds relating to the business till his death seven years after. C. was not till then informed of the agreement. He then claimed to participate on the grounds of (1), an alleged mandate to B. to purchase for the company A.'s interest; (2), that the agreement could only be legally made under the contract of co-partnership with his consent; and (3), that B. had secretly acquired a benefit for himself within the scope of the partnership business:—Held, that in point of fact no agreement had been made between B. and C. to the effect that B. was to buy A.'s interest for the partnership. And in respect to the articles of co-partnership, they did not prevent the agreement being made, and otherwise it was perfectly legal. Therefore C. was not entitled to any benefit under it. Cassels v. Stewart, 6 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 64; 29 W. R. 636.

3. One partner may agree with retiring partner to give him a sum for concern, though they know it to be insolvent, no fraud being intended. Exp. Peake, 1 Madd. 346.

4. Articles of partnership having provided that on dissolution by death, notice, or misconduct of a partner, the remaining partner should have the option of taking his share at a valuation, payable by yearly instalments in the course of seven years; and that on the bankruptcy or insolvency of a partner, the partnership should be immediately void as to him; by a deed, four years subsequent, the partners declared (after a recital that such was their intention in the articles) that in the event of bankruptcy or insolvency, the same arrangement should be practised as on dissolution by death, notice, or misconduct: one of the partners having become bankrupt within a few months after the execution of the latter deed, his assignees are not bound by it. Whether a provision in articles of partnership, that on the bankruptcy of a partner his share shall be taken by the solvent partners, at a sum to be fixed by valuation, and payable by instalments in a course of years, is not void by the statutes concerning bankrupts, quære. Wilson v. Greenwood, 1 Swan. 471; 1 Wils. 223.

5. A partnership deed of a mine provided, that in the event of the bankruptcy of any partner, an account was to be taken of his share and interest in the mine (other than his share in the lease of the mine, which was not to be valued), and the amount of such account paid to the parties entitled. A partner became bankrupt:—Held, that the clause was void as against his assignees, who were entitled to his share in the lease. Whitmore v. Mason, 2 John. & H. 204; 8 Jur., N. S., 278; 31 L. J., Ch., 433; 10 W. R. 168; 5 L. T., N. S., 631.

6. The vendor of a share in a partnership business filed a bill against the purchaser, who had taken possession, charging that he had grossly mismanaged the property, and destroyed its value, and praying that he might be declared to have accepted the title, and might be decreed to perform the contract specifically. The Court was of opinion that the title had not been accepted, and as a good title was not shown, a specific performance could not be decreed:—Held, that upon a record so framed, no accounts of enquiries could be directed as to the defendant's possession and management of the property, with acceptor was a member of the firm of the drawers. Exp. Liddel, 2 Rose 34.

1. In May 1839 A., a creditor of the firm of B. and S., proposed to become a partner with them, the terms of the intended partnership being, that A. should bring in 1,000*l.* in money and 1,000*l.* in goods, and should be entitled to one-third of the profits, and be a dormant partner; the name of the firm was to be changed to B., S., & Co., and the partnership was to date from the 1st April 1839, but A. reserved to himself the option of determining, at any period within twelve months from that day, whether he would become a partner. The name of the firm was altered accordingly, and a new banking account was opened in the name of B., S., & Co.; and A. advanced the 2,000*l.* to the firm; but within twelve months he declared his determination not to enter into the partnership:—Held, that A. was not liable for goods supplied to the firm after May 1839, for that he never became a complete partner. Gabriel v. Evill, 9 M. & W. 297; Car. & M. 358. S. P. Exp. Turquand, 2 M. D. & D. 339.

VI. FIRMS WITH COMMON MEMBERS.

2. A firm of three partners agreed to make advances to a consignor upon certain terms as to commission, and as to a lien on the return proceeds of the shipments. They accepted, on the faith of this agreement, bills drawn on them by the consignor; and on one of those bills approaching maturity, they requested the holders to give them an extension of time, which the latter agreed to do on having the acceptance of a distinct firm of six, in which the three were also partners. A bill was accordingly drawn by the three, accepted on behalf of the six, and endorsed by the consignor, to whose credit it was carried by the holders of the former bill. Afterwards the holders were parties to an arrangement between the consignor and his creditors, whereby they released the consignor and the shipments from all liability in respect of the bills:—Held, that they thereby discharged the firm of six. Exp. Webster, 1 De G. 441; 11 Jur. 175.

3. B. is a partner with A. as nail manufacturers, and with C. as grocers. The firm of B. and C. advance moneys to the firm of A. and B.:—Held, that as B. and C. were not liable for the debts of A. and B., B. and C. could prove under a fiat issued against A. and B. Exp. Thompson, Re Ecroyd, 3 Dea. & Ch. 612; 1 Mont. & A. 312, 324.

4. In taking the accounts between three partnerships, the first of A. and B., the second of A., B., and C., the third of B. and C., the partnership of B. and C. cannot charge commission for collecting the debts of the other two partnerships. Whittle v. M'Farlane, 1 Knapp 311.

5. Mere temptation to abuse partnership effects is not sufficient to induce Court to grant injunction. Glassington v. Thwaites, 1 Sim. & S. 124; 1 L. J., Ch., 113.

All the proprietors of the M. paper being also, with the exception of one, proprietors in the E. paper, an injunction to restrain using effects of former partnership to assist latter, in consideration of an annual sum, was refused where there had been an agreement permitting use on those terms which had been long acted under. Ib.

But injunction granted to restrain using effects not included in agreement. Ib.

6. To bill (also praying discovery) stating that partnership subsisted between plaintiff in equity and deceased partner of a banking firm in another concern, in which plaintiff had chief management, and that cheques were drawn under special circumstances, founded on mutual understanding, etc.; answer denying privity of defendants, or that they were in any way engaged in concern as partners or otherwise, is sufficient to prevent injunction to stay defendant's proceedings at law to recover amount of cheques paid by them on account of plaintiff in equity. Askam v. Thompson, 4 Price 330.

7. P., a partner in two houses of trade originating in the West Indies, where his partners continue to carry on the business, but being himself resident in London, receiving and disposing of consignments from and shipping cargoes to his partners abroad, becomes bankrupt. On bill by his assignees against a creditor of the two firms, having attached in the West Indies property belonging to both, for account of what he had received by means of his attachments:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to retain what he had received, to the extent of satisfying his joint debts, and to account only for the overplus. Brickwood v. Miller, 3 Meriv. 279.

8. A common member of two firms, one of which had dealings with the other as agents of a third firm, represented to the third that there was a debt due from one of the two to the third:—Held, that it was not competent to the two firms to avail themselves as against the third of the ordinary rule respecting the appropriation of payments to the reduction from time to time of the earlier portion of the account, and thus to arrange the accounts between them in such manner as to result in the liquidation of the debt represented to be due as before mentioned. One of two partners died; after his death the affairs were wound up under deed of inspection, which provided that the firm should be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy on a certain day, which was about three months after the partner's death:—Held, that the partnership property continued to be joint estate, and was not in the order and disposition of the surviving partner. Where there are two firms, and one of them contains one partner who is a member of the other firm, there may be double proof in bankruptcy upon the estates of both firms. Wickham v. Wickham, 2 Kay & J. 478.

2. Personal Liability, 5493.

1. Compensation for Services.

1. On the death of one partner, the survivor retaining his capital, and employing it in the trade, decreed to account for profits derived from it, making him proper allowances for the management of the business. Brown v De Tastet, 1 Jac. 284.

2. Two sets of parties having projected a railway on a similar line agreed to consolidate the project, and appointed, as solicitors of the proposed company, the plaintiff and defendant, whom they had respectively consulted prior to the consolidation. The two solicitors accepted the appointment, without making any definite arrangement as to the division of the business, or of the emoluments of the office, and a much larger portion of the work was done by the defendant than by the plaintiff. In a conversation between them about six months after the appointment, and before the principal part of the business was transacted, the plaintiff stated, as the result of his inquiries into the practice in like cases, that the allowance for office expenses and personal trouble in such limited partnerships between solicitors was made by each party retaining, besides his expenses and disbursements, from 10 to 25 per cent. on the amount of the net charges for the business done, and which principle he considered satisfactory; and the defendant, in reply, observed that there could be no misunderstanding about it between honourable men. Upon a bill by the plaintiff, claiming an account and division of the profits of the business done by the company, upon the footing of an equal co-partnership, and offering to allow 25 per cent. upon the work done separately to the partner who did it,—the Court, in the circumstances, made a decree accordingly. Webster v. Bray, 7 Hare 159.

3. The managing partner of a concern is not entitled to an allowance for carrying on the partnership trade, where there is neither contract between the partners nor a custom of the trade to authorize such allowance. Hutcheson v. Smith, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 117. And see Tibbits v. Phillips, 10 Hare 355.

4. Partners having stipulated to devote their whole time to the business, and one having discontinued his services, an inquiry was, upon a dissolution, directed as to what was proper to be allowed to the other partner in respect of the business having been exclusively conducted by him. Airey v. Borham, 29 Beav. 620.

5. In taking accounts between three partnerships with common members, one firm cannot charge commission for collecting the debts of the other two firms. Whittle v. M'Farlane, 1 Knapp 311. But see Robinson v. Anderson, 20 Beav. 98.

6. Where an allowance was made to one partner for his labour in making up the books, and during the last eighteen months of his life he was incapacitated by illness, the allowance was disallowed on taking the account between his executor and the surviving partner. McDonald v. Richardson, Richardson v. Marten, 1 Giff. 81; 10 L. T., N. S., 166; 5 Jur., N. S., 9.

7. A surviving partner being the executor of his deceased partner is not entitled to an allowance for carrying on the business after his partner's decease for the benefit of the estate; nor is an executor and legatee of such surviving partner. Stocken v. Dawson, 6 Beav. 371. Affirming 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 282.

8. Where A. and B., partners, assigned all their stock in trade to C., in trust to secure a sum of money advanced by C., and upon further trusts that C. might manage the business until he and other creditors were repaid sums due to them:—Held, on a bill for an account by the surviving partner, that C. was not entitled to credit himself with any sums as bonuses, notwithstanding that his management of the concern had been such as to pay all creditors, and largely to diminish his own debt, and that the partners had repeatedly acquiesced in such charges. Barrett v. Hartley, 14 W. R. 684.

9. At the commencement of a partnership, the partners both living in the same house, entertained their customers jointly; one removing, the whole expense of entertainment (which was necessary in the trade) fell upon the other. They ought to have agreed for an allowance; the Court can make none. The accounts having been annually balanced without such allowance, is conclusive. Thornton v. Proctor, 1 Anstr. 94.

2. Personal Liability.

10. Where a lease of mines is taken by six persons, for the purpose of working them in partnership, and the managing partner becomes in the course of such management indebted to the concern, his interest in the partnership is in the first place applicable to satisfy his debt to the concern. Fereday v. Wightwick, 1 Russ. & M. 45; Taml. 250.

11. The managing partner of a colliery worked beyond the boundaries of the colliery without proper inquiry as to such boundaries, and, after notice from the adjoining owner that he was committing a trespass, recklessly continued such workings without consulting his co-partners, under the bonâ fide belief that the adjoining owner had no title to the disputed area. An action against him for trespass and damages by the adjoining owner was referred to arbitration. The co-partners had no knowledge of the action until after the reference had been agreed to. They attended the reference, however, and did not object to it. The arbitrator found that a trespass had been committed, and assessed the damages at 6,000*l*. The co-partners refusing to contribute, the managing partner brought an action against them claiming a declaration that the 6,000*l*. damages was a partnership debt, and that defendants were bound to contribute ratably to it:—Held, that, inasmuch as the managing partner had acted with culpable negligence in continuing to work in the disputed area after notice from the adjoining proprietor, and without consulting his co-partners, he alone was liable for the damages. Thomas v. Atherton, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 185; 48 L. J., Ch., 370; 40 L. T. 77.

acceptor was a member of the firm of the drawers. Exp. Liddel, 2 Rose 34.

1. In May 1839 A., a creditor of the firm of B. and S., proposed to become a partner with them, the terms of the intended partnership being, that A. should bring in 1,000*l.* in money and 1,000*l.* in goods, and should be entitled to one-third of the profits, and be a dormant partner: the name of the firm was to be changed to B., S., & Co., and the partnership was to date from the 1st April 1839, but A. reserved to himself the option of determining, at any period within twelve months from that day, whether he would become a partner. The name of the firm was altered accordingly, and a new banking account was opened in the name of B., S., & Co.; and A. advanced the 2,000*l.* to the firm; but within twelve months he declared his determination not to enter into the partnership:—Held, that A. was not liable for goods supplied to the firm after May 1839, for that he never became a complete partner. Gabriel v. Evill, 9 M. & W. 297; Car. & M. 358. S. P. Exp. Turquand, 2 M. D. & D. 339.

VI. FIRMS WITH COMMON MEMBERS.

2. A firm of three partners agreed to make advances to a consignor upon certain terms as to commission, and as to a lien on the return proceeds of the shipments. They accepted, on the faith of this agreement, bills drawn on them by the consignor; and on one of those bills approaching maturity, they requested the holders to give them an extension of time, which the latter agreed to do on having the acceptance of a distinct firm of six, in which the three were also partners. A bill was accordingly drawn by the three, accepted on behalf of the six, and endorsed by the consignor, to whose credit it was carried by the holders of the former bill. Afterwards the holders were parties to an arrangement between the consignor and his creditors, whereby they released the consignor and the shipments from all liability in respect of the bills:—Held, that they thereby discharged the firm of six. Exp. Webster, 1 De G. 441; 11 Jur. 175.

3. B. is a partner with A. as nail manufacturers, and with C. as grocers. The firm of B. and C. advance moneys to the firm of A. and B.:—Held, that as B. and C. were not liable for the debts of A. and B., B. and C. could prove under a fiat issued against A. and B. Exp. Thompson, Re Ecroyd, 3 Dea. & Ch. 612; 1 Mont. & A. 312, 324.

4. In taking the accounts between three partnerships, the first of A. and B., the second of A., B., and C., the third of B. and C., the partnership of B. and C. cannot charge commission for collecting the debts of the other two partnerships. Whittle v. M'Farlane, 1 Knapp 311.

5. Mere temptation to abuse partnership effects is not sufficient to induce Court to grant injunction. Glassington v. Thwaites, 1 Sim. & S. 124; 1 L. J., Ch., 113.

All the proprietors of the M. paper being also, with the exception of one, proprietors in the E. paper, an injunction to restrain using effects of former partnership to assist latter, in consideration of an annual sum, was refused where there had been an agreement permitting use on those terms which had been long acted under. Ib.

But injunction granted to restrain using effects not included in agreement. Ib.

6. To bill (also praying discovery) stating that partnership subsisted between plaintiff in equity and deceased partner of a banking firm in another concern, in which plaintiff had chief management, and that cheques were drawn under special circumstances, founded on mutual understanding, etc.; answer denying privity of defendants, or that they were in any way engaged in concern as partners or otherwise, is sufficient to prevent injunction to stay defendant's proceedings at law to recover amount of cheques paid by them on account of plaintiff in equity. Askam v. Thompson, 4 Price 330.

7. P., a partner in two houses of trade originating in the West Indies, where his partners continue to carry on the business, but being himself resident in London, receiving and disposing of consignments from and shipping cargoes to his partners abroad, becomes bankrupt. On bill by his assignees against a creditor of the two firms, having attached in the West Indies property belonging to both, for account of what he had received by means of his attachments:—Held, that the defendant was entitled to retain what he had received, to the extent of satisfying his joint debts, and to account only for the overplus. Brickwood v. Miller, 3 Meriv. 279.

8. A common member of two firms, one of which had dealings with the other as agents of a third firm, represented to the third that there was a debt due from one of the two to the third:—Held, that it was not competent to the two firms to avail themselves as against the third of the ordinary rule respecting the appropriation of payments to the reduction from time to time of the earlier portion of the account, and thus to arrange the accounts between them in such manner as to result in the liquidation of the debt represented to be due as before mentioned. One of two partners died; after his death the affairs were wound up under deed of inspection, which provided that the firm should be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy on a certain day, which was about three months after the partner's death:—Held, that the partnership property continued to be joint estate, and was not in the order and disposition of the surviving partner. Where there are two firms, and one of them contains one partner who is a member of the other firm, there may be double proof in bankruptcy upon the estates of both firms. Wickham v. Wickham, 2 Kay & J. 478.

VII. MANAGING PARTNER.

See also Shipping—Company.

1. Compensation for Services, 5495
2. Personal Liability, 5493.

1. Compensation for Services.

1. On the death of one partner, the survivor retaining his capital, and employing it in the trade, decreed to account for profits derived from it, making him proper allowances for the management of the business. Brown v De Tastet, 1 Jac. 284.

2. Two sets of parties having projected a railway on a similar line agreed to consolidate the project, and appointed, as solicitors of the proposed company, the plaintiff and defendant, whom they had respectively consulted prior to the consolidation. The two solicitors accepted the appointment, without making any definite arrangement as to the division of the business, or of the emoluments of the office, and a much larger portion of the work was done by the defendant than by the plaintiff. In a conversation between them about six months after the appointment, and before the principal part of the business was transacted, the plaintiff stated, as the result of his inquiries into the practice in like cases, that the allowance for office expenses and personal trouble in such limited partnerships between solicitors was made by each party retaining, besides his expenses and disbursements, from 10 to 25 per cent. on the amount of the net charges for the business done, and which principle he considered satisfactory; and the defendant, in reply, observed that there could be no misunderstanding about it between honourable men. Upon a bill by the plaintiff, claiming an account and division of the profits of the business done by the company, upon the footing of an equal co-partnership, and offering to allow 25 per cent. upon the work done separately to the partner who did it,—the Court, in the circumstances, made a decree accordingly. Webster v. Bray, 7 Hare 159.

3. The managing partner of a concern is not entitled to an allowance for carrying on the partnership trade, where there is neither contract between the partners nor a custom of the trade to authorize such allowance. Hutcheson v. Smith, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 117. And see Tibbits v. Phillips, 10 Hare 355.

4. Partners having stipulated to devote their whole time to the business, and one having discontinued his services, an inquiry was, upon a dissolution, directed as to what was proper to be allowed to the other partner in respect of the business having been exclusively conducted by him. Airey v. Borham, 29 Beav. 620.

5. In taking accounts between three partnerships with common members, one firm cannot charge commission for collecting the debts of the other two firms. Whittle v. M'Farlane, 1 Knapp 311. But see Robinson v. Anderson, 20 Beav. 98.

6. Where an allowance was made to one partner for his labour in making up the books, and during the last eighteen months of his life he was incapacitated by illness, the allowance was disallowed on taking the account between his executor and the surviving partner. McDonald v. Richardson, Richardson v. Marten, 1 Giff. 81; 10 L. T., N. S., 166; 5 Jur., N. S., 9.

7. A surviving partner being the executor of his deceased partner is not entitled to an allowance for carrying on the business after his partner's decease for the benefit of the estate; nor is an executor and legatee of such surviving partner. Stocken v. Dawson, 6 Beav. 371. Affirming 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 282.

8. Where A. and B., partners, assigned all their stock in trade to C., in trust to secure a sum of money advanced by C., and upon further trusts that C. might manage the business until he and other creditors were repaid sums due to them:—Held, on a bill for an account by the surviving partner, that C. was not entitled to credit himself with any sums as bonuses, notwithstanding that his management of the concern had been such as to pay all creditors, and largely to diminish his own debt, and that the partners had repeatedly acquiesced in such charges. Barrett v. Hartley, 14 W. R. 684.

9. At the commencement of a partnership, the partners both living in the same house, entertained their customers jointly; one removing, the whole expense of entertainment (which was necessary in the trade) fell upon the other. They ought to have agreed for an allowance; the Court can make none. The accounts having been annually balanced without such allowance, is conclusive. Thornton v. Proctor, 1 Anstr. 94.

2. Personal Liability.

10. Where a lease of mines is taken by six persons, for the purpose of working them in partnership, and the managing partner becomes in the course of such management indebted to the concern, his interest in the partnership is in the first place applicable to satisfy his debt to the concern. Fereday v. Wightwick, 1 Russ. & M. 45; Taml. 250.

11. The managing partner of a colliery worked beyond the boundaries of the colliery without proper inquiry as to such boundaries, and, after notice from the adjoining owner that he was committing a trespass, recklessly continued such workings without consulting his co-partners, under the bonâ fide belief that the adjoining owner had no title to the disputed area. An action against him for trespass and damages by the adjoining owner was referred to arbitration. The co-partners had no knowledge of the action until after the reference had been agreed to. They attended the reference, however, and did not object to it. The arbitrator found that a trespass had been committed, and assessed the damages at 6,000*l*. The co-partners refusing to contribute, the managing partner brought an action against them claiming a declaration that the 6,000*l*. damages was a partnership debt, and that defendants were bound to contribute ratably to it:—Held, that, inasmuch as the managing partner had acted with culpable negligence in continuing to work in the disputed area after notice from the adjoining proprietor, and without consulting his co-partners, he alone was liable for the damages. Thomas v. Atherton, 10 L. VIII. AUTHORITY OF PARTNER. LIABILITY OF FIRM.

1. In General, 5494.
2. Bills of Exchange, 5494.
3. Documents executed by One Partner, 5496.
4. Fraud and Misappropriation, 5496.
5. Loans and Pledges, 5498.
6. Payments and Receipts, 5501.

1. In General.

1. To make partnership liable to demand in respect of separate transaction, an agreement must appear. Exp. Peele, 6 Ves. 602.

2. Power of a partner to bind the partnership, unless from the nature of the transaction it can be inferred to be separate, in which case previous authority, or subsequent approbation, must be shown. Exp. Bonbonus, 8 Ves. 546.

3. A general dissolution of partnership does not operate to discharge the members of it from the subsequent acts of one of them in respect of the engagements of the partnership, with third persons, entered into prior to the dissolution. Ault v. Goodrich, 4 Russ. 430.

Sub-partners are liable to the partners for the acts of each other. Thus, if a firm consisting of A. and B. engage in a speculation with C., A. is answerable to C. for the acts of B. Ib.

4. Where one of three partners in a banking concern, who resided at the place where the banking-house was, and was the only partner who transacted the business, the other two residing at a distance from it, absented himself from the banking-house, shut it up, and stopped payment:—Held, that this was not evidence of a joint act of bankruptcy by all three. Mills v. Bennett, 2 M. & S. 556.

5. A partner may give a guarantee where the obligation has reference to business connected with the partnership, and where the guarantee is notified to the firm, and they do not dissent from it. Exp. Nolte, 2 G. & J. 295.

6. Where two of three partners entered into engagements in breach of the articles, which the other partner disapproved of, and prohibited for the future, without expressly repudiating what had been done, or objecting to the entries connected with it:—Held, that the partnership assets were liable in respect of what had been done. Cragg v. Ford, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 285.

7. Semble, an authority to a member of a dissolved partnership to wind up the concern, close the books, and collect the debts, authorizes the party to state and settle an account. Luckie v. Forsyth, 3 J. & L. 388.

8. L., a partner in a firm at Grenada, employs a firm at St. Thomas to supply articles to fulfil a contract, which the St. Thomas firm do, believing the contract to have been entered into on behalf of the Grenada firm. The other partners in the Grenada firm write to the St. Thomas firm to disclaim the contract:—Held, that the Grenada firm were liable for all advances in respect of the contract made by the St. Thomas firm, previously to the day of their receipt of the disclaimer, or subsequently to it, in consequence of liabilities which they had previously incurred, and that the Grenada firm were entitled to credit for all payments made in respect of the contract prior to that day, or subsequently to it, if specifically made in respect of the account then due and for the balance of all payments made generally in respect of the contract subsequently to that day, after satisfying the amount due to the St. Thomas house by L. alone. An account current kept by the St. Thomas house of all their transactions with the Grenada house, both prior to and after the disclaimer of the contract, held not to be evidence of specific appropriation by them of the sums they had received. Smith v. Ure, 2 Knapp 188.

9. A., on behalf of himself and partners, entered into contract with B. for certain commodity, but the name of A. is only used in contract. Other partners having paid part of deposit, were held liable to the contract. Browne v. Gibbins, 5 Bro. P. C. 491.

10. One of several partners, who is treasurer of the whole, enters into contract with A., and afterwards failing, his estate is vested in trustees. Though contract with A. concerns the partnership business, yet he is not entitled to any satisfaction out of treasurer's share of partnership effects, but must come in equally with the other creditors; the money due to A. not being for wages. Ball v. Lanesborough, 5 Bro. P. C. 480.

2. Bills of Exchange.

11. L., a partner in a firm carrying on the business of solicitors, gave, without the knowledge of his partners, a promissory note in the joint name of the firm, as security for a sum of money advanced to him by C., and applied the money to his own private use. The partners filed their bill against C. and L. for the delivery up of the note, and, on L. becoming bankrupt, brought his assignees before the Court by supplemental bill. The assignees, by their answer, submitted their interest in the suit to the judgment of the Court:—Held, first, that, under the circumstances of the case, the note was not binding on the partners, either as between them and L., or as between them and C.; secondly, that it was a case in which L.'s assignees ought neither to pay nor to receive costs. Smith v. Coleman, 7 Jur. 1053.

12. A., the partner of B., carrying on business at a different place, draws bills of exchange, sometimes in the name of the firm, and sometimes in his own name, on the clerk of the partnership managing the business in London, and discounts them with bankers in the country; on an application by them that the bills drawn in the separate name of A. might be considered as a partnership debt, as having been applied to partnership purposes, the Lord Chancellor, expressing an opinion against the claim, directed dividends to be reserved till after an action at law. Exp. Emly, 1 Rose 61. See 15 East 7.

13. Bills drawn by one partner, for a separate debt, in the partnership name, cannot be recovered on as against the firm, unless the plaintiff can prove either a direct assent from the other partners, or circumstances from which such an assent can reasonably be presumed. Frankland v. M'Gusty, 1 Knapp 274.

1. Where one partner gives the acceptance of the firm for his separate debt, without authority from his co-partner, such acceptance does not bind the firm. Exp. Goulding, 2 G. & J. 118. Affirmed 8 L. J., Ch., 19.

2. If A. and B. are partners in a trade carried on in the name of A. only, and A. draws bills in his own name, payable to his order, which he indorses, and afterwards B. also indorses, and procures them to be discounted, there is no legal contract for a holder to maintain an action against A. and B. upon the bills, unless it appear that A. drew and indorsed the bills in the character of and as representing A. and B. Exp. Bolitho, Buck 100.

A person discounting the bills may have a right of action against A. and B. jointly for money had and received, if he can show that they received the money by means of the bills for partnership purposes. Ib.

3. Order for goods by two partners, afterwards partnership dissolved; a bill drawn on the two partners, but accepted only by one who carried on a separate trade, and the goods delivered to him, no claim can be made on the other partner. Exp. Harris, 1 Madd. 583.

4. A partner, after the partnership ceased, gave a joint note. Bill filed to strike out the plaintiff's (the former partner's) name, have the bill retained for a year, and the trial had; when the plaintiff at law could not prove the partnership, and was non-suited; yet Lord Chancellor (on equity reserved) refused to decree the name to be erased. Ryan v. Mackmath, 3 Bro. C. C. 15.

5. Injunction granted ex parte to restrain the negotiation of a bill of exchange by a holder, who had given valuable consideration for it, but who had notice that it had been improperly accepted by a partner of the plaintiffs in the partnership name. Hood v. Aston, 1 Russ. 412.

6. Generally speaking, a partner has full authority to deal with the partnership property for partnership purposes. If the business of the partnership is such as ordinarily requires bills of exchange, then, unless restrained by agreement, any one partner may draw, accept, and indorse bills of exchange in the name of the partnership for partnership purposes. All persons may give credit to his acts and his authority unless they have notice or reason to believe that the thing done in the partnership name is done for the private purposes or on the separate account of the partner doing it. In that case, authority by virtue of the partnership contract ceases, and the person dealing with the individual partner is bound to inquire and ascertain the extent of his authority. If he does not so act he must depend upon the right of the partner, or on circumstances sufficient to repel the assumption of fraud. Exp. Darlington District Joint Stock Banking Co., Re Riches, 4 De G. J. & S. 581; 11 Jur., N. S., 122; 34 L. J., Bky., 10; 13 W. R. 353; 11 L. T., N. S., 651; 5 N. R. 287.

The unexplained fact that a partnership security has been received from one of the partners in discharge of a separate claim against himself is a badge of fraud, or of such palpable negligence as amounts to fraud, which it is incumbent on the party who so took the security to remove by showing either that the partner from whom he received it acted under the authority of the rest, or at least that he himself had reason to believe so. Ib.

A bill drawn by a partner in the name of his firm, indorsed by him also in such name to himself, and discounted at his private bankers', for his own account, cannot be proved against the joint estate of the firm, unless he had authority from partners to act as he did, with regard to the bill, or unless the proceeds have actually been applied to partnership purposes, and the firm is indebted to his private account to an amount to cover the amount of the bill. Ib.

Where a partner drew bills in the name of a partnership firm, and obtained acceptances to them from various persons by fraudulent misrepresentation of what it was that was being signed, and then indorsed the bills, so accepted, with the name of the firm, and again indorsed them over to himself:—Held, that the partner's private bankers, who had discounted the bills, having full notice that their customer was using partnership property for his private purposes, and seeing that all the signatures, except the acceptances, were in his handwriting, were guilty of gross negligence, and could not be allowed to prove in bankruptcy for the loss they had sustained on the fraudulent acceptances against the estate of the surviving partners. Ib.

7. S. & S., trading in that name, becoming embarrassed, executed a deed, to which they were parties of the first part; certain of the creditors, as trustees, of the second part, and the general scheduled creditors (among whom the trustees were named) of the third part. The deed assigned their property to the trustees, and empowered the trustees to carry on the business, under the name of the Stanton Iron Company, to execute all contracts and instruments necessary to carry it on, to divide the net income to be taken among the creditors, in ratable proportions (such income to be deemed the property of S. & S.), with power to the majority of the creditors, assembled at a meeting, to make rules for conducting the business, or to put an end to it altogether; and after the debts had been discharged, the property was to be re-transferred by the trustees to S. & S. Two of the creditors, C. and W., were named among the trustees; C. never acted; W. acted for six weeks, and then resigned. Some time afterwards the other trustees, who continued to carry on the business, became indebted to H., and gave him bills, accepted by themselves "per proc. the Stanton Iron Company":—Held, that there was no partnership created by the deed, and that, consequently, C. and W. could not be sued on the bills as partners in the company. Cox v. Hickman, 8 H. L. Ca. 268; 7 Jur., N. S., 165; 30 L. J., C. P., 125; 9 C. B., N. S., 847.

Held, also, that they could not be sued for goods sold and delivered, there being no distinction upon the question of liability between the bills and the consideration for which they were given. Ib.

8. A. and B. partners, A. receives money in the shop, and gives his noté for it. Though no proof that this money was brought into stock, or used in trade, yet this note being given in the shop by one of the partners, it shall bind both, and though this note at law binds only the executor of the surviving partner, yet in equity the creditor may follow the estate of the other. Lane v. Williams, 2 Vern. 277, 292.

1. Four firms, F. & Co., M. & Co., M. & L., and A. & Co., associated themselves in a trading adventure, under an agreement which provided "that the finance of the business be carried on by acceptances of the several parties interested as may from time to time be arranged." The association was not registered, nor was its existence made known to the world, though it was known as the Adansonia Fibre Company among its members. The adventure had, before the association was formed, been carried on by F. & Co., in whose name it continued to be carried on. An order having been made for winding up the association, an application was made to prove on ten bills of exchange, drawn by M. & Co., for the purposes of the adventure, and accepted some by F. & Co., some by M. & L., and some by A. & Co.:—Held, that the proof could not be admitted, for that the bills bound only the individual firms by which they were drawn and accepted. Re Adansonia Fibre Co., Miles' claim, 9 L. R., Ch., 635; 31 L. T., N. S., 9.

2. In an action against partners, on a bill accepted by one of them in the name of the firm, the admissions in his answer to a bill in equity against him are not admissible against the rest. Booth v. Quin, 7 Price 193.

3. Documents executed by One Partner.

3. Partnership bound by the signature of one partner. Exp. Gardom, 15 Ves. 28.

4. Partners bound by an instrument executed by one in the presence of the others. Burn v. Burn, 3 Ves. 578.

5. Demurrer to a bill by a surety, stating that two partners having agreed to execute a release to the principal, in consideration of an assignment of his effects, one alone executed the release, overruled. Whether a release so executed binds all the partners, quære. Hawksham v. Parkins, 2 Swan. 539.

6. One partner can, though the partnership be dissolved, sign the bankrupt's certificate for a joint debt proved under the commission by himself and his co-partner. Exp. Hall, 1 Rose 2; 17 Ves. 62.

7. One partner may act for all, almost universally in bankruptcy, proving debts, voting for assignees, and signing certificates. Exp. Hodgkinson, 19 Ves. 293. Exp. Mitchell, 14 Ves. 597.

Joint commission of bankruptcy on affidavit of debt, and bond sworn and executed by one partner on behalf of all. Ib.

8. B. was chief partner in a partnership of three persons. He examined a draft contract, and wrote "approved" at the end, and also signed his name. This was treated as an assent binding on all the partners (whose names were mentioned in the paper), although the several forms of signature of the partnership was that of "B. & Sons." Brogden v. Metropolitan Railway Co., 2 L. R., App. Cas., 666.

9. Semble, in a partnership which is not for a fixed period, one partner has no implied authority to enter into a contract for a lease for twenty-one years of premises to be used for partnership purposes, so as to bind the other partners. Sharp v. Milligan, 22 Beav. 606.

Three partners agreed, by parol, for a lease of some premises. They entered and paid the rent. A., one of the partners, two years afterwards signed a contract for a lease on behalf of the firm. Possession was continued, and rent paid until a dissolution. The Court, under the circumstances, inferred that A. had authority to sign the contract, though it was denied by the other partners, and made a decree for specific performance against them. Ib.

10. A. and B. were partners, and A., on the faith of representations made to him by the secretary of a company, informed B. that the liabilities were limited, and thereupon B. consented to shares being taken in the company. A. executed the company's deed alone, in the name of the firm. Two calls were paid by the firm, and dividends were received by the firm as part of the partnership assets. The firm dissolved partnership, and all the assets and liabilities (the shares being particularly specified) were transferred from A. to B. The company failed, and was wound up. It then appeared that the liabilities of the company were not limited, and B. alleged that A. alone was liable as a contributory:—Held, the misrepresentation as to the limited liabilities not being wilful, and the company assenting, that B. was primarily liable, and A. secondarily liable, as contributories. Exp. Betts, 26 L. J., Ch., 455.

4. Fraud and Misappropriation.

11. A., B., and C. executed to a banking firm, consisting of E., F., and G., a power of attorney, empowering them "jointly and severally" to receive the dividends, and to sell out the stock itself. The power was sent by the bankers to their broker, who deposited it with the Bank of England. F. alone clandestinely sold out the stock, but the firm had credit for the proceeds. The sale was concealed, and the amount of dividends for some time accounted for:—Held, that E. was liable for the sale though it had taken place after the death of C. and G.; and that he would have been equally liable, though the proceeds had not been placed to the credit of the firm. Sadler v. Lee, 6 Beav. 324; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 407; 7 Jur. 476.

12. A., B., and C. agreed for the purchase of certain mines for 10,000*l.* and to form a joint stock company for working them, and that the mines should be sold to the company for 25,000*l.*, of which 10,000*l.* should be paid to F., the proprietor, and the remainder divided amongst themselves and certain of their friends whom they nominated to be directors and officers of the company. At a meeting of the persons so nominated, at which A., B., and C. were present, but before the company was established, it was resolved that the company should purchase the mines for 25,000*l.*, to be paid to F., and a conveyance was afterwards taken from F. to the trustees of the company, and the 25,000*l.* was paid out of the funds of the company, and distributed in the manner agreed upon. A suit having been instituted by some of the shareholders, on behalf of themselves and the others, against the persons who had participated in the 15,000*l.*, the latter were decreed to refund what they had received; and one of the defendants having become bankrupt after he had paid what he had received into court, under an order upon motion:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to receive that sum, and were not to be put to prove their demand under the commission. Hichens v. Congreve, 4 Sim. 420.

1. A tenant for life of settled estates obtained an Act of Parliament for selling the estates, and investing the proceeds, under the direction of the Court, in the purchase of other lands to be settled to the same uses; after the estates had been sold, and the money paid into Court, the tenant for life fraudulently obtained an order, under which part of the money was paid out to him. Messrs. B., G., and C., solicitors and co-partners, acted as the solicitors of the tenant for life in obtaining the order, and in every other proceeding under the Act; B. was aware of the fraud, but G. and C. were wholly ignorant of it:—Held, nevertheless, in a suit instituted by the remainder-man after the death of the tenant for life, that G. and C., as well as B., and the estate of the tenant for life, and all the other parties to the transaction, were jointly and severally liable to make good the money. Brydges v. Branfill, 12 Sim. 369; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 249; 6 Jur. 310.

2. Joint owners of a patent are considered as partners, and where a party had been induced by the fraud of one of such joint owners to purchase from him, by an agreement to which all were parties, the use of a patent right, which turned out to be of no value:—Held, that each of the parties to the contract, one of whom had no interest in the patent at the time of the contract, was liable to refund the whole of the purchase money fraudulently obtained. Lovell v. Hicks, 2 Y. & Coll. 481; 6 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 85. See S. C. 2 Y. & Coll. 46; 5 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 101.

Quære, as to effect on right of plaintiff to recover the whole from each, had it been proved that he knew that three of the parties to the contract were, by special agreement, entitled in severalty to different proportions of the profits of the patent, and that one of them had no interest in it whatever. Ib.

Semble, that joint owners of a patent are answerable for losses occasioned by their co-adventurers only to the extent of their respective shares. S. C. 2 Y. & Coll. 46; 5 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 101.

3. A., a partner in a house of agency in India, died, having, by his will, directed his estate to be called in and invested on certain trusts, and appointed two of his co-partners his executors. They, however, suffered his share of the partnership to remain in the house. After A.'s death, B. and C. were admitted as partners, and they knew that A.'s share was in the house, and that it was subject to the trusts of his will. They afterwards retired, and other partners were admitted. The house ultimately failed:—Held, that B. and C. were not responsible for the breach of trust committed by their co-partners the executors. Twyford v. Trail, 7 Sim. 92

4. A partner in a banking house transferred bank stock belonging to a customer by a forged power of attorney. The proceeds were paid to the account of the partnership, and afterwards appropriated by F., who was subsequently executed for other forgeries, and a commission issued against the other partners, who were ignorant of the transaction, but with common diligence would have known of it. Quære, whether the customer can prove for the value under the commission. An action ordered to try whether the parties were indebted to the customer. Exp. Bolland, Re Marsh, 1 Mont. & A. 570.

5. An action brought as ordered in Exp. Bolland, Re Marsh, 1 Mont. & A. 570:—Held, the customer could maintain an action against the partners for money had and received. Keating v. Marsh, 1 Mont. & A. 582; 2 Cl. & F. 250. Affirmed id. 592.

6. Several persons entered into partnership as manufacturers in December 1806, on the terms (inter alia) that one partner should have the management of the business and accounts, and that three of the partners should have no votes or voices in the general affairs, but should be bound by the acts of the majority of the other partners. One of those other partners was also partner in a bank with which the firm kept an account. On the dissolution of the first firm, in 1820, a bill was filed against the partners, or their representatives, by the bankers for an account, and payment for a large balance claimed to be due to them, charging several stated accounts alleged to have been delivered and approved of. One of the defendants (being one of the partners excluded from the management), by his answer, disputed the account, and, by a cross bill, alleged that the superintending partners had, by misconduct and neglect, suffered the acting partner to embezzle the partnership property; that, if any balance were due to the bankers, it had arisen through such misconduct, and that the superintending partners, including the partner in the bank, ought to bear the loss. By the decree dismissing the cross bill, it was referred to the Master to take the account, with liberty to state special circumstances. The Master declined, under this direction, to take the account on the footing of a stated account, and the defendant insisted on the account being taken and vouched item by item; on which the plaintiffs presented their petition for a re-hearing, which was refused, the petition not having been presented within six months after the decree pronounced, the Court, however, expressing a strong opinion that no other decree could, according to the pleadings, have been made. Milford v. Milford, M'Clel. & Y. 150.

7. A case may happen in which the governing body of a joint stock company or the partners of a firm may so unite with a stranger in practising frauds against the company for whom thay act as to entitle the company to repudiate such acts, and to be relieved against them. Vigers v. Pike, 8 Cl. & F. 562.

In a case depending on alleged misrepresentations of value there cannot be a more effectual bar to the plaintiff than by showing that he was from the beginning cognizant of all the matters complained of, or after full information of them continued to deal with them. Ib.

A. having granted a lease of certain mines to P. as a trustee for the West Cork Mining Co., and having in his lifetime received certain sums in part payment of the consideration money of the lease; P., who was his executor, filed his bill against V., the managing director of the company, for an account of the sum due on foot of the purchase money, and for payment thereof. V. filed a cross bill on behalf of the company, and thereby, after setting forth various facts and matters as evidencing fraudulent conduct against the shareholders on the part of A. and his executor P., impeached the lease as fraudulent, and the consideration thereof as exorbitant and extravagant:—Held, under the circumstances, that the plaintiff in the original cause was entitled to the relief as prayed for by his bill, and that the cross bill should be dismissed without costs. S. C. 2 Dr. & Wal. 1. Affirmed 8 Cl. & F. 562.

1. A., a partner in a house of agency in India, died, having by his will directed his estate to be called in, and invested on certain trusts, and appointed two of his co-partners his executors. They, however, suffered his share of the partnership to remain in the house. After A.'s death B. and C. were admitted as partners, and they knew that A.'s share was in the house, and that it was subject to the trusts of his will. They afterwards retired and other partners were admitted. The house ultimately failed:—Held, that B. and C. were not responsible for the breach of trust committed by their co-partners, the executors. Twyford v. Trail, 7 Sim. 92.

2. A., a partner in a banking firm, advised B., a female customer of the bank, to sell out some Dutch Stock, telling her the firm could procure for her better security, and that he had one in view; he said the money was, in fact, wanted by his own son, who was in trade. B. sold out the stock, and paid the money into the bank; she then gave A. a cheque to draw it out and invest it. He drew it out, and misapplied it and absconded, the interest having been regularly carried to her account in the meantime in the books of the bank, but by whom did not clearly appear. All these transactions took place at the banking house, and B. had no acquaintance or dealings with A., except as banker and a member of the firm. The other partners did not appear to have known of them at the time they took place, but they did before A. absconded:—Held, that they were not liable. Bishop v. Jersey (Countess of), 2 Drew. 143; 18 Jur. 765; 23 L. J., Ch., 483; 2 W. R. 247; 2 Eq. Rep. 545.

3. A firm of stockbrokers purchasing, on behalf of a customer, foreign securities, passing by delivery, which in their usual course of dealing they retained in their own custody, are jointly and severally liable to make good the same if lost or misapplied. De Ribeyre (Marchioness) v. Barclay, 23 Beav. 107; 26 L. J., Ch., 747.

Where, therefore, one of the partners, who was a trustee of a marriage settlement, under instructions to the firm, not only bought the foreign securities, but also individually transacted all the business of the customer with the firm, and finally applied them for his own purposes, not wholly unconnected with the firm:—Held, that the securities were in the custody of the firm and not of the trustee; that the firm was responsible for them, whether lost or misapplied; and the trustee having absconded and become bankrupt, that the remaining partners must replace the securities. Ib.

4. When one partner in a firm has received a sum of money in the ordinary course of the partnership business, and misappropriated it, all the partners are jointly and severally liable to make good the amount; and, therefore, one or more of them may be made defendants to a suit for that purpose, without suing all. Plumer v. Gregory, 31 L. T., N. S., 17.

5. Loans and Pledges.

5. Held, that a ship, the property of a partnership, might, under the Ship Registry Act, the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 55, s. 32, be mortgaged by one partner without the concurrence of the others. Exp. Howden, Re Litherland, 2 M. D. & De G. 574.

6. A bankrupt, while in partnership with K., deposits a lease with a creditor; and the partnership is afterwards dissolved, when certain arrangements are made between the bankrupt and the solvent partner:—Held, that no subsequent arrangements of this kind will affect the rights of the creditor under the original deposit, and that he is entitled to the usual order for the sale of the property. Exp. Booth, 2 Dea. & Ch. 59; 1 L. J., N. S., Bky., 81.

7. The implied authority of a partner to bind his co-partners for the repayment of money borrowed for partnership purposes does not necessarily extend to raising money for the purposes of increasing the fixed capital of the firm; and, therefore, a party advancing money to one partner, knowing that it was for this purpose, cannot as a matter of course charge the other partners with the loan, unless the transaction took place with their express or actual authority. Fisher v. Tayler, 2 Hare 218.

Two partners in a firm advertised their intention of adding 16,000*l.* to their capital by admitting one or more additional partners. W. entered into a negotiation with one of the partners, then acting on behalf of both, on the subject of the announcement, but afterwards declining to enter into the firm, advanced a sum of 4,000*l.* to that partner by way of loan, on the security of the bills of the firm, and also of the separate estate of each partner:—Held, that W. had, so far as this evidence went, notice that the loan of 4,000*l.* was an advance, not within the implied authority of the partner obtaining it, the other partner having authorised the capital to be raised in a different mode; but, inasmuch as the original partnership was then existing, and the advance might have been within the scope of the partnership authority, without reference to the proposed increase of capital, liberty was given to W., for the purpose of trying that question, to bring an action on the bill against the executors of the other partner. Ib.

1. If a partner borrows a sum of money, and gives his own security only for it, it does not become a partnership debt by being applied for partnership purposes with the knowledge of the other partner. Bevan v. Lewis, 1 Sim. 376.

2. A. and B. partners, A. receives money in the shop, and gives his note for it. Though no proof that this money was brought into stock, or used in trade, yet this note being given in the shop by one of the partners, it shall bind both, and though this note at law binds only the executor of the surviving partner, yet in equity the creditor may follow the estate of the other. Lane v. Williams, 2 Vern. 277, 292.

3. A. and B., who were partners in the business of sharebrokers, and also bought and sold shares on their own account, dissolved their partnership, and after the dissolution A. deposited with the bankers of the firm shares which the firm had contracted to buy, but had not paid for, and obtained advances to pay for such shares upon the security created by the deposit, and signed an authority to the bankers, in the name of the firm, to sell the shares, if the moneys advanced were not repaid in a certain time. In a suit brought by B. against A. and the bankers, repudiating the authority of A. to make the deposit, obtain the advances, or authorise the sale:—Held, that under the circumstances A. had power, notwithstanding the dissolution, to raise money for the purpose of completing the purchase of the shares by means of the deposit, and to give the bankers authority to sell the shares in default of repayment. Butchart v. Dresser, 10 Hare 453; 4 De G. M. & G. 452; 1 W. R. 178.

4. Partnership property cannot, as against the partners, be pledged as a security for the private debts of a member of the firm. Wilkinson v. Eykyn, 14 W. R. 470; 14 L. T., N. S., 158.

5. Partners cannot effectually pledge partnership property, so as to make it available for their own private debts. To do so when the partnership is insolvent is to commit an act of bankruptcy. Exp. Snowball, Re Douglas, 41 L. J., Bky., 49; 7 L. R., Ch., 534; 26 L. T., N. S., 894; 20 W. R. 786.

A partnership, consisting of A. and B., were in insolvent circumstances, the separate estates of the partners being also insolvent. On the 14th of September B. executed a power of attorney to C., authorising him in general terms to deal with his property. The power contained no reference to the partnership. It contained express powers as to a ship which was in reality partnership property; though the fact did not appear in the power. On the same day B. left England, under circumstances which constituted his departure an act of bankruptcy. In November A. and C. (as B.'s attorney) executed a mortgage of all the partnership property to S., a creditor of the partnership, and also a separate creditor of both parties, to secure all the past debts and such future advances as might be made. At the same time a bill of sale of the ship was executed by A. and C. (as attorney), in consideration of a sum of money paid by S. on account of the partnership. In April A. and B. were both adjudicated bankrupts. S., at the date of the deeds, knew the circumstances under which B. had left England, but he declared in his evidence that he did not infer that B. had any intent to delay or defeat his creditors, and therefore did not know that he had committed an act of bankruptcy:—Held, first, that the execution of the mortgage by C., as B.'s attorney, was void, as not being within the scope of the power of attorney. Ib.

Held, secondly, that the execution of the mortgage was an act of bankruptcy, on the ground of its being a mortgage of partnership assets to secure separate debts at a time when the partnership was insolvent. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that S. must be held affected with notice that B. had committed an act of bankruptcy by leaving England. Ib.

Held, fourthly, as a consequence of the above holding, that both mortgage and bill of sale were void as against the trustee of the joint estate. Ib.

6. M. and L., a partnership firm, had a joint account with a bank, with whom M. had also a separate account. M. having railway shares, which the bank knew to be his separate property, deposited them with the bank, accompanied with a written memorandum that they were to be held as a collateral security for a promissory note of his own which had been discounted by the bank, or for any other sums in which he was or might become indebted to them. M. and L. subsequently became bankrupt, being indebted to the bank on their joint account in a sum which was unsecured. Before the bankruptcy the shares had become the property of the firm:—Held, that the bank was not entitled to hold the shares as a security for the debt due to them from the firm. Exp. M'Kenna, 7 Jur., N. S., 588; 30 L. J., Bky., 20; 3 De G. F. & J. 629; 9 W. R. 490; 4 L. T., N. S., 164.

7. A firm of solicitors received money from R., a client, for the purpose of investment. No investment was made at the time, and the money was applied by them for their own use. After the death of one of the partners his executors commenced a partnership action, in which H., the surviving partner, was appointed one of two receivers. H., without communicating with his co-receiver or with R., put certain deeds forming part of the partnership property into a box with R.'s name outside. R. subsequently obtained possession of these deeds, and claimed to retain them as security for the money owing to her by the firm. The articles of partnership contained a clause providing that, on the death of either partner, the surviving partner should, within six months of the next general annual account, pay to the representatives of the deceased partner his share of the profits of the year, and should execute a bond for payment within two years to them of the share of the capital of the deceased partner:—Held, that H. had no power of giving R. a security upon these deeds, which formed part of the partnership property, and that R. must deliver them up to the receivers in the partnership action. Hills v. Reeves, 30 W. R. 439. Affirmed 31 W. R. 209.

8. By a deed of settlement, a joint stock banking company, called "The Bank of Australia," was established as a bank of issue and deposit at Sydney, in New South Wales. The deed contained clauses conferring powers upon the directors "for the better management of the concerns of the said company, etc.," whereby it was declared that they shall have, and be expressly invested with, "full power and authority to superintend, order, conduct, regulate, and manage all and singular the affairs and business of the said company, to the best of their discretion and judgment, under and subject to the provisions thereinafter contained." Such board of directors were further empowered to "devise and make such provisions, rules, orders, and regulations touching the government, carrying on, and management of the affairs of the said company, the same not being repugnant to the general rules and regulations therein contained, as they should think expedient." In the year 1843 the Bank of Australia became involved in pecuniary difficulties, whereupon the directors at Sydney applied to the Bank of Australasia for a loan, and borrowed from that bank at various times the sum of 154,000*l.*, for which the directors gave their promissory note. Upon the negotiation of this loan, the directors of the Bank of Australia entered into an agreement with the Bank of Australasia, whereby they stipulated that the Bank of Australia should cease to be a bank of issue, deposit, and discount, and should become a loan company, and that no transfer of shares or stock should be made without the consent of the Bank of Australasia; they also agreed to wind up and get in their capital as a loan company. Payment of the note for 154,000*l.* was refused by the shareholders of the Bank of Australia on the ground that the stipulations contained in the agreement were ultra vires the directors. On an action brought by the Bank of Australasia on the promissory note against the chairman of the Bank of Australia, the Supreme Court at New South Wales, at a trial at bar, found for the defendant. Upon appeal:—Held, by the Judicial Committee (reversing the verdict and judgment of the Supreme Court), first, that the directors of the Bank of Australia had the powers of managing partners in an ordinary banking partnership, and that amongst these was the power of borrowing money for the purpose of discharging the existing liabilities of the bank till the assets should be realised, and of discontinuing the bank if they thought such conduct essential to the interests of the shareholders. Australasia (Bank of) v. Breillat, 6 Moo. P. C. 152; 12 Jur. 189.

Held, secondly, that the circumstances of the engagements of the directors to repay the loan being accompanied by other stipulations, some of which were ultra vires, did not discharge the bank from liability to repay the loan, as the only effect of those stipulations was that they could not be enforced. Ib.

1. One of two partners procured the discount of a promissory note of the firm on an agreement for a mortgage of shares belonging to the firm in certain ships and their freight, and of the policies of insurance effected by the firm on the shares. A mortgage deed was prepared, purporting to be made by both partners, but was only executed by the one. At the time of the execution of the deed one of the ships was lost, but this fact was not then known to the parties:—Held, that the security was binding on the firm, notwithstanding the execution of the deed by one partner only, and passed the insurance money, although the deed was not registered according to the Shipping Acts. Exp. Bosanquet, 1 De G. 432.

2. By the deed of settlement of an unregistered company, dated in August 1840, it was provided, "that the trade or business of the company should be that of bankers, or of banking, including the issuing of bank notes and bills payable on demand, after sight, after date, or otherwise, and the making of loans, and advances to customers and other persons on real or personal security . . . on sheep, cattle, and live stock, on wool, farm stock, and produce, and on all and every other kind and description of property whatsoever, including the discounting of bills of exchange, etc. . . . the borrowing or taking up money at interest on inland or foreign bills of exchange or promissory notes, bonds, debentures, deposit receipts, or other obligations, as should from time to time be deemed expedient." Large discretionary powers were given to the directors to invest, convert, re-invest, and vary the property, stocks, funds, securities, and moneys of the company; and they had power also to act as agents for other companies, and for private persons at home or abroad, and to do any business or acts of agency which the court of directors might direct or approve of. The capital of the company was to consist of 1,000,000*l.*, and to be raised by 20,000 shares of 50*l.* each. A large proportion of the shares allotted were taken by the directors themselves, but of the calls made upon these shares little or nothing was ever paid by the directors. In addition to the funds raised by the allotment of shares to other persons, the directors borrowed large sums of money upon debentures, or notes in the following form, payable at long intervals of time:—"We, directors of the royal bank of A., for ourselves and the other shareholders of the said company, jointly and severally promise to pay to G. H. W., or bearer, etc., at the union bank of L., the sum of, etc., for value received on account of the company." These instruments were signed by the chairman and two other directors, and by the secretary, and they had coupons attached for the payment of interest half-yearly. The moneys thus raised were partly taken out by, and partly sent out, to B. B., one of the directors, who, having obtained powers of attorney and commission from his co-directors, went to Australia, and there entered into very large agricultural and other speculations, instead of employing them in the ordinary business of banking. The first general meeting of the proprietors was held in July 1845. Others were held in 1846 and 1847. At all of these meetings reports were presented to and adopted by the shareholders. The company suspended payment in 1848. In winding up its affairs, the Master allowed, as debts against the company, certain claims by the holders of these instruments or debentures. On motion to discharge or vary his certificate;—Held, that the Master's decision was right: that the powers given by the deed were large enough to authorise the directors to borrow money on such instruments; and that the notes were so framed as to form a contract binding on the company. Held, also, that the charge against the directors of concealment and misstatement failed. Galloway's case, 18 Jur. 885.

6. Payments and Receipts.

1. Where a sum of money, payable at a future time, was assigned to two persons who were partners as a security for money to be advanced by them, or either of them:—Held, that the survivor of such two persons could give a discharge for the whole amount due on the security. Brasier v. Hudson, 9 Sim. 1.

2. Bill by assignees of a bankrupt, claiming a debt, which had been paid to his partner, as paid after notice of dissolution of the partnership, that partner retiring and the bankrupt continuing, dismissed; the terms of the alleged arrangement not being made out, so as to establish the right in equity of the bankrupt against the legal right of the other partner. The other questions therefore were not determined: 1st. Whether a demand, the result of an over-payment in advance upon a single transaction of sale between merchants, or merchant and factor, was within the exception as to merchants' accounts in the Statute of Limitations; 2ndly. As to the effect of that exception; whether including merchants' accounts generally, or those only with items continuing within the six years; 3rdly, upon the objection of laches, independent of the statute. Duff v. East India Co., 15 Ves. 198.

3. One of the two partners, after the dissolution of the partnership, received the rents of a debtor to the partnership, and retained out of them the amount of the debt; and he stated, that he did this on an understanding that the debtor should have credit for the sum so retained, and that he considered the debt to have been satisfied by these moneys; but no account had been settled between him and the debtor:—Held, that as against the other partner, the debt to the partnership was not to be considered as satisfied. Pritchard v. Draper, 1 Russ. & M. 191; Taml. 332.

4. A. and B. were partners in a firm. A. allowed a debtor to the partnership to set off a separate debt of his own against money due to the firm, the debtor knowing the interest which B. had in the debt. B. filed a bill against the debtor and against A., to have it declared that the debtor had no right to retain his share in the debt towards payment of the separate debt of A.:—Held, that, although one partner could bind another in the receipt and payment of partnership debts, he could not set off his separate debts against the debts due to the firm; and the debtor's knowledge of the co-partner's interest rendered the bill sustainable as against him. Piercy v. Fynney, 12 L. R., Eq., 69; 40 L. J., Ch., 404; 19 W. R. 710.

Held, also, that this was a proper subject for a suit in equity, since one partner must sue in an action in the name of himself and his co-partner. Ib.

IX. LIABILITY WHEN JOINT AND SEVERAL.

5. A firm of three dissolved partnership, one of them retiring; and by the deed of dissolution, the two continuing partners covenanted for themselves, their heirs, executors, and administrators, that they, or one of them, would pay to the out-going partner certain specified sums:—Held, that this only constituted a joint liability at law, and could not be otherwise construed in equity. Wilmer v. Currey, 2 De G. & Sm. 347; 12 Jur. 847.

A., B., and C., being partners, by deed dissolved partnership as to C. A. and B. jointly covenanted with C. to pay all the debts of the partnership to which C., with them, was liable, and to pay C. a certain sum, by three instalments. The debts were not paid, and B. died before the second instalment was due, leaving all his property to his wife, whom he made his executrix. C. filed his bill against A. and the executrix of B. for the administration of the estate of B., and payment of the two instalments, and of the debts of B., and of the debts of the partnership still unpaid. A. and the executrix of B. each demurred for want of equity, and for that the other defendant was not interested in the several and distinct matters for which the bill was filed, and the demurrers were allowed. Ib.

6. A. and B. being partners, and C., as their surety, give a joint and several promissory note to D., by which they "jointly and severally promise to pay" to D. the amount of a partnership debt due from A. & B. The note is signed by A. & B., not as individuals, but in their partnership firm, and by C. the surety:—Held, that this note could not be treated as the several note of each one of the three, but as the several note only of the surety, and the joint note of A. and B. Exp. Wilson, Re Manley, 3 M. D. & De G. 57.

7. By an agreement between A., B., C., and D., four partners in a mercantile business, after reciting that all the partners had considerable sums of money employed in the business as floating capital, which it might be impracticable or highly detrimental for the others of them to repay or to advance from the business immediately after the retirement or death of either of them, it was agreed between and by them, that in case of either of them retiring from the co-partnership business, or departing this life during its continuance, then and in such case the continuing or surviving partners or partner should not be compelled by such retiring partner, or by the executors or administrators of such deceased partner, to repay to him or them his or their share in the co-partnership business immediately; but the clear balance, as ascertained from the last stock-taking, due to such retiring or deceased partner, together with any additional capital (if any), should be repaid out of the business by the continuing or surviving partners by instalments, as therein mentioned, until the whole amount should be fully paid or discharged, unless the surviving or continuing partners should wish to pay such share or balance at an earlier period, which they were to be at liberty to do:—Held, that the agreement was merely an arrangement as to the mode of discharging a pre-existing joint and several liability, and was not intended to alter the nature of the liability. Beresford v. Browning, Browning v. Beresford, 20 L. R., Eq., 564; 33 L. T., N. S., 118. Affirmed 24 W. R. 120; 33 L. T., N. S., 524; 1 L. R., Ch. D., 30; 45 L. J., Ch., 36.

Held, also, that if the agreement did create a new liability, such new liability arising out of a contract by a mercantile partnership was in equity several, and not joint merely. Ib.

1. There is no settled rule of equity that a contract which is in terms joint, and would be so construed at law, is to be treated in equity as joint and several. Kendall v. Hamilton, 4 L. R., App. Cas., 504; 48 L. J., C. P., 705; 41 L. T. 418; 28 W. R. 97. Affirming 3 L. R., C. P. D., 403; 47 L. J., C. P., 665; 39 L. T. 250; 27 W. R. 121.

An action, and a judgment against two persons who had borrowed money from the plaintiffs (though the judgment is unsatisfied), constitute a bar to another action brought by the same plaintiffs against a third person, who is afterwards discovered to have been really interested, as a partner, with the two debtors in the business for the purposes of which the money had been borrowed. King v. Hoare (13 M. & W. 494) adopted. Ib.

K. had, under a written arrangement between himself and W. & M., made large advances to them in respect of certain speculations in iron. W. & M. fell into difficulties. K. brought an action against them to recover the debt, and obtained judgment. This judgment remained unsatisfied. W. & M., who resided in Scotland, became bankrupt there, and K. put in his claim under the Scotch sequestration, and recovered a small dividend. K. then discovered that H. had been associated as a partner in the speculations in iron, and brought an action against him as having been jointly liable with W. & M. in respect of the advances:—Held, that the action against H. was not maintainable, the contract having passed into a judgment. Diss. Lord Penzance, on the ground that the objection to K.'s title to recover was merely one of technical procedure at law, and that since the Judicature Act 1873 the rule of equity had, as to such a matter, superseded the rule of law, and the rule in equity admitted of this proceeding against H. the newly-discovered partner. Ib.

The expression that partnership debts were treated in equity as joint and several explained. Ib.

2. A bill drawn upon, and addressed to, the Milford Spinning Company as the drawee was accepted by F. Malcolmson, one of the partners, "for the Milford Spinning Company and self": —Held, that the acceptance did not entitle the drawer to be paid out of the separate estate of F. Malcolmson in a suit for administration of his assets. Malcolmson v. Malcolmson, 1 Ir. L. R., Ch. D., 228.

X. OF PARTNER AGAINST HIS CO-PARTNER.

3. One of two partners may have a demand against the other for compensation, in the nature of unliquidated damages, and enforcable in equity only. Bury v. Allen, 1 Colly. 589.

4. One partner may agree with other retiring partner to give him a sum for concern, though they know partnership to be insolvent, no fraud being intended. Exp. Peake, 1 Madd. 346.

5. The partner of the bankrupt ordered to attend before the commissioners to be examined, and to produce the partnership books and papers, there being no suggestion of his being indebted to the bankrupt, or having property of the bankrupt in his possession. Exp. Levett, 1 G. & J. 185.

6. Under a separate commission of bankruptcy, proof admitted by solvent partners having paid the joint debts since the bankruptcy, on account of a misapplication by the bankrupt to his own use, not by contract, but by fraud, exceeding his authority, and without the privity of his partners. Exp. Yonge, 3 Ves. & B. 31; 2 Rose 40.

It is obligatory on a partner to apply property as received to partnership purposes, or to charge himself, as debtor, in the partnership books. Ib.

7. Money paid by one partner in a joint concern, being his liquidated share of the joint debts, to another partner, as agent for settling the debts, if not applied accordingly, may be proved as a debt upon the bankruptcy of the latter; and therefore, a payment by the other on the same account, after the bankruptcy, cannot be recovered from the bankrupt who had obtained his certificate; but in respect of another payment, also after the bankruptcy, in consequence of the failure of the bankrupt and other partners in paying their shares, a right to contribution arose, and the whole was recovered in an action against the bankrupt, who had obtained his certificate, the defendant not having pleaded in abatement. Wright v. Hunter, 5 Ves. 792.

8. B. and C. having refused to pay A. his share of the profits, unless he would sign a receipt, containing a protest by B. against A.'s claim to any right of pre-emption, A. is entitled to file a bill for payment of his share of the profits, and for a declaration of the Court with respect to his rights of pre-emption. Stewart v. Stuart, 1 L. J., Ch., 61.

9. On the formation of a partnership between A. and B., A. lends to B. B.'s proportion of the capital, and A. is to receive it again, and interest thereon, out of B.'s share of the profits. B. assigns property to C., in trust to secure to A. the money lent by him, and pay C. the amount. After an act of bankruptcy by B., known to A., A. files a bill for a dissolution and account of partnership, and for payment of the debt:—Held, that A. and C. could not, after such election, sue out a fiat against B., founded on that debt, A. having elected his remedy, and treated the debt as mixed up with the partnership accounts. Exp. Gray, 4 Dea. & Ch. 778; 2 Mont. & A. 283; 4 L. J., N. S., Bky., 70.

10. Construction of deeds; first, that a provision for payment of the "just proportion or share" of all debts owing from one partner jointly and as a partner, referred not to the contribution as among the partners, but to what, with reference to the state of the partnership funds, and the ability of the other partners, he may eventually be called on to contribute to the joint debts, so as they may be fully paid; secondly, that under a provision for debts of various descriptions, no preference was intended, which must be clearly shown, otherwise the Court favours equal payment; thirdly, a reference to a deed of a specified date, there being two of the same date, one executed at that time, the other subsequently, was in the absence of positive evidence, and aided by circumstances, applied to the former. Wadeson v. Richardson, 1 Ves. & B. 103.

1. A. lends B. money to enable him to commence a trade at 5 per cent. interest; after the loan B. agrees to give A. one-eighth of the annual profits by monthly payments, which offer A. accepts, and B. accordingly makes several monthly payments, for which A. gives B. receipts on account:—Held, that the balance of the principal and interest due from B. to A. was a good petitioning creditor's debt, not arising out of a partnership nor affected by usury. Exp. Briggs, 3 Dea. & Ch. 367; 1 Mont. & A. 46.

2. Where partner withdrawing money from partnership by entries in books, disguises transaction, or wholly omits or conceals it, it is a fraud, and will entitle others to sue his separate estate; otherwise, if done openly. Exp. Smith, 6 Madd. 2; 1 G. & J. 74.

3. The bankrupt, who was in partnership with W. P., borrowed various sums of him, by way of personal loan, and upon the dissolution of the partnership, purchased the stock in trade for a stipulated sum. W. P. made out an account entitled "Mr. H. P. (the bankrupt) in account with H. and W. P.":—Held, that W. P. had a good petitioning creditor's debt, notwithstanding this mode of entitling the account. Exp. Richardson, 3 Dea. & Ch. 244.

4. A., B., C., and D. being partners in a particular venture, and money on the partnership account being in the hands of B., and D. being indebted to A., A. is not entitled, in the account between him and B., to have credit for D.'s share of the money in B.'s hands. Bodin v. Farquhar, 1 L. J., Ch., 21.

5. A commission issued by one partner against another, not for the purpose of distributing the bankrupt's effects among his creditors, but for the sole purpose of dissolving the partnership, is supersedable. Exp. Christie, 2 Dea. & Ch. 465; Mont. & Bli. 314. Affirmed id. 488; Mont. & Bli. 329; 2 L. J., N. S., Bky., 87.

6. A., being a dormant partner with B., dissolves partnership, and B. is declared indebted to A. on balance; A. sues B. for balance, and receives cognovit for debt and costs; B. becomes bankrupt:—Held, A. is entitled to prove his debt against the estate, although some partnership debts are unpaid. Exp. Grazebrook, 2 Dea. & Ch. 186.

7. Equitable right of partners, subject to the joint debts; depending upon the result of the account between them. Therefore, under a joint commission of bankruptcy, the separate estate of one has a lien on the other's share of a surplus of the joint estate in respect of a debt, proved under bills drawn in the name of the firm for a separate debt; and may come in with the other separate creditors for the deficiency. Exp. King, 17 Ves. 115; 1 Rose 212.

8. Assignees under separate commission against A. cannot come upon joint estate for a sum brought into the partnership beyond his share: for creditors rely on the ostensible state of the fund. Exp. Lodge, 1 Ves. J. 167.

9. A. and B., partners in trade, executed a deed to wind up the partnership, containing a mutual release. B. had, unknown to A., previously withdrawn a sum of money from the concern:—Held, that A.'s equity was not to have the money repaid, but to have the transaction set aside. Skilbeck v. Hilton, 14 W. R. 1017.

A. continued to act upon the deed for a year after he knew that B. had withdrawn the money:—Held, that he could not then have the transaction set aside. Ib.

10. A partner who has received his share of the assets has no equity to insist that the share belonging to his co-partner shall be impounded to answer outstanding demands against the firm, unless he brings his own share into Court for the same purpose. Hutcheson v. Smith, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 117.

11. Where a partner, who owned eleven-twentieths of the capital of the firm, and was entitled under the articles to the profits in the same proportion, and to have a security for the value of his share of the capital at the end of the partnership, varied the arrangements by agreeing to take five-twentieths of the profits:—Held, that the right to a security for his share of the capital was not thereby affected. Fearenside v. Derham, 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 354; 8 Jur. 633.

A partner, having a power to nominate by will his sons to succeed him in the business, on continuing or bringing in a specified and large share of the capital, directed his executors to appropriate to such of his sons as should well conduct themselves in business such interest therein as the executors might think fit:—Held, though not strictly within the power, that the surviving partners, having acquiesced in those arrangements, and received the benefit of the testator's capital, which he directed to remain in the business, were bound by it. Ib.

12. H. and D. consign indigo to Messrs. G. for sale, with a letter of instructions, to which H. adds a postscript stating that T. is to share his moiety with him, and directing Messrs. G. to carry the balance, after certain payments thereout, to the separate accounts of the three—H., D., and T. Messrs. G. act on these instructions. T. deals with his share through their means, and H. then revokes his directions to carry to T.'s separate account, in consequence of T.'s default in meeting a bill, of which he was joint acceptor with H. H. files a bill for a decree that he has a lien on T.'s share in the hands of Messrs. G., and for an account and lien on the balance. Bill dismissed with costs. Holroyd v. Griffiths, 4 W. R. 225; 3 Drew. 428.

13. A. and B. were joint owners of a house, and A. had laid out on it moneys he had obtained from B.:—Held, that B. had no lien on the house for the amount. Kay v. Johnston, 21 Beav. 536.

XI. OF FIRM AGAINST PARTNER.

1. In General, 5503.
2. Profits on Separate Business, 5505.

1. In General.

14. No partner who owes a duty towards another can place himself in a situation which gives him a bias against the discharge of that duty. Burton v. Wookey, 6 Madd. 367.

1. Where a lease of mines is taken by six persons, for the purpose of working them in partnership, and the managing partner becomes in the course of such management indebted to the concern, his interest in the partnership is in the first place applicable to satisfy his debt to the concern. Fereday v. Wightwick, 1 Russ. & M. 45; Taml. 250.

2. A person employed on behalf of himself and his co-partners, in negotiating the term of a lease, is not entitled to stipulate clandestinely with the lessors for any private advantage to himself. Where, therefore, a sum of 12,000*l.* was paid in pursuance of such a stipulation, the party receiving it was declared to hold it in trust for the partnership. Before the transaction was discovered, one of the partners withdrew, and subsequently another partner assigned a share in the stock, and in his proportion of this claim, to persons then admitted into the concern:—Held, that the retired, the continuing, and the new partners were properly joined as co-plaintiffs in a suit to have the trust declared. Fawcett v. Whitehouse, 1 Russ. & M. 132; 4 L. J., Ch., 64; 8 L. J., Ch., 50.

3. Trust funds were invested in the purchase of transferable shares in a banking company, in the name of one of the trustees, who executed a declaration of the trusts thereof, the rules of the company not allowing shares to stand in the name of joint-owners or cestuis que trustent. The trustee was also a proprietor of shares in his own right in the same company, and made various sales and purchases of shares therein. There was nothing to distinguish which were the individual shares held by the different proprietors, the same being in the nature of capital, expressed by quantity. The trustee contracted to assign a certain number of shares to the banking company as a security for advances which they made to him. He afterwards became bankrupt:—Held, that having regard to the deed of association, the banking company had no lien, founded on the general relation of partnership, on the shares of a proprietor, in respect of a debt owing by the proprietor to the company. Pinkett v. Wright, 2 Hare 120; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 119; 6 Jur. 1102.

4. By a clause in the deed of settlement of a banking company, it was stipulated that the company should have a lien on the shares of such proprietors as were customers and indebted to the bank, and that no share should be transferred without the consent of the directors; and an abstract of these provisions was indorsed on the certificate of the share held by each proprietor. The bankrupt, at the time of his bankruptcy, was the owner of thirty of these shares, and had in his possession the certificates of ownership thus indorsed, being then largely indebted to the bank for advances:—Held, that these shares did not pass to his assignee under the clause of reputed ownership in the Bankrupt Act so as to defeat the lien of the bank, which had been provided for in the deed. Exp. Plant, 4 Dea. & Ch. 160.

5. In a suit in which a decree for a dissolution and an account of an unsuccessful partnership was made, the chief clerk certified that one of the partners, an infant, was entitled to a salary under the partnership agreement; but that his share of the partnership capital, which was unpaid, was irrecoverable. Subsequently the infant, who, previously to the date of the certificate, had attained his majority, moved to stay all further proceedings in the cause as against him, on his disaffirming the agreement for the partnership, and disclaiming all interest under it. That motion was refused; but on the cause coming on for further consideration, on a question affecting the proportion which each of the partners was to contribute towards the partnership losses:—Held, that the share of the infant partner was irrecoverable as an asset of the partnership; that the debts and liabilities (with the exception of the infant's salary) must be paid out of the certified assets; that the infant disclaiming his salary it was not to be paid to him. Wright v. Tanner, 20 L. T., N. S., 427.

6. A ship was purchased by a partner for himself, but was paid for out of the partnership assets. The firm became bankrupt:—Held, that the firm had no interest in the ship, or any lien on it for the amount of the purchase money. Walton v. Butler, 29 Beav. 428.

7. M. and L., a partnership firm, had a joint account with a bank, with whom M. had also a separate account. M. having railway shares, which the bank knew to be his separate property, deposited them with the bank, accompanied with a written memorandum that they were to be held as a collateral security for a promissory note of his own which had been discounted by the bank, or for any other sums in which he was or might become indebted to them. M. and L. subsequently became bankrupt, being indebted to the bank on their joint account in a sum which was unsecured. Before the bankruptcy the shares had become the property of the firm:—Held, that the bank was not entitled to hold the shares as a security for the debt due to them from the firm. Exp. M'Kenna, Re Mortimore, 7 Jur., N. S., 588; 30 L. J., Bky., 20; 9 W. R. 490; 4 L. T., N. S., 164.

8. Where there is a bankruptcy of a firm and a bankruptcy of an individual member of the firm, the general rule is that the joint estate of the firm and the separate estate of the partner are kept distinct, so that neither estate is allowed to prove in competition with the other, but this rule does not apply where there has been a fraudulent conversion by a partner to his own purposes of the property of the firm. Read v. Bailey, 47 L. J., Ch., 161; 3 L. R., App. Cas., 94; 26 W. R. 223; 37 L. T., N. S., 510. Affirming 4 L. R., Ch. D., 537.

H., a banker, took into partnership K., who was unacquainted with banking, and took no part in the business of the firm. H., who managed the business, from time to time took large sums out of the bank, concealing the over-drawings by means of fictitious entries in the books of the bank. On his death it was discovered that by reason of the over-drawings and the employment of the moneys abstracted in losing speculations on the Stock Exchange, the bank was utterly insolvent, and K. was adjudicated bankrupt. An action was instituted for the administration of the separate estate of H., in which the trustee in bankruptcy of the firm claimed to prove in respect of the funds fraudulently drawn out by H.:—Held, that the trustee was entitled to prove. Ib.

2. Profits on Separate Business.

1. When one partner entered into a contract which turned out profitable, and which arose out of business originally partnership business, and did not communicate to his partner what he was engaged in:—Held, that the profits must be treated as attributable to the partnership. Hancock v. Heaton, 22 W. R. 680; 30 L. T., N. S., 592. Affirmed 22 W. R. 784.

2. The master and part owner of a ship purchased goods during the voyage, which his answer stated were purchased out of private property, and the profits of private trade during the voyage; but the Court, considering there were strong grounds for thinking that the goods were purchased with partnership property, or with money for which the defendant was accountable to the partnership, and that they belonged to the partnership, restrained him from receiving the goods. Gardner v. M'Cutcheon, 4 Beav. 534.

3. One of several partners was employed to purchase goods for the firm. He, unknown to his co-partners, purchased goods of his own, at the market price, but he made a considerable profit thereby:—Held, that the transaction could not be sustained, and that he was accountable to the firm for the profit thus made. Bentley v. Craven, 18 Beav. 75.

4. The common clause in partnership deeds that "neither partner shall engage in any other business, except on account of and for the benefit of the partnership," being merely a negative covenant, the only remedy for a breach is an action for an injunction to restrain the continuance of the breach, or for a dissolution of the partnership, or for damages. Dean v. M'Dowell, 47 L. J., Ch., 537; 8 L. R., Ch. D., 345; 26 W. R. 486; 38 L. T., N. S., 862.

Where, therefore, partnership articles contained such a clause, and one of the partners clandestinely purchased a share in another business, not in rivalry with the partnership, and from which no damage or loss whatever resulted to the partnership:—Held, that the other partners had no equity against the defaulting partner for an account of the share and profits made by him in the other business. Ib.

In such a case the damages would be merely nominal. Ib.

Semble, that in order to sustain an action for an account of profits in such a case, the clause should provide that, in case of any breach, the other partners shall have the option either of taking to the share and profits of the defaulting partner in the other business, or of leaving him alone to bear the loss, if any, resulting therefrom. Ib.

If profits have been made in any other business by a partner in violation of a covenant not to engage in any other business, the profits will not be decreed to belong to the partnership unless they have arisen from employment of the partnership property, or from transactions in rivalry with the firm, or from some advantage obtained by the partner by virtue of his being a member of the firm. Ib.

XII. OF CREDITORS OF FIRM AGAINST PARTNER.

5. Commission may issue against one of several partners for a joint debt. Exp. Crisp, 1 Atk. 133.

6. Under a joint commission, each of the persons included in it must be found bankrupt, and a joint commission void as to one is so as to both. If one partner be dead at the time it is taken out, it abates and is absolutely void. Beasley v. Beasley, 1 Atk. 97.

7. Creditors of a partnership which failed in two years allowed to come upon the separate estate of one partner, in respect of effects taken out of the partnership by him, without the privity of the other. Exp. Lodge, 1 Ves. J. 166.

8. A. and B., partners, gave a joint and several bond to C., who afterwards becomes indebted to A. B. becomes bankrupt; C. proves the bond under the commission, and then brings a joint action against A. and B., to which B. pleads his certificate. A. being, by this form of action, precluded from setting off his separate debt, applies for and obtains injunction against C.'s proceeding in the joint action. Bradley v. Millar, 1 Rose 273.

9. Separate commissions of bankruptcy against partners taken out by a joint creditor on the same debt, and on the same day, immediately after dissolution of the partnership, and no separate creditor appearing. Exp. Gardner, 1 Ves. & B. 74.

10. Upon a separate commission of bankruptcy, the benefit of an insurance effected by the bankrupt upon his own account on a ship, of which he was joint owner, is not liable to the joint creditors. Exp. Parry, 5 Ves. 575.

11. Two partners, by a deed of trust, provided for the payment of their joint creditors on a given day, and to pay the surplus of the fund to their separate creditors. The distribution of the fund was delayed by difficulties with reference to the separate creditors. Interest was given to the joint creditors from the fixed day at 4*l.* per cent., though their debts did not carry interest before any sum was paid to the separate creditors. Pearce v. Slocombe, 3 Y. & Coll. 84.

12. J. C. S. and W. S., carrying on business as brewers, in co-partnership, admitted W. W. as a dormant partner. It was stipulated by deed that the stock and effects of the old firm, including the plant, etc., and book debts, should form part of the capital stock of the new co-partnership; that W. W. should be paid 10 per cent. on the capital advanced by him, and should not otherwise interfere. The business was carried on as before, in the names of J. C. S. and W. S. only, until the new firm became bankrupt. Upon petition of several creditors of the old firm, some of whom had notice of the dormant partner, it was held, that all the personal chattels of the new firm were within the order and disposition of J. C. S. and W. S., and ought to be administered in the bankruptcy as the separate estate of the two. Exp. Jennings, Re Starkey, Mont. 45.

Where A. and B., partners, assigned all their stock in trade to C., in trust to secure a sum of money advanced by C., and upon further trusts that C. might manage the business until he and other creditors were repaid sums due to them:—Held, on a bill for an account by the surviving partner, that C. was not entitled to credit himself with any sums as bonuses, notwithstanding that his management of the concern had been such as to pay all creditors, and largely to diminish his own debt, and that the partners had repeatedly acquiesced in such charges. Barrett v. Hartley, 14 W. R. 684.

XIII. OF CREDITORS OF PARTNER AGAINST FIRM.

1. In General, 5506.
2. Executions, 5506.

1. In General.

1. Assignment by one partner of joint property to secure his separate debt must be subject to the joint debts. Young v. Keighly, 15 Ves. 557.

2. Partnership effects first applied to pay partnership debts. West v. Skip, 1 Ves. 456.

3. On separate commission against one partner, the assignees took possession of partnership property, and were about to sell it. Injunction granted on filing bill and affidavit to restrain the sale. Allen v. Kilbre, 4 Madd. 464.

4. One of several partners previous to his marriage agreed with his intended wife's trustees that he would assign to them a portion of his capital in the business, to secure them certain periodical payments of 500*l*., on the trusts of his marriage settlement. In pursuance of this agreement, the partnership open an account in their books with the trustees, in which they place to the credit of the trustees the sum of 3,000*l*., and debit their partner with the same sum, giving the trustees notice that they have transferred this sum from their partner's private account. Defaults having been made in the payments of 500*l*., and the firm having become bankrupt:—Held, that this was an acknowledgment of a present debt from the firm to the trustees, the consideration for which was the intended marriage. Exp. Hill, 1 Dea. 123.

5. A bill, filed by a creditor of a testator against the executor and certain persons who were in partnership with the executor, alleged that the partnership claimed to be entitled to retain assets which were in their hands, in satisfaction of a debt which they pretended was due to them from the testator, but it did not charge in express terms that the executor was colluding with his co-partners:—The creditor was held to have, under such circumstances, a right to sue all the partners; and a demurrer by the partners, other than the executor, was overruled. Gedge v. Traill, 1 Russ. & M. 281. n.

6. S. and U. were solicitors and partners. S. was steward of a manor and receiver of rents. In the articles of partnership it was provided that steward's fees and receiver's salaries of either partner should be deemed part of the profits of the partnership, but that the receipts and payments in respect thereof should be made by the partner conducting such business:—Held, that steward's fees and receiver's salary or commission are not profits on a trade or business in the ordinary sense of the term, and that, under the circumstances, balances due by S. as steward or receiver were not debts of the partnership. Alston v. Sims, 1 Jur., N. S., 438; 24 L. J., Ch., 553; 3 Eq. Rep. 334.

7. In 1851 A., B., and C. agreed to be partners for five years. Six months afterwards, A. being in difficulties, it was agreed between A., his creditors, and B. and C., that A. should retire and B. carry on the business for his own behoof and that of A.'s creditors for the period of five years, as agreed on by the articles, and that A. should assign to trustees his separate estate for the benefit of his creditors, and B. agreed to appropriate to the trustees the share of profits in his business that would have accrued to A. in the event of the partnership having been continued, less 400*l*. a year, to be appropriated to A.'s maintenance. A. died two months after:—Held, that the right of his creditors to a share in the profits thereupon ceased. Crosbie v. Guion, 23 Beav. 518; 6 W. R. 50.

2. Executions.

8. Execution by a separate creditor against joint property, subject to account ascertaining the specific interest of the partner in the joint effects, allowed. Exp. Hamper, 17 Ves. 407.

9. Right of the separate creditor of one partner against the partnership property. Skipp v. Harwood, 2 Swan. 586.

10. The interest of each partner in his share of the surplus, subject to all the partnership accounts, and that interest only, is liable to the execution of a creditor by the bankruptcy of one; his interest is divested, and vests in his assignees by relation to the act of bankruptcy. Dutton v. Morrison, 17 Ves. 193; 1 Rose 213.

11. A separate creditor of a partner has no right against the joint property farther than the separate interest of partner, viz., his share upon the division of the surplus, subject to the account of the partnership; therefore, joint property of an insolvent partner taken in execution for a separate debt cannot be held against the joint creditor. Taylor v. Fields, 4 Ves. 396.

Assignee, executor, or separate creditor, coming in the right of one partner against the joint property, comes into nothing more than an interest subject to an account between the partnership and the partner, and therefore to the joint debts: assignee under a separate commission of bankruptcy has only the same right to stand in the place of the bankrupt by the common law, not under the bankrupt laws. Ib.

12. Injunction granted to restrain the goods of a partnership from being taken in execution for a debt due from one of the partners, who died before the writ was delivered to the sheriff. Newell v. Townsend, 6 Sim. 419.

13. The power of a solvent partner, upon the bankruptcy of his co-partner, to sell the partnership property, is given him in his personal capacity, to enable him to wind up the affairs of the partnership, and cannot be transferred by him to another, either by assignment of all his share and interest in the partnership, or by exposing himself, although bonâ fide, to a judgment under which all such share and interest are taken in execution. Fraser v. Kershaw, 2 Kay & J. 496; 2 Jur., N. S., 880; 24 L. J., Ch., 445.

A sale of partnership assets by an execution creditor of a solvent partner claiming the sole property is a tortious conversion such as ought to be restrained. Ib.

1. Two persons contracted with a railway company to execute certain works, and, after some progress had been made with the works, a judgment creditor of one of the contractors took in execution his share of the plant and effects, which the sheriff sold and assigned to the other contractor. The other contractor assigned the interest of the firm in the contract, and all the effects and moneys due or to become due in respect of the same, to a third person, by way of security, with power to such assignee to enter on the works and take possession, and execute the contract. The assignee afterwards took possession of the works, and proceeded to complete them. The company had notice of the execution and sale by the sheriff of the property of one contractor, and of its assignment to the other, and of the subsequent assignment by the other to the assignee; and they allowed the works to be continued by the two latter persons respectively, and made payments to them on account. The assignee having (after the insolvency of his assignor) filed a bill against the company for an account of what was due from the company in respect of the contract, and for a declaration that a release executed to the company by the contractor, whose share had been taken and assigned by the sheriff, was fraudulent:—Held, that the seizure in execution of one partner's share of the plant and effects operated as a dissolution of the partnership. Aspinall v. London & North-Western Railway Co., 11 Hare 325.

Held, also, that the subsequent prosecution of the works by the other contractor or his assignee did not necessarily involve any new contract with the company, but was consistent with that theretofore made; and that the contractor or his assignee, who, without objection from the company, prosecuted the works, could sustain a suit against the company for payment of what had become due from them in respect of the works done under the contract. Ib.

Held, also, that a release executed by the partner and contractor, whose share of the partnership effects had been taken in execution, was void as against the other contractor and his assignee. Ib.

2. P., H., and J. entered into a partnership for working a colliery, and by the articles it was stipulated, that if either should suffer his share to be taken in execution, and the others or other should thereupon give notice of their or his desire that the partnership should cease, then at the expiration of a month from the time of such notice the partnership should cease. The working of the colliery was commenced, but before the coal was reached a creditor of J. brought an action, and issued execution against him to recover 283*l.*, and his share or interest in the colliery was taken in execution under a fi. fa. Notice of dissolution of partnership was given by P. and H. J.'s share or interest was put up by the sheriff and sold by auction. At the sale P. and H. became the purchasers of J.'s share or interest for 500*l.* Of this, a balance of 164*l.*, after paying the execution creditor's claim and expenses, was received by J. The sheriff subsequently, as far as he lawfully might or could, assigned to P. and H. all the estate, share, and interest of J. A bill was filed by P. and H., praying for a declaration that the partnership was dissolved, or if it appeared that the sale did not operate as an effectual transfer, for an account of the partnership dealings. J. filed a cross bill, praying that the sale might be set aside:—Held, that the coal being nearly reached when the sale took place, some suspicion of misconduct and concealment attached to P. and H., and that the sale must be declared void. Perrens v. Johnson, Johnson v. Perrens, 3 Jur., N. S., 975.

Semble, that in a case of this kind it is of the utmost importance to show that no suspicion or trace of misconduct can attach to the partners who have become purchasers of the share or interest of their partner. Ib.

XIV. MORTGAGES BY AND TO PARTNERS.

3. A security to a firm continued after an alteration in the members of it, upon the construction of a letter, raising an agreement to that effect. Exp. Marsh, 2 Rose 239.

4. An agreement by way of deposit of title deeds, with a firm of five, one of whom was a nominal partner only, extended by subsequent agreement to the actual partnership of four. Exp. Alexander, 1 G. & J. 409. And see S. C. 2 G. & J. 275.

Deeds are deposited with a firm of five partners, one of whom was a nominal partner, as a collateral security for advances by the firm, which are secured by bond; the nominal partner being dead, it is agreed that the four surviving partners shall hold the deeds as a collateral security for sums secured by a second bond in addition to the former bond:—Held, that under this agreement the partnership of four has an equitable lien on the estates comprised in the deeds, to the extent of the sums due on both bonds. S. C. nom. Exp. Alexander, Re Tills, 2 L. J., Ch., 159.

5. Where title deeds are deposited by way of security with a firm, upon a verbal agreement, the deposit may be extended by a subsequent verbal agreement for the security of a new sum upon a change of partners. Exp. Lloyd, 1 G. & J. 389; 2 L. J., Ch., 162.

6. A., as creditor of a firm, held securities from one of its members, for moneys advanced by him, at different times, to the firm, but claimed a balance beyond what those securities would cover. All the creditors of the firm agreed to accept a composition "of 7*s.* for every 20*s.* due to the said creditors respectively." A. was the first to sign this deed; but added to his signature the words, "without prejudice to any securities whatever that I hold." The other creditors signed in their respective order, under A.'s signature:—Held, that such a composition, thus accepted, did not affect the rights of A. upon his previous securities, but only related to the balance beyond the sum they would cover, and that he might afterwards enforce those securities in equity. Duffy v. Orr, 1 Cl. & F. 253; 5 Bli. N. S. 620.

1. Where the bankrupt deposited title deeds with his bankers to secure future advances, and after a change in the partnership continued for six years the same mode of dealing with them, and the same running account:—Held, that this was a tacit recognition of the deposit of the deeds with the new firm upon the same terms as with the old. Exp. Oakes, Re Worters, 2 M. D. & De G. 234; 10 L. J., N. S., Bky., 69; 5 Jur. 757.

2. The title deeds of property belonging to one of two partners in trade are deposited with a banking firm to secure the balance on the account current between the banking firm and the partnership. On a particular advance being afterwards made by the former to the latter, the partner to whom the deeds belong writes a letter to the effect that the object of the deposit is to secure that "as well as any future advances." An alteration takes place in the members of the banking firm, but the new firm retain the deeds and continue to advance money to the partnership:—Held, that the existing banking firm were entitled to the benefit of the security. Exp. Smith, Re Gye, 2 M. D. & De G. 314.

3. A security for a separate demand does not extend to a joint demand. Exp. Freen, 2 G. & J. 246.

The interest of partners as tenants in common, where the estate was purchased out of the joint property and mortgaged by the firm for a joint debt, is a joint security. Id. 250.

4. Securities to a banking firm for a certain balance cease on the change of the firm by the admission of a new partner; and if the account be carried on by the new firm, subsequent payments by the debtor will be applied in the first instance exclusively in satisfaction of the balance due at the date of the admission of the new partner. Eyton v. Knight, 2 Jur. 8.

5. When a mortgage in the ordinary form is made to partners in trade to secure a partnership debt, one of such partners takes no authority to bind the others or the mortgagor by a sale under the power in the mortgage; and if a person to whom he has contracted to sell the property expends money in repairs on the faith of such contract, the money so expended cannot be recovered from the firm. Warr v. Jones, 24 W. R. 695.

Mortgage of Share in Partnership.] See IV. 3 supra.

XI. Books.

6. A solvent partner is entitled to retain the partnership books, when the other becomes bankrupt. Exp. Finch, Re Coverdale, 1 Dea. & Ch. 274. And see Exp. Trueman, id. 464.

7. Where a partnership has expired by efflux of time, and in a suit for an account, etc., a receiver has been appointed before decree, the Court will not compel defendant (the former managing partner) to deliver up to receiver, for the purpose of making out bills of costs, partnership books and accounts, which have remained in his hands, and title-deeds belonging to a third person, which came into the possession of the co-partners as solicitors, such defendant offering the receiver free access thereto, and to assist in making out such bills. Dacie v. John, M'Clel. 206; 13 Price 446.

8. Specific performance of agreement made at dissolution of partners, that particular book used in trade should be considered exclusive property of one of partners, and that copy of it should be given to other, will be decreed. Lingen v. Simpson, 1 Sim. & S. 600.

9. Injunction granted to restrain the defendant, who had removed the partnership books from the place of business, from keeping them at any other place. Greatrex v. Greatrex, 1 De G. & Sm. 692; 11 Jur. 1052.

10. Where defendant denies charges in bill, of fraud and misconduct of partnership, and explains others away, and alleges his inability to put in a full answer by reason that plaintiff withheld improperly the partnership books, the Court refused (but without prejudice to future application) the injunction prayed by the bill. Littlewood v. Caldwell, 11 Price 97.

11. A creditor who has proved against the joint estate is not entitled to inspect the separate books. Re Prichard, 1 F. N. R. 17.

12. It is not sufficient excuse for a member of a partnership not giving a discovery, which he is bound to give if he can, and which is to be obtained from inspection of the partnership books, to allege generally that his partners or, as in this case, his co-directors in a joint-stock company refuse him access to the books. Taylor v. Rundell, 1 Y. & Coll. C. C. 128; 5 Jur. 1129.

13. If a partnership is admitted, the books are admissible, in taking the account of the partnership transactions, but the books of A. are not admissible against B. to prove a partnership, if it be denied. Sim v. Sim, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 310.

14. Semble, that by the ordinary rules of the Court partnership books are admissible in evidence for and against all the partners and their estates. Lodge v. Pritchard, 3 De G. M. & G. 906.

15. Partnership accounts having been directed to be taken by the Master in a case in which some of the books had been lost, the Court directed the Master, if it should appear in taking the account that any necessary books, etc., should be wanting, to report the same specially, and whether in consequence of the want of such books he was unable to proceed satisfactorily in taking the account. Millar v. Craig, 6 Beav. 433.

I. RIGHT TO.

1. Profit of partnership in underwriting was illegal by 6 Geo. 1, c. 18, s. 12, and could not be subject of account in equity; but that part of statute is repealed by 5 Geo. 4, c. 114. Knowles v. Houghton, 11 Ves. 168. See Watts v. Brooks, 3 Ves. 612; Ottley v. Brown, 1 Ball & B. 360.

2. Bill by a partner under a parol agreement, charging misconduct in the other partner, and praying a dissolution, account, and injunction against executing securities in the name of the firm; demurrer to the prayer for a dissolution, because there was no writing between them, overruled. Master v. Kirton, 3 Ves. 74.

3. The firm of S. & Co. advanced money for the purpose of a joint speculation with the firm of B. & Co.; after that was terminated, one of the partners of B. disclaimed all interest in the speculation, and in any balance due from B. & Co. in favour of his co-partner, and then the partnership of S. & Co. was dissolved: demurrer, for want of equity, to a bill for an account filed against B. & Co. by the party in whose favour the disclaimer was made, overruled. Kinder v. Ashburton (Lord), 2 Jur. 1002.

4. On an execution against the share of one in the partnership stock, under circumstances amounting to a dissolution, the Court held the plaintiff, as an insolvent partner, to be entitled as against the other defendant partner, who had been the assignee of the sheriff, to an inquiry and account as to the debts and receipts, and how applied. Habershon v. Blurton, 1 De G. & Sm. 121.

5. P. and D., in the year 1814, commenced a partnership as solicitors. W. was a client of the firm, and employed D. as his private agent to receive his rents. The partnership was dissolved in 1817, when W. was indebted to the firm for a bill of costs in a sum of 867*l.*, and D., upon a settlement of the partnership between him and P., was found indebted to P. in a sum of 750*l.*, for which he gave security, and agreed to assign to P. the outstanding partnership debts. Of this settlement, debt, and agreement, notice was given to W. in 1821. During the partnership and afterwards D. had received moneys on account of W. beyond the amount of the bill of costs; there was no evidence of any direction given by W. to D. to apply the moneys received by D. on his account to the payment of the bill of costs, nor of any settlement of accounts between W. and D.; but it was in evidence, that upon one occasion W. said to D., that he had better keep some money of W.'s which he had in his hands, as he might want it. A bill in equity, filed by P., stating these facts, and that D. had possession of the partnership books, to which P. had not access; that D. had refused to concur with him in suing W. at law, or to permit the use of his name for that purpose; and that, by collusion between W. and D., the moneys of W. received by D. had, as they pretended, been applied to payment of the partnership debt, and praying an account and payment of the debt, was dismissed by the Master of the Rolls; but on appeal to the Lord Chancellor this order was reversed, and a decree for account and payment made against the executors of W., and this decree was affirmed on appeal. Nottidge v. Pritchard, 8 Bli., N. S., 493; 2 Cl. & F. 379.

6. On a general reference, by three partners, of all matters in difference to arbitration, the arbitrators found the partnership capital on the day of the dissolution to be, in merchandise and good debts, of a given amount, including a debt due from A., one of the partners, and that there were some dubious debts. They then ascertained the amount of the debts due from the partnership, and found the gross value of the stock, which, including the debt due from A., they awarded to be divisible between the other partners B. and C. They next found the dubious debts to be divisible, as received, between the three partners; and they awarded that A. should give security for the payment of his debt by instalments, and directed B. to receive the outstanding debts and effects, and to pay all the debts owing by the partnership, of which accounts were to be stated periodically, and of the balance of receipts; special credit was to be given for A.'s share against his debt, and the remainder was to be divided between B. and C., and any balance of payments was to be borne in the same proportions. The award was acted upon by all parties, but B. subsequently received some debts which were omitted in the accounts laid before the arbitrators, and on which their award proceeded, and he also received good debts to a larger amount than had been estimated by the arbitrators. On a bill by A. against his co-partners:—Held, that he was entitled, notwithstanding the reference was of all matters in difference, to an account of the good debts received beyond the amount estimated by the arbitrators, and to an account of the receipts in respect of dubious debts, and that any over receipt in respect of good debts ought to follow the directions of the award with respect to the dubious debts. Spencer v. Spencer, 2 Y. & J. 249.

7. A. conveys lands to trustees on trust to sell if the unsatisfied debts of a partnership, in which he had been concerned, should at a given time exceed 40,000*l.* The trustees sell and convey to the purchaser by a deed, which recites that the debts of the partnership exceeded the specified amount, and that A. had died intestate as to his real estates; and the heir-at-law of A. joins in that deed, and enters into a covenant for the title of the trustees, a covenant against all acts done by him or his father, and a covenant of the further assurance; it afterwards appears to be uncertain whether A. had not devised his real estate, and the purchaser files a bill to have protection against or remedy of the alleged defect in his title which this discovery created:—Held, that the purchaser is not entitled to have an account of the debts of the partnership, in order to establish the fact of their having at the specified time exceeded the specified amount. Hallett v. Middleton, 1 Russ. 243.

1. Two captains of ships of war enter into an agreement that all prizes taken by either of them, whether in the ships they then had, or in any other ships which they might thereafter command, should be equally divided between them. One of them changed his ship, which meeting with an accident, was ordered to be laid up, and it was some time before he got another: the other captain continued cruising all the time, but objected to account for the prizes which he took during the interval of his partner being unemployed: but held that he was accountable for all the prizes taken from the date of the agreement. Ogle v. Sansom, 1 Bro. P. C. 149.

2. A suit against the managing committee of a provisionally registered joint stock company was compromised, the defendants agreeing to pay a certain sum of money. One of them paid more than his proportion of that sum and filed his bill for an account and contribution: —Held, that he was entitled to an inquiry as to the particulars of the compromise, and an account on the footing of it, and that the defendants could not without a cross bill insist on the whole affairs of the partnership being wound up, and the rights and liabilities of all parties being ascertained, before making good the amount of their contribution. Prole v. Masterman, 21 Beav. 61.

3. A., a resident in England, and the sole member of a Liverpool firm, entered into a partnership with B. and C., residents in Hayti, in a business to be carried on at Hayti. The Liverpool firm acted as the agents of the Haytian firm. B. was admitted as a partner in the Liverpool firm. C. died, and the winding-up of the Haytian firm was committed by agreement to A. and B. A. died, leaving B. sole survivor in each firm. B. and the Haytian legal representatives of C. engaged in cross suits in Hayti, in which certain settled accounts were established. The representative of A., whose assets were all in England, was not a party to the Haytian suit:—Held, on a bill filed by the administrator of C. in England, that there was jurisdiction in the Court of Chancery to wind up the partnership in Hayti, and to take the accounts of that firm and of the agency of the Liverpool firm; and decree accordingly. Maunder v. Lloyd, 2 John. & H. 718; 1 N. R. 123.

Held, also, that the law of Hayti was to regulate the transactions of the Haytian firm. Ib.

4. An adventurer in a mining company, the rules of which did not contain any provision for the forfeiture of shares on non-payment of calls, received notice from his co-adventurers and co-lessees of the mines, that unless his arrears of calls were paid up, his shares would be forfeited on a specified day. He replied by denying the right to forfeit his shares. A resolution extending the time for payment was then communicated to him, to which he replied by denying the right to deprive him of his share in the lease. Some months after the extended time had expired, he received from the co-adventurers another application for payment of his arrears, of which he took no notice until more than six months had elapsed, when he claimed to be still a partner. Two years afterwards he filed a bill for an account:—Held, that he was entitled to be still considered a partner. Hart v. Clarke, 6 De G. M. & G. 232; 24 L. J., Ch., 137. Affirmed sub nom. Clarke v. Hart, 6 H. L. Cs. 633.

5. K. advanced money to G. on the faith of a letter which he insisted constituted a contract of partnership in the profits of the business of the Italian Opera at Covent Garden. G. insisted that it amounted to nothing but an agreement to pay the amount of the loan and the interest on it out of the profits (if any should arise), but that the concern remained his alone. The letters which passed between the parties were held to bear this construction, and, therefore, an account as of the profits of a partnership was refused. Knox v. Gye, 5 L. R., H. L., 656; 42 L. J., Ch., 234.

The advance was made with reference to the business of the Italian Opera at Covent Garden, the lease of which theatre was in the name of G. alone. That theatre was burned down in 1856, and G. hired another theatre (the Lyceum), and carried on the business of the Italian Opera there, and in two years' time returned to a new theatre at Covent Garden, which had been built in the interval, and of which the lease, as in the former case, had been granted in his name alone:—Held, that the true construction of the letters between the parties showed that the agreement between them was confined to the old Covent Garden Theatre alone, and, therefore, an account of profits alleged to have arisen at the Lyceum and the new Covent Garden Theatres was refused. Ib.

6. The rule that a court of equity will not assist persons who stand aloof from a joint undertaking in a time of adversity, and then claim a share in it, when it has been rendered prosperous by the exertions of others, does not apply when the others have set apart a sum to answer the share of the person so standing aloof. Exp. Dibbens, Re Shadwell Waterworks Co., 18 W. R. 160.

II. HOW TAKEN.

7. Where partnerships have commenced at different times upon bankruptcy of all, the Court will separate accounts, and each estate shall first bear its own debts. Exp. Martin, 2 Bro. C. C. 15.

8. In taking the accounts between three partnerships, the first, of A. and B., the second, of A., B., and C., the third, of B. and C., the partnership of B. and C. cannot charge commission for collecting the debts of the other two partnerships. Whittle v. M'Farlane, 1 Knapp 311.

9. A. usually employed B. as his agent to buy hops of the several planters in and about Canterbury, but having, in a particular season, omitted to give him any orders at the usual time, B. enters into a partnership with three others for purchasing hops of that year for their mutual benefit. The hops are accordingly purchased, but A. having intelligence of this transaction before they were delivered, prevails upon B. to declare to the planters that he bought them as A.'s agent, and by that means A. got the hops delivered to him:—Held, that this was a fraud upon the partners of B., and that A. should account for the value of the hops according to the highest price for which he sold them. Hunter v. Sheppard, 4 Bro. P. C. 210.

1. A. and B. entered into an agreement for a partnership, B. to pay A. a consideration of 2,500*l.*, of which a moiety was paid down, but no deed ever actually executed. Personal quarrels having ensued within a few months from the commencement of the partnership, A. unjustifiably excluded B. from entering upon the premises, or taking any part in the concern; and upon a bill filed for a dissolution and account, and a return of part of the premium, in consequence of which the notice of dissolution was gazetted, but before any further step taken A. became bankrupt:—Held, that in taking the accounts with the assignees, B. was to be credited with the entire premium, but debited with the moiety unpaid, and a proportional part of the whole premium, calculated upon the actual duration of the partnership. Bury v. Allen, 1 Colly. 589.

2. A surviving partner who had possession of the partnership books, wilfully and fraudulently refused to produce them to have the accounts taken under a decree for that purpose. The Master, in the absence of other evidence, charged 10 per cent. per annum on the capital stock as the net gains made during the partnership, and debited the surviving partner with amount thereof:—Held, he was justified in so doing, and the Court decreed accordingly. The Court must give credit to what the Master reports as occurring in his presence. Walmsley v. Walmsley, 3. J & L. 556.

3. So long as the partnership accounts are unsettled, moneys advanced by one partner to the firm, or drawn out by another, are merely items of account and not debts; and even if it was considered as a debt, the Court will not order it to be paid in, in a suit for taking the partnership accounts, to answer an alleged but unascertained deficiency of the partnership assets. Richardson v. England (Bank of), 4 Myl. & C. 165; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 1; 2 Jur. 911.

4. A. was lessee of seams of coal for a term of years, and had abandoned the working of the upper seams as unprofitable. In 1845 he entered into partnership for working the upper seams with B., his colliery manager. In 1857, the upper seams having been worked as far as could be done from the existing pits, he, with the privity and approbation of A., sank a new pit at considerable expense, which was defrayed out of the partnership moneys. In 1858, differences having arisen, A. gave B. notice to dissolve the partnership, which notice he refused to receive, insisting that the understanding had been that the partnership should continue for the whole duration of the lease. The new pit was only just finished. No express agreement as to the duration of the partnership was proved:—Held, that an inquiry had rightly been directed whether any and what sum ought to be allowed to B. in respect of the expenditure on the new pit. Burdon v. Barkus, 4 De G. F. & J. 42.

5. Two sets of parties having projected a railway on a similar line agreed to consolidate the project, and appointed, as solicitors of the proposed company, the plaintiff and defendant, whom they had respectively consulted prior to the consolidation. The two solicitors accepted the appointment without making any definite arrangement as to the division of the business, or of the emoluments of the office, and a much larger portion of the work was done by the defendant than by the plaintiff. In a conversation between them about six months after the appointment, and before the principal part of the business was transacted, the plaintiff stated, as the result of his inquiries into the practice in like cases, that the allowance for office expenses and personal trouble in such limited partnerships between solicitors was made by each party retaining, besides his expenses and disbursements, from 10 to 25 per cent. on the amount of the net charges for the business done, and which principle he considered satisfactory: and the defendant, in reply, observed, that there could be no misunderstanding about it between honourable men. Upon a bill by the plaintiff, claiming an account and division of the profits of the business done by the company, upon the footing of an equal co-partnership, and offering to allow 25 per cent. upon the work done separately to the partner who did it, the Court, under the circumstances, made a decree accordingly. Webster v. Bray, 7 Hare 159.

6. The common account of the dealings and transactions of co-partners, is to be taken according to the articles or usage of the partnership, although no special directions to that effect are inserted in the decree. Watney v. Wells, 1 N. R. 82.

III. STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS AND LAPSE OF TIME.

1. Claims by Partners inter se, 5511.
2. Claims by Creditors, 5513.

1. Claims by Partners inter se.

7. Bill by a merchant against his partner for an account: Plea, twenty years' acquiescence without suit, and also the Statute of Limitations. Plea allowed as a good bar in equity, though between merchants. Brydges v. Mitchell, Gilb. Eq. Rep. 224.

Note, the distinction is, that if open accounts are continued by subsequent acts, they are not barred by length of time. Aliter, if deserted; for then a settled balance will be presumed. Ib.

8. An account of a partnership estate, and of moneys paid to one of the partners during the partnership, and after the dissolution of it, directed at a distance of four years after such dissolution, under circumstances showing that the partner retired, from a conviction that the partnership was insolvent. Anderson v. Maltby, 4 Bro. C. C. 423; 2 Ves. J. 244.

9. In 1800 A., B., and C. entered into partnership as attorneys, upon certain terms expressed in a memorandum. In 1808 A. died, leaving B. his executor and residuary legatee, and then B. and C. formed a partnership, and agreed to share the profits equally. In December 1825 their partnership was dissolved by consent. During the former partnership, A. and B. had made advances both jointly and severally for C.'s private use; during the latter partnership B. made similar advances. In 1827 B. became bankrupt, no settlement of accounts having taken place between any of the parties. In July 1831 B.'s assignees filed a bill against B. (as A.'s executor) and C., for an account of the dealings of both partnerships, and of all the advances made by A. and B. C. pleaded the Statutes of Limitations (21 Jac. 1, and 9 Geo. 4) to so much of the bill as related to such advances:—Held, that as the plea extended to the joint advances of A. and B., during the first partnership, it covered too much, and was, therefore, bad. Robinson v. Field, 5 Sim. 14.

1. Bill by surviving partners against the executors of a partner, who had died thirteen years before the institution of the suit, for an account of the partnership dealings and transactions, charging that the deceased partner was indebted to the firm at the time of his death, dismissed with costs, on the ground of lapse of time, no new liabilities of the former partnership appearing to have arisen or become known after the death of the deceased partner. Tatam v. Williams, 3 Hare 347.

2. Upon the death of one of three partners, his executors carry on the business with the two surviving ones for a twelvemonth longer, and then dissolve the partnership; upon which occasion the two continuing partners give the executors a bond to secure the balance due to them, and more than six years afterwards the two become bankrupt:—Held, that the executors had a right to prove the amount of the bond against the joint estate of the two continuing partners. Exp. Hall, 3 Dea. 125.

3. Bill by assignees of a bankrupt, claiming a debt, which had been paid to his partner, as paid after notice of dissolution of the partnership, that partner retiring and the bankrupt continuing, dismissed; the terms of the alleged arrangement not being made out, so as to establish the right in equity of the bankrupt against the legal right of the other partner. The other questions therefore were not determined: 1st, Whether a demand, the result of an over-payment in advance upon a single transaction of sale between merchants, or merchant and factor, was within the exception as to merchants' accounts in the Statute of Limitations; 2ndly, As to the effect of that exception; whether including merchants' accounts generally, or those only with items continuing within the six years; 3rdly, upon the objection of laches, independent of the statute. Duff v. East India Co., 15 Ves. 198.

4. The right of a surviving partner to the partnership assets is absolute. There is no fiduciary relation between him and the representatives of his deceased partner, but he is liable to account for the partnership assets, and, in taking such account, the Statute of Limitations is applicable. Taylor v. Taylor, 28 L. T., N. S., 188.

5. A., B., and C. carried on business as copartners under articles containing a covenant by which the partnership effects were made a security for the repayment of the sum in which the concern might be indebted to any partner; and the other partners covenanted to make up the deficiency, according to their equitable liability. After the death of A. and B. their respective personal representatives filed a bill against C. to take the account of the partnership, and a receiver was appointed, who got in the assets, and without the sanction of the Court, but with the approbation of the parties, paid them to the executors of A., to whom the partnership was largely indebted, and the suit was not further prosecuted. These payments were insufficient to discharge the debt due to A.'s estate, and the estate of B. remained liable to the estate of A. to a considerable amount in respect of that debt:—Held (affirming 25 Beav. 421), that it not being proved that the receiver made the payments with the sanction of the personal representative of B. for the purpose of discharging the liability of C.'s estate, those payments did not take the demand against B.'s estate out of the Statute of Limitations. Whitley v. Lowe, 2 De G. & J. 704; 4 Jur., N. S., 815.

6. When a partnership is dissolved by the death of one of the parties the Statute of Limitations will not, in general, run against the representatives of the deceased partner or against the surviving partner, so long as there are any outstanding assets to be got in, or liabilities to be discharged. Millington v. Holland, 18 W. R. 184.

7. On a bill to dissolve a partnership and take the usual accounts, although the partnership had been discontinued more than six years before the filing of the bill, the Court directed the accounts to be taken, notwithstanding that the defendant insisted on the Statute of Limitations as a bar. Miller v. Miller, 8 L. R., Eq., 499.

8. After a dissolution of partnership, by which the continuing partner covenanted to pay the debts and to pay the retiring partner a sum equal to half the next half-year's profits:—Held, that non-payment of a debt by the continuing partner during the half year could not be set up against the retiring partner as an answer to the Statute of Limitations. Watson v. Woodman, 20 L. R., Eq., 721; 24 W. R. 47.

Held, also, that though the debt was from solicitors to a client in respect of moneys received, there was no express trust to exclude the operation of the statutes. Ib.

9. In 1858 the plaintiff and defendant entered into partnership transactions which came to a final termination in 1861, when the defendant admitted that 787*l.* was due to the plaintiff, but he never subsequently made any admission of the debt, or promise to pay. The plaintiff brought an action for an account of the partnership dealings:—Held, that the Statute of Limitations could be set up on demurrer; and was a good defence to a claim for partnership accounts. Noyes v. Crawley, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 31; 48 L. J., Ch., 112; 39 L. T. 267; 27 W. R. 109.

10. T. advanced 12,000*l.* to G. on the terms of partnership. T. made a will, leaving this money equally between K. and G. T. died in December 1854, before old Covent Garden Theatre was burnt, which event took place in March 1856. There had been, before December 1854, negotiations between G. and one H. to allow G. the use of Her Majesty's Theatre, but though a sum of 5,000*l.* (part of T.'s 12,000*l.*) had been paid to H. under these negotiations, he had never performed his contract. G. finally brought an action against H., and recovered judgment for 5,000*l.*, but ultimately (after the death of T., yet within six years of the date of a bill filed by K. for an account) consented to accept 2,500*l.* as a compromise. K. in December 1864 filed a bill against G. for an account of profits in the partnership with T., and of what was due to K. in respect thereof under T.'s will:—Held, that the right of K. under T.'s will began in December 1854, and was barred in equity by analogy to the Statute of Limitations, the bill not having been filed till 1864. Knox v. Gye, 5 L. R., H. L., 656; 42 L. J., Ch., 234.

Held, also, that the surviving partner being a trustee for the executors of his deceased partner, the payment of the 2,500*l.* from H. within six years from the filing of the bill did not take the case out of the Statute of Limitations. Ib.

1. The doctrine of Prendergast v. Turton (1 Y. & C. C. C. 98; 13 L. J., Ch., 268) does not apply where a surviving partner has refused to give the representatives of a deceased partner all the information as to the state of the concern which is necessary to enable them to exercise a sound discretion as to whether they should claim an interest in, and take a share of, the risks of the concern. Clements v. Hall, 2 De G. & J. 173. And see Clarke v. Hart, 6 H. L. Ca. 633. Affirming S. C. sub. nom. Hart v. Clarke, 6 De G. M. & G. 232.

. Claims by Creditors.

2. The claim of a creditor against the assets of a deceased partner was held not to be barred under the circumstances by the Statute of Limitations. Braithwaite v. Britain, 1 Keen 206.

Semble, that the equity of a creditor for an account against the deceased partner's estate continues, notwithstanding the Statute of Limitations, as long as the surviving partner continues liable, and the equity of the surviving partner for contribution against the estate of the deceased partner is subsisting. Winter v. Innes, 4 Myl. & C. 101; 2 Jur. 981.

After the death of one of two partners, the survivor cannot set up the Statute of Limitations as a bar to a demand against the assets of the deceased. Whether the deceased's representatives can set up the statute, so long as the survivor continues liable to the payment of the debt, and the deceased's estate is consequently liable to be called upon by the survivor for contribution, quære. Ib.

3. After a dissolution of partnership by death or otherwise, the surviving or continuing partners of the firm are (in a suit by persons claiming to be creditors of the partnership) entitled to the protection of the Statute of Limitations, although as between themselves and retired partners, or the estates of deceased partners, the partnership accounts are never settled; and the retired partners, or the executors of a deceased partner, are in such a suit against them entitled to the like protection. Way v. Bassett, 5 Hare 68; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 1; 10 Jur. 89.

A. deposited money with B., C., and D., who were bankers in partnership, and received from them notes, in which they promised to pay him the amount three months after sight, with interest. B. died in March 1837, having appointed C. and another his executors: C. and D. continued the banking business in the same name until 1842, and interest was regularly paid on the notes by the firm until that time; the payment being indorsed upon the notes and signed by one of the partners or their clerk. In December 1843 the executors of A. filed their bill against the executors of B., and the devisees under his will, for payment of the amount of the notes out of the personal or real estate of B.:—Held, that the acts of the surviving partners of B. had not the effect of taking the debt upon the notes out of the operation of the Statute of Limitations as against the real or personal estate of the deceased partner. Ib.

4. In 1811 A. and B. entered into a partnership, which continued till 1818, when it was dissolved, and the affairs wound up, except as to some outstanding debt. In 1820 a deed of release was executed, from which these debts were excluded. Partnership books relating generally to these and other debts were all along suffered to remain in A.'s hands. All the outstanding debts were subsequently settled. In 1830 B. was declared bankrupt, till which time the books were never called for by B.:—Held, that A. and B. nevertheless continued tenants in common in respect of them, and that the length of time did not affect that relationship; and therefore, although there was no charge of fraud in the settled account, yet the commissioner had jurisdiction to call A. before him, and examine him and the books, relative to the former dealings of the bankrupt. Exp. Trueman, Re Martindale, 1 Dea. & Ch. 464.

5. A. and B., partners, were solicitors to the commission. More than six years back they received various sums of money on account of the estate, having a set-off in respect of their bill of costs, but which bill they did not deliver to the assignee within six years. Beyond the six years, A. and B. (upon an agreement that A. should pay all the debts) dissolved partnership, and the assignee, with knowledge of this fact, continued to employ A. alone as the solicitor to the commission, and no attempt was made to charge B. with the moneys received by A. and B. till very lately, viz., when an official assignee was appointed; nor had B. ever acknowledged any liability to account:—Held, first, that as between B. and the creditors, neither the Statute of Limitations, nor laches, nor other conduct of the assignee would operate as a bar, A. and B. being solicitors to the commission. But, secondly, that as the assignee was able to recoup the estate, he could not, under such circumstances of conduct on his part, call on B. to account. A. had become bankrupt. Semble, nevertheless, that he or his assignees were necessary parties. Exp. Gould, Re Robertson, 4 Dea. & Ch. 547; 2 Mont. & A. 48; 4 L. J., N. S., Bky., 7.

6. The remedy of a creditor against the estate of a deceased partner:—Held, under the circumstances, to be barred by lapse of time. Brown v. Gordon, 1 W. R. 2; 22 L. J., Ch., 65.

As to the equity of a creditor of a partnership to obtain payment out of the separate estate of a deceased partner. S. C. 16 Beav. 302.

A creditor of a banking firm held to have accepted the surviving partners as his debtors, and to have lost, by sixteen years' delay and his conduct, the benefit of a trust contained in the will of the deceased partner for payment of his debts out of his real estate. Ib.

R. B. deposited 110*l.* with Messrs. H. B. L., C. F., E. L. & C. S. F., bankers, upon a deposit note payable twenty days after sight. In June 1833 H. B. L. died, having, by his will, devised his real and personal estate to trustees, one of whom was his son, H. L., upon trust to raise money to pay his debts, etc., and, subject thereto, upon trust for H. L., whom he appointed sole executor. H. L. was admitted a partner in the bank. In 1835 E. L. died, and in 1843 C. F. died. C. S. F. and A. L. continued the business, but became bankrupts in 1847. R. B., from the death of H. B. L., received interest at the bank upon his deposit note until the bankruptcy, when he proved his debt against the bankrupts' estate; and on a bill filed to make the real and personal estate of H. B. L. liable to the payment of the 110*l.*:—Held, that the interest was not paid by the continuing partners, as agents of H. B. L., the testator; that no agency could be implied; that the interest was paid on account of the firm; that all claim against the real and personal estate was barred by the Statute of Limitations in six years; that R. B. had accepted the surviving partners as his debtors, and the devise made by H. B. L. for payment of debts was satisfied, and the bill was dismissed with costs. S. C. 22 L. J., Ch., 65.

IV. SETTLED AND RE-OPENING.

1. By articles of partnership, it was agreed, that just and true accounts should be made out, half-yearly, and signed by the partners, and that such accounts should not afterwards be called in question, except for errors discovered in the lifetime of all the partners. The accounts were made out by one of the partners; and after the death of two of the other partners, it was discovered that the accounts were fraudulent:—Held, that the fourth partner was entitled to have the accounts of the partnership taken from the date of the articles. Oldaker v. Lavender, 6 Sim. 239.

2. Although the correct and accurate value of a share of one of the partners in a joint concern cannot be ascertained without converting the property of the concern into money, ascertaining the surplus (if any), after satisfying all demands of other persons, and after taking the account between the concern and each partner, and finding the balance due to or from each partner severally; yet it is lawful for partners to deal with each other in quite a different way. If they think proper, they may lawfully rely on the stock-takings, valuations, and accounts which appear by the books, and the accounts kept in the manner known to or acquiesced in by the partners; and the subsequent discovery of unintentional inaccuracy will not be ground to set such a transaction aside. And where the partnership business was carried on in Van Diemen's Land, and none of the partners could have personal knowledge of the transactions, but they were obliged to rely on the reports of agents, it was held that they might fairly and honestly deal with each other with respect to their shares, notwithstanding the ignorance in which they all were as to their exact value. Knight v. Marjoribanks, 11 Beav. 322; 13 Jur. 136. Affirmed 2 Macn. & G. 10; 2 H. & Tw. 308.

The question of value in such cases is comparatively immaterial, if there was no deception, misrepresentation, fraud, or unfair concealment. Ib.

3. At the commencement of a partnership, the partners both living in the same house entertained their customers jointly; one removing, the whole expense of entertainment (which was necessary in the trade) fell upon the other. They ought to have agreed for an allowance, the Court can make none. The accounts having been annually balanced without such allowance, is conclusive. Thornton v. Proctor, 1 Anstr. 94.

4. In 1811 A. and B. entered into a partnership, which continued till 1818, when it was dissolved, and the affairs wound up, except as to some outstanding debts. In 1820 a deed of release was executed, from which these debts were excluded. Partnership books relating generally to these and other debts were all along suffered to remain in the hands of A. All the outstanding debts were subsequently settled. In 1830 B. was declared bankrupt, till which time the books were never called for by B.:—Held, that A. and B. nevertheless continued tenants in common in respect of them, and that the length of time did not affect that relationship, and, therefore, although there was no charge of fraud in the settled account, yet the commissioner had jurisdiction to call A. before him, and examine him and the books relative to the former dealings of the bankrupt. Exp. Trueman, Re Martindale, 1 Dea. & Ch. 464.

5. No precise form is necessary to constitute a stated and settled partnership account. Sim v. Sim, 11 Ir. Ch. R. 310.

An account drawn up in the handwriting of one partner, A., eight years after the dissolution of the partnership, stated the assets of the firm at the time of the dissolution taking the excess of the assets over the original capital as representing the balance of profit over loss on the several transactions, and stated the amount drawn out by each partner, and the amount coming to each. In this account A., after giving credit for various payments made to him by his co-partner, B., after the dissolution, struck a balance against himself, and the account was assented to by B.:—Held, a stated and settled account, though some debts due to the partnership were omitted as uncertain. Ib.

6. Principles which regulate a court of equity in opening stated and settled accounts. M'Kellar v. Wallace, 5 Moo. Ind. App. 372; 8 Moo. P. C. 378.

Accounts of long standing and great complication of a mercantile firm at Calcutta, one of the partners of whom afterwards acted as agent in England, involving charges for agency and partnership transactions, were mutually agreed to be investigated and closed. After long negotiations and discussion respecting some of the charges, an agreement was come to, the parties agreeing to strike the general balance at a given sum, reserving one item of the account, amounting to a considerable sum, for future investigation. This reserved item was subsequently settled by the acceptance of a bill of exchange for a lesser amount, as such reserved item, if opened, would have disarranged the settled general account. The bill of exchange was dishonoured, and an action brought to recover the amount. A bill was then filed for an injunction, for the cancellation of the bill of exchange, and that the accounts so settled might be opened. The Supreme Court of Calcutta held, that the reserved item being left open was evidence that the account was not finally closed, and decreed the accounts to be opened, referring the cause to the Master. Upon appeal:—Held, by the Judicial Committee (reversing such decree and dismissing the bill with costs), that the transaction amounted to an adjustment of the general accounts between the parties, subject to the reserved item which was ultimately settled, and that the accounts so settled and closed could not in the absence of fraud be reopened. Ib.

1. A party who, upon a compromise, had executed a general release, claimed relief on the ground of a large item, in which he was interested, having by mistake been omitted in the account:—Held, that he was entitled to relief, but that to obtain it the release must be wholly set aside. A. B., the representative of a deceased partner, having filed his bill against C. D., the surviving partner, for an account, A. B., in consideration of 500*l.*, released C. D. from all claims, and the bill was dismissed. By mutual error a debt of 2,000*l.*, owing to the partnership, but which was not then known to exist, was omitted in the consideration by both parties. C. D. afterwards received it:—Held, that A. B., notwithstanding the release, was entitled to his share of the debt, but that to obtain it the whole account must be reopened. Pritt v. Clay, 6 Beav. 503.

2. Upon the dissolution of a partnership, and the settlement of all accounts between the partners, the continuing partner took some of the debts as good debts. One turned out to be bad, the securities for it having been fraudulently abstracted by a clerk:—Held, that he could not sustain a bill to rectify or set aside the settlement of accounts. Laing v. Campbell, 36 Beav. 3.

3. When three brothers entered into a partnership for seven years, "or for such further time as the partners might agree upon," and at the end of the seven years a general account was taken, but nothing was mentioned about continuing the partnership, and the general account did not include the plaintiff's share of the goodwill:—Held, that although he had signed the account he was not bound by it, as it was not according to the terms of the articles, and no mention of the goodwill was made in the account. Barrow v. Barrow, 27 L. T., N. S., 431.

4. An account was settled and releases executed between residuary legatees of a partner and the representatives of the surviving partner; numerous and important errors in the account having been proved, the release was set aside; but having regard to the lapse of time and the loss of books and documents, the Court declined opening the accounts altogether, but gave leave only to surcharge and falsify. Millar v. Craig, 6 Beav. 433.

5. In a partnership action, where one error of 950*l.* was established in an account long settled:—Held, that in taking the accounts the plaintiff should be at liberty to surcharge and falsify, and that such liberty should not be limited to errors appearing from the books. Gething v. Keighley, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 547.

6. A suit was instituted by one of two partners against the other, praying for a dissolution of the partnership, and for the partnership accounts. The bill set out the partnership deed, which stated that 6,000*l.* had been brought into the business by the defendant, and alleged that the statement to that effect was erroneous; but there was no prayer that the account as to the 6,000*l.* should be opened or the deed set aside. The defendant by his answer stated that the account as regarded that sum was treated as a settled account at the date of the partnership deed, and he declined to set out the items of which it was composed, and claimed the benefit of his defence as if he had pleaded or demurred:—Held, that the discovery sought as to how the sum of 6,000*l.* was made up was not relevant to the relief prayed, and that the defendant was not bound to answer the whole bill, but might refuse to give the discovery without being required to plead to the bill. Wier v. Tucker, 14 L. R., Eq., 25; 26 L. T., N. S., 719; 41 L. J., Ch., 471.

7. Accounts certified to be correct by a member of one of two firms after its dissolution in the usual course of dealings between them, held under the circumstances to be binding upon the executors of a deceased partner, as stated and settled accounts. Luckie v. Forsyth, 3 J. & L. 388.

8. In order to entitle a party to open a settled account, it is not sufficient merely to prove the existence in the account of errors which a court of equity might consider improper charges or omissions, without reference to what may have been the conduct of the party in agreeing to such account; because, in the absence of fraud or pressure, every item in an account, of which, at the time of settlement, the parties are fully cognisant, may be considered as the subject of special agreement between them, which neither party is at liberty to repudiate. Maund v. Allies, 5 Jur. 860.

A., B., and C. were interested in equal shares in certain coal mines, as co-partners in trade together; and, after the decease of B., D. having purchased B.'s share from his representatives, was, but not till after the death of A., admitted a partner in the concern, and, together with C. and the representatives of A., signed a settlement of the partnership accounts up to a certain period. D. then purchased A.'s share from his representatives. A., during his lifetime, was the sole manager of the concern; and before his death several settlements of accounts took place between the partners. D. having filed a bill against C.

and the representatives of A. and B., alleging errors in the settled accounts, and that they were fraudulently drawn out by A., and praying an account of all the partnership dealings and transactions, and that D. might be at liberty to surcharge and falsify the accounts, and that what should be found due from A. might be paid by his representatives:—Held, that if any one of such errors could be established, the result would be only a right in the other partners to have the amount of such error deducted from the share of A. coming to D., as the assignee of that share. Ib.

1. M. was a partner with E. in the trade of a wool-broker, but, becoming embarrassed through private speculations in the purchase of Australian shares, withdrew all his capital from the firm on the eve of his bankruptcy. M. died before passing his final examination in the bankruptcy, and his widow became his personal representative, being also residuary legatee of his estate. The bankruptcy was superseded, and accounts were rendered between the widow and E., which accounts she examined by means of skilled referees of her own choosing, and with the aid of an experienced solicitor, and also approved the same, receiving the balance and giving a formal receipt for the same. Fourteen years after the date of this receipt, she filed a bill to have the accounts retaken, alleging a fraudulent concealment from her by her referees, with the knowledge of E., of the fact of the destruction of all vouchers for the particulars of the account some time previously to the investigation of the accounts which was made by them on her behalf, and specifying two erroneous items in the accounts. The evidence of error in these items was defective:—Held, that neither the alleged errors in the account, nor the alleged fraudulent concealment being clearly made out, the Court would not suffer the settled accounts to be reopened at this distance of time. Cuthbert v. Edinborough, 21 W. R. 98.

2. It is not to be assumed that the annual stocktaking by a partnership truly represents the interests of the several partners in the firm; but it may or may not do so, according to the purposes for which, and the mode in which, it is made up. Travis v. Milne, 9 Hare 153; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 665.

3. Partnership articles provided that once a year an account should be taken, and a rest made of the joint stock and the value thereof, and that every such rest or account should be signed by all the partners, and when finished and so signed should be conclusive. Accounts were annually signed by all the partners, including a valuation, which, however, was arrived at by the partners themselves, without a regular appraisement by any skilled surveyors. One of the partners died during the partnership, without having signed or being present at the last preceding rest, but having seen and retained the balance sheet which was sent to him and having made no objection to the valuation contained in it:—Held, that the mode of valuation adopted was not a deviation from the articles, and that if it had been, the course of usage had rendered it binding on all the partners, and that the last rest bound the executors of the deceased partner, although he had not signed it or concurred in making the valuation. Coventry v. Barclay, 3 De G. J. & S. 320; 33 Beav. 1; 12 W. R. 500; 9 Jur., N. S., 1331; 9 L. T., N. S., 496.

V. PARTIES.

4. Part of the proprietors of an undertaking may have an account against others without making all the members parties, especially if they sue on behalf of themselves and others. Chancey v. May or Anon., Pre. Ch. 592.

5. A., B., and C. partners together; A. agrees with D. to give him a moiety of his share in the concern. An account may be decreed between A. and D., without making B. and C. parties. Brown v. De Tastet, Jac. 284. See Bodin v. Farquhar, 1 L. J., Ch., 21.

6. Society for relief in sickness, etc., by means of a fund raised by subscription of the members, considered merely as a partnership, having no corporate character. In a suit, therefore, against the trustees by some members for account, alleging a dissolution contrary to articles, all other members must be parties. Beaumont v. Meredith, 3 Ves. & B. 180.

7. Part of a ship's crew appointed two to be agents. On bill for account by such agents in their own names, and not "on behalf of themselves and the rest," a demurrer was allowed for not having made the whole parties. Leigh v. Thomas, 2 Ves. 312.

A few creditors may sue for themselves and rest, and the suit abates not by death of one. Id. 313.

8. Bill by one of the officers and crew of a privateer against the owner, for an account of captures, according to the articles. Leave given to amend, by stating that the bill was on behalf of the plaintiff and all others; and upon that amendment the account was decreed. Good v. Blewitt, 13 Ves. 397.

9. In a suit between a part owner and managing owner of a ship and the mortgagees of the shares of other part owners, to determine the question of right to the freight and earnings of the ship, the same being claimed by the plaintiff towards the expenses of repairs and outfit preparatory to the voyage, and by the mortgagees as applicable, in the first instance, to the payment of their debt, the assignees of the mortgagors, the other part owners, were held to be necessary parties, and not to be entitled to their costs. Green v. Briggs, 6 Hare 632.

10. One of thirty-eight proprietors of a newspaper was appointed book-keeper, and received the moneys of the concern; a bill being filed against him for an account, etc., by twelve of the proprietors on behalf, etc.:—Held, that the remaining twenty-five were necessary parties. Bainbridge v. Burton, 2 Beav. 539.

11. A defendant to a suit for winding up a partnership has a right to insist that the suit shall be so constituted as that the decree may be binding on all the parties to the partnership contract; and, therefore, a bill by one against another of five partners in a joint speculation, for an account and payment of the defendant's contributory share of an alleged loss on the winding up of the concern, was held to be defective as to parties, although it was alleged and proved that the plaintiff had, as managing partner, made all the advances himself, and that he had settled with and released the other co-partners; and it was held, that an undertaking by the plaintiff to bear any liability, which on taking the accounts might appear to subsist against the absent partners in favour of the defendant, would not cure the defect. Hills v. Nash, 1 Ph. 594; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 107; 10 Jur. 148.

1. Bill by some partners against the committee of partnership, for account, etc., must be on behalf of themselves and other partners not of the committee. Baldwin v. Lawrence, 2 Sim. & S. 18.

2. A., being a partner in a firm, to which he was indebted jointly with B., with the concurrence of B. deposited with the firm, as a security, the title-deeds of an estate, of which they were tenants in common. Upon A.'s death, a bill was filed by the surviving partners against his heir and B., for the sale of the estate:—Held, that A.'s personal representative was a necessary party for the purpose of taking the accounts between A.'s estate and the firm. Scholefield v. Heafield, 7 Sim. 667; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 218.

3. In a suit for an account by a surviving partner against a debtor to the firm, it is not in general necessary to make the personal representative of the deceased partner a party. Haig v. Gray, 3 De G. & Sm. 741.

4. Upon a suit to wind up a partnership and for contribution, the representatives of a deceased partner cannot be dispensed with upon an allegation in the bill that the deceased partner had died insolvent, and had no personal representative. Cox v. Stephens, 9 Jur., N. S., 1144; 11 W. R. 929; 8 L. T., N. S., 721.

Quære, whether in such a case it is sufficient to bring before the Court an administrator ad litem. S. C. 2 N. R. 506.

5. In a creditor's suit for the recovery of a partnership debt against the assets of a deceased partner, the surviving partner is a necessary party; and the case is not within this order, which enables a plaintiff to proceed against one or more persons severally liable. Hills v. M'Rae, 9 Hare 297; 15 Jur. 766; 20 L. J., Ch., 533.

6. Plaintiff was widow and administratrix of C., a joint lessee and co-partner with others in working a colliery, of which he was entitled to one-sixth. C. died in 1836. In 1839 plaintiff assigned all intestate's "shares in collieries" to her children, in satisfaction of their claims under the Statute of Distributions, but without notice to the other partners, until 1849; meanwhile plaintiff joined in certain undertakings of additional property by the partnership, and continued to receive the profits of the one-sixth up to 1849, when, the old colliery lease having expired, defendants determined the partnership by notice. In 1845 some of the partners privately renewed the colliery lease, of which renewal plaintiff had notice in April 1846. In June 1849 she filed a partnership dissolution bill, which also prayed specifically that the new lease might be administered as partnership property, and for a receiver:—Held, upon motion to discharge an order of the Court below, appointing a receiver of the plaintiff's one-sixth of the profits, and overruling an objection on the ground of laches, that she was the proper party to sue in respect of the one-sixth, and that her children were not necessary parties. Clegg v. Fishwick, 1 Macn. & G. 294; 1 H. & Tw. 390; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 49, 993.

7. By a contract between A., B., and C. to perform certain works, which formed the agreement for the limited partnership between them, it was stipulated that the co-partnership should cease and determine on the completion of such works. Before the completion, one of the partners, C., had left for Australia, and was out of the jurisdiction. On a bill by A. against B. and C. for a dissolution, and the consequential accounts:—Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to declare that the partnership ceased and determined on the completion of such works, notwithstanding the absence of C. out of the jurisdiction, and to direct the usual accounts. Duxbury v. Isherwood, 10 L. T., N. S., 712.

Form of order of reference to an arbitrator nominated by the representatives of A. (who had died) and B., instead of taking the accounts by the judge's chief clerk. Ib.

8. Three only out of four residuary legatees filed a bill to administer their testator's private estate, and for an account of his assets used in partnership with one of the executors, and to enforce a lien in respect of a purchase of a moiety of the partnership premises made by one of the executors under a power in the will, charging wilful default, and praying an injunction and receiver against the partner:—Held, that the bill was not demurrable for either, first, want of parties; or, secondly, multifariousness. Pointon v. Pointon, 40 L. J., Ch., 609; 12 L. R., Eq., 547; 19 W. R. 1051.

9. When A. by a private arrangement with B. stipulated that A. should receive 33, eventually 35, out of 59, eventually 67, per cent. of the gains of a co-partnership, being B.'s ostensible share of such gains, and when C., who was the partner of B., was privy to the arrangement, although not a party to it, and asked the executors of A. for a discharge for himself and his firm in respect of the moneys belonging to A.:—Held, that C. was a necessary party to the suit. Spartali v. Constantinidi, 20 W. R. 823.

10. After a dissolution of partnership between J. and P., J. assigned all his interest in the partnership to B., by way of mortgage, to secure 500*l*. J. subsequently assigned all his property to the plaintiffs, the trustees of a creditors' deed. B. was trustee of the mortgage for R., who made an affidavit in the suit that his mortgage was satisfied:—Held, that the suit might proceed in the absence of B., as he was a mere trustee, and in the absence of R., as he could not, after making the affidavit, insist that he was a necessary party in respect of his interest under the mortgage. Williams v. Poole, 21 W. R. 252; 28 L. T., N. S., 292.

VI. PLEADING.

11. Defendant need not set forth an account of the transactions of a trade in which the plaintiff pretends to have been a partner, if there is a clear denial of the partnership. Jacobs v. Goodman, 2 Cox 282.

12. Bill for an account of a co-partnership, defendant pleaded an award, averring the matter in question comprised in the award; plaintiff replied generally to the plea; and though the plaintiff ought to have set down the plea to be argued, and not to have replied to it, yet Court decreed defendant to account; but afterwards, though this decree was signed and enrolled, Court ordered defendant only to answer over. Farrington v. Chute, 1 Vern. 72.

1. Upon a bill filed against the executor and surviving partner, for an account of the partnership transactions, charging an unfair valuation, and that there was no settled account, or, if any, that it was fraudulent and collusive, the defendant pleaded to the whole bill (except as to the fraud and collusion, which he denied), a settled account with the executor:—Held, that the plea was irregular, as being only to part of the relief and discovery, but that the defendant was not bound to set forth the settled account, or aver that he had delivered over the vouchers to the executor, and that although the alleged unfair valuation was not denied expressly, yet, not being inconsistent with a final account, unimpeachable. The plea did not cover too much. Davies v. Davies, 2 Keen 534; 1 Jur. 446.

2. A plaintiff being in England filed a bill for an account against the executors of a deceased partner, some of whom were in England but acting in concert with the others, who were in Jamaica; the partnership property being also in Jamaica:—Held, upon a plea to the jurisdiction by the executors resident in Jamaica, that the suit was properly instituted in this country. Hendrick v. Wood, 30 L. J., Ch., 583.

3. To a bill alleging the existence of a partnership between the plaintiff and defendant, the defendant pleaded "to the whole of the relief sought by the bill," alleging that no partnership or agreement for a partnership ever existed between them, and prayed the judgment of the Court whether he should be compelled to make any answer to the bill, except so far as the same sought discovery as to the various circumstances therein stated, or any further or other answer thereto, save such as thereinafter was contained. Then followed the answer, in which the defendant confined himself to the question raised by the plea:—Held, that the plea, though substantially sufficient, was insufficient in point of form. Jackson v. Ward, 18 W. R. 973.

Prayer in Bill.] 4. A bill to have the accounts of a partnership taken without praying for a dissolution is demurrable. Loscombe v. Russell, 4 Sim. 8.

5. The Court will direct an account of past partnership transactions, though the bill does not pray a dissolution; but it will make no order for carrying on partnership concerns, unless with a view to a dissolution. Richards v. Davies, 2 Russ. & M. 347.

6. A bill for an account of partnership transactions must pray for a dissolution of the co-partnership. Knebell v. White, 2 Y. & Coll. 15; 5 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 98.

7. On a bill for an account of the dealings and transactions of a mining partnership, it is not necessary to pray for a dissolution of the concern. Bentley v. Bates, 4 Y. & Coll. 182; 9 L J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 30; 4 Jur. 552.

8. A suit respecting a partnership may be maintained without praying a dissolution. Richardson v. Hastings, 7 Beav. 301; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 129; 8 Jur. 72.

9. A creditor of a banking company formed under the 6 Geo. 4, c. 42, after the stoppage of payment by the company, filed a bill on behalf of himself and of all other creditors of the company who should come in and contribute to the expenses of the suit, against one of the public officers as sole defendant. The bill prayed that, in pursuance of the 33 Geo. 2, c. 14, the demand of the plaintiff and the other creditors might be paid out of the personal estate of the society, and if that should prove to be insufficient that they might be paid by the society; and it prayed for an account of the personal estate of the co-partnership to this bill: the defendant demurred for want of equity and for want of parties:—Held, that the prayer for an account of the personal estate of partnership was sufficient, the bill stating that the personal estate of the partnership was sufficient for the payment of its debts. Fawcett v. Hodges, Fl. & K. 100; 3 Ir. Eq. R. 232.

10. One partner may file a bill against his co-partner for account, without praying a dissolution of partnership. Harrison v. Armitage, 4 Madd. 143. See also 2 Ves. & B. 329.

VII. PRACTICE.

11. Motion by defendants to a bill for a partnership account, for a production of the accounts before answer, refused. Pickering v. Rigby, 18 Ves. 484.

12. The Masters make it a rule not to take an account of a partnership, unless specially directed, although the order be to take all accounts. Woolley v. Gordon, Taml. 11.

13. An order for an account between partners directed before the hearing upon motion by the plaintiff, he appearing to be entitled to such account upon the admissions of fact in the answer. Turquand v. Wilson, 24 W. R. 56.

XIII. Arbitration.

I. Agreements to Refer, 5518.
II. Clauses in Articles, 5520.
III. Costs, 5521.

I. AGREEMENTS TO REFER.

14. On a general reference by three partners, A., B., and C., of all matters in difference to arbitration, the arbitrators, acting upon certain statements of the assets and debts from which it appeared that A. was indebted to the partnership more than his share apparently would come to, directed B. to receive the outstanding debts and effects to pay the debts owing the partnership, and the remainder was to be divided between B. and C. The award was acted upon by all parties, but B. subsequently received some debts which were omitted in the accounts laid before the arbitrators, and on which their award proceeded, and he also received good debts to a larger amount than had been estimated by the arbitrators. On a bill by A. against his co-partners:—Held, that he was entitled, notwithstanding the reference was of all matters in difference, to an account of the good debts received, beyond the amount estimated by the arbitrators, and to an account of the receipts in respect of dubious debts; and that any over-receipts in respect of good debts ought to follow the directions of the award with respect to the dubious debts. Spencer v. Spencer, 2 Y. & J. 249.

1. Where a suit for dissolving and taking accounts between partners was referred, and the award provided for the application of the assets only in the case of a surplus, but not in the event of a deficiency:—Held, not therefore necessarily invalid, as the Court might in a proper case intend a state of things in which the latter provision would be unnecessary; neither would the nature of the remedy for enforcing the award, if sufficient, be a ground for impeaching it, nor the omission to award payment of the balance found due, which the Court would enforce; nor the direction of the payment absolutely of a sum forming an item in the account, without reference to the state of the accounts at the time. But where the consideration of the partnership had been a sum of 1,500*l.* paid as to the moiety, and a note given for the residue, the consideration for which, as obtained under fraudulent representation as to the partnership, and in the hands of the defendant, was a subject in dispute, and the arbitrator in his award declared that the liabilities on the note should be unaffected by the award:—Held, to vitiate the award, as not conclusive and final. Wilkinson v. Page, 1 Hare 276; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 193; 6 Jur. 567.

2. By consent of a plaintiff and a defendant within the jurisdiction, the partnership accounts, and all matters in difference, were referred to arbitration, notwithstanding the absence beyond the jurisdiction of the other defendant, who had been a partner with the plaintiff and the defendant before the Court. Duxbury v. Isherwood, 12 W. R. 821.

3. A. and B., on dissolving partnership in 1866, agreed to refer matters in dispute to arbitration. Arbitrators were appointed in 1869, who held their first meeting in May 1870. A.'s arbitrator shortly afterwards died, and A. refused to appoint another, but filed a bill to have the partnership wound up in chancery. The time for making the award had been enlarged to 25th March 1872. On motion by B. to stay proceedings, it was ordered that proceedings should be stayed till further order, with liberty to both parties to apply if no award should be made before the 25th March 1872. Kitchen v. Turnbull, 20 W. R. 253.

4. The validity of a notice to dissolve a partnership was disputed, and it was agreed that that question, as well as the price to be paid by the continuing partners for the share of the outgoing partner, should be settled by two valuers named in the agreement or their umpire. One of the valuers died before the valuation was made, and the new valuer (appointed under protest) neglected to join with the other valuer in appointing an umpire. Under these circumstances, and by virtue of the C. L. P. Act 1854, s. 12, the Court appointed an umpire to act in the matter, in case his services should be required. Re Evans, 18 W. R. 723; 22 L. T., N. S., 507.

5. An agreement to submit the affairs of a partnership to arbitration, and that the submission shall be made a rule of a court of common law, cannot be pleaded in bar to a suit in equity, seeking discovery, complaining of the plaintiff being sued in actions, and praying for a receiver; although before the bill was filed arbitrators were appointed, and since bill filed the submission has been made a rule of the court. Cooke v. Cooke, 4 L. R., Eq., 77; 30 L. J., Ch., 480; 15 W. R. 981.

The jurisdiction of the superior courts in such a case is not ousted by the provisions of the C. L. P. Act of 1854. Ib.

6. On a dissolution of partnership between A. and B., A. offered to sell his interest to B. for 20,000*l.* B. refused, but offered to buy at 18,000*l.*, which A. refused. By a written agreement, reciting the offers and the refusals, it was left to C. to say what price should be paid by B. for A.'s interest:—Held, that C. had no authority to name a sum outside of the limits, 18,000*l.* and 20,000*l.* Thomson v. Anderson, 9 L. R., Eq., 523; 39 L. J., Ch., 468; 18 W. R. 445; 22 L. T., N. S., 570.

The power to revoke without the leave of Court a submission to arbitration, which does not contain a consent clause for making the submission a rule of Court, is not affected by the C. L. P. Act 1854. Ib.

A. and B., having dissolved partnership, signed an agreement by which, after stating that B. had offered A. 18,000*l.* for the purchase of his interest in the partnership business and assets, and that A. had declined the offer, but was willing to accept 20,000*l.*, they agreed to leave it to a referee to say what sum should be paid by B. to A.:—Held, that the agreement was revocable by either party at any time before the award was made. Ib.

7. When two partners made an agreement containing a provision that on the determination of the partnership one partner should purchase the share of the other at a valuation to be made by two persons, one to be appointed by each partner, and the partnership was carried on for some time under the agreement:—Held, that though the valuation could not be so made, because no umpire was provided, a court of equity would carry the partnership agreement into effect by ascertaining the value of the share. Dinham v. Bradford, 5 L. R., Ch., 519.

Where the fixing a value by arbitrators is not of the essence of an agreement, the Court will carry the agreement into effect, and will itself, if necessary, ascertain the value. Ib.

8. When a member of a firm which is under a continuing contract retires with an indemnity, the continuing partners are his agents for carrying on the contract. Oakford v. European and American Shipping Co., 1 Hem. & M. 182; 9 L. T., N. S., 15.

Continuing partners under such a contract (which gave the firm the power of appointing an arbitrator in case of dispute) entered into an agreement by which they waived a very doubtful point of construction on the original contract, and referred differences to arbitrators, one of whom was selected by themselves, instead of by the firm, as constituted at the date of the contract:—Held, that this was not such a variation of the original contract as to discharge the retired partner. Ib.

1. The managing partner of a colliery worked beyond the boundaries of the colliery without proper inquiry as to such boundaries, and, after notice from the adjoining owner that he was committing a trespass, recklessly continued such workings without consulting his co-partners under the bonâ fide belief that the adjoining owner had no title to the disputed area. An action against him for trespass and damages by the adjoining owner was referred to arbitration. The co-partners had no knowledge of the action until after the reference had been agreed to. They attended the reference, however, and did not object to it. The arbitrator found that a trespass had been committed, and assessed the damages at 6,000*l.* The co-partners refusing to contribute, the managing partner brought an action against them claiming a declaration that the 6,000*l.* damages was a partnership debt, and that defendants were bound to contribute ratably to it:—Held, that the co-partners had acquiesced in the arbitration, and were bound by the award, which was equivalent to a verdict by a jury and the judgment of the Court thereon. Thomas v. Atherton, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 185; 48 L. J., Ch., 370; 40 L. T. 77.

But held, that, inasmuch as the managing partner had acted with culpable negligence in continuing to work in the disputed area after notice from the adjoining proprietor, and without consulting his co-partners, he alone was liable for the damages. Ib.

II. CLAUSES IN ARTICLES.

2. An agreement to withdraw the decision of any questions which may arise from the ordinary tribunals of the country is illegal. Lee v. Page, 7 Jur., N. S., 768; 30 L. J., Ch., 857; 9 W. R. 754.

Articles of partnership comprised an agreement to submit all disputes to arbitration, and until such arbitration should have taken place neither party was to be at liberty to sue the other with reference to the affairs of the partnership:—Held, that although an arbitration clause is legal, there may not be a negative clause superadded to withdraw the decision of the question from the tribunals of the country. Ib.

3. The arbitration clauses commonly inserted in partnership articles apply only to questions arising upon the construction of the articles, and to matters of internal dispute thereunder, and not to a case where it is charged that the partnership articles have been wholly broken through, and where a dissolution is sought on that ground. Cook v. Catchpole, 10 Jur., N. S., 1068; 34 L. J., Ch., 60.

Semble, that the onus of proof that an arbitrator could not give effectual relief lies on the person proceeding otherwise than by arbitration. Ib.

4. In a bill in equity for the dissolution of a partnership at will carried on upon the terms of an indenture after the expiration of the period fixed by the indenture, the plaintiff alleged that disputes had arisen between himself and the defendant, his partner, and prayed for a dissolution of the partnership, the realization of the assets, and the appointment of a receiver. The defendant put in a plea stating that one of the clauses of the indenture provided that in case any difference should at any time during the partnership, or after the expiration thereof, arise between the partners, the same should be referred to arbitration, and neither of the partners should proceed against the other at law or in equity until the reference, and that the award should be made a rule of the Queen's Bench. The plea was overruled, on the grounds that the clause did not contemplate the entire dissolution of the partnership, which could not be considered as a matter in dispute; that all the bill prayed could be done without any disputes having arisen at all, and that consequently the plea met an immaterial averment in the bill; and that much of what was prayed by the bill was dehors the arbitration clause. Wood v. Robson, 15 W. R. 756.

5. When a partner proceeded to wind up a partnership concern with the assistance of the Court of Chancery, the defendant moved, pursuant to the Common Law Procedure Act 1856 (Ireland), s. 14, to stay all proceedings in the case, the parties having agreed to refer the matter to arbitration. It appearing that after the dissolution of the partnership the defendant persisted in carrying on the business, the motion was refused, such conduct of the defendant not coming within the section of the partnership deed which provided that all disputes relating to the partnership business arising between the partners should be referred. Dennehy v. Jolly, 22 W. R. 449.

6. Articles for a partnership for one year contained an arbitration clause. The partnership was continued beyond the year, and ultimately dissolved:—Held, that the arbitration clause was in force, and proceedings in a suit for accounts by one of the partners against the other was stayed under the Common Law Procedure Act 1854, s. 11. Gillett v. Thornton, 19 L. R., Eq., 559; 44 L. J., Ch., 398; 23 W. R. 437.

7. In 1868 C. was admitted, by purchase, into partnership with A. and B., a firm of solicitors, for a term of fifteen years. It was provided by the articles that if at any time any dispute or difference of opinion should arise between the partners relative to any clause, matter, or thing therein contained, or to the conduct of any of the partners, or upon any other point whatever, the same should be referred to arbitration. On the 17th of June 1873 A. and B. served C. with notice alleging that he had committed several breaches of the articles, and in particular had neglected to keep proper accounts, and to make proper entries of business, and declaring the partnership dissolved and determined from the date of serving the notice, under a power contained in the articles. C. refused to admit the validity of this notice of dissolution, and told his partners that he should submit the question of the validity of the notice to arbitration. On the 1st of July A. and B. filed a bill for a partnership account on the footing of a dissolution from the time of serving the notice, and on the same day C. served them with notice requiring them to refer to arbitration all questions that had arisen relatively to the notice of dissolution:— Held, that he was entitled to an order staying pro ceedings in the suit, pursuant to the Common Law Procedure Act 1854, s. 11, in order that the questions as to the validity of the notice of dissolution might be determined by arbitration. Plews v. Baker, 16 L. R., Eq., 564; 43 L. J., Ch., 212. See also Witt v. Corcoran, 8 L. R., Ch., 476. n.

1. L. and three other persons, G., N., and F., all British subjects, entered into an agreement, in the Russian language and registered in Russia, to trade in co-partnership in Russia, providing that the head office of the firm should be in St. Petersburg, and reserving to G. and N. the right to recall their capital within a year, and, if not paid within a month, the firm was to be wound up; and also providing that "all disputes, no matter how or where they shall arise, shall be referred to the St. Petersburg Commercial Court," whose decision shall be final. L. alleged that there was a contemporaneous English agreement, not registered in Russia, by which G. and N. agreed to compensate him in the event of a dissolution within a year, under the powers reserved to them. The two partners exercised their right within the year to recall their capital, and immediately took steps to wind up the partnership in Russia. L. having thereupon commenced an action in England, alleging that the proceedings of his co-partners, the defendants, were taken without his knowledge and sanction, and were invalid and not binding on him, and claiming a dissolution of the partnership, relief in respect of the English agreement, the appointment of a receiver, and other relief, they moved for a stay of proceedings in the action, and a reference to the St. Petersburg Commercial Court:—Held, that an agreement to refer all disputes to a foreign court is within s. 11 of the Common Law Procedure Act 1854, and that the defendants were entitled to an order on their motion; and that although the Court had jurisdiction to appoint a receiver pending a reference to arbitration, it was not proper to do so unless a special case was made, as the course of litigation before the tribunal chosen by the parties themselves would thereby be interfered with. Law v. Garrett, 8 L. R., Ch. D., 26; 38 L. T., N. S., 3; 26 W. R. 426. Affirming 37 L. T., N. S., 602.

Semble, if a sufficient case were shown for granting an injunction, the Court would not stay proceedings. Ib.

2. Although a particular submission to arbitration may be revoked, a general agreement to refer to arbitration cannot be revoked by one of the parties. Piercy v. Young, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 200; 42 L. T. 710; 28 W. R. 845. S. P. Christie v. Noble, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 203. n.

Articles of partnership between the plaintiff and other persons for performing a contract contained an agreement that any dispute between the partners should be settled by arbitration, but there was no agreement that the submission to arbitration might be made a rule of Court. One of the partners became a liquidating debtor, and the defendant was appointed his trustee, and he elected to carry on the contract. The defendant claimed to have purchased the shares of the plaintiff and other partners in the undertaking. The plaintiff brought an action against the defendant asking for an account of the partnership dealings. The main questions at issue were whether the shares of the other partners were purchased on behalf of the plaintiff and defendant or of the defendant alone, and whether the defendant had purchased the share of the plaintiff as well as of the other partners. The defendant moved for an order under the Common Law Procedure Act 1854, s. 11, staying all proceedings in the action, and referring the matters in question to arbitration, but before the motion was heard the plaintiff revoked the agreement for arbitration:—Held, that the matters in dispute were not within the agreement for arbitration, and the motion was accordingly refused. Ib.

The question whether the matters in dispute are within the agreement for arbitration is one which the Court will decide, and will not leave to the arbitrator. Ib.

Whether the trustee in the liquidation was a party entitled to make the application within the 11th section of the Common Law Procedure Act, quære. Ib.

3. In a case where fraud is charged, the Court will in general refuse to send the dispute to arbitration if the party charged with the fraud desires a public inquiry. But where the objection to arbitration is by the party charging the fraud, the Court will not necessarily accede to it, and will never do so unless a primâ facie case of fraud is proved. Russell v. Russell, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 471; 49 L. J., Ch., 268; 42 L. T. 112

Partnership articles between A. and B. provided that, if the business should not be conducted to the satisfaction of B., he should have power to give notice to A. to determine the partnership; the articles also contained an arbitration clause providing, that any differences in relation to the partnership should be referred to arbitration. B. having given notice to A. for the partnership to be determined, A. brought an action against B., alleging various charges of fraud, and claiming that the notice should be declared void, and that B. should be restrained from announcing the dissolution of the partnership, whereupon B. moved that the matters in question should be referred to arbitration:—Held, that the power to give the notice under the articles was exercisable by B. at his own will and pleasure:—Held, also (A. having, in the judgment of the Court, failed to establish a primâ facie case of fraud), that the matters in question should be referred to arbitration according to the articles. Ib.

III. COSTS.

4. The plaintiff instituted a suit to take the accounts of a partnership between himself and the defendant, the terms of the partnership being that the plaintiff was to receive one-twelfth of the profits, and to bear one-twelfth of the losses, and that the defendant was to receive and bear the remaining eleven-twelfths. The partnership articles contained an arbitration clause; and an order was made in the suit, under the C. L. P. Act 1854, s. 11., that the matters in difference between the parties be referred to arbitration and the proceedings in the suit stayed, the costs being reserved. Under this order an award was made finding a considerable sum due to the plaintiff:—Held, that the costs of both parties of the suit, reference and award, ought to be taxed and paid as to one-twelfth by the plaintiff, and as to eleven-twelfths by the defendant. Newton v. Taylor, 19 L. R., Eq., 14; 23 W. R. 330.

XIV. Injunction between Partners.

1. Motion granted for an injunction for one partner against another, the defendant being in contempt, and served personally, and not appearing. Read v. Bowers, 4 Bro. C. C. 441.

2. A person having, in articles of partnership, covenanted not to do certain acts after a specified period of time, the Court will not, before the arrival of that period, grant an injunction to restrain him from acting in breach of his agreement, nor for mischief, which is no breach at law of the covenant between the parties. Coates v. Coates, 6 Madd. 287.

3. Two persons having agreed to work a coach from Bristol to London, one provided horses for a part of the road, and the other for the remainder; and in consequence of the horses of one having been taken in execution, the other provided horses for that part which had been undertaken by the first, and claimed the whole profits of the journey; the Court refused an injunction against continuing to provide horses. Smith v. Fromont, 2 Swan. 330; 1 Wils. 472.

4. An injunction will not be granted to restrain the breach of a covenant in articles of partnership which has not been infringed for any length of time, where the bill does not pray a dissolution of the partnership. Whether the Court will in any case grant such an injunction, unless there is ground for, and the bill prays, a dissolution of partnership, quære. Marshall v. Coleman, 2 Jac. & Walk. 266. See in affirmative Harrison v. Armitage, 4 Madd. 143; and in negative Forman v. Homfray, 2 Ves. & B. 329; Loscombe v. Russell, 4 Sim. 8.

5. Injunction refused to restrain process on a bill of exchange given by one partner to another, where the alleged set-off is in respect of the plaintiff's interest in partnership effects and profits. Wartnaby v. Shuttleworth, 1 Jur. 469.

6. Court will not treat as a bill to restrain waste, a bill to restrain an acting partner from collecting debts or creating them, and for appointing a receiver; though otherwise if partner has been shown guilty of culpable conduct and is insolvent. Lawson v. Morgan, 1 Price 303.

7. Injunction against a surviving partner, proceeding by ejectment to obtain possession of a farm of which a joint lease had been made to himself and his deceased partner. Elliot v. Brown, 3 Swan. 489.

8. Injunction to restrain surviving partners from using the name of a deceased partner in the firm of the trade, refused. Webster v. Webster, 3 Swan. 490.

9. Injunction to restrain a surviving partner from disposing of the joint stock and receiving the outstanding debts. Hartz v. Schrader, 8 Ves. 317.

10. Plaintiff and defendant (partners) having agreed to dissolve, and that defendant, on payment of half value of effects, should take the whole, though defendant took possession, but failed to make the payment, and had begun to pull down part of buildings, injunction to restrain him refused. Cofton v. Horner, 5 Price 537.

11. Where defendant denies charges in bill of fraud and misconduct in partnership, and explains others away, and alleges his inability to put in a full answer by reason that plaintiff withheld improperly the partnership books, Court would not even grant the injunction prayed by bill, but refused it without prejudice. Littlewood v. Caldwell, 11 Price 97.

12. Semble, that the Court will entertain a bill to prevent the destruction of partnership property, though no dissolution be prayed. Miles v. Thomas, 9 Sim. 606.

13. Mere temptation to the abuse of partnership effects is not sufficient to induce Court to grant injunction. Glassington v. Thwaites, 1 Sim. & S. 124; 1 L. J., Ch., 113.

All the proprietors of the M. paper being also, with the exception of one, proprietors in the E. paper, an injunction to restrain using effects of former partnership, to assist latter, in consideration of an annual sum, was refused where there had been agreement permitting use on those terms which had been long acted under. Ib.

But injunction granted to restrain using effects not included in agreement. Ib.

14. A. and B. carried on the business of a pencil maker, under the firm of A. & L. A. died, and B. carried on the business under the firm of B. & Co., successors to A. & L. A.'s executor having commenced the same business, under the firm of A. & L., an injunction was granted to restrain him from suing that firm, until the right should have been tried at law. Lewis v. Langdon, 7 Sim. 421; 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 258.

15. Injunction against a co-partner interfering in the management of the business (which was under a contract with the postmaster-general for the service of the mail), where the effect of suffering him to interfere would be irreparable injury to the partnership business, by causing the contract to be put an end to. Anderson v. Wallace, 2 Moll. 540.

16. A partner having excluded his co-partner, an injunction was granted to restrain him from obstructing or interfering with his co-partner in the exercise and enjoyment of his rights under the partnership articles. Hall v. Hall, 12 Beav. 414.

17. Under a deed of partnership, it was provided, that the assignees of any bankrupt proprietor should not become proprietors, but might procure some person to become a proprietor in respect of the bankrupt's shares; and that, between the time of bankruptcy and of some person becoming a proprietor of such shares, the rights and privileges attending such shares should remain in suspense:—Held, that the solvent proprietors were entitled to an injunction against the assignee of a bankrupt proprietor, to restrain him from interfering with the partnership property, or with the management of the business of the partnership. The solvent proprietors being entitled to the possession of the partnership property and effects, a manager or receiver was refused. Francis v. Spittle, 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 230.

1. Injunction granted to restrain the defendant, who had removed the partnership books from the place of business, from keeping them at any other place. Greatrex v. Greatrex, 1 De G. & Sm. 692; 11 Jur. 1052.

2. To entitle one partner to an order for an injunction and receiver, against his copartner, he must either show a dissolution, or facts which, if proved at the hearing, would entitle him to a decree for a dissolution. Smith v. Jeyes, 4 Beav. 503.

3. The Court will restrain a purchaser from doing acts of waste and destruction, and will restrain a partner from doing an intentional serious injury to the partnership property. Marshall v. Watson, 25 Beav. 501.

4. If A. obtains a patent, and enters into an agreement with B., the effect of which is to make B. a partner in the patent, B. is entitled not merely to share in the profits, but to interfere in the management of it; and if, upon a bill being filed, A. insists that he alone is entitled to act in the management, and that such was the true intent of the agreement, an injunction will be granted against A. Blackford v. Hawkins, 1 L. J., Ch., 141.

5. The Court will not restrain one of the several partners in a patent, from publishing a book containing an account of the invention. Hawkins v. Blackford, 1 L. J., Ch., 142.

6. A party was restrained from using the secret of compounding a medicine not protected by patent, it appearing that the secret was imparted to him, to his knowledge, in breach of faith or contract. Morison v. Moat, 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 248; 16 Jur. 321. Affirming 9 Hare 241; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 513; 15 Jur. 787.

In June 1823 Morison, the sole inventor and proprietor of a medicine not protected by patent, upon the occasion of entering into partnership with Moat as manufacturers and vendors of the medicine, for the purposes of the partnership communicated to the latter the secret of compounding the medicine. By the partnership-deed either partner was empowered to introduce another partner, by deed, to be attested by the other; and by mutual bonds of even date, Morison bound himself not to communicate the secret of compounding the medicine to any person, except a partner so introduced; whilst Moat bound himself not to communicate such secret to any person whomsoever. Morison afterwards introduced his sons, the plaintiffs, into the partnership; and Moat, shortly before his death, in breach of his bond, communicated the secret to the defendant, his son; and then by deed, duly attested by Morison, appointed the defendant his successor in the partnership. Shortly after the death of Moat, the defendant joined Morison and the plaintiffs, who were ignorant that he had obtained a knowledge of the secret, in executing a partnership-deed, containing a clause declaring the defendant a sleeping partner, and another clause, by which the partners covenanted not to divulge the secret of compounding the medicine to any person whomsoever. The defendant also afterwards executed deeds reciting that the sole property in the secret was in Morison. Morison afterwards died, having by will bequeathed his property in the secret to the plaintiffs. After the determination of the partnership the defendant made use of his knowledge of the secret, communicated to him by his father, in manufacturing medicine, which he sold as the medicine originally manufactured by Morison. Upon the application of the plaintiffs the Court granted an injunction restraining the defendant from selling, under the title or designation of "Morison's medicine," any medicine manufactured by the defendant; and also from compounding any medicine according to the secret mentioned in the plaintiff's bill, and from in any way making use of such secret. Ib.

If a partner in a business in which a secret process of manufacture and composition of materials is used, who has not under the partnership contract a right to the knowledge of the secret, should openly take part in the manufacture, and should, with the knowledge and concurrence of his partners, be permitted to acquire a knowledge of the process and ingredients, the other partners will be considered to have waived a right to the preservation of the secret for their separate benefit. Semble. Ib.

XV. Receiver and Manager.

See also IX. ante—MINES AND MINERALS, IX.

7. Surviving partner, trading on his own account with the debtors to the partnership:—Ordered, that an attorney be appointed to sue for the debts, unless the surviving partner would give security to answer a moiety of the debts to the administratrix of the deceased partner. Estwick v. Conningsby, 1 Vern. 118.

8. On the motion of a partner who had retired, complaining that the continuing partners delayed getting in the old debts for the sake of continuing their customers, a receiver appointed to call in the debts due to the partnership estate, after the usual credit had expired. Collenridge v. Cook, 1 Jur. 771.

9. Court will not treat as a bill to restrain waste, a bill to restrain an acting partner from collecting debts or creating them, and for appointing a receiver, though otherwise if partner has been shown guilty of culpable conduct, and is insolvent. Lawson v. Morgan, 1 Price 303.

10. The Court will not, upon motion, appoint a receiver of a partnership, unless it appears that the plaintiff will be entitled to a dissolution at the hearing. Chapman v. Beach, 1 Jac. & Walk. 594.

11. The Court will not appoint a receiver or a manager of any partnership concern, unless the suit be so framed as that a decree may be made, either that the concern shall be carried on according to the terms of an instrument, which by the agreements of the parties is to regulate the mode of its being carried on, or that it shall be wholly put an end to. Const v. Harris, T. & R. 517.

The Court will entertain a bill to compel partners to act according to the provisions of instruments into which they have entered, and where it will interfere for that purpose, will take care that the decree shall not be defeated by anything done in the meantime. Thus, where, in 1812, the then proprietors of Covent Garden Theatre executed a deed, by which they covenanted and agreed, that the profits of the theatre should be exclusively appropriated to particular purposes, and that the treasurer for the time being should be irrevocably directed so to apply the profits; and in 1822, parties then entitled, under the former proprietors, to seven-eighths of the theatre, entered into an agreement, which provided, in some respects, for a different application of the profits, and otherwise affected the rights of a party interested in the remaining eighth, who was not consulted on the subject; the Court, upon a bill filed by that party, for the specific performance of the covenants and agreements contained in the deed of 1812, appointed a receiver. Id. 496.

A bill, merely seeking the interposition of the Court to carry on a partnership, cannot be maintained. Id. 519.

The exclusion of a partner from his full share of management, the strongest ground for appointing a receiver. Id. 525.

1. Receiver appointed of mines, in which several persons were interested; the concern, from the nature of the subject, being a species of trade, and not a mere tenancy in common in land. Jeffery v. Smith, 1 Jac. & Walk. 298.

2. Where some members of a partnership, either in the ordinary course of trade, or in closing the transactions after a dissolution, seek to exclude others from a just share in the management, the Court appoints a receiver. Wilson v. Greenwood, 1 Swan. 481; 1 Wils. 223.

3. Motion for a receiver on a mining concern refused, upon a claim of partnership in the equitable interest, not raised until the concern, at a great expense, became prosperous, and denied by the answer. Norway v. Rowe, 19 Ves. 144.

4. Receiver not ordered merely on a dissolution of partnership; ordered on breach of the duty of a partner, or of the contract, as by continuing trade with joint effects on the separate account. Harding v. Glover, 18 Ves. 281.

5. The principle upon which a court of equity interferes between partners, by appointing a manager, receiver, etc., is merely with a view to the relief, by winding up and disposing of the concern and dividing the produce, not to carry it on. The Court, therefore, would not, upon motion, appoint a manager, etc., of the Opera House, except upon the principle applicable to any other partnership, as necessary to the relief, a foreclosure; taking into consideration also the difficulties from the nature of the subject, and the contract, an anxious provision for arbitration, and that one party was, by the express contract, manager. Waters v. Taylor, 15 Ves. 10.

6. Court will not appoint receiver of effects of subsisting partnership, unless on grossest abuses by some of the partners. Oliver v. Hamilton, 2 Anstr. 453.

7. In a cause for an account of a partnership, both parties being dead, a receiver shall be appointed; secus, in the case of surviving partner. Philips v. Atkinson, 2 Bro. C. C. 272.

8. Receiver of the debts due to a business appointed at the suit of persons to whom a share of the profits had been assigned, against a subsequent assignee of the debts. Candler v. Candler, Jac. 225.

9. A bill for a partnership account, and a receiver, during the existence of the partnership, is not demurrable, merely on the ground that a dissolution is not prayed: and therefore, where to a bill by one partner against another, alleging that the defendant by conducting himself in violation of the partnership contract, excluding the plaintiff, and applying the assets to his own use, sought to force the plaintiff to dissolve the partnership before the end of the term, and praying an account of the partnership transactions and a receiver, but no dissolution; the defendant answered one interrogatory, and, submitting that the bill was demurrable, declined under the thirty-eighth Order of August 1841 to answer the remainder; exceptions for insufficiency were allowed and sustained. Fairthorne v. Weston, 3 Hare 387; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 263; 8 Jur. 353.

10. Notwithstanding the 152nd section of the 12 & 13 Vict., c. 106, a solvent partner is entitled to have a receiver of the partnership assets appointed by the Court of Chancery, where the other partner has become bankrupt, and assignees of his estate have been appointed. Freeland v. Stansfield, 16 Jur. 792; 2 Sm. & G. 479; 1 Jur., N. S., 8; 23 L. J., Ch., 293; 2 W. R. 575; 2 Eq. Rep. 1181.

11. A receiver of a partnership granted in a case where no misconduct in management was alleged, on the ground that the defendant insisted on a legal objection as destroying all right of his partner to a share in the partnership. Hale v. Hale, 4 Beav. 369.

12. Difficulties in appointing a receiver of a partnership upon motion; surviving partners insisted on continuing the partnership with the assets of a deceased partner. The Court thought the representatives of the latter entitled to a receiver. Madgwick v. Wimble, 6 Beav. 495; 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 387; 7 Jur. 661.

13. By a memorandum in writing, the defendant, a general merchant, agreed with the plaintiff, in consideration of the general services of the latter, to allow him, in addition to a fixed salary, one-fifth of the net profits on all new business entered into through him; semble, a partnership was thereby constituted between the parties; and:—Held, that, at any rate, the plaintiff thereby acquired a right, as against the defendant, to an account of profits, and the appointment of a receiver. Katsch v. Schenck, 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 386; 13 Jur. 668.

14. Upon a motion to appoint a receiver of a partnership, where the question raised was whether the partnership had been dissolved, the Court refused to do so, but directed an issue to try the fact. Fairburn v. Pearson, 2 Macn. & G. 144.

1. The affairs of a partnership being embarrassed, and daily growing worse, the Court, on motion, appointed a person to sell the business and wind up the affairs of the partnership. Bailey v. Ford, 13 Sim. 495; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 482.

2. In a suit to wind up a partnership, the Court will appoint a manager, though the management has been given up to one partner under the provisions of the partnership deed, and no case of mismanagement is made against him. Tippets v. Phillips, 1 W. R. 163.

3. A. and B., formerly partners trading with the capital of A., dissolved partnership; B., being in insolvent circumstances, negotiated bills of exchange in the name of the firm, and applied the money to his own purposes. A., being responsible for the debt, applied to be appointed receiver of the partnership assets, which were insufficient to meet the debts. Ordered accordingly. Hoffman v. Duncan, 18 Jur. 69.

4. An arrangement entered into by partners at the termination of the partnership that the debts of the firm should be collected by a third person—though there was no actual contract that neither of the partners should receive any debts—cannot be put an end to, at the will of either, without giving to the other, or to the representative of a deceased partner, the right to have an account and a receiver appointed by the Court. Davis v. Amer, 3 Drew. 64.

5. Where two persons are owners as tenants in common of a mine, and have agreed to work it together, the Court will not, on a bill not asking for dissolution of the partnership, and in a case where one of the tenants in common has not taken any steps to obstruct the other, grant a manager and receiver of the mine. Roberts v. Everhardt, 2 W. R. 125; 1 Kay 148; 23 L. J., Ch., 201; 2 Eq. Rep. 780.

6. Where one of two partners has become bankrupt in respect of his separate estate, and an official assignee and creditors' assignees have been appointed, and the partnership has been dissolved by the bankruptcy, the continuing partner is entitled to have a receiver of the partnership debts appointed in Chancery, notwithstanding the 152nd section of the statute 12 & 13 Vict., c. 106. Freeland v. Stansfield, 16 Jur. 792.

7. On a bill filed by a plaintiff insured in a society (whose funds where liable to pay the insurance money), on behelf of himself and other persons so insured, charging a loss of the fund through the negligence of the directors, and on the answer and affidavits showing that the secretary had absconded with part of the funds, and that some of the directors were in needy circumstances:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to the appointment of a receiver, and to an injunction. Evans v. Coventry, 5 De G. M. & G. 911.

8. In a partnership suit, a decree having been made for the appointment of a receiver, and a receiver subsequently approved and gone into possession:—Held, that such possession was not, as regards strangers to the suit, the possession of the Court till the final appointment of the receiver. Defries v. Creed, 6 N. R. 17.

9. To entitle one partner to an injunction and receiver against his co-partner, either a dissolution must be shown, or such facts as would entitle the plaintiff to a decree for dissolution, and in so doing the Court will look at the terms of the original contract of partnership, and the duties and obligations arising out of it; and if it sees that the conduct of one is destructive of all confidence, and inconsistent with every duty, so as to make it impossible that it should be carried on with benefit to either party, it will decree a dissolution, before the expiration of the term for which the partnership was entered into. Smith v. Jeyes, 4 Beav. 503.

10. Where it is not the object of the suit to obtain the dissolution of a partnership, but on the contrary to continue the partnership, it is not according to the practice of the Court, in the course of that suit, to grant a receiver and manager. Hall v. Hall, 3 Macn. & G. 79; 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 585; 15 Jur. 363.

Cases, however, may arise in which the conduct of the defendant being such as to endanger the existence of the partnership concern, the Court will appoint an interim receiver and manager. Ib.

11. Exclusion is a sufficient ground for appointing a receiver in partnership cases, but partners may, by contract, provide for an exclusion on the happening of certain events. Blakeney v. Dufaur, 15 Beav. 40.

Upon a motion for a receiver of a partnership, the Court will not determine the questions arising between the partners, the only object then being to protect the assets until the determination of the rights. Ib.

12. A plaintiff filed a bill for dissolution of a partnership entered into with the defendant, and moved for a receiver. A question was raised upon the evidence as to the conduct of the parties, and as to whether there was any term fixed for the expiration of the partnership:—Held, that these questions must be decided at the hearing, and that the Court, not being able to say that a dissolution must be declared at the hearing, would not appoint a receiver, which would operate as an injunction. Baxter v. West, 28 L. J., Ch., 169; 32 L. T. 155.

13. Two partners, on the termination of their partnership, came to an arrangement for mutual convenience that a third person should collect the outstanding assets; it was acted upon for some time, and then one of the partners died:—Held, that the surviving partner could not repudiate the agreement and alone collect the debts, but that the executors of the deceased partner had a right to have a receiver appointed. Davis v. Amer, 3 Drew. 65.

14. The authority of a partner continues after a dissolution for all purposes of winding up, and, if it be unduly exercised, the remedy is by applying to the Court for the appointment of a receiver. Butchart v. Dresser, 4 De G. M. & G. 542; 10 Hare 453.

15. Solvent partner appointed receiver, without salary, of the partnership property, etc. Exp. Stoveld, 1 G. & J. 303.

16. The power of a solvent partner upon the bankruptcy of his co-partner to sell the partnership property, is given him in his personal capacity, to enable him to wind up the affairs of the partnership, and cannot be transferred by him to another, either by assignment of "all his share and interest" in the partnership, or by exposing himself, although bonâ fide, to a judgment under which all such share and interest is taken in execution. Fraser v. Kershaw, 2 Kay & J. 496; 2 Jur., N. S., 880; 24 L. J., Ch., 445; 4 W, R. 431.

T. & K. being partners, T., on the 19th February, was declared bankrupt. On the 20th February the defendant, a judgment creditor of K., the then sole solvent partner, issued a fieri facias on all the partnership effects, which were made over to her by the sheriff. The defendant advertised them for sale on the 27th February, claiming to be the sole owner. On the 26th February a joint adjudication took place against T. & K., under which the plaintiff was the official assignee. The defendant attempted to carry out the sale as advertised, but the official assignee entered, and forcibly retained possession of the goods. On a bill filed by the assignee to restrain the defendant from proceeding to sell, and for a receiver, and for a sale and winding-up under the authority of the Court:—Held, first, that the authority of a sole solvent partner to get in the partnership assets is an authority vested in him personally for partnership purposes, and cannot be transferred. Ib.

Semble, that even the partner himself might in some cases be restrained. Ib.

Held, secondly, that a sale of partnership assets by an execution creditor of a solvent partner claiming the sole property is a tortious conversion such as ought to be restrained. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the previous violence of the plaintiff in taking and keeping possession of goods by force did not disentitle him to his remedy in equity. Ib.

1. A partnership existed which had various branch partnerships and businesses at various places, and in the several sub-partnership deeds a proviso was inserted that such partnerships should be determined by the head partner of the general partnership firm upon certain terms, upon giving certain notices. The head partner being desirous of terminating one of the subordinate partnerships, the proper notices were given. The plaintiff denied the validity of these notices, and also disputed the principle upon which the last balance sheet of the profits had been taken and made up. He thereupon filed a bill for an account, and for a receiver:—Held, that, until the validity or invalidity of these notices was determined at the hearing, a receiver would not be appointed, no prospective damage to the plaintiff's concern in the meantime being alleged. Bowker v. Henry, 6 L. T., N. S., 43.

2. Partnership assets were in the possession of a receiver appointed by the Court, and of which an execution creditor had distinct notice. A seizure of the property, on the part of the execution creditor and of the sheriff, was held to be a contempt, and the Court ordered them to pay the costs of it and of a motion to commit. Lane v. Sterne, 3 Giff. 629; 9 Jur., N. S., 320.

3. The existence of disputes between different members of the governing body of a company which prevents its affairs being carried on properly, is a ground for the intervention of the Court by injunction and receiver to protect the property of the company, but the interference of the Court will be continued only until a governing body is duly appointed. Featherstone v. Cooke, Trade Auxiliary Co. v. Vickers, 16 L. R., Eq., 298.

4. In an action between partners, the writ filed in which claimed—(1) an injunction to restrain the defendant from drawing out of the partnership funds more than the amount stipulated in the articles by way of subsistence money; (2) a receiver; and (3) an account, but did not claim a dissolution of the partnership:—Held, on an interim motion for a receiver, that the Court could appoint a receiver, not being also a manager of the partnership business, although a dissolution was not claimed. Medwin v. Ditcham, 47 L. T. 250.

5. Pending the winding-up of the business of a partnership, which had become dissolved by the death of one of the partners, it is a ground for appointing a receiver and manager, and for not appointing the surviving partner to the office, that the latter has, while carrying on the business after his partner's death, so acted as to diminish the value of the assets by transferring to a new business to be carried on by himself, the benefit of the custom and goodwill of the business. Young v. Buckett, 51 L. J., Ch., 504; 46 L. T. 266; 30 W. R. 511.

6. In a partnership action, where there was no default in pleading, a district registrar by consent made a decree for accounts and inquiries, appointed a receiver, and directed a sale of the partnership property:—Held, that all these proceedings were invalid, and the plaintiff must commence afresh as from before decree; but, on motion under the Judicature Act, Ord. XL., r. 11, on admissions in the pleadings, an order was made directing accounts and inquiries to be taken and made in the district registry; the same receiver was, by consent, re-appointed by name by the Court. Brassington v. Cussons, 24 W. R. 880.

7. When partners have agreed to refer disputes to a foreign tribunal, the Court will not allow proceedings to go on in an action in respect of the same matters, nor appoint a receiver during the liquidation of the partnership affairs, unless it is shown that the rights of the parties cannot be sufficiently protected by the foreign tribunal. Law v. Garrett, 26 W. R. 426; 8 L. R., Ch. D., 26; 38 L. T., N. S., 3. Affirming 37 L. T., N. S., 602.

8. W. and A. were appointed receivers on the dissolution of the partnership of R. and L. W. was a creditor of L., and L., in consideration of some further advances, gave him a charge on the moneys which should come to his hands as receiver. Subsequently, L. signed an order authorizing W. to pay over "the balance due to him" to G. and B. W. accepted notice of the order, but did not tell G. and B. of his own prior charge. On the bankruptcy of L., G. and B. claimed priority over W.:—Held, that there was no obligation on W.'s part to disclose his charge, and that he was entitled to priority. Re Lewer, Exp. Garrard, 25 W. R. 364; 5 L. R., Ch. D., 61; 37 L. T. 42. Affirming S. C. sub. nom. Exp. Wilkes, Re Lewer, 25 W. R. 64; 35 L. T., N. S., 557; 4 L. R., Ch. D., 101.

Held, that W., when he accepted the order, only undertook to pay over to G. and B. the ultimate balance after he had satisfied his own claim. Ib.

1. Co-partners must join in plea, etc. Anon., Cary 15.

2. Fourteen shareholders in a joint stock company, which had already ceased to carry on business, filed a bill on behalf of themselves and all other the shareholders, except the defendants, against the defendants, who were the directors of the company, praying that various accounts might be taken, and that the partnership might be dissolved. The company had consisted of about two hundred partners, and the plaintiffs alleged that it would be inconvenient to make them all parties:—Held, upon demurrer, that a bill praying dissolution of a partnership cannot be sustained without all the partners being before the Court. Leave given to amend and assimilate the bill to that in Wallworth v. Holt (4 Myl. & Cr. 619). Suggestion by the Court that a clause in partnership deeds, allowing a certain number of partners to sue, would obviate this difficulty. Deeks v. Stanhope, 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 280; 14 Sim. 57; 8 Jur. 349.

3. There are two general rules of the Court; first, that all persons interested in the subject matter of the litigation ought to be parties; the second, that the Court always endeavours to do complete justice, so that the matters involved in the suit may not be left open to future litigation: but the rules are both occasionally departed from. As to the necessity of the Court modifying its rules and adapting its forms of proceedings to the altered circumstances of society existing at the present day. A bill may be filed respecting a partnership without praying a dissolution. Richardson v. Hastings, 7 Beav. 323; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 142; 8 Jur. 207.

In a continuing partnership, if a few have an interest in a particular subject adverse to all the rest, a bill may be filed against the few, by one on behalf, etc. In the case of an insolvent partnership not formally dissolved, a bill may be filed by one or more, on behalf of the rest, against the governing body, to have the assets collected and applied towards the payment of the debts, without seeking to ascertain the rights and liabilities of the parties as between themselves, but leaving them open to future litigation. Ib.

4. To a bill filed by joint creditors for the purpose of obtaining relief against the assets of a deceased partner or joint contractor, the surviving partners or joint contractors must be made parties, though no decree is sought against them, such persons being necessarily interested in taking the accounts. Thorpe v. Jackson, 2 Y. & Coll. 553.

5. In a bill by a debtor of a firm against the last continuing member of the partnership existing when the debt was contracted, to restrain an action for the debt by such survivor, it was alleged that the debt had been satisfied by dealings with the subsequent partners:—Held, that neither they nor the quondam partners could be made defendants for the purpose of obtaining discovery as to such dealings. Jones v. Maund, 3 Y. & Coll. 347.

6. The proceeds of several shipments of goods had been brought into court, in an interpleader suit, by the surviving partners of a firm to which they had been remitted. In a subsequent suit by some of the claimants against the other claimants and the surviving partners, a demurrer, on the ground that the representatives of the deceased partner in the firm were necessary parties, was allowed. Miller v. Cranford, 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 195.

7. In a suit by a joint creditor, against the representatives of a deceased partner, and the surviving partner, the plaintiff was held to be entitled to satisfaction out of the assets of the deceased partner, though it was not proved that the surviving partner was insolvent. The surviving partner is properly joined as a defendant in such a suit, being interested to contest the demand of the plaintiff, and of all joint creditors, but the remedy against him is altogether at law. Wilkinson v. Henderson, 1 Myl. & K. 582; 2 L. J., N. S., Ch., 191.

8. Semble, that where one of several partners, plaintiffs, dies, the suit survives to the others. Anderson v. Wallis, 4 Y. & Coll. 336.

9. Testator by will directs his business to be carried on by his executors, and that when his son B. (the bankrupt) attains twenty-one, he should, on performing certain terms, be admitted to a fourth share. B., at the age of twenty, enters into another business on his own account, and never claims the right under the will, or performs those conditions:—Held, nevertheless, that he had not abandoned the right, and, therefore, that his assignees have a right to call the executors of the will before the commissioner and examine them as to the affairs of partnership. Exp. & Re Marks, 1 Dea. & Ch. 499; 1 L. J., N. S., Bky., 3.

10. Demurrer to a bill for some members of lodge of Freemasons against others to have the dresses, etc., delivered up, and an injunction was allowed on ground that they affected to sue as a corporate body; but leave was given to amend, the Court holding the jurisdiction for delivering of chattels, and where there is a joint interest permitting some to sue as individuals, representing the rest in other instances than those of creditors and legatees, if inconvenient to justice that all should be parties. Lloyd v. Loaring, 6 Ves. 773.

11. In a suit for a share of a partnership adventure, all the parties having shares must be parties. Ireton v. Lewes, Rep. temp. Finch, 96.

12. In a bill to establish a title to fish, all persons interested in any one particular adventure, must be parties. Coppard v. Page, For. Exch. Rep. 1.

13. Some members of a partnership cannot file a bill for a dissolution without making all the partners, however numerous, parties. Long v. Yonge, 2 Sim. 369.

14. One of two part owners of a ship having assigned his share to the other, the former is a necessary party to a bill by a creditor of both against the representatives of the latter. Pierson v. Robinson, 3 Swan. 139.

1. One part owner of a ship cannot bring a bill on behalf of himself and the other part owners, but they must all be parties. Moffat v. Farquharson, 2 Bro. C. C. 338.

2. At law, where one of the creditors will not join in the action, he is summoned and severed, and the other has judgment quod sequatur solum. Darwent v. Walton, 2 Atk. 510.

Where one partner is abroad, the other partner who is before the Court shall pay the whole of the joint demand. Ib.

Where an action is brought against two joint debtors, and one only appears, the creditor may have judgment for his whole debt against the person appearing, and by default against the person who does not appear. Ib.

3. Where a contract is entered into for the purchase of an estate by certain persons in their own names, but in fact on their own account, and also as agents for other parties, a bill to rescind the contract may be filed in the names of the agents and the other parties. Where the partners in a company or partnership are numerous, a bill may be filed by some of the partners on behalf of themselves and the other partners to rescind the contract, in a case where it is manifest, from the circumstances and the evidence, that it is for the benefit of all the partners that the contract should be rescinded. Small v. Attwood, 1 Younge 407; 2 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 1, 6.

Bill by certain persons on behalf of themselves and the other members of a joint stock company, to which an answer was put in and a decree subsequently made, setting aside certain contracts between the plaintiffs and the defendant, and directing various accounts and inquiries. A supplemental bill was afterwards filed, in the name of the same plaintiffs, against the same defendant, seeking, among other things, a specific lien on a part of the purchase money paid to the defendant. The defendant pleaded that one of the parties named as a plaintiff in the supplemental bill had, previously to the filing of it, parted with all his interest in the partnership or company, and had ceased to be any longer a member or proprietor of the company, and that he had not any other interest. The plea was overruled. S. C. 1 Y. & Coll. 39.

4. A joint stock company, established by Act of Parliament, vesting in them all property then belonging to them, and authorising them to bring actions in the name of their treasurer for the time being, purchased an estate pending a suit against the vendors, to compel a specific performance of an agreement to grant a lease of part. On a bill by the vendee against the treasurer and directors, the plaintiff company were declared entitled to a lease, and the treasurer was enjoined from disturbing their possession, though the rest of the proprietors, being very numerous, were not parties; but no decree could be made for the execution of a lease. Meux v. Maltby, 2 Swan. 277.

5. An Act of Parliament for forming a joint stock company authorised all suits on behalf of the company, against any person, to be commenced in the name of the chairman, and in all proceedings in which it would have been before necessary to state the names of the partners, it was made sufficient to state the name of the chairman only:—Held, that the Act did not authorise suits to be commenced by the chairman, against one of the partners, without making the others parties. Macmahon v. Upton, 2 Sim. 473; 7 L. J., Ch., 125.

6. Some of the holders of scrip or shares of a loan cannot file a bill on behalf of themselves and the other holders, to have their subscriptions returned. Jones v. Garcia del Rio, T. & R. 297.

7. Semble, some difficulty may arise with regard to that provision of the Judicature Rules (1875) which enables partners to be sued in the name of the firm, because we have not yet introduced into our law the notion that a firm is a persona. Supposing (e.g.), there to have been an entire change in the constitution of the firm, and that although the name of the firm continued, the firm, at the time when the action was brought, consisted of entirely different persons from those of whom it consisted at the time when the contract was made; for instance, if A., B., and C. were the partners at the time of the action, and E., F., and G. at the time of the contract. Exp. Blain, Re Sawers, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 522; 41 L. T. 46; 28 W. R. 336.

Semble, it may be that under the circumstances the firm could not be sued. Ib.

8. A., a member of the firm of A. Brothers, of South America, went to Hong Kong to enforce a debt due by B. & Co., of that place, to his firm. Upon B. & Co. being threatened with proceedings, they applied to C. & Co. for assistance. C. & Co. agreed to advance B. & Co. the money to pay their debt, by remitting the amount to A. & Co., and afterwards, in pursuance of this agreement, and in consideration of A.'s not proceeding to sue B. & Co., gave an undertaking in writing, whereby C. & Co. promised to remit the amount to A.'s agent in London, at the expiration of six months, whereon A. gave B. & Co. a receipt in full for the debt due to the firm of A. & Co. C. & Co. afterwards repudiated their obligation to remit the amount to A. & Co. A. brought an action, in his own name, against C. & Co.:—Held, that the contract being entered into with A. personally, upon his undertaking not to sue B. & Co., constituted a personal agreement; and that A. was entitled to sue C. & Co. in his own name, without joining his partners. Agacio v. Forbes, 14 Moo. P. C. 160; 4 L. T., N. S., 155; 9 W. R. 503.

9. Previously to December 8th 1880, W. did work for a firm in which Y. was a partner. On that date Y. retired, the other partners continuing the business in the firm's name. The dissolution was duly advertised on December 15th, and on the 18th W. issued a writ against the firm in the firm's name. On the 21st the writ was personally served on one of the continuing partners at the firm's place of business. Y. was not served. No appearance was entered for any of the partners, and on December 29th W. signed judgment for default. In June 1881 W. took out a debtor's summons, founded on the judgment against Y. Y. applied to the Court to dismiss the summons, and his application was refused:—Held (dissentiente Brett, L. J.), that the summons should have been dismissed. Per Selborne, L. C., on the ground that Ord. XLII., r. 8, shows that even if a partner retired at the date of the writ he could be sued under the firm's name; judgment in the firm's name could not be held conclusive of his liability, and is therefore, without more, not a good foundation for a debtor's summons. Per Cotton, L. J., that Ord. XVI., r. 10, applies only to persons who are partners at the date of the issue of the writ. Per Brett, L. J., that Ord. XVI., r. 10, applies to all persons liable for the debt for which the action is brought, and judgment obtained against the firm can be enforced against them in any valid way except by issuing execution which is restrained by Ord. XLII., r. 8. Exp. & Re Young, 45 L. T. 493.

In Case of Joint Stock Companies.] See COMPANY—PRACTICE (PARTIES).

II. PLEADING.

1. Negative plea, as no partnership, not going to collateral circumstances, charged as evidence of it, insufficient. Evans v. Harris, 2 Ves. & B. 364.

2. In an action for dissolution of partnership, the plaintiffs by their statement of claim alleged that they and the defendant had agreed to take a lease of certain premises and to enter into partnership; that draft articles of partnership were considered and approved by the plaintiffs and the defendant at an interview on a day named, subject to their being finally revised by the defendant's solicitor; that the draft articles had not yet been revised, nor the articles executed; that, although the draft articles were only settled subject to revision, the terms of the arrangement between the plaintiffs and defendant as therein provided were definitely agreed upon at the interview; that the defendant had not intimated any objection to the terms of the articles; that it was soon afterwards agreed that certain sums should be brought in by the plaintiffs and defendant; that they had proceeded with the partnership undertaking, and the defendant had taken an active part in it, but that he had not contributed his share, and notice had been given him to withdraw from the undertaking. The defendant, in his statement of defence, admitted that he had agreed to enter into partnership as alleged, and added, "The defendant denies that the terms of the arrangement between myself and the plaintiffs were definitely agreed upon as alleged":—Held, that the denial was evasive within the Judicature Act, Ord. XIX., r. 22. Thorp v Holdsworth, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 637; 46 L J., Ch., 406.

Held, also, upon motion for judgment on admissions of fact in the pleadings under Ord. XL., r. 11, that there should be a decree for dissolution, with an inquiry, if desired by the defendant, as to the terms of the arrangement for partnership. Ib.

3. A plaintiff, by his statement of claim, claimed to have an agreement for a partnership with the defendant in a land speculation cancelled, on the ground that he had been induced to enter into it by the misrepresentation of the defendant, and in ignorance of its real effect; or, in the alternative, that the partnership created by the agreement might be dissolved and the accounts taken, and the defendant restrained from interfering with the management of the works in violation of the agreement. The defendant moved for an order for the plaintiff to amend his statement of claim by confining it to one of the alternative claims:—Held, that there was no inconsistency in the alternative claims, or in the allegations in support of them; and the motion was refused. Bagot v. Easton, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 1.

III. PRACTICE.

4. An order on two solicitors as partners is not duly served by serving it on one of them, and leaving a copy at the place where the partnership business is carried on. Young v. Goodson, 2 Russ. 255.

5. Bill against two partners, one abroad; service of subpœna against him permitted on the other, on motion. Coles v. Gurney, 1 Madd. 187.

6. A suit for specific performance of a contract made with a partnership was instituted against the members of the firm after the partnership had been dissolved:—Held, that the fact of one being out of the jurisdiction was no reason why a decree should not be made against those who were within the jurisdiction. Southern v. Harriman, 12 W. R. 794; 10 L. T., N. S., 263.

7. In a decree for the dissolution of a partnership, a defendant was ordered to concur in procuring the insertion of notice of dissolution in the London Gazette. Troughton v. Hunter, 18 Beav. 470.

8. A partnership at will held dissolved as from the date of the filing of a bill which prayed for its dissolution. Shepherd v. Allen, 33 Beav. 577.

9. A partnership having, in an action brought by the plaintiff, been by order of the Court dissolved, the plaintiff and defendants signed an agreement of compromise, whereby it was agreed that the plaintiff should be paid a sum of money for his share in the business. The plaintiff subsequently repudiated the agreement, and proposed to proceed with his action, alleging that his signature had been obtained by fraud:—Held, that the Court had, under the Judicature Act 1873, s. 24, sub-ss. 5, 7, jurisdiction to order the stay of all further proceedings in the action. Eden v. Naish, 7 L. R., Ch. D., 781.

Held, also, that as the defendants had severed upon the summons, and been represented by four counsel, the costs to be paid by the plaintiff would be for one counsel only for each defendant. Ib.

10. One of two members of a defendant partnership made default in appearance. The other put in a statement of defence in the name of the firm. A motion to take it off the file was refused. Taylor v. Collier, 51 L. J., Ch., 853; 30 W. R. 701.

11. Per Lord Selborne, L. C.: Whether the provision of the Judicature Act, Order XVI., rule 10, that partners may be sued in the name of their firm, applies, not only to a partnership existing at the time when the writ is issued, but also to a partnership dissolved before the issue of the writ in respect of a cause of action which arose during its existence, quære. But, if it does, still judgment in the action is not per se binding on any member of the dissolved firm who has not been served with the writ as a partner, or has not admitted on the pleadings that he is or has been adjudged to be a partner. Leave ought not to be given to issue execution on the judgment against such a person, if he disputes his liability, without the previous determination of the question of his liability; nor can a debtor's summons be properly issued against him on the judgment per se. Exp. & Re Young, 19 L. R., Ch. D., 124; 51 L. J., Ch., 141; 45 L. T. 493; 30 W. R. 330.

Per Cotton, L. J.: Order XVI., rule 10, applies only to a partnership existing at the time when the writ is issued. It does not apply to a partnership dissolved before the issue of the writ. Ib.

A partnership consisting of several members was dissolved as to one of them on the 17th of December, and the business was thenceforth continued by the others under the old firm name, and at the old place of business. On the 18th of December a creditor of the old partnership, who was ignorant of the dissolution, commenced an action against the partners (suing them in the firm name) in respect of a debt contracted before the dissolution. On the 21st of December the writ was served personally on one of the continuing partners. The retired partner was not served in any way. No appearance was entered to the writ, and on the 29th of December the plaintiff signed judgment by default. Execution was issued, but the sheriff found no goods of the partnership upon which to levy. No application was made under rule 8 of Order XLII. for leave to issue execution against the retired partner. In the following May, the retired partner having had no previous notice of the action, the plaintiff served him with particulars of demand of the judgment debt, and, he not having paid it, the plaintiff served him with a debtor's summons founded on the judgment debt. He denied the debt, and applied to the Bankruptcy Court to dismiss the summons:—Held, by Lord Selborne, L. C., and Cotton, L. J. (dissentiente Brett, L. J.), that the judgment would not support the debtor's summons, and that the summons must be dismissed. Ib.

IV. PAYMENT INTO COURT.

1. Order for a partner to pay into court partnership money received by him contrary to good faith; but in general, a partner insisting that the balance of the account is in his favour is not obliged to bring into court what is in his hands, unless the other partners do the same. Foster v. Donald, 1 Jac. & Walk. 252.

2. Under a decree for account of proceeds of a joint adventure, on bill by one party on behalf of himself and the others, and inquiry who are concerned with the plaintiff, the Master, having by advertisement as usual declared those who should not come in excluded, reported several persons who had not come in to claim entitled to shares; further advertisements directed, but payment into court of those shares refused, and the decree not to be executed as to those who should not come in. Good v. Blewitt, 19 Ves. 336.

3. Money admitted to have been received by a surviving party on account of the late partnership, ordered to be paid into court, although by his answer and examination he alleged that partnership debts to a large amount were still outstanding, for which he was liable, and also that his co-partner had drawn out of the partnership sums to the amount of double the sums drawn out by himself; it appearing that there was a sufficient sum in court to pay the outstanding debts, and that, taking into consideration the true shares of the partners, which the defendant had not done, the co-partner had not over-drawn his co-partnership account. Toulmin v. Copland, 3 Y. & Coll. 625.

The partnership of A. & B. being dissolved is succeeded by that of B. & C., who take upon themselves to adjust the affairs of the former partnership. B. dies, and his executors file a bill against C. for an account of the partnership dealings of B. & C. In the progress of the suit, the Court directs the accounts of both partnerships to be taken, and C. by his answer and examination admits that he has received a sum on account of the partnership of A. & B.:—Held, that he must pay that sum into court, notwithstanding A.'s representatives are not parties to the suit, inasmuch as he must be taken to have received it (subject to his explanation to the contrary) as surviving partner of B. Ib.

4. The former partners of a testator (who had retired before his death) were appointed his executors, with power to apply certain policy moneys in their trade, provided they gave such security to the residuary legatees as W. might approve. W. refused to act; and the executors, without giving security, applied the policy moneys in payment of a partnership debt, for which the testator had mortgaged them. They were directed to pay the amount into court, as well as an admitted balance due to the testator from the partnership. Costeker v. Horrow, 3 Y. & Coll. 530; 3 Jur. 996.

5. A partner who had drawn out money standing to the partnership account, in derogation of the partnership articles, was ordered, upon motion, to pay that sum into court. Birley v. Kennedy, 6 N. R. 395.

6. Court of equity will order fund of annuity company into Court when members are about to abuse their trust. Cartland v. Lyster, 1 Ridgw. L. & S. 580.

V. COSTS.

7. The personal representatives of one of two partners demanded from the surviving partner an account of the partnership transactions. He refused to render the accounts, unless they would give him security for a balance which he claimed to be due to him. They then filed a bill for an account. He filed a cross-bill. On the Master's report, a balance was found due from him to the representatives of the deceased partner:—Held, that the costs of both suits must be given against the surviving partner. Payne v. Felton, 4 L. J., Ch., 175.

1. Though contribution among partners is now enforced at law, the jurisdiction of courts of equity is not ousted, and therefore, though the bill was dismissed, the object having been attained in an action directed, the Court will not dismiss it with costs. Wright v. Hunter, 5 Ves. 792.

2. Costs of a suit for dissolution of partnership, on the ground that the defendant had become a lunatic, though not so found by inquisition, ordered after decree declaring the partnership dissolved, to be paid out of the partnership. Jones v. Welch, 1 Kay & J. 765; 1 Jur., N. S., 994.

3. The usual rule as to costs in partnership suits applies also to a suit for winding up the affairs of a partnership which had been dissolved before the filing of the bill. Timothy v. Hindley, 14 W. R. 382.

4. In a suit by the executors of a deceased partner against a surviving partner who was bound under the articles to pay them annually half the profits of the business, the bill alleging that no accounts had been rendered, though application had been made for some years, but not alleging that anything was due from the defendant, and praying for an account and for the winding-up of the partnership—the defendant having by his answer admitted the allegations in the bill and submitted to render an account without alleging that nothing was due:—Held, that the defendant must pay the costs up to the hearing. Norton v. Russell, 19 L. R., Eq., 343; 23 W. R., 252.

5. In a partnership suit, when the matters in difference were referred to arbitration instead of the accounts being taken in chambers:—Held, that the costs of the suit, including those of the reference and award, ought to be borne by the parties in proportion to their respective partnership shares. Newton v. Taylor, 23 W. R. 330; 19 L. R., Eq., 14.

6. The costs of a suit to take partnership accounts are ordinarily paid out of partnership assets. Bonville v. Bonville, 35 Beav. 129.

7. The balance found due in a partnership action from the firm to one of the partners must be paid out of the assets in priority to the costs of the action. Austin v. Jackson (11 L. R., Ch. D., 942. n.) approved and followed. Potter v. Jackson, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 845; 49 L. J., Ch., 232; 42 L. T. 294; 28 W. R. 411.

8. The rule as to costs in a partnership action is the same as in any other administration action, that is, they are payable out of the assets; "partnership assets" meaning the assets remaining after payment of all the partnership debts, including balances due to any of the partners. If the assets are insufficient for payment of the costs of the action, then such costs must be borne by the partners in proportion to their shares in the profits. Where, however, a partnership action has been rendered necessary by the negligence or other misconduct of a partner, the Court will order that partner to pay the costs of the action so far as they have been occasioned by his misconduct, including the costs up to the trial. Hamer v. Giles, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 942; 48 L. J., Ch., 508; 41 L. T. 270; 27 W. R. 834.

9. Where a joint creditor takes the benefit of a decree for administering the estate of an insolvent partner, and obtains an order for payment of his debt and costs, the executors' costs are prior charges; but where the executors have denied assets, their costs are postponed to the debt and costs of the joint creditor. Lodge v. Pritchard, 4 Giff. 295.

10. When a dissolution of partnership is caused by the act of God, the costs after the hearing will be paid out of the partnership property. The costs up to the hearing will be paid out of the partnership property, or by each party, according to circumstances. Rowlands v. Evans, Williams v. Rowlands, 14 W. R. 882.

1. New Inventions, Manufactures, or Discoveries.

1. Where one part of an invention is not new, the patent is void as to the whole. Kay v. Marshall, 1 West 682; 5 Jur. 1028; 8 Cl. & F. 245. Affirming 1 Beav. 535. See S. C. 5 Bing., N. S., 492; 7 Scott 548; 8 L. J., N. S., C. P., 261.

Before the grant of the plaintiff's patent, the reach in spinning machines varied from less than an inch, to thirty-six inches, according to the length of the fibre of the material. The plaintiff discovered a new and improved mode of preparing flax and other fibrous substances, in which process the fibre became shortened, and the length of the reach in spinning it was necessarily diminished. The plaintiff obtained a patent first for thus preparing the flax and other fibrous substances; and, secondly, for spinning it at a shorter reach than had been done before—namely, at two-and-a-half inches:—Held, that the second part of the patent could not be supported, and that the patent was therefore invalid. Ib.

1. If, having a particular purpose in view, a person takes the general principles of mechanics and applies one or other of them to a manufacture to which it has not before been applied, this is sufficient ground to warrant an application for a patent; assuming such manufacture to be new, desirable, and a public utility. Dangerfield v. Jones, 13 L. T., N. S., 142.

2. It is not every useful discovery that can be made the subject of a patent, but the words "new manufacture" in 21 Jac. 1, c. 3, will comprehend not only a production, but the means of producing it. Ralston v. Smith, 11 H. L. Ca. 223; 13 L. T., N. S., 1; 35 L. J., C. P., 49.

A patent cannot be taken out for one particular use of a known machine, though the patentee may have discovered how to use the machine more beneficially than the owner. Ib.

R., in his specification, described his patent for improvements in embossing and finishing woven fabrics, as enabling him upon the roller, either spirally or longitudinally, or in a circular form, to groove, or flute, or engrave, or mill, or otherwise indent any design. The fact was, that if the design was engraved longitudinally it would destroy the material. R., therefore, in a disclaimer, altered "upon" into "around the roller":—Held, first, that the disclaimer was bad, as it sought in effect to extend the specification or to convert a bad specification into a good one by adding words. Ib.

Held, secondly, that the construction of the specification, as amended by the disclaimer, excluded spiral engraving, and confined it to circular engraving or grooves. Ib.

Held, thirdly, the description "or roller of hard metal, or other suitable material," was not too vague as regards material. Ib.

Held, fourthly, that having regard to what was previously known, the subject-matter of the specification was not a new manufacture, thought it might be a useful discovery. Ib.

3. Hoops of whalebone, cane, and other substances, suspended from the waist and forming a petticoat, had long since been used by ladies. A person took out a patent for using, for the same purpose, hoops made of steel watch spings:—Held, that this was not an invention which could properly be made the subject of a patent. Thompson v. James, 32 Beav. 570.

4. Where an invention consists of the discovery of particular means for attaining a result, which result is already perfectly well known, the invention is only for the means; and the invention of one set of particular means does not interfere with the invention of another set of means to the same end, provided that the two sets of means are distinct, and the latter does not involve a colourable imitation of the former, or an incorporation of the former with additions. Curtis v. Platt, 11 L. T., N. S., 245.

5. D., in 1804, took out a patent for making "a new article of trade, which I denominate 'Albion metal,' and which I apply" to various purposes, such as the facings of cisterns, coffin furniture, "and other things which are required to be made of a flexible" substance. D. stated in his specification the principle of his invention, and that he proposed to unite lead and tin by pressure; but he did not state the exact proportions of the two metals, nor give with precision the mode by which they were to be combined. It did not appear that the patent had been acted on. In 1849, B. took out a patent for "a new manufacture of capsules, and of a material to be employed therein, and for other purposes;" the new material was to be composed of lead and tin combined. B. specified the proportions of the two metals, gave the details of the mode of working in order to combine them, and did not claim the production of the new material except according to the directions he had given for its production:—Held, that this was not a case in which the Court, looking at the two instruments, could determine the validity of the latter patent as a matter of construction only; that evidence must be resorted to; and that then it was apparent that the earlier patent only stated a principle, and that the latter patent, as it did not claim the discovery of the principle, but only a new mode of carrying it into effect, was valid. Betts v. Menzies, 10 H. L. Ca. 117; 9 Jur., N. S., 29; 11 W. R. 1; 7 L. T., N. S., 110; 31 L. J., Q. B., 233.

An antecedent specification, declaring a principle, but not disclosing a practicable mode of obtaining a result, is not to be held to be an anticipation of a subsequent specification relating to the same matter, which does disclose a practicable mode of producing the result. If the latter specification alone supplies that practicable mode, it forms the groundwork for a valid patent. Ib.

A barren general description, probably containing some suggested information, or involving some speculative theory, cannot be considered as anticipating a subsequent specification of an invention which involves a practical truth, which is productive of beneficial results, unless the antecedent publication involves the same amount of practical and useful information. Ib.

6. Where there are two things similar in form used for a similar object, and capable of the same application, one of them having been known to mechanics, the introduction of the other into use will not constitute a good ground for a patent. Harwood v. Great Northern Railway Co., 11 H. L. Ca. 654; 35 L. J., Q. B., 27; 12 L. T., N. S., 771.

A slight difference in the mode of application is not sufficient for such a purpose, nor will it be sufficient to take a well-known mechanical contrivance and apply it to a subject to which it has not been hitherto applied. Ib.

The use of fishes as supports was known, and the use of fishes made with a groove or recess in their outer surface was also known. A person took out a patent, which he thus described:—"My invention consists in forming a recess or groove in one or both sides of each fish, so as to reduce the quantity of metal at that part, and to be adapted to receive the square heads of the bolts, which are thus prevented from turning round when the nuts are screwed on." His claim was for constructing fishes for connecting the rails of railways with a groove adapted for receiving the ends of the bolts or rivets employed for securing such fishes, and the application of such fishes for connecting the ends of railways in manner hereinbefore described; the constructing of fish-joints for connecting the rails of railways with grooved fishes fitted to the sides of the rails, and secured to them by bolts or nuts or rivets, and having projecting wings firmly secured to, and resting upon, the sleepers or bearers so as to support the rails by their sides and upper flanges. It was proved that before the date of his patent fish-joints had been used to connect and strengthen the rails of railways; in some cases the fishes were flat pieces of iron, with round holes for bolts, the heads of the bolts being held in their places by separate means; in others the extreme ends of the holes were made square, and the boltheads square to put into them, and in some square recesses were made in the flat pieces of iron for the same purpose; but till the time of the patent fishes for connecting the rails of railways had never been made with a groove in their lateral surfaces so as to receive the square heads of the bolts, and render the fish lighter for equal strength, or stronger for an equal weight of metal:—Held, that the patentee had merely transferred a known thing from one use to another, and an analogous use, and that what he claimed as his invention was not a good ground to sustain a patent. Ib.

1. The new application of any means or contrivance may be the subject of a patent, if it lies so much out of the track of the former use as not naturally to suggest itself, but to require some application of thought and study. Penn v. Bibby, 2 L. R., Ch., 127; 36 L. J., Ch., 455.

2. It is no objection to the grant of a patent that another person has been making experiments and working towards a similar invention. Exp. Henry, 8 L. R., Ch., 167; 42 L. J., Ch., 363; 21 W. R. 233.

3. A patent for improvements will not be bad on the ground of prior user, though previous use is proved of an article of the same kind, with appendages exactly answering the words of the specification, if the appendages to the article previously used had a different object to that of the patented improvements, and did not produce the same effect. Poupard v. Fardell, 18 W. R. 127.

Under these circumstances the specification is not bad for being too extensive, and including the article previously used, provided the description and diagrams are such as to enable any workman of ordinary intelligence to produce at once the article intended to be patented. Ib.

4. A patent for a new material is not anticipated by a former patent from which a skilled workman never had made, and even with the aid of subsequent knowledge and improved machinery could not make, a similar material. And the material being new a claim for its application to a purpose not new does not affect the validity of the specification. Neilson v. Betts, 40 L. J., Ch., 317; 5 L. R., H. L., 1; 19 W. R. 1121.

5. When the law officer has reported that part of an invention for which a patent is sought is identical with part of an invention which is the subject of an existing patent, a second patent will not, except under special circumstances, be granted for that part, although the validity of the first patent is disputed. Exp. Manceaux, 6 L. R., Ch., 272.

6. W. took out a patent for improvements in ladies' veils, consisting in the folds being the same on both sides, instead of, as theretofore made, one side having been a wrong side. R. bought the patented articles of W. for some time, and ultimately employed a manufacturer of veils, who supplied him with 174 dozen veils identical with those of W., and admitted to be made after the pattern of one of them. On a bill for an injunction to restrain the manufacturing and selling, and infringement of the patent:—Held, that there was no proper subject for a patent, and the bill dismissed, but without costs. White v. Toms, 17 L. T., N. S., 348; 37 L. J., Ch., 204.

7. R. obtained a patent for the use of animal fibre, by preference Russian wool, or wool of a coarse texture, in the manufacture of artificial hair to be made up as ladies' headdresses, and for upholstery, and other like purposes. Upon a bill filed to restrain an infringement of the patent:—Held, that the specification was too extensive; that even the use of a new material to produce a known article could not be the subject of a patent unless some invention and ingenuity were displayed in the adaptation; that in this case a prior user of wool for the same purpose was proved, and that the bill must be dismissed with costs. Rushton v. Crawley, 10 L. R., Eq., 522.

8. The inventor of a painting-machine, by his final specification, claimed the various parts of the machine, and, among others, "The shallow sliding tray T., arranged and used substantially in the manner and for the purpose specified," being, in fact, an ordinary movable tray, used for catching the drippings of the paint from the brushes and other parts of the machine, and being a thing commonly known and used before the date of the papers. He also claimed the general construction and combination of the several parts of the machine. Upon an action by the owner of the patent to restrain an alleged infringement:—Held, that the patent was bad for the want of novelty, inasmuch as it was impossible to construe the claim for the sliding tray otherwise than a distinct claim for a separate invention, and that the plaintiff's cause of action must fail on that ground. Roberts v. Heywood, 27 W. R. 454.

9. A patent is not invalid because part of the invention claimed has been anticipated, so long as there is sufficient amount of utility and advantage to be derived from what remains after striking out the part so anticipated; and in such a case the remaining part is a proper subject for the grant of letters patent. Frearson v. Loe, 27 W. R. 183; 9 L. R., Ch. D., 148.

An injunction will be granted at the suit of a patentee to restrain a threatened infringement, even though no actual infringement may have taken place. Ib.

Though an invention protected by letters patent may be imitated with impunity by way of bonâ fide experiment, yet, where a right is claimed to the manufacture, even to a limited extent, of articles so protected for profit, and the experiments are conducted with a view thereto, such a proceeding is an infringement of the patent, and will be restrained by injunction. Ib.

1. Patentees of lamp-burners claimed by their specification as their invention the construction of burners "in the manner described and illustrated in the figures; that is to say, the employment in the same burner of two or more flat or curved wick-cases or holders in which two or more flat wicks are placed so as to produce thereby one or more flat flames, or elliptical or nearly circular flames." The figures referred to showed burners with two wicks passing through a double-slotted cone. The use of two wicks with a single-slotted cone was old: —Held, that the claim could not be read as limited to burners with a double-slotted cone, and that the patent was bad for want of novelty. Hinks v. Safety Lighting Co., 4 L. R., Ch. D., 607; 36 L. T., N. S., 391; 46 L. J., Ch., 185.

A description in the specification of a lamp-burner omitted to state where the hole for the admission of air was to be:—Held, that the specification was insufficient. Ib.

2. A patentee claimed, first, a mode of applying rollers and runners to the footstand of skates so that they might be cramped or turned so as to cause the skate to run in a curved line by the canting or tilting of the footstand; and secondly, the mode of securing the runners and making them reversible, as above described:—Held, that, assuming that there was nothing novel in the mode of securing the runners to the footstand, yet that the want of novelty in the second claim did not invalidate the patent, because the second claim must be read as claiming a subsidiary invention to be used only in connection with the principal invention. Plimpton v. Spiller, 6 L. R., Ch. D., 412; 37 L. T., N. S., 56.

2. Combinations of Old and New Processes and Matters.

3. A new adaptation of old materials is sufficient to ground an injunction against the infraction of a patent. Luckie v. Robson, 2 Jur. 201.

4. Patent granted where neither the material nor the shape of the article to be manufactured nor the mode of making it was new, but where the three particulars were now usefully combined for the first time. Re Martin and Hyam's Patent, 3 W. R. 433.

5. A patent was taken out for "a new and improved mode of manufacturing silk, cotton, linen and woollen fabrics." The specification, and a disclaimer, set forth that the patentees claimed "the mode hereinbefore described of producing or preparing stripes of silk, cotton, woollen, or linen, or of a mixture of two or more of these materials, in such a manner that the weft, or lateral fibres of both cut edges of each stripe, are all brought up on one side, and into close contact with each other, and the reweaving of such stripes with the whole fur or pile uppermost, into the surfaces of carpets, etc." One of these processes was old. The judge directed the jury, that if one was new, the patent could be supported for the combination of them, and would only be invalid if there had been a public use of both before the date of the patent:—Held, that this direction was erroneous, and that the patent was void. Templeton v. Macfarlane, 1 H. L. Ca. 595.

6. When a machine for which a patent had been granted was shown to produce work more expeditiously, more economically, and of a better quality than any previous machine:—Held, that the patent could not be invalidated on the ground that the machine was formed by the mere arrangement of common elementary mechanical materials, producing results of the same nature as those previously accomplished by other mechanical arrangements and construction. Murray v. Clayton, 7 L. R., Ch., 570; 20 W. R. 649.

The public exhibition of a machine in which there are defects, owing to which it proves an entire failure, does not affect the validity of a subsequent patent for a machine, in which, though similar in some of its details to the former, the defects are remedied so as to produce a serviceable machine. Ib.

And where, the combination being claimed as the invention, it was only so far ascertained by the specification that the latter referred to certain drawings and their description, which did but describe an entire machine and the composition and working of its several constituent parts, without in any manner indicating where the improvement lay, or in what it consisted:—Held, that the patent was void at law. Ib.

In a patent for an improved arrangement or a new combination of machinery, the specification must describe the improvement and define the novelty, otherwise, and in a more specific form, than by the general description of the whole machine: it must assign the differentia of the new combination. Ib.

7. An arrangement of apparatus so constructed as to bring into operation a well-known dynamic agent so as to produce a useful effect for a particular result constitutes an invention of a combination for which a valid patent may be granted. Cannington v. Nuttall, 40 L. J., Ch., 739; 5 L. R., H. L., 205.

To adopt a combination of machinery or arrangement of apparatus originally directed to one purpose, and to use it for another and additional purpose, is an infringement of the patent which first introduced that combination or arrangement. Ib.

8. A valid patent for an entire combination for a process gives protection to each part that is new and material for that process; but a part which in itself could not have been the subject of a patent, or the advantages of which are merely collateral to the objects of the invention, is not protected. Parkes v. Stevens, 18 W. R. 233; 22 L. T., N. S., 635; 5 L. R., Ch., 36.

The adaptation of a sliding door to a spherical lamp, sliding doors having previously been applied to cylindrical lamps and to other glazed surfaces, cannot of itself be the subject of a patent. Ib.

1. A patent for a mechanical arrangement whereby a particular operation may be performed for a particular purpose, the mechanical contrivances so arranged not being new in themselves, but thus first combined for that particular purpose, is not infringed by the adoption of the same arrangement or combination of mechanical contrivances for a similar purpose, if the mode of operation is sufficiently distinct, and different in principle from that which was described or claimed in the patent, and the object achieved is also sufficiently distinct or novel, and does not form an essential part of the patent. Saxby v. Clunes, 43 L. J., Exch., 228.

The principle of an invention for simultaneously moving railway points and making it possible to move the signal lever is not equivalent to the principle of simultaneously moving the signals and the points. Ib.

2. When a person has invented an improvement in the form of a particular apparatus or machine, but combines that individual improvement with other things which are not his inventions, his specification must claim that particular individual thing, and not leave it doubtful whether the claim is made for the whole combination, of which that thing really only forms a part. Clarke v. Adie (No. 1), 2 L. R., App. Cas., 315; 36 L. T., N. S., 923; 46 L. J., Ch., 585.

A patent for a new combination or arrangement is a patent for the entire combination; but there may be an essence or substance underlying the mere accident of form, and the invention may be pirated by a theft in a disguised or mutilated form. There will be in every case a question of fact: Is the alleged piracy the same in substance and effect, or is it a substantially new or different combination? S. C. 33 L. T., N. S., 295; 23 W. R. 898; 10 L. R., Ch., 667.

When there is a patent for a certain combination of parts, that patent does not give protection to any subordinate combination of some of those parts unless such subordinate combination is expressly or impliedly claimed in the specification as a distinct invention. Ib.

3. A patent for a new combination or arrangement is entitled to the same protection on the same principles as any other patent. Clarke v. Adie, 45 L. J., Ch., 228; 3 L. R., Ch. D., 134; 24 W. R. 1007; 35 L. T., N. S., 349.

A patent for a combination of several improvements is not necessarily infringed by a sub-combination of some parts only of the original combination. Ib.

4. If the combination and application of old machinery are new and beneficial, the invention of this combination may be protected by patent. Harrison v. Anderston Foundry Co., 1 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 574.

If there is a patent for a combination, the combination itself is the novelty, and also the merit, which must both be proved by evidence. Ib.

3. Chemical Discoveries.

5. Inventions in mechanics are as totally different from inventions in economical chemistry as the laws and operations of mechanical powers differ from the laws of chemical affinities, and the results of anaylsis in the comparatively infant science of chemistry with its boundless field of undiscovered laws and substances. Young v. Fernie, 4 Giff. 577; 4 N. R. 218.

Where, therefore, prior to the date of a patent, something necessary for the useful application of a chemical discovery for manufacturing purposes remained to be discovered, which the plaintiff's invention supplied:—Held, that the manufacture, with the materials and processes in the specification, was a "new manufacture not in use" at the date of the patent. Ib.

The law recognises the right of an inventor who finds out and supplies for commercial purposes an article known previously only as a chemical curiosity. Ib.

The Court looks with distrust on experiments conducted with a view to litigation. Ib.

The invention or discovery of a means of producing in abundance, suitable for economical and commercial purposes, an article previously known and obtainable in minute quantities only is a good subject of a patent. S. C. 10 Jur., N. S., 926; 12 W. R. 901; 10 L. T., N. S., 861.

The principle laid down in Brooke v. Aston (4 Jur., N. S., 279; 5 Jur., N. S., 1025), that the mere application of a known process to a new article, the mode of application not being new, is not a good subject of a patent, does not apply where the process is chemical. Ib.

6. A person claimed an invention for the purification of gas, by means of hydrated or precipitated oxides of iron, and also a process of revivification, by which the old materials could again be applied as a purifying element:—Held, that an application to the purification of gas of a natural substance called bog ochre, containing precipitated oxides of iron, was not an infringement of the patent, but the revivification of that natural substance was. Hills v. Liverpool United Gaslight Co., 9 Jur., N. S., 140; 32 L. J., Ch., 28; 7 L. T., N. S., 537.

7. A specification is to be understood according to the acceptation of practical men at the time of its enrolment. Therefore, where a specification stated that the apparatus mentioned would extract gas "from any substance from which gas capable of being employed for illumination can be extracted by heat," and the apparatus was not suited to extract gas from oil:—Held, that this did not avoid the patent, oil not then being considered fit for the manufacture of gas for lighting towns, though it was then known as a chemical fact that gas might be produced from oil by heat, and this property has since been applied to the purposes of illumination. Crossley v. Beverly, 1 Russ. & M. 166.

8. When a patent has been obtained for the use of a known substance, described by its specific name, and it is afterwards discovered that the use of two other and equally known substances will produce the same effect, though the evidence of scientific men may go to show that the two substances became, in the act of so using them, the one substance described in the patent, their use will not constitute an infringement of the patent. Unwin v. Heath, 5 H. L. Ca. 505; 16 C. B. 713; 2 Jur., N. S., 1029; 25 L. J., C. P., 8.

1. The discovery of a more skilful and efficient mode of working a process already known and in use is not the proper subject of a patent. Patterson v. Gaslight and Coke Co., 45 L. J., Ch., 843; 2 L. R., Ch. D., 812; 35 L. T., N. S., 11.

P. was one of three referees appointed under an Act of Parliament to inspect the works of gas companies and investigate the processes of manufacture carried on therein, with the view of ascertaining the means adopted therein for purifying gas, and to ascertain with what degree of purity each company could reasonably be required to make and supply gas, and to prescribe the maximum amount of impurity with which gas should be allowed to be charged, and by the Act the gas companies were directed to give to the referees all facilities for the performance of their duties. In the performance of their duties, the referees came to the conclusion that the best results would be obtained by adopting a new system of working the lime purifiers, so as to absorb a larger amount of carbonic acid gas than before:—Held, that this was not the proper subject of a patent. Ib.

4. Prior Publication or User.

2. Evidence of the use of an invention in England previous to the date of a patent for it in Scotland, is admissible and sufficient to make the patent void, et vice versâ. Brown v. Annandale, 8 Cl. & F. 437.

3. The defendant in a suit for an infringement of a patent, who relies upon the specification of an anterior patent as being in anticipation of the plaintiff's patent, and that the same result would be produced by a skilled workman in operating according to that specification, is bound to show conclusively that the invention protected by the anterior patent was used or capable of being used by the means designated by that specification. Betts v. De Vitre, 11 L. T., N. S., 445.

It is no ground of proof of the effect of an anterior patent, that scientific persons of the present day, with all the superior knowledge and intelligence obtained by the advance of science, can depose that now they could produce the same result by the process disclosed by the anterior patent as that designated by the subsequent one. Ib.

In a patent of 1804, the effect of rolling two metals together of equal or unequal thicknesses was to produce a metal of a particular character. By a patent of 1848 the same result was indicated as being capable of being produced by the forced adhesion of the same two metals of prescribed thicknesses by rolling:—Held, that the former invention was not an anticipation of the subsequent patent, which was held to be a valid patent. Ib.

4. A person to be entitled to a patent for an invention must be the first and true inventor, and there must not be any public use thereof by himself or others, prior to the grant of the patent. Housebill Coal Co. v. Neilson, 9 Cl. & F. 788.

Trials of an incomplete invention, by way of experiment, are not evidence of a prior use for the purpose of invalidating a patent. Prior use for this purpose means public use and exercise of the invention. Ib.

Evidence of the existence of a completed invention, once in public use, although abandoned or the use long discontinued but not altogether lost sight of, is sufficient to invalidate a patent which is subsequently granted for the same invention. Ib.

5. What previous user will invalidate, and what user, if any, can be admitted in contravention of the patent right, are different questions, depending one upon the extent of previous knowledge, the other upon the effect of the grant. Caldwell v. Vanvlissengen, 9 Hare 428; 16 Jur. 115; 21 L. J., Ch., 97.

6. Where a man, having conjectured a new method of effecting a desired object, takes out a patent for it, but never puts it in practical operation, that will not invalidate letters patent taken out for the same process by a subsequent inventor, who shall of himself discover the same method. Betts v. Menzies, 3 Jur., N. S., 357; 10. H. L. Ca. 117; 9 Jur., N. S., 29; 11 W. R. 1; 7 L. T., N. S., 110.

B. obtained, in 1849, letters patent for a mode of combining lead and tin for making capsule plates, by placing plates of each, of unequal thicknesses, in contact, and subjecting them to great pressure, by repeated rolling or otherwise, so as to effect great cohesion and tenuity. In 1856 W., having two processes by which he made capsules abroad, the first being the same as B.'s, and the second being commenced by dipping heated lead into melted tin, and then rolling out the plated block, which last W. affirmed to be the cheapest way, introduced some of such capsules into England with a view to effect sales thereof. B. immediately commenced proceedings in Chancery against the agent in England of W.; W. not assisting in the defence, a decree and injunction were taken by consent against the agent, who submitted when he found the defence thrown on him. In 1857, B. discovered that W. was again transmitting to this country capsules for sale. W. swore that they were all made according to his dipping process, but he did not state how he made sure of that fact, although it was sworn on the other side that no man could distinguish between the capsules made by the two processes. W. also alleged that he had, since October 1856, discovered that in 1804 a patent had been taken out for effecting cohesion by pressure; but it did not appear that that patent had ever been worked, or was capable of being worked, for it directed equal thicknesses of lead and tin to be rolled together, which B. alleged would not do, but they must be unequal:—Held, first, that the previous publication in 1804, as it did not appear to have been ever worked, and did not appear to be proper for working, did not invalidate B.'s patent, although it pointed out the mode of effecting cohesion by pressure. Ib.

Held, secondly, that even if there were great doubt as to the validity of B.'s patent, yet the long undisturbed enjoyment for eight years, and the conduct of W. in not trying the question when B. raised it in 1856, entitled him to an injunction until the validity of the patent could be tried at law. Ib.

Held, thirdly, semble, that W.'s second process was an infringement of B.'s patent; but that under the circumstances the injunction would be granted, although the question of the infringement required also to be sent to a jury. Ib.

1. A contractor for harbour works had in the progress of his undertaking invented an apparatus which greatly facilitated the works, but which could only be tested in a place accessible to the public. After having used the apparatus for four months in the progress of the work, he applied for a patent:—Held, that such user amounted to a dedication to the public, and that he was not entitled to a patent. Re Adamson's patent, 6 De G. M. & G. 420; 25 L. J., Ch., 456; 3 W. R. 473.

2. Publication of an invention in terms of mere generality, or not true to their full extent, will not invalidate a subsequent patent, the specification of which is limited and accurate, and gives a specific rule of practical application. Hills v. Evans, 4 De G. F. & J. 288; 31 L. J., Ch., 457; 8 Jur., N. S., 525; 6 L. T., N. S., 90.

Where something remains to be ascertained which is necessary for the useful application of the discovery, that affords sufficient room for another valid patent. Ib.

To support an allegation of want of novelty, whatever is essential to the practical working and real utility of the invention must be found substantially in the prior publication. Ib.

Prior knowledge to avoid a patent, must be knowledge equal to that required to be given by a patent; that is, such knowledge as will enable the public to perceive the very discovery, and to carry the invention into practical use. Ib.

A prior publication, to have that effect, must be one from which a person with ordinary knowledge would be able practically to apply the discovery without further experiment. Ib.

3. A prior publication will not invalidate a patent unless it has imparted information so as to enable any one working upon it to reckon with confidence on the result. Betts v. Neilson, 3 L. R., Ch., 429; 37 L. J., Ch., 321; 18 L. T., N. S., 165.

In order to establish the prior public use of a patented article so as to invalidate the patent, it is not necessary to show that the article had been manufactured for sale. Ib.

When the subject of a patent in England is made in a foreign country, and applied to the purpose for which it was made, and under these circumstances is sent to this country for transmission to another foreign country:—Held, that this is a sufficient user of the patent in England to constitute an infringement. Ib.

4. The public exhibition of a machine in which there are defects, owing to which it proves an entire failure, does not affect the validity of a subsequent patent for a machine, in which, though similar in some of its details to the former, the defects are remedied so as to produce a serviceable machine. Murray v. Clayton, 7 L. R., Ch., 570; 20 W. R. 649.

5. Although a party may believe himself to be the first and original inventor, yet he cannot shelter himself under wilful ignorance, but will be fixed not only with what he knew, but with that which he might have known had he made the inquiries which it was incumbent upon him to make. Re Honiball's Patent, 9 Moo. P. C. 378.

A first and original inventor means a person who could claim the merit of the first invention without reference to the user. Ib.

6. Upon the construction of a patent:—Held, that the antecedent existence of an invention, not shown to have been brought to any successful result, and which was so far similar, that if subsequent in date to the patent, it would have been held a colourable and clumsy imitation for the purpose of effecting the same result, did not invalidate the patent by anticipation. Daw v. Eley, 3 L. R., Eq., 496.

Held, also, that although the patent included matters some of which were new and some old, it might be upheld by limiting the claim to the particular combination in the particular manner described in the specification. Ib.

7. Where a provisional specification contained a description of an invention, part of which was omitted from the final specification:—Held, that the part omitted did not amount to prior publication of the invention so as to avoid for want of novelty a subsequent patent taken out for such omitted part. Stone v. Todd, 46 L. J., Ch., 32; 4 L. R., Ch. D., 58.

8. The district of Natal is a British colony with a separate government, under a governor appointed by the Crown; and a law has been passed by the legislative council of Natal, providing for the granting, in the colony, of patents for inventions:—Held, that the validity of letters patent under the great seal for license to use an invention in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Channel Islands, and the Isle of Man, would not be impeached by the fact, if proved, of prior use of the invention in Natal. Rolls v. Isaacs, 19 L. R., Ch. D., 268; 51 L. J., Ch., 170; 45 L. T. 704; 30 W. R. 243.

9. The discoverer of a new principle or idea as regards any art or manufacture who shows a mode of carrying it into practice, as by a machine, may patent the combination of principle and mode, although the idea or the machine would not alone be the proper subject of a patent. The description, in a specification, of a machine is sufficient, if it tells the maker and user, without requiring him to use an inventive faculty, how to make and use the machine, although parts of it, without which it would be unworkable, have been omitted from the specification. Although it is primâ facie evidence of want of utility that the patentee does not make and vend his machine, evidence of non-user and non-sale is not sufficient to prove want of utility, if immediately afterwards the patentee has improved upon his machine and made and vended the improved machine. Where want of novelty in a patented invention is set up, and the alleged anticipation is in writing alone—e.g., the specification of another person's prior patent, no existence of a prior machine being shown, the interpretation of the prior writing is for the Court, and it is not sufficient to establish want of novelty to show that, if a machine had been made by a person who had read that writing and such machine had been used, something in it would by user have been an anticipation; but it must be shown that a person conversant with such matters would, on reading the writing, find in such writing alone a reasonably clear description of the impeached invention. Otto v. Linford, 46 L. T. 35.

1. If an invention becomes (without fraud) known to the public, no subsequent patent can be granted for it. It is not necessary that it should have been used by the public, as well as known to the public. Patterson v. Gaslight and Coke Co., 3 L. R., App. Cas., 239; 47 L. J., Ch., 402; 26 W. R. 482; 38 L. T., N. S., 303. Affirming 2 L. R., Ch. D., 812; 35 L. T., N. S., 11; 45 L. J., Ch., 843.

Where a report, on a particular subject, is made to a public office, by referees specially appointed under an Act of Parliament to inquire into and report on such subject, the knowledge contained in that report being fully possessed by the referees, it must, from that moment, be treated as absolutely the property of the public and as being publicly known, although, in fact, the report was not formally published till some days afterwards. Ib.

If the knowledge thus obtained in the course of the discharge of his duty by one referee, was, by his communication of it to his colleagues, possessed by all the referees, the moment they became possessed of it, it became public property, and they had no power whatever to agree among themselves to treat its communication as confidential, nor would their doing so enable one of their number to take out a patent in regard to it. Ib.

The Board of Trade, under the City of London Gas Act 1868 (32 & 33 Vict., c. cxxv.), appointed three gas referees, whose duties were to inspect the works of the gas companies, with the view of ascertaining the means adopted therein for purifying gas, and to test the gas and prescribe the maximum of impurity to be allowed; the companies were required by the Act to give to the referees all facilities for the performance of their duties. The referees made experiments at the works of a gas company at Beckton, with a view to improvements in the purification of gas; and in January 1872 drew up a report thereon, which three months afterwards they submitted to the Board of Trade. Shortly before the report was submitted, one of the referees took out a patent for improvements, the principle of which had been indicated in the report:—Held, that the material processes claimed by the specification were shown to have been known to and used by the public before the date of the patent, and that, even if it had been otherwise, all the contents of the report were public property, so that there was no consideration for a patent. Ib.

Where Invention described in Books.] 2. A publication of a new discovery takes place when the inventor of it, either by himself or by his agent, having written a description of it in a book, and sent it to a bookseller, such book is offered or exposed for the purpose of sale. Lang v. Gisborne, 8 Jur., N. S., 736; 31 L. J., Ch., 769; 10 W. R. 368; 6 L. T., N. S., 771; 31 Beav. 133.

If the invention is first described in a foreign work published abroad, and sent over to a bookseller in England, and is offered by him for sale, this is a sufficient publication in this country. Ib.

3. An instrument, which was alleged to be an anticipation of an invention, patented in 1876, for improvements in electric telephony and telephonic apparatus, was described, in a paper written in German, in a scientific journal, called the Zeitschrift, of the German-Austrian Telegraph Union, which was published in Berlin in 1862. The description was illustrated by figures. A copy of the Zeitschrift was in the library of the Patent Office in London, and another copy was in the library of the Institute of Civil Engineers in London, where it was accessible to all the members, more than 3,000 in number, and to friends introduced by them. It was, however, entered in the catalogue only under the head of "Journals," not under the head of "Telephones" or "Telegraphs." A telegraphic engineer gave evidence that, before the date of the patent, he had seen the description in the Zeitschrift, and that, though he could not read German, yet, from his knowledge of the technical words used, he was able, with the assistance of the plates, to understand the substance of the invention:—Held, that there had been a sufficient publication in England of the prior invention before the date of the patent. But held, upon the facts, that the prior invention was not an anticipation of the patented invention. United Telephone Co. v. Harrison, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 720; 51 L. J., Ch., 705; 46 L. T. 620; 30 W. R. 724.

4. A man is the first and true inventor within the Statute of Monopolies, 21 Jac. 1, c. 3, if he is the first to introduce a foreign invention, or is the first to take out a patent in the case of contemporaneous inventions; or patents an invention previously invented, but not sufficiently disclosed. Plimpton v. Malcolmson, 45 L. J., Ch., 505; 3 L. R., Ch., 531; 34 L. T., N. S., 340.

To avoid a patent on the ground of prior publication, it is not enough that the invention has been published; it must have been made public to such an extent that a knowledge of it may be assumed among persons conversant with the subject. Ib.

When, therefore, the only substantial evidence of prior publication lay in the fact that a single copy of an American book had been presented to the Patent Office library, where it lay untouched in a private room:—Held, that there had been no prior publication. Ib.

A prior publication to avoid a patent must contain a description equivalent to a sufficient specification. Ib.

5. In order to invalidate a patent by prior book publication, it is not enough to show that the invention was described in a published book, but it must also appear that it became known to a sufficient part of the public. Plimpton v. Spiller, 6 L. R., Ch. D., 412; 37 L. T., N. S., 56; 47 L. J., Ch., 211; 26 W. R. 285. Affirming 34 L. T., N. S., 340.

On the 25th of August 1865, a patent for improvements in the construction of skates was granted to the agent of the inventor, resident at the time in America, to whom the patent was subsequently assigned. In 1863, an American book containing a brief description of the invention, not, however, accurate enough to enable persons to manufacture the skates, was sent to the library of the Patent Office in London. On the 20th of July 1865, an American book of illustrations, containing drawings of the invention, was sent to the same library. The latter book did not reach the head librarian, although it was received by a sub-librarian, as appeared from a pencil entry in the book made at the time. It was not entered in the donation book or the catalogue. Nothing was further known of it until 1866 or 1867, when it was seen by an assistant in the corridor (to which the public had access) leading to the public room of the library:—Held, that there was no prior publication in England. Ib.

Semble, that in an action on a patent, where such an issue has been raised, evidence of the existence of foreign specifications of an earlier date, preserved in and obtained from the Patent Office, might be admissible. Ib.

II. TO WHOM GRANTED.

1. Agents or Servants, 5540.
2. Alien Resident Abroad, 5540.
3. Importer of Invention from Abroad, 5540.
4. Co-owners, 5540.

1. Agents or Servants.

1. Semble, an agent in this country of an inventor abroad receiving a confidential communication of an invention, not in a practically useful state, may take out a patent for his own benefit, if he, pursuing the idea thus thrown out, discovers a practical way of carrying it into effect. Milligan v. Marsh, 2 Jur., N. S., 1083. See Steedman v. Marsh, 2 Jur., N. S., 391.

Where a patent is taken out as for an original invention, the subject of the patent being in fact a communication from a British subject resident abroad, the patent is void. Ib.

T., a British subject resident abroad, having conceived an improvement in making pianos, gave to the son of his London agent, who happened to be on a visit at T.'s house, a full description and drawings of the invention, marked "private," and requested the son, on his return to London, to take out letters patent or to register the invention for him, T. The son returned to London, and delivered the drawings to his father, M., being T.'s London agent. T. about the same time wrote a letter to M., not marked private, and not desiring him to take out a patent on behalf of the writer, but inquiring generally as to the invention, and whether a patent for it was being taken out. Shortly afterwards M. took out a patent for the improvement in question in his own name, and as for an invention of his own. Then, T. having employed S. to make such pianos on his own account, M. brought an action for the infringement of his patent against S. Thereupon T. filed a bill to restrain the action, and the use of the patent by M. M. insisted that the invention, as described in T.'s commmunication, would not work:—Held, on motion for an injunction, that the whole question must stand over to await the result of the action. Ib.

2. Where a master and his foreman both invented certain improvements, for which the master sought letters patent:—Held, that they ought only to be granted on the terms of their being vested in trustees for the master and the foreman. Re Russell, 2 De G. M. & G. 130.

In this case the petitioner's specification consisted of three parts, and the objector only claimed to have been the true inventor of two parts, but he insisted that the third was worthless:—Held, that the whole patent should be in trust for both, as if it had been granted to both. Though no steps had been taken by the objector before the Attorney-General, and his own specification was not in evidence, on its production by an officer from the patent office the Lord Chancellor took judicial notice of it and informed himself of its contents. S. C. 6 W. R. 95.

3. When a servant filed a provisional specification for an invention, after which the master filed a provisional specification for a similar invention, and subsequently filed a complete specification and obtained letters patent:—Held, that the great seal might be affixed to the letters patent for the servant's invention, and that the letters patent might bear the date of his provisional specification. Exp. Scott and Young, 6 L. R., Ch., 274; 19 W. R. 425.

2. Alien Resident Abroad.

4. Letters patent may be granted to an alien resident abroad for an invention communicated to him by another alien also resident abroad. Re Worth's Patent, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 303; 28 W. R. 329.

3. Importer of Invention from Abroad.

5. An importer of an invention from abroad is an inventor within 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83. Re Claridge's patent, 7 Moo. P. C. 394. And see Steedman v. Marsh, 2 Jur., N. S., 391.

6. Consideration of the course to be taken by the Court in a suit respecting a patent, where the plaintiff alleged himself to be the inventor when abroad, and to have communicated the invention confidentially to the defendant, who thereupon fraudulently took out a patent in his own name. Milligan v. Marsh, 2 Jur., N. S., 1083.

7. A man is the first and true inventor within the Statute of Monopolies, 21 Jac. 1, c. 3, if he is the first to introduce a foreign invention. Plimpton v. Malcolmson, 45 L. J., Ch., 505; 3 L. R., Ch. D., 531; 34 L. T., N. S., 340.

8. Semble, the grantee of a patent for an invention communicated to him by a foreigner resident abroad is only bound to tell the public all that he himself knows, yet, if the original inventor has not told him enough to enable him so to describe the invention as that it can be constructed by the aid only of the specification, the patent will be invalid. Wegmann v. Corcoran, 13 L. R., Ch., 65; 28 W. R. 331; 41 L. T., 358.

4. Co-owners.

9. Where letters patent are granted to two or more persons, any one of them may use the invention for his own benefit without the consent of the others. Mathers v. Green, 11 Jur., N. S., 845; 35 L. J., Ch., 1; 14 W. R. 17; 13 L. T., N. S., 420.

The inability of one of several joint-patentees profitably to use the invention without the consent of his co-patentees, as owners of a prior patent, does not entitle him to share with his co-patentees in the profits made by them from the use of the patent, there being no principle of law, in the absence of contract, to prevent any person not prohibited by statute from using any invention whatever, and no implied contract, where several persons jointly obtain letters patent, that no one of them shall use the invention without the consent of the others, or that he shall use it for their joint benefit. Ib.

A joint owner of a patent is not entitled to work the patent on his own account, but is subject to render an account of profits to his co-owner. Mode of taking the account in the case of a double patent. Re Russell's Patent (2 De G. & J. 130) distinguished. S. C. 5 N. R. 358.

1. Where a patent is vested in trustees upon trust for several tenants in common or joint tenants, quære, whether any one of them is at liberty to work the patent on his own account. Hancock v. Bewley, 1 Johns. 601.

2. Semble, that joint owners of a patent are answerable for losses occasioned by their co-adventurers only to the extent of their respective shares. Lorell v. Hicks, 2 Y. & Coll. 481; 6 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 85; 5 id. 101.

See also VII. XI. 1 post.—IV. 2 infra.

III. SEALING AND OPPOSITION THERETO.

1. In General, 5541.
2. Costs, 5543.

1. In General.

3. The Court refused to seal a patent for representing Italian operas, because the provisions for carrying it on were by agreement with the Lord Chamberlain, his executors, and administrators, and the right to the patent was not sufficiently connected with the property in the house. Not sufficient for the party applying merely to answer objections, but he must lay a proper case. Upon such application, the Court will take care that the King is not deceived, or his object disappointed, and will represent the whole to the King, but will not decide upon the merits of the various claimants. Essential to the complaint of an old market against a new one set up near it, that the old is competent to the accommodation of the public; so here the old proprietors must be able to keep it up properly; the accommodation of the public being the principal thing. Exp. O'Reilly, 1 Ves. J. 112.

4. The Solicitor-General having overruled objections to an application for letters patent under the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 83, and having issued his warrant to seal, to which also objections were lodged, a petition was presented to the Lord Chancellor to affix the great seal and extend the time for filing the specification. Order made without a second reference, on the ground that such a primâ facie case was made out as entitled the petitioners to be placed in a position to litigate the validity of their patent with the public. Re Simpson and Isaacs, 1 W. R. 259.

5. On a petition for the sealing of a patent, the Lord Chancellor, with the consent of the petitioner and the opposing party, adjourned the petition for the opinion of the Assistant Commissioner in the Patent Office, upon the point whether the specification was an infringement of a patent already granted. Re Stoll's patent, 1 W. R. 472, 483.

6. Where the sealing of letters patent has been delayed by the entering of a caveat, the Lord Chancellor has a discretion to extend the time beyond one month from the expiration of the six months of provisional protection. Re Tillie and Anderson's patent, 2 W. R. 182.

7. Where there was but one affidavit distinctly swearing to the public use and sale of an alleged invention prior to the date of the application for a patent, the great seal was ordered to be affixed to the patent. Re Tolhausen's patent, 14 W. R. 551.

8. The time within which the application for the warrant and for the letters patent ought to be made under the rules of the patent commissioners extended, where the delay was small and accidental. Re Hersee, 1 L. R., Ch., 518; 14 L. T., N. S., 842.

9. A person may give notice of objection, and oppose the sealing of a patent before the Lord Chancellor, without previously applying to the Court for leave to enter opposition. Re Vincent's patent, 2 L. R., Ch., 341; 15 W. R. 524.

The Lord Chancellor, on an application for sealing a patent, will not interfere with the decision of the law officer of the Crown, unless in a case of fraud, or of surprise, or of some material fact having come to the knowledge of the party since the case was before the law officer. Ib.

The sealing of a patent was opposed on the ground of previous public user of the invention, in reply to which the applicant made the case, that such user was obtained by fraud on him, so as to bring the case within 15 & 16 Vict., c. 83, s. 10:—Held, that such a case ought to be tried before a jury, and that the patent ought to be sealed that such trial might not be precluded. Ib.

10. A party who has not opposed the sealing of a patent before the law officer of the Crown under 15 & 16 Vict., c. 83, s. 12, will not be allowed to oppose before the Lord Chancellor. Re Mitchell's patent, 2 L. R., Ch., 343.

11. When the sealing of a patent is objected to, on the ground that the invention is a colourable imitation of one which is the subject of an existing patent, a reference will be made to the law officer whether, having regard to the prior patent, the seal ought to be fixed to the patent as applied for. Exp. Yates, 5 L. R., Ch., 1; 18 W. R. 1.

And the law officer having certified against the patent, the petition was dismissed with costs, notwithstanding no opposition had been made to the petitioner's application for a patent until he had applied to have it sealed, and he had given all the requisite notices. S. C. 18 W. R. 153.

1. When the sealing of a patent is opposed on the ground that the invention is similar to one which is the subject of an existing patent, a reference will be made to the law officer whether, having regard to the prior patent, the seal ought to be affixed to the patent as applied for; the opponent paying the costs of the hearing, unless there has been fraud on the part of the applicant. Exp. Manceaux, 5 L. R., Ch., 518; 18 W. R. 854.

2. Letters patent will not be sealed where a prior patent has been granted for the same invention. Re Manceaux's patent, 18 W. R. 1184.

3. Unless a patent is clearly bad, the Lord Chancellor will not refuse to seal it, as the effect of such refusal, if erroneous, would be irremediable, whereas the sealing of a bad patent leaves every one at liberty to dispute it. Re Spence, 3 De G. & J. 523.

4. B. lodged his provisional specification on the 31st March, and C. on the 3rd April. B. on the 21st May gave notice to proceed. C., on the 22nd May, had the great seal affixed to his patent, and on the 29th lodged a caveat against B. B., having neither lodged a caveat against C. nor opposed him before the law officer, took no step to have his patent sealed till the 27th September:—Held, that B. was in time to have his patent sealed, but it would be dated subsequently to C.'s patent, there being reasonable ground for supposing that B.'s patent comprehended some of the objects contained in C.'s patent. Re Bailey's patent, 21 W. R. 31; 27 L. T., N. S., 430; 8 L. R., Ch., 60; 42 L. J., Ch., 264.

Held, also, that it would make no difference in this respect if C. had been guilty of fraud, as B. ought to have proceeded on that ground before the law officer, and his proper remedy would be to get the letters patent annulled by a scire facias. Ib.

5. Where it appeared that a master and his foreman had both invented certain improvements for which the master sought letters patent:—Held, that they ought only to be granted on the terms of their being vested in trustees for the master and the foreman. Re Russell, 2 De G. M. & G. 130; 6 W. R. 95.

In general, when there is a doubt as to the validity of the grounds of opposition to a patent, the proper course is to grant the letters patent, as an error in refusing them would be irremediable, while one in granting them would not. Ib.

6. In opposing the grant of letters patent, the burden is on the opponent to show that the grant would be clearly wrong. Exp. Sheffield, 8 L. R., Ch., 237; 42 L. J., Ch., 356; 21 W. R. 233.

When the facts on which the opponent relies were within his knowledge when he opposed before the law officer, he cannot when before the Lord Chancellor raise a new legal argument on these facts; nor can he then bring forward evidence which he might have brought before the law officer. Ib.

7. Where a person objecting to the grant of letters patent for an invention had not seen any notice of the application for the letters patent till after the sealing of the warrant for sealing them:—Held, that notwithstanding delay he was entitled to oppose before the Lord Chancellor, and the matter was referred back to the Attorney-General. Re Brennard's or Brennaud's patent, 3 De G. F. & J. 695; 7 Jur., N. S., 690; 4 L. T., N. S., 456.

8. No caveat against the sealing of letters patent can in future be entered without the express leave of the Lord Chancellor. Re Heathorn's patent, 10 Jur., N. S., 810; 12 W. R. 1068; 10 L. T., N. S., 802; 4 N. R. 489.

9. Where a petition to have the great seal affixed to a patent had been filed, and the respondents served with notice two months before the first day of Michaelmas term, for which day the petition was answered, and the respondents only filed affidavits on the morning of that day:—Held, that they could not be read, and the patent was ordered to be sealed. Re M'Kean's patent, 1 De G. F. & J. 2; 8 W. R. 1; 1 L. T., N. S., 19.

10. Where the granting of a patent was opposed by the owner of a similar patent on the ground that the application was, under the circumstances, a breach of good faith on the part of the applicant, the Lord Chancellor directed the patent to issue upon certain terms. Re Daine's patent, 26 L. J., Ch., 298; 4 W. R. 455.

11. Letters patent were sealed in a case where the evidence showed great similarity between the alleged invention and one for which a patent was already in force. Re Tolson's patent, 6 De G. M. & G. 422; 4 W. R. 518.

12. Sealing letters patent after time for provisional protection had expired under 15 & 16 Vict., c. 83, ss. 19, 20. Re Mackintosh's patent, 2 Jur., N. S., 1242; 2 W. R. 194.

13. The Crown can at any time before the great seal is affixed, upon a proper case being made out, countermand the warrant. Re Schlumberger, 9 Moo. P. C. 1. S. C. nom. Re Shlumberger, 2 Eq. Rep. 36.

14. L. & W. were joint patentees of an invention for propelling vessels, and whilst engaged in making experiments with regard to it, an accident happened, which appeared to have suggested to each an improvement upon the method previously adopted. They communicated their ideas to each other, but neither took any steps to secure the benefit of the invention for two years, when L. applied for a patent, against the sealing of which W. entered a caveat, on the ground that he (W.) was the first inventor. The evidence on this point being conflicting:—Held, that L. having first applied, was entitled to have his patent sealed, though possibly W. might be able to get it repealed upon a scire facias. Re Lowe's patent, 25 L. J., Ch., 454; 4 W. R. 429.

15. Where a caveat was lodged before the great seal was affixed to a patent, the Lord Chancellor declined to enter into the merits of the opposition, but referred the matter back to the Attorney-General. Re Fawcett's patent, 2 De G. M. & G. 439.

16. On an application to the Lord Chancellor to withhold the great seal from a patent, he will only consider whether it is legal or not, and not whether the Crown ought or ought not to grant it. Exp. Daly, Vern. & Scriv. 499.

There are three stages in which a patent may be opposed: 1. While it is under the consideration of His Majesty; 2. When it coms to the privy seal; and 3. When it comes the great seal. Ib.

1. When a servant filed a provisional specification for an invention, after which the master filed a provisional specification for a similar invention, and subsequently filed a complete specification and obtained letters patent:—Held, that the great seal might be affixed to the letters patent for the servant's invention, and that the letters patent might bear the date of his provisional specification. Exp. Scott and Young, 6 L. R., Ch., 274; 19 W. R. 425.

2. When, upon the hearing of several applications for letters patent by rival inventors before the law officer of the Crown, the evidence is conflicting, it is the duty of the law officer himself to decide upon it, and not by issuing his warrant for the sealing of both patents, to leave the matter to be contested before the Lord Chancellor. Re Henry, and Re Farquharson, 42 L. J., Ch., 363; 8 L. R., Ch., 167; 21 W. R. 233.

The 15 & 16 Vict., c. 83, s. 9, giving to an applicant for a patent, who has filed his complete specification in the first instance, protection for six months, with the like powers, rights, and privileges, as might have been conferred upon him by letters patent duly sealed, has not the effect of giving him priority over a rival inventor who has made earlier application, so as to prevent the latter from having his patent sealed during that period. Ib.

3. Applications were made for two patents for inventions alleged to be similar. The second applicant obtained a patent. The first applicant then presented a petition to have the great seal affixed to letters patent for his invention, alleging that his delay had been caused by the representations of the second applicant, and also that the inventions were not similar. The Lord Chancellor examined the provisional specification of the first applicant, and the complete specification of the second applicant, and finding no substantial similarity between the inventions, directed the letters patent of the first applicant to be sealed. Re Harrison, 9 L. R., Ch., 631.

4. When rival applicants had applied on the same day for patents, and had afterwards mutually agreed to withdraw opposition, letters patent bearing date the day of application were granted to one applicant, although letters patent bearing that date had a'ready been granted to the other. Re Gething, 9 L. R., Ch., 633.

On the hearing before the Lord Chancellor of a petition for the great seal to be affixed to letters patent, witnesses may be examined viva voce. Ib.

5. Upon the hearing of a petition that the great seal may be affixed to letters patent, the Lord Chancellor will not give effect to an objection going to a matter of form, such as an objection to the jurat of a declaration. Re Wirth's patent, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 303.

W. was an alien resident abroad. He acted as the agent of M. & Co., and applied for letters patent in England for an invention of the latter. He made the usual statutory declaration, which was filed with his petition. In it W. was described as an alien resident abroad, and it was declared before H. B. M. consul at Frankfort:—Objection founded on these facts overruled. Ib.

6. The word "caveat" in the 20th section of the Patent Law Amendment Act means anything in the nature of an opposition at any stage, and is not confined to opposition before the Lord Chancellor. Re Somerset and Walker's patent, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 397; 42 L. T. 635; 28 W. R. 709. See also Re Johnson's patent, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 398. n.; 28 W. R. 709. n.

There is jurisdiction to seal a patent notwithstanding that application for the seal may not have been made within the period of provisional protection and one month further, provided the delay has been caused by opposition. Ib.

The Lord Chancellor has power, in such a case, to extend the time for filing the final specification beyond one month after the expiration of the term of provisional protection. Ib.

7. The Crown will in some cases, after granting one patent, grant a second patent for a similar invention. Re Dering's patent, 13 L. R., Ch. D., 393; 42 L. T. 634; 28 W. R. 710.

D. and R. independently applied, on the 29th of April 1879, for letters patent for inventions, which were, for the purpose of the decision, taken to be similar. R.'s letters patent were sealed on the 25th of July 1879, and on the 5th of August 1879 he entered an opposition to the sealing of D.'s letters patent. There was no suggestion of fraud:—Held, that D.'s letters patent ought to be sealed and be dated as of the day of application, which was also the date of R.'s letters patent. Ib.

8. Terms upon which a compromise as to a right to a patent will be allowed. Re Brandies' patent, 1 Eq. Rep. 121.

2. Costs.

9. Notice of objections was filed to sealing of letters patent, and afterwards withdrawn. On petition, the costs occasioned by such objections were ordered to be paid by the person who had filed them. Re Cobley's patent, 8 Jur., N. S., 106; 31 L. J., Ch., 333; 5 L. T., N. S., 387.

10. No costs where the caveat was not unreasonable. Exp. Fox, 1 Ves. & B. 67.

Patent granted for an improved steam-engine, as not infringing upon an existing patent. If the improvements could not be used without the engine, for which a patent had been granted, they must wait the expiration of that patent. Ib.

11. No costs when questions fairly raised on a caveat. Stains v. Morris, 1 Ves. & B. 8.

12. A party, who had lodged an unsuccessful caveat against the granting of a patent, ordered to pay to the patentee the taxed costs occasioned by the caveat. Semble, such costs will be taxed upon the principle upon which costs in a cause are taxed as between party and party. Re Cutler's patent, 4 Myl. & C. 510; 3 Jur. 693.

13. The sealing of letters patent having been prevented by the filing of objections which were subsequently withdrawn by the objector, the objector was ordered to pay the costs. Re Ashenhurst's patent, 2 W. R. 3.

14. Where a caveat had been lodged against the sealing of a patent, and the intended patentee had been compelled to present a petition to the Lord Chancellor, praying that the patent might be forthwith sealed, which was unsuccessfully opposed by the party who had lodged the caveat, it was held, that his lordship had only jurisdiction to give to the petitioner the costs, and not the costs, charges, and expenses, of and occasioned by such caveat and opposition to the petition. Re Coates's patent, 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 248.

1. When the sealing of a patent is objected to, on the ground that the invention is a colourable imitation of one which is the subject of an existing patent, a reference will be made to the law officer whether, having regard to the prior patent, the seal ought to be fixed to the patent as applied for. Exp. Yates, 5 L. R., Ch., 1; 18 W. R. 1.

And the law officer having certified against the patent, the petition was dismissed with costs, notwithstanding no opposition had been made to the petitioner's application for a patent until he had applied to have it sealed, and he had given all the requisite notices. S. C. 18 W. R. 153.

IV. REGISTER OF PROPRIETORSHIP.

1. Jurisdiction of Court, 5544.
2. Expunging Entries, 5544.

1. Jurisdiction of Court.

2. The jurisdiction over the register of patent proprietors which was conferred on the Master of the Rolls by 15 & 16 Vict., c. 83, s. 38, is assigned to the High Court of Justice by s. 16, sub-s. 1, and is not retained by the Master of the Rolls under s. 17, sub-s. 6, of the Judicature Act 1873. Re Morgan's patent, 24 W. R. 245.

3. There is no right of appeal against an order made by the Master of the Rolls to expunge an entry in the register. Re Horsley and Knighton's patent, 4 L. R., Ch., 784; 17 W. R. 1000.

2. Expunging Entries.

4. A patentee, in 1853, assigned his patent, but the assignees omitted to register it. Afterwards, in August 1855, the patentee assigned the patent to another person, who registered it on the same day. The first assignees registered their assignment a week afterwards. The Court, in 1857, on the motion of the first assignees, ordered the register of the second assignment to be expunged, and with costs. Re Green's patent, 24 Beav. 145.

5. As to the jurisdiction of the Court to expunge, vacate, and vary "entries on the register of proprietors" of patents, under the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 83, s. 38. Re Morey, 25 Beav. 581; 6 W. R. 612.

The Court can, on motion, expunge an entry fraudulently made; it can direct any facts relating to the proprietorship to be inserted on the register, but not the legal inferences to be drawn from them. Ib.

A patentee assigned half a patent to A., and afterwards he assigned the whole to B. by a deed, reciting that he had already granted a licence to work and use to A. B.'s assignment was first registered:—Held, that B. had constructive notice of A.'s rights, and an entry was ordered to be made in the register that the licence referred to in B.'s assignment was the deed of assignment to A. subsequently entered. Ib.

6. The Court will, on the motion of the persons aggrieved, correct an entry in the register of proprietors of patents which purports to affect the rights of persons not parties to the deed registered. Re Horsley and Knighton's patent, 39 L. J., Ch., 157; 8 L. R., Eq., 475; 17 W. R. 1054; 21 L. T., N. S., 345.

One of two joint patentees by deed assigned his interest in the patent to a third person, and released to him all the rights of action against him of both the patentees; and the deed was set out completely on the register:—Held, that the other joint patentee was entitled to have the entry struck out. Ib.

V. STAMP DUTY.

7. Letters patent, dated the 26th of February 1855, were, under the 16 & 17 Vict., c. 5, s. 2, to cease at the expiration of three years from the date thereof, unless there was paid before the expiration of the three years an additional stamp duty of 50*l*. This stamp duty was paid on the 26th of February 1858:—Held, that the payment had been made within the time, and that the patent was subsisting. Williams v. Nash, 28 Beav. 93; 5 Jur., N. S., 696; 28 L. J., Ch., 886.

VI. FOREIGN (15 & 16 Vict., c. 83, s. 25).

See also III. IV. post.

8. An inventor took out a patent in France, and subsequently an English patent, the subject matter of which was wholly included in the French patent. He afterwards allowed the French patent to drop, by default in paying the annual dues required by the French law to keep it alive; and accordingly this patent was, by the judgment of a French Court, given on the 22nd of February 1864, declared void as from the 6th of February 1864. In March 1865, a bill was filed by an assignee of the English patent to restrain the defendant from infringing it; and in January 1866, a decree was made establishing the patent and awarding an injunction. On motion, in 1867, to commit the defendant for breach of this injunction:—Held, first, that, under 15 & 16 Vict., c. 83, s. 25, the patent, and with it the injunction, had now expired. Daw v. Eley, 36 L. J., Ch., 482; 3 L. R., Eq., 496; 15 L. T., N. S., 559.

Held, secondly, that although the French patent was declared void as from a date anterior to the decree, yet the defendant was not estopped by the decree from raising this defence on the motion. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the judgment of the French Court, given in the presence of the inventor, was binding on his assignee. Ib.

The 15 & 16 Vict., c. 83, s. 25, applies where a foreign patent is de facto granted, though it is afterwards cancelled ab initio. Ib.

1. By the Patent Law Amendment Act (15 & 16 Vict., c. 83, s. 25) it is enacted that where foreign letters patent are granted for a foreign invention before the grant of a patent for such invention in the United Kingdom, the rights under the English patent shall cease on the determination of the foreign patent. An English patent for a foreign invention was dated the 17th of September, but sealed on the 17th of December, and between the two dates a foreign patent was granted:—Held, that the patent must be taken to have been granted on the 17th of September, and therefore that s. 25 was not applicable. Holste v. Robertson, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 9; 46 L. J., Ch., 1; 35 L. T., N. S., 457. Affirming 24 W. R. 1064.

VII. SCOTCH.

2. It is essential to the validity of a Scotch patent, that the invention or improvement for which it is granted should be made in England as well as in Scotland. Accordingly, evidence of the use of an invention in England previous to the date of a patent for it in Scotland is admissible, and sufficient to make the patent void, et vice versâ. Brown v. Annandale, 8 Cl. & F. 437.

3. The use of an invention in England prior to the date of letters patent granted for Scotland will invalidate the Scotch patent; and the judicial committee accordingly refused to confirm a Scotch patent, the invention being used in England before the date of the Scotch patent. Re Robinson's patent, 5 Moo. P. C. 65.

VIII. RIGHT OF USER BY THE CROWN.

See also III. 1. post.

4. A grant of letters patent to a subject for an invention, does not exclude the crown from using the invention without a licence of the patentee. Feathers v Reg., 12 L. T., N. S., 114.

The Crown is not responsible, by way of petition of right, for an infringement of a patent by the Lords of the Admiralty, but the remedy is by action against the wrong-doers. Ib.

5. New letters patent may be subject to the condition which has become now a usual one in cases of inventions which are likely to be required for use by the Government, that the Government and its contractors should be entitled to use the invention. Re Napier's patent, 6 L. R., App. Cas., 174; 50 L. J., P. C., 40; 29 W. R. 745.

6. The patentee of a patent for improvements in the manufacture of firearms had received large sums of money from Government for the expenses of experiments, and by way of bounty and reward, but from the nature of the patent had not, in the opinion of the Judicial Committee, received sufficient remuneration for his invention, and in granting an extension the committee refused to impose a condition in the new grant that the Crown should be at liberty to use the invention for the public service without licence from the patentee. Re Lancaster's patent, 2 Moo. P. C., N. S., 189.

7. The Crown has the right to the use of a patented process or invention without compensation to the patentee. Dixon v. London Small Arms Co., 1 L. R., App. Cas., 632; 46 L. J., Q. B., 617; 35 L. T. 559; 25 W. R. 142. Reversing 1 L. R., Q. B. D., 384; 35 L. T. 559; 24 W. R. 766; and affirming 10 L. R., Q. B., 130; 44 L. J., Q. B., 63; 31 L. T. 830; 23 W. R. 317.

This right of the Crown is not because the Crown is impliedly excepted from the effect of letters patent, but because the privilege thereby granted is granted against the subjects only, and not against the Crown. Ib.

A patent was granted for an improvement in the manufacture of firearms. The secretary at war issued a notice for a tender for the supply of 13,875 rifles of the description known as that patented. The price was settled, minus the cost of the steel barrels and the stocks, which the War Office was to supply. The rifles were to be delivered within a certain time, the manufacture of them might be inspected at any time, and they might be rejected by officers at the War Office, if not made according to pattern, or not delivered in time. The persons who took the contract employed the patented process in the formation and insertion of the lock:—Held, that they were liable to the patentee for an infringement of the patent, for that they were not servants or agents of the Crown doing the work of the Crown, but were private contractors with the Crown to supply a certain manufactured article, and were therefore not protected in what they did by any particular privilege attaching to the Crown. Ib.

8. In all cases where the utility of a patent has not been tested by actual employment the question to be considered is, whether the evidence is sufficient to rebut the presumption arising from its non-use that the invention is one of no practical utility. Application for a prolongation of the term granted after strong and unanswered evidence of utility, though the patent had not been used in England during the whole of the term. On grounds of public policy the condition was annexed that the Government and all contractors employed by the Government should be at liberty to use the invention. Re Hughes' patent, 4 L. R., App. Cas., 174; 27 W. R. 493. And see Re Pettit Smith's patent, 7 Moo. P. C. 133.

9. The Crown has always exercised a control over the trade of the country; and though restrained by the common law and the Statute of Monopolies (21 Jac. 1, c. 3), within reasonable limits the Crown might grant the exclusive right to trade with a new invention for a reasonable period. The 21 Jac. 1, c. 3 did not create but controlled the power of the Crown in granting to the first inventors the privilege of the sole working and making of new manufactures. Caldwell v. Vanvlissengen, 9 Hare 415; 16 Jur. 115; 21 L. J., Ch., 97.

IX. PROOF OF.

10. The grant of letters patent by a foreign country (being an act done by the governing body in a matter which is to affect the public interests, restraining them for the present, and giving a particular individual specific rights, but throwing open and protecting the public rights after the expiration of a certain term) is an act of state within 14 & 15 Vict., c. 99, s. 7, and is therefore provable by a copy of the letters patent, purporting to be sealed with the seal of such foreign state, without proof of the seal or signature, or judicial character of the person signing the same. Re Bett's patent, 1 Moo. P. C. 49; 9 Jur., N. S., 137; 11 W. R. 221; 7 L. T., N. S., 577.

I. PROVISIONAL.

1. The difference between the provisional and complete specifications of a patent considered. Foxwell v. Bostock, 3 N. R. 546.

2. A provisional specification, if allowed by the law officer of the Crown, cannot be impeached as being too general. Penn v. Bibby, 2 L. R., Ch., 127; 36 L. J., Ch., 455; 15 W. R. 208; 15 L. T., N. S., 399.

3. The existence of a prior provisional specification is not a ground on which the Attorney-General ought to refuse to allow a second provisional specification by another inventor to be filed; and in the event of the latter applicant for provisional protection being the first to obtain a grant of letters patent, his patent is a bar to the grant of letters patent for the same invention to the earlier applicant for such provisional protection. Re Bates and Redgate, 38 L. J., Ch., 501; 4 L. R., Ch., 577; 17 W. R. 900; 21 L. T., N. S., 410.

4. An application under s. 2 of the 16 & 17 Vict., c. 115, for the inspection of the provisional specification of letters patent, on the ground that the subject matter was the same as that for which the applicant had obtained letters patent, was refused. Re Tolson's patent, 4 De G. M. & G. 422; 4 W. R. 518.

5. A provisional specification is not, in general, intended to give a complete description of an invention to the public, but only to protect the inventor until the description is perfected in the final specification. Stoner v. Todd, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 58; 46 L. J., Ch., 32; 35 L. T., N. S., 661; 25 W. R. 38.

The omission from a final specification of part of the provisional specification is notice that the omitted part has been abandoned by the inventor, and any one is at liberty to work up, and may obtain a valid patent for, an invention sketched out in the abandoned part. Ib.

II. VARIANCE BETWEEN PROVISIONAL AND COMPLETE SPECIFICATION.

6. Semble, that on an issue, whether the specification did "particularly describe and ascertain the nature of the invention," the question of variation between the provisional and complete specification may be gone into. Penn v. Jack, Penn v. Bibby, 15 W. R. 208; 15 L. T., N. S., 399; 2 L. R., Ch., 127; 36 L. J., Ch., 455.

After the law officer of the Crown has allowed a provisional specification, it is no longer open to objection on the ground of mere generality, although a departure in the complete specification from the description in the provisional one will invalidate the patent. Ib.

The complete specification must not claim anything different from that which is included in the provisional specification, but need not extend to everything so included. Ib.

The provisional specification of a patent for an improvement in the bearings and bushes for the shafts of screw and submerged propellers described the invention as consisting in employing wood in the construction of such bearings and bushes. The complete specification, after describing the mode in which the wood was to be used, claimed the employing of wood in the construction of bearings and bushes "as therein described":—Held, this was no such variation between the provisional and complete specification as invalidated the patent. Ib.

7. In a patent for improvements in preserving animal substances the provisional specification described the nature of the invention as a mixture of a solution of gelatine with a solution of bisulphite of lime with which the substance to be preserved was to be washed. In the complete specification the solution of bisulphite of lime was described as solution No. 1, and solutions Nos. 2, 3, and 4 were described as being formed by a mixture of solution No. 1 with various other component parts; and the patentee claimed the use of solution No. 1 for preserving animal substances (without describing any separate use to be made of it), and the use of solutions Nos. 2, 3, and 4 for the preservation of particular substances in the manner more particularly described. A. made use of bisulphite of lime for the purpose of preserving meat:—Held, that A. had not infringed the patent, since the complete specification, if large enough to cover the use of bisulphite of lime, as adopted by A., would disclose an invention larger than and different from that contained in the provisional specification, and would be bad for want of a sufficient description of that process. Bailey v. Roberton, 3 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 1055; 27 W. R. 17; 38 L. T. 854.

8. A patent held void on the ground that the nature of part of the invention described in and claimed by the complete specification, had not been sufficiently described in the provisional specification. United Telephone Co. v. Harrison, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 720; 51 L. J., Ch., 705; 46 L. T. 620; 30 W. R. 724.

III. CONSTRUCTION AND INTERPRETATION.

1. The words used in a patent must be construed, like the words of any other instrument, in their natural sense, according to the general purpose of the instrument in which they are found. Clarke v. Adie (No. 2), 2 L. R., App. Cas., 423; 37 L. T., N. S., 1; 25 W. R. 45; 47 L. J., Ch., 598.

In this case the word "parallel" was construed in its popular and not its purely mathematical sense, Ib.

A. obtained a patent for improvements in horse-clipping machines, and granted to C. a licence to manufacture machines in accordance with the patent. The improvement described in the specification comprised, among other items, the parallelism of the teeth of the comb, and the addition of an extra comb-plate when required so as to regulate the length to which the hair might be clipped. C. manufactured clippers not having parallel teeth nor an extra comb-plate, but, in other respects, similar to those patented by A., and resisted payment of the royalties under the licence in respect of these clippers, on the ground that the remaining items were old, and that the specification must be so construed as to exclude these items from the claim. As evidence in support of this intention, it was sought on behalf of C. to produce prior specifications of English and American inventions:—Held, that upon the natural construction of the specification it included a claim, not only in respect of the parallel teeth and extra comb-plate, but also in respect of the other items, and that C. was not entitled to contest the validity of the patent so as to excuse him from payment of royalty under the licence. Ib.

In the case of a patent for improvements prior specifications relating to similar machines are admissible in evidence to show the state of the manufacture at the time when the patent was granted, but not to show that the language of the specification is to be taken in other than its natural meaning. Ib.

2. Although the construction of a specification belongs to the Court, the explanation of the words used therein, or of technical terms of art, is matter of fact upon which it is the province of a jury to decide. Hills v. Evans, 8 Jur., N. S., 525; 31 L. J., Ch., 457; 6 L. T., N. S., 90; 4 De G. F. & J. 288.

In the comparison of two specifications, each of which is filled with terms of art, and with the description of technical processes, it is the duty of the Court to give the legal construction. Ib.

The question of the identity of two specifications, for the purpose of deciding as to the novelty of an invention, is one of fact, to be left to the jury. Ib.

A specification of a patent does not differ from any other publication of an invention for the purpose of invalidating a subsequent patent for the want of novelty. Ib.

3. The drawing is part of the specification. Poupard v. Fardell, 18 W. R. 127.

4. The construction of two specifications, alleged to be on the same subject, is not a pure question of law. Even if there is identity of language in the specifications, yet, if there are terms of art in one and also terms of art in the other, it is impossible to predicate of the two with certainty that they describe the same identical external object, unless it is ascertained that the terms of art used in the one have precisely the same signification and denote the same external objects at the date of the one specification as they do at the date of the other. Therefore evidence is required on these points. Betts v. Menzies, 10 H. L. Ca. 117; 9 Jur., N. S., 29. And see Patent Type Founding Co. v. Richard, 6 Jur., N. S., 239; 31 L. J., Q. B., 233; 11 W. R. 1; 7 L. T., N. S., 110.

5. The rules governing the construction of specifications are the ordinary rules for the interpretation of written instruments; but, unless a specification particularly describes the nature of an invention, and in what manner the same is to be performed, in such a manner as to be intelligible to a workman of ordinary knowledge, the grant of the letters patent is void. Simpson v. Holliday, 13 W. R. 577; 12 L. T., N. S., 99; 1 L. R., H. L., 315; 35 L. J., Ch., 811; 5 N. R. 340.

6. In an action for an alleged infringement of a patent where the defence is that the supposed invention is not new, the judge may compare the plaintiff's specification with the specification of a previous patent, and may on such comparison direct the jury to find a verdict. Bush v. Fox, 5 H. L. Ca. 707; 2 Jur., N. S., 1029; 25 L. J., Exch., 251; 4 W. R. 675; 2 W. R. 269.

7. When a question of novelty, or infringement, depends merely on the construction of the specification, it is one entirely for the judge; but where it also depends on other circumstances, such as the degree of difference or of similitude between two machines, it is a mixed question of law and fact. What the jurymen find to have been done is a matter of fact, but the judge must apply that fact according to the rules of law, and is entitled and bound to say whether what has been done amounts to an infringement. Seed v. Higgins, 8 H. L. Ca. 550; 30 L. J., Q. B., 314; 6 Jur., N. S., 1264.

The opinion of scientific witnesses as to whether there has or has not been an infringement ought to be received. Ib.

IV. THE CLAIM.

8. The object of a claim is not to claim anything which is not mentioned in the specification, but to disclaim something which might otherwise be supposed to be claimed, and it must always be construed with reference to the whole context of the specification. Plimpton v. Spiller, 47 L. J., Ch., 211; 26 W. R. 285; 6 L. R., Ch. D., 412; 37 L. T., N. S., 56.

A patentee of an improvement in skates described his invention in his specification as relating to an improvement in attaching the rollers or runners to the stock or footstand of a skate, whereby the rollers or runners were made to turn or cant by the rocking of the stock or footstand, so as to facilitate the turning of the skate on the ice or floor. He described also a mode of making the skate applicable to ice by substituting flat runners for rollers, and a mode of securing the runners by clamping them between pairs of discs, the runners having smooth angular edges so that they might be reversed when the inner edges lost their angularity by wear, and a fresh sharp edge obtained, and when both edges of one surface became worn, the runner might be inverted and two more sharp edges obtained. He claimed first applying rollers or runners to the stock or footstand of a skate as described; so that the rollers or runners might be clamped or turned so as to cause the skate to be moved in a curved line; and, secondly, the mode of securing the runners and making them reversible as above described:—Held, that the second part of the claim was to be read with reference only to the first part, and not as a substantive claim, and that the want of novelty in the second part of the claim did not invalidate the patent. Ib.

1. The office of the claim at the end of a specification is to tell the public exactly what the invention is, and when, according to the natural construction of the claim, a patent would be void for want of novelty, the patentee is not at liberty to refer to the descriptive part of and drawings accompanying the specification, for the purpose of validating the patent by showing that some other is the true construction. Hinks v. Safety Lighting Co., 46 L. J., Ch., 185; 4 L. R., Ch. D., 607; 36 L. T., N. S., 391.

V. COMPLETE SPECIFICATION, SUFFICIENCY OF.

2. To establish the validity of a patent, the invention must be both new and useful, and the specification must accurately describe it; also, if the specification seeks to cover more than is actually new and useful, it vitiates the patent, rendering it ineffectual, even to the extent to which it might otherwise have been supported. Hill v. Thompson, 3 Meriv. 629.

3. To support a patent the specification should be so clear as to enable all the world to use the invention from the moment of the expiration of the patent. Newbery v. James, 2 Meriv. 446.

4. The specification of an invention, which consists in the use of known materials in new proportions, is not necessarily bad for uncertainty, though the patentee does not limit himself to the proportions recommended. Patent Type Founding Co. v. Richard, 1 Johns. 381; 6 Jur., N. S., 39.

A specification stated in substance that the usual practice in the manufacture of type was to employ lead and antimony, and in some cases to add a small percentage of tin; that the object of the invention was to obtain tougher metal, by employing tin in large proportions with antimony, greatly reducing or wholly omitting the use of lead; that the best proportions were seventy-five of tin and twenty-five of antimony, but that this might be to some extent varied, and that if lead were used, it must not exceed fifty per cent. of the whole, one part of antimony to three of tin, or tin and lead, being the best:—Held, that the specification was not bad on the face of it for uncertainty, and that the evidence of persons acquainted with the usual modes of manufacture was necessary to determine whether the invention was stated with sufficient precision. Ib.

5. Injunction upon possession under a patent, until the right can be tried, though subject to considerable doubt; the patent being for improvements upon a machine, the subject of a former patent expired, and the specification describing the original machine, with the improvements, as one entire machine, the subject of the latter patent, not distinguishing the improvements. Harmer v. Plane, 14 Ves. 130.

Patent for improvements valid; but not to restrain the use of the original machine. Ib.

6. Where a patented invention is partly original and partly communicated from a foreign country:—Semble, that the part communicated from the foreign country should be defined in the patent and in the specification, which should particularise what is new in the invention, and what is old. And when this is not done, the Court, upon an interlocutory application, will refuse an injunction to restrain its alleged infringement. And this rule will apply, not merely to this, but to other matters, when the letters patent and specification fail in explicitness; and the age or date of the patent is, under such circumstances, a material element in the consideration. Renard v. Levinstein, 10 L. T., N. S., 177.

7. An invention for giving paper, by the application of a certain composition, such a surface as renders the lines of copper, and other plate printing, more clear and distinct, may properly be described in a patent, as an improvement in copper and other plate printing. One of the ingredients in the composition was a white substance, imported from Germany, and which could be purchased at one or two colour shops in London; the only description or denomination given to it in the specification was, "the purest and finest chemical white lead"; but there was no article known by that denomination in the trade, or in the shops where white lead is usually sold; and the finest white lead which could be obtained would not answer the purpose:—Held, that the specification was insufficient. Sturz v. De la Rue, 5 Russ. 322; 7 L. J., Ch., 47.

8. If, in the specification of an improved gas apparatus, no direction is given respecting a condenser, which is a necessary part of every gas apparatus, this will not invalidate the patent, if it appears that every one capable of constructing a gas apparatus must know that a condenser must form a part of it. Crossley v. Beverley, 1 Russ. & M. 166.

9. A specification, when construed grammatically, claimed to effect a particular object by two processes, one of which would not effect the object, but evidence showed that no skilled practical workman would be misled, as such a one would know that the one process would be ineffectual, and would adopt the other:—Held, that the specification was defective, and the patent void. Simpson v. Holliday, 1 L. R., H. L., 315; 35 L. J., Ch., 811; 12 L. T., N. S., 99; 13 W. R. 577.

The specification was as follows:—"I mix aniline with dry arsenic acid, and allow the mixture to stand for some time, or I accelerate the operation by heating it to or near to its boiling point":—Held, that the word "or" could not be read as "and." Ib.

10. The description, "a roller of hard metal or other suitable material," is not too uncertain, on account of the use of the words "or other suitable material"; such words would mean any material equally sufficient for the purpose with hard metal. Ralston v. Smith, 11 H. L. Ca. 223; 35 L. J., C. P., 49; 20 C. B., N. S., 28; 13 L. T., N. S., 1.

1. S. took out a patent for an improvement in machinery used for roving cotton. His specification appeared to claim the discovery of the application of the principle of centrifugal force for such a purpose, but he filed a disclaimer, declaring that he intended to claim only the application of centrifugal force in the particular manner described in the specification:—Held, that taking these two instruments together they sustained the patent. Seed v. Higgins, 8 H. L. Ca. 550; 30 L. J., Q. B., 314.

The particular manner described was by the use of "a weight." The defendant employed a machine similar in many respects, but though using weight, or pressure occasioned by weight, as a force, not using "a weight":—Held, that this did not amount to an infringement of the patent. Ib.

2. When a specification in the first instance describes the invention in too general terms, but afterwards in describing the method of performing the invention, refers to figures in drawings annexed thereto, and the claim made is for the manufacture of the invention described with reference to those figures, the specification is sufficient. Daw v. Eley, 14 W. R. 126; 13 L. T., N. S., 399.

3. The specification of a patent may describe the process to be adopted so insufficiently as to invalidate the patent, and yet disclose enough to show that what is claimed by a subsequent patent is not new. Betts v. Neilson, 3 L. R., Ch., 429; 37 L. J., Ch., 321; 18 L. T., N. S., 165; 16 W. R. 524.

Whether a specification contains a sufficient description can only be ascertained by experiment; and in making the experiment knowledge and means may be employed which have been acquired since the date of the patent. Ib.

4. After a patent has stood inquiry and the test of time, the Courts do not encourage verbal objections to the form of the specification. Neilson v. Betts, 5 L. R., H. L., 1; 40 L. J., Ch., 317; 19 W. R. 1121.

5. A person having a patent for improvements in gas lamps made further improvements in such lamps, and obtained a patent for the subsequent improvements. The specification to the second patent stated that the invention related to the construction of lamps of a class forming the subject of the former patent, and then described the mode of making the improved parts of the lamp:—Held, that the specification was sufficient. Parkes v. Stevens, 18 W. R. 233; 22 L. T., N. S., 635; 5 L. R., Ch., 36.

When a patentee has taken out a fresh patent for improvements on his original invention it is sufficient if, reading his second specification with the first, an artisan would have no substantial difficulty in ascertaining what was claimed. S. C. 38 L. J., Ch., 627; 8 L. R., Eq., 358; 17 W. R. 846.

6. When a patentee, in his specification, professes to do by machinery what has never been done before by machinery, and describes the machinery by which he does it, his claim is not too large on the face of it, because it claims generally to perform the operation "by machinery." Arnold v. Bradbury, 6 L. R., Ch., 706.

A patentee described an improved ruffle or frill, and the machinery by which he proposed to make such improved ruffle, and to fasten it to a plain fabric by a single series of stitches. By his claim he claimed "the production by machinery of ruffles, and the simultaneous attachment of them to a plain fabric by a single series of stitches":—Held, that the claim was not, on the face of it, too large. Ib.

7. A patent for the combination and arrangement of the various parts of machinery for sewing or stitching with the use of a needle or shuttle would be void from the unlimited extent of the words used, unless they could be cut down by the context so as to apply to a specified combination and arrangement of specified parts of machinery. Fownell v. Bostock, 4 De G. J. & S. 298; 12 W. R. 723; 10 L. T., N. S., 144.

When the combination of machinery in an amended specification was different from combination in the original specification, and no specification remained of the invention for which the patent was granted, the patent was held to be void. Ib.

8. The specification of a patent is bad, if one of the materials to be used is described by a generic term comprising a variety of species, the majority of which would be unsuitable. Wegmann v. Corcoran, 13 L. R., Ch., D., 65; 41 L. T. 358; 28 W. R. 331. Affirming 27 W. R. 357; 39 L. T. 563.

The specification of a patent is bad if a skilled mechanic would not, without performing a series of experiments, be able to construct the machine from the description. Ib.

The specification of a machine for crushing meal described the rollers between which the meal was to be crushed as "to have a surface consisting of material containing so much silica as not to colour the meal or flour. I prefer to make them of iron coated with china, and finally turned with diamond tools"; and the claim was (inter alia) for the use of material "of the hardness required." It appeared that the rollers must be made of a very hard china, such as had scarcely been made in Europe during this century, and specially tough, and must be fixed in a peculiar manner to an iron core or spindle which carried them; and according to the evidence, a miller or a skilled mechanic would not, without making a series of experiments, discover of what china the rollers must be made or how they must be fixed to the spindle:—Held, that the specification was insufficient, and the patent invalid. Ib.

Semble, though the grantee of a patent for an invention communicated to him by a foreigner resident abroad is only bound to tell the public all that he himself knows, yet, if the original inventor has not told him enough to enable him so to describe the invention as that it can be constructed by the aid only of the specification, the patent will be invalid. Ib.

9. A patent may be granted not only in respect of a whole and complete thing described, but in respect, also, of a subordinate integer of that whole. Clarke v. Adie (No. 1), 2 L. R., App. Cas., 315; 46 L. J., Ch., 585; 36 L. T., N. S., 923.

When a patent is taken out for a combination, it will protect the several subordinate parts and all subordinate combinations of such parts, provided the subordinate parts or combinations are themselves properly subjects for a patent, and also provided that it is clearly and precisely defined by the specification what are the subordinate parts or combinations of parts in respect of which, as well as the entire combination, protection is claimed. Ib.

A patent was taken out for improvements in a machine for clipping horses and other animals; one of the improvements relied upon was the combination in the machine of four things—viz., (1) the arching of the cutter plate so as to give elasticity; (2) the use of fixed stems instead of screws to connect the cutter plate and comb plate; (3) the adjustment of certain nuts and washers so as to prevent friction; and (4) the mode of communicating motion to the cutter plate so as to bring it into the true time of cutting. The first item was not described or referred to in the specification, but was merely shown by drawings attached to the specification; each of the three other items was admitted to have been well known and used in the trade; the specification did not contain any distinct claim in respect of the combination:—Held, that the specification was not sufficient, and that the combination of the four items was not protected by the patent. Ib.

1. The test of a sufficient specification is whether it would enable an ordinary workman, exercising the actual knowledge common to the trade, to make the machine. It need not give information of every detail, but it must not tax invention. Plimpton v. Malcolmson, 45 L. J., Ch., 505; 3 L. R., Ch. D., 531; 34 L. T., N. S., 340.

2. A description in a specification of a lamp burner omitted to state where the hole for the admission of air was to be:—Held, that the specification was insufficient. Hinks v. Safety Lighting Co., 4 L. R., Ch. D., 607; 46 L. J., Ch., 185; 36 L. T., N. S., 391.

3. The description, in a specification, of a machine is sufficient, if it tells the maker and user, without requiring him to use an inventive faculty, how to make and use the machine, although parts of it, without which it would be unworkable, have been omitted from the specification. Otto v. Linford, 46 L. T. 35.

VI. ENROLMENT OR FILING.

4. Enrolment of patent cannot be dispensed with for the purpose of preventing the specification being made public. After patent is passed, the time for enrolment cannot be enlarged without Act of Parliament. Exp. Hoops, 6 Ves. 599.

5. The clerk at the Enrolment Office cannot receive an enrolment conditionally, and the Master of the Rolls refused to cancel or vacate an enrolment of a specification which had been left at the office, and had been enrolled, notwithstanding directions not to enrol it until further order. Re Brough, 7 Beav. 104.

6. One having obtained a patent for a manufacturing machine, of which he duly enrolled a specification, afterwards obtained another patent for improvements in the machine, in which the grant of the former patent was recited; and the letter patent contained the usual condition that it should be void, if the patentee did not within one month enrol a specification, particularly describing and ascertaining the nature of the invention, and in what manner the same was to be performed:—Held, that a specification containing a full description of the whole machine so improved, but not distinguishing the new improved parts from the old parts, or referring to the former specification, otherwise than as the second patent recited the first, was a performance of that condition. Harmer v. Playne, 14 Ves. 133; 11 East 101.

7. A clerical error in the enrolment of the specification of a patent will be amended. Re Redmund, 5 Russ. 44.

VII. AMENDMENT.

8. The jurisdiction of the Master of the Rolls, as keeper of the records, extends to the amendment only of clerical errors in the enrolment of patents: accordingly, where under the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83, a patentee had, by the authority of the Solicitor-General, entered a memorandum of alteration of the enrolment of the specification, which it was alleged was not according to the provisions of the Act, as being an extension of the patent, to the prejudice of another patentee who petitioned that the alteration might be expunged, it was held that the Master of the Rolls had no jurisdiction to do what was asked. Re Sharp's patent, 3 Beav. 245; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 86.

9. A clerical error in the enrolment of the specification of a patent will be amended. Re Redmond or Redmund, 5 Russ. 44; 6 L. J., Ch., 183.

10. Where there is a clerical error in letters patent and in the enrolment, the correction should be first made in the letters patent on application to the Lord Chancellor, before any application is made to the Rolls to correct the enrolment; and where the enrolment had been altered by the Master of the Rolls, without such previous correction, and the Lord Chancellor, on the case coming before him, refused to make the correction, he ordered the enrolment to be brought before him, assisted by the Master of the Rolls, and the error which had been corrected was restored. Re Nickel's patent, 1 Ph. 36; 5 Jur. 882.

Where a patent was taken out for an invention of machinery for covering fibrous substances, etc.; and the invention was described in the letters patent, and in the other written documents, and also in the enrolment, as one for recovering, etc., the error having originated in the Home Office, and the patentee had commenced an action for infringement of the patent; the Lord Chancellor would not make the required correction in the letters patent, except upon the terms of the patentee abandoning and paying the costs of all proceedings then pending against the defendant at law, and undertaking not to bring any action for infringements previous to the correction. Ib.

Jurisdiction and practice in correcting clerical errors in letters patent, the proceedings in obtaining them and in the enrolment. S. C. 4 Beav. 563; 5 Jur. 381. And see 4 Beav. 567. n.

1. Instance of a patent amended and re-sealed. Anon., Beam. Ord. 67.

2. A patent bearing date 12th August, but the caveat not discharged till the 27th; the patentee supposing it bore date the latter day, did not enrol till the 18th December, when the four months had expired: the date of the patent cannot be altered. Exp. Beck, 1 Bro. C. C. 578.

3. Clerical error, consisting of the insertion of the name of "Charles" instead of "George" in the enrolment of a patent, ordered to be amended. Re Dismore, 18 Beav. 539.

4. An application for amendment of a patent granted in 1856 by rectifying an error in the spelling of the name of the patentee was refused on the ground of lapse of time. Re Blamoud, 3 L. T., N. S., 800.

5. The engrossment of letters patent bore date two days after the date of the writ of Privy Seal, and the patentee not being aware of the discrepancy, was a day too late in enrolling his patent. Ordered, that the enrolment should be amended, on the ground that the mistake arose from a misprision of the clerk. Re Adams's patent, 1 W. R. 259.

6. The Master of the Rolls has jurisdiction, as keeper of the records, to direct the amendment of a clerical error in a specification filed in the Patent Office, such jurisdiction being saved by the Judicature Act 1873, s. 17, sub-s. 6. Re Johnson's patent, 5 L. R., Ch. D., 503; 46 L. J., Ch., 555.

When any such amendment has been directed, notice of the order should be given to the commissioners of patents, so that the specification may be reprinted. Ib.

7. The 18th section of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act 1883 does not affect the jurisdiction of the Master of the Rolls to allow an amendment in a patent specification which has been filed under ss. 27 and 28 of the Patent Law Amendment Act 1852, or has otherwise become a record. So long as it is in the Patent Office, and before the patent is sealed, any one applying for an amendment must proceed under s. 18 of the Act of 1883. Re Gare's patent, 26 L. R., Ch. D., 105.

VIII. DISCLAIMER.

8. A disclaimer cannot be made use of for the purpose of converting a barren and an unprofitable generality in a specification into a specific practical description, or to convert that which, upon the description in the specification, is not applicable to any one definite form into a description applicable to a specific and definite mode of proceeding. Ralston v. Smith, 11 H. L. Ca. 223; 35 L. J., C. P., 49; 13 L. T., N. S., 1.

The object of the 5 & 6 Will 4, c. 83, authorizing disclaimers, is, that where a specification, containing a sufficient and good description of a useful invention, is imperilled by reason of the description having something annexed to it which is capable of being severed, leaving the original description good and sufficient, without the necessity of addition (except of such slight additions only as may be required to render intelligible that which remains), the vicious excess may be lopped off by a disclaimer. Ib.

The words "not being such a disclaimer as shall extend the exclusive right," do not mean in the ordinary sense of the word "extend," merely by adding to or enlarging the original specification; but are also intended to describe, so confining and restricting its expressions as substantially to amount to a statement of something new. Ib.

Therefore, where a specification of a patent for improvements in embossing and finishing woven fabrics alleged the invention to consist in the use of rollers having any design grooved, fluted, engraved, milled, or otherwise indented upon them, and the disclaimer, which was afterwards filed, stated that the effect desired could only be produced by the use of a certain species of roller not particularly described in the specification (namely, a roller of hard metal or other suitable material having circular grooves around its surface), and all other rollers were disclaimed, such disclaimer held to be bad. Ib.

9. A. took out a patent for certain improvements in machinery or apparatus for preparing, slubbing, and roving cotton and other fibrous substances. The specification stated that the invention consisted "in the application of the principle of centrifugal force in the flyers employed in the machinery, for the purpose of producing the required elasticity or pressure upon the bobbin, by causing the small spur or lever, which conducts the sliver of cotton or other fibrous material on to the bobbin, to press or bear against the same simply by the action of such force." After mentioning that, in order to illustrate the invention, and the method of carrying the same into practical effect, a sheet of drawings was attached, representing one mode of applying the same to a flyer, as employed in an ordinary roving machine, and next, by reference to the drawings so attached, minutely describing a machine, the specification proceeded: "I would remark, that I do not intend to confine myself to this particular method, but I claim as my invention the application of the law or principle of centrifugal force to the particular or specific purpose above set forth; that is, to flyers used in machinery or apparatus for preparing, slubbing, and roving cotton and other fibrous materials, for the purpose of producing a hard and evenly-compressed bobbin." Under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83, A. entered a disclaimer, reciting that he had been advised that the claim of his invention contained in the specification might be construed in such a manner as to be more extensive than he intended, and declaring that he, for this reason, did thereby disclaim all application of the law or principle of centrifugal force, "except only the application of centrifugal force by means of a weight acting upon a presser, so as to cause it to press against a bobbin, as described in the specification." B. used a similar machine, in which the centrifugal force operated in a lower plane. An action was brought for infringement of the patent, when it was held that the disclaimer was valid under the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83, and that the original specification and disclaimer being taken together, A. had duly specified his invention, and that the patent was therefore valid. The Court, however, granted a rule for a new trial, on the ground that there was no evidence to go to the jury of an infringement. On appeal, the decision was affirmed. Seed v. Higgins, Higgins v. Seed, 8 H. L. Ca. 550; 30 L. J., Q. B., 314; 6 Jur., N. S., 1264.

1. The plain language of the operative part of a disclaimer is not to be controlled or modified by any introductory sentences with which the patentee may think fit to preface such disclaimer. Cannington v. Nuttall, 40 L. J., Ch., 739; 5 L. R., H. L., 205.

2. When a disclaimer had been filed without the consent of the patentee:—Held, that the Master of the Rolls had jurisdiction without bill filed to order it to be taken off the file. Re Berdan's patent, 20 L. R., Eq., 346; 44 L. J., Ch., 544; 23 W. R. 823.

3. A patentee having altered his specification by disclaimer, lodged a complaint against certain manufacturers for breach of an interdict granted anterior to the disclaimer:—Held, that the patentee ought to have instituted a new action; and that, although the instrument of the manufacturers was intended to execute the same work, it was no infringement; although it was cognate, it had not the characteristic feature of the patentee's invention. Dudgeon v. Thompson, 3 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 34.

The invention as it stood before the disclaimer may have been new, useful, and legal, but it might not have been so under the altered specification. After the disclaimer the question of enforcing the old interdict could not be entertained. Ib.

Costs.] 4. On application to the law officer of the Crown under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83, s. 1, for leave to enter a disclaimer of any part of the title or specification of a patent, against which a caveat has been entered, the law officer has no jurisdiction to order the applicant to pay costs. Kynoch v. National Arms Co., 26 W. R. 22; 37 L. T., N. S., 31.

5. A bill was filed to restrain the infringement of a patent. The plaintiff, by leave of the Court, brought an action, and failed on the ground of part of the apparatus not being new. The plaintiff then filed a disclaimer of that part. In this state of things the cause came on for hearing, and Wood, V.-C., suggested that, to save the expenses of a new suit, the plaintiff should pay the defendant's costs of suit up to that time, and be allowed to amend the bill, instead of having it dismissed with costs, with liberty to file a new bill; and an order to the above effect was made without the Vice-Chancellor's attention being called to an enactment prohibiting the reading of a disclaimer in any suit pending when it was filed. The costs were paid and the bill amended. The defendant, by answer to the amended bill, insisted on this statutory objection, which the Vice-Chancellor, on a motion for an injunction being made, held fatal to the suit:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled, on motion, to have his bill dismissed without costs, and without prejudice to a new bill, as he had been misled by the act of the Court. Lister v. Leather, 1 De G. & J. 361; 3 Jur., N. S., 433.

V. Account of Profits, 5558.
VI. Opposition to, 5559.

I. GROUNDS, TERMS, AND CONDITIONS.

7. The extension of a patent was opposed by the apprentices of the patentee, who alleged that they should not be able to get employment. It appearing, however, that they had been so instructed as to be able to get employment in another branch of the trade, no condition was imposed on the patentee on that account. Re Baxter's patent, 13 Jur. 593.

8. Principles upon which the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council acts in applications for the prolongation of the term of letters patent. Re Pinkus' patent, 12 Jur. 233.

The non-reduction of the patent into practical public utility is the strongest evidence against merit and utility. Ib.

Semble, the Court may infer want of remuneration to the patentee, from the circumstance that there must have been some expense. Ib.

9. The 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83, does not authorise the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council to impose terms as conditions on which patents are to be renewed. The authority of the Committee is limited to reporting on matters as between the public and the party applying. Ledsam v. Russell, 1 H. L. Ca. 687.

There is nothing in the statute to fetter the discretion of the Crown in the renewal, except the length of time for which that renewal is to be granted, and which must not exceed seven years. Ib.

An application for a renewal is "prosecuted with effect," within the terms of the statute, if the party applying obtains the report of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council before the expiration of the original patent. Ib.

The Crown is not restricted as to the time within which it may not act upon such report, and renewed letters patent are not void because they are dated after the expiration of the original letters patent. Ib.

If the Judicial Committee should impose a condition on a party applying for the renewal of a patent, such party need not, in an action for the infringement of the patent, aver that such condition was complied with before the patent was renewed. Ib.

10. Where, upon an application for the extension of the term of letters patent, it appears clearly that the patent is invalid, the Judicial Committee will not grant an extension, and thereby drive the opposing parties to their scire facias; but, if the validity of the patent be only doubtful, and the utility and want of profit be proved, the Court will extend the term of the letters patent. Re Woodcroft's patent, 10 Jur. 363.

1. Term extended upon primâ facie evidence of no profit, coupled with evidence of utility. Re Lowe's patent, 10 Jur. 363.

2. A patent article was unprofitable for ten years after the date of the patent, in consequence of a defect which was not cured until then. Extension of the term refused. Re Bell's patent, 10 Jur. 363.

3. Upon an application for a prolongation of a patent, the invalidity of the patent for want of novelty is not a proper ground of objection; inasmuch as the prolonged patent does not stand on firmer ground than the original patent, and is granted subject to all objections which could be made to the original patent. Re Galloway's patent, 7 Jur. 453.

In a case where the evidence tended to show that the patent article, in the exact form described in the drawings attached to the specification, was not, at the time of the application for a prolongation, practically useful; but where it was clearly proved that the same combination of parts or mechanical method for which alone the patent was taken out, with certain alterations and improvements in matters not included as parts of the invention, was of great practical utility, the committee granted a prolongation, although there was no patent for the alterations and improvements, which were therefore open to the public, and yet could not be used without infringing the prolonged patent. Ib.

4. Extension of the term of letters patent refused, although the profits derived from the patent article were less than the expenditure incurred upon the patent, the utility of the invention being small. The fact of an invention, when known, not getting into general use, is a presumption against its utility. Re Sinister's patent, 4 Moo. P. C. 164; 7 Jur. 451.

5. Extension of patent granted pending a suit respecting its validity. Re Kay's patent, 3 Moo. P. C. 24.

6. Term of letters patent for improvement in manufacturing gas tubes extended by the Judicial Committee, under the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83, for six years, on the ground of the great merit and utility of the invention, and the inadequate remuneration in consequence of litigation necessary for the protection of the patent right. Re Russell's patent, 2 Moo. P. C. 496.

Where the inventor, a mechanic, had assigned his interest to the patentee, his master, the Judicial Committee, under the circumstances, made it a condition of their recommendation to the Crown to prolong the term of the patent, that the assignee of the patent should secure the inventor an annuity during the period of the extension. Ib.

7. In cases for the extension of the term of letters patent, the Attorney-General represents the Government and the public generally. An application by the Lords of the Admiralty to enter a caveat, and be heard against a petition for an extension, such caveat not having been filed within the time required by the rules of the Privy Council Office, refused, as the Attorney-General was present to watch the interests of the Government. Extension of letters patent granted for five years, the invention being of great merit and public utility; but the patentees and his grantees had received no remuneration, in consequence of the originality of the patent being disputed at law. In granting such prolongation the Judicial Committee imposed a condition, that the Commissioners for executing the office of High Admiral should have the right of manufacturing such invention for the service of Her Majesty, without any licence from the patentee. Re Pettit Smith's patent, 7 Moo. P. C. 133.

8. A patentee entered into an agreement with certain parties to work the patent, but owing to disputes between them, the invention was not prosecuted until a short time before the expiration of the term of the letters patent; in such circumstances an extension was refused. Re Patterson's patent, 6 Moo. P. C. 469; 13 Jur. 593.

9. The circumstance of there being a lis pendens respecting the validity of the letters patent is no objection to the grant of an extension of the original letters patent. Re Heath's patent, 8 Moo. P. C. 217.

Term of letters patent extended for seven years, on the ground of the meritorious nature of the invention and the extensive litigation the patentee had been put to in protecting his patent rights, which had prevented any remuneration. Ib.

Form of order in council, pursuant to the stat. 15 & 16 Vict., c. 83, s. 40, directing the Lord Chancellor to make and seal new letters patent upon the report of the Judicial Committee recommending an extension of the term under the provisions of the statutes 5 & 6 Vict., c. 83, and 7 & 8 Vict., c. 69. Ib.

No accounts were kept by the deceased patentee of the expenditure or receipts on account of his patent. Upon its appearing that his estate was of little value (his effects being sworn for administration under 100*l.*), the petitioner, the administratrix of the patentee, on the allegation that there had been no profits, but considerable loss to such estate, was examined to prove that fact. Ib.

10. By the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83, s. 4, it is provided, "that no extension shall be granted if the application shall not be made and prosecuted with effect before the expiration of the term originally granted in such letters patent": —Held, by the Judicial Committee, that the petition for such prolongation must be brought to a hearing before the expiration of the letters patent, and that the pendency thereof is not sufficient to bring it within the proviso. Re Bodmer's patent, 2 Moo. P. C. 471.

This rule was acted on where the petitioner had been prevented prosecuting his petition before the expiration of the letters patent by the conduct of parties objecting, and from the circumstance of the Judicial Committee not being sitting, but the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83, s. 4 having been repealed by the 2 & 3 Vict., c. 67, their lordships, upon a fresh petition, granted an extension of the letters patent for seven years under that Act, on the ground that the invention was an ingenious one, and that it did not appear that the patentee had received any remuneration until within the three years previous to the expiration of the patent. Ib.

The rules enacted for practice in patent cases under the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83, must be observed in an application for a prolongation, under the 2 & 3 Vict., c. 67. Ib.

1. Where letters patent for improvements in machinery, tools, or apparatus for cutting, planing, turning, drilling, and rolling metals, embraced several subjects, one only of which, namely, the rolling of metals, had been worked out, and that part of the patent was affected by subsequent patented improvements by the same patentee, and could not be effectually used without such subsequent improvements, the Judicial Committee, before recommending an extension of the term of the first patent, put the petitioner upon terms of disclaiming all the parts of the original patent not worked out, and restricted the prolongation to the unexpired term of the subsequent patents. Re Bodmer's patent, 8 Moo. P. C. 282.

2. A prolongation of the term of letters patent for seven years was granted, the invention being a meritorious one, and of great value as a raw material for the manufacture of paper; no profit having been made either by the inventor or his assignees. Re Houghton's patent, 3 L. R., P. C., 461; 7 Moo. P. C., N. S., 309.

3. Circumstances showing a want of adequate remuneration, an extension of the term of letters patent granted for six years. Re Carr's patent, 4 L. R., P. C., 539; 9 Moo. P. C., N. S., 379.

4. The Judicial Committee has, under the 4th section of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 41, jurisdiction to entertain a petition, referred to them by the Crown, seeking to revoke an order in council, made upon their recommendation, upon an application by patentees for a prolongation of letters patent under the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83, and to recall the warrant for sealing such letters patent. Re Schlumberger, 9 Moo. P. C. 1. S. C. nom. Re Shlumberger, 2 Eq. Rep. 36.

Patentees applied under the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83, for an extension of the term, and the Judicial Committee recommended a prolongation for six years, which recommendation was confirmed by the Crown by an order in council, and a warrant issued for sealing the letters patent. No step was taken by the patentees to procure the sealing of the new letters, and after a delay of nearly three years, a party interested in opposing the renewal petitioned the Crown to revoke the order in council and the warrant to seal. It did not appear that the petitioner, or the public, had suffered any loss by the laches of the patentees. The Judicial Committee, to whom the petition was referred, considered the laches not of sufficient magnitude to deprive the patentees of all benefit of the renewed patent; but made it a condition, before dismissing the petition, that the patentees should pay the petitioner a gross sum for costs, and give an undertaking not to prosecute for any infringement which might have occurred from the date of the order in council to the date of dismissal of the petition. Ib.

5. A patentee, formerly in partnership with J. & W., by a deed of dissolution stipulated that they should have the exclusive right of granting, in certain cases, licences for manufacturing the patent article. In recommending an extension of the term of the letters patent, the Judicial Committee imposed a condition upon the patentee to secure to J., in whom the interest under the deed of dissolution then vested, the same interest in the new letters patent as related to the granting of licences as was provided by the deed of dissolution, but refused to allow J. to substitute new licences for those granted under the original letters patent, in the event of the original licencees declining to renew their licences from him under the new grant. Re Normandy's patent, 9 Moo. P. C. 452.

6. Opposition to an application for extension or confirmation of letters patent is rather encouraged than otherwise, and upon a successful opposition, the opposer's costs will, in general, be allowed. Re Honiball's patent, 9 Moo. P. C. 378; 3 Eq. Rep. 225.

7. To entitle a patentee, or his assignee, to an extension of the term of letters patent, he must establish three things: first, the merit of the invention; secondly, that the parties interested had done all in their power to bring the invention into public use and to turn it to advantage; and, thirdly, that from circumstances beyond their control they had been unable to obtain adequate remuneration. Re Markwick's patent, 13 Moo. P. C. 310; 8 W. R. 333.

The accounts produced at the hearing were unsatisfactory, owing to the non-production of the books. The committee recommending a prolongation of the term of the letters patent, directed a proper account of the profits and losses of the patent to be verified by affidavit, with an explanation accounting for the non-production of the books, to be laid before the Attorney-General, subject to which they extended the term. Ib.

8. The patentee of a patent had received large sums of money from Government for the expenses of experiments, and by way of bounty and reward, but from the nature of the patent had not, in the opinion of the Judicial Committee, received sufficient remuneration for his invention. In granting an extension, the Committee refused to impose a condition in the new grant, that the Crown should be at liberty to use the invention for the public service without license from the patentee. Re Lancaster's patent, 2 Moo. P. C., N. S., 189.

9. A patentee, who was not a manufacturer, granted a licence to a manufacturing firm to manufacture the patented article, which, by agreement between them, was of an almost exclusive character. In granting a prolongation, the new letters patent were directed to be made upon condition that licences should be granted by the patentee to the public upon terms similar to the one already granted. Re Mallet's patent, 1 L. R., P. C., 308.

10. The power given by 7 & 8 Vict., c. 69, s. 2, to recommend an extension of the term of letters patent for an invention, is exhausted when an extension has been once recommended, and new letters patent granted; and the Judicial Committee has no jurisdiction to entertain a petition for a further prolongation of the new letters patent. Re Goucher's patent, 2 Moo. P. C., N. S., 532.

In the objections filed by the objectors, this point was not taken:—Held, that the objection could be raised on the application to fix a day for hearing of the petition. Ib.

1. It is essential, in order to obtain an extension of the term of letters patent, for the petitioner to establish that the invention is of considerable merit, of public utility, and of inadequate remuneration. Re McDougal's patent, 2 L. R., P. C., 1; 37 L. J., P. C., 17; 5 Moo. P. C., N. S., 1.

Although the Judicial Committee will not adjudicate upon the validity of letters patent, the term of which is sought to be prolonged, yet where it appears from the specification that the subject matter is not sufficient to sustain such patent, they will not, in the exercise of their discretion, recommend the Crown to extend the term. Ib.

Where, therefore, the specification of a patent described it as improvements in treating, deodorising and disinfecting, sewage and other offensive matter, and also for deodorising and disinfecting in general, and as being composed of two ordinary well-known chemical acids in combination, such acids being in common use for disinfecting purposes by the public before and after the letters patent:—Held, not to be an invention of such merit and utility as to justify an extension, to the detriment of the public in the use of known sanitary agents. Ib.

2. The subject matter of an invention was the employment of a metallic soap, composed of well-known chemical substances in common use, which the specification described as applicable for coating of iron and wood to prevent the fouling of ships' bottoms, and for other useful purposes. A prolongation of the term of such letters patent refused on the ground, first, that the recommendation of an extension being discretionary, it would be detrimental to the public interest to grant the exclusive benefit of a metallic soap made from substances in common use; and, secondly, that the patentee had, as it appeared from the accounts, been adequately remunerated for his invention. Re McInnes's patent, 2 L. R., P. C., 54; 37 L. J., P. C., 23; 5 Moo., P. C., N. S., 72.

3. If an invention has not been brought into practical use during the term of the letters patent, it raises a strong, though not conclusive, presumption against its utility; and unless there are circumstances to rebut such presumption, an extension will not be granted. Re Herbert's patent, 1 L. R., P. C., 399.

The fact of a patent of a valuable nature, but having a limited market, not having been so generally used as to remunerate the inventor, is sufficient to remove the presumption against the utility of the invention. Ib.

4. In all cases where the utility of a patent has not been tested by actual employment the question to be considered is, whether the evidence is sufficient to rebut the presumption arising from its non-use that the invention is one of no practical utility. Application for a prolongation of the term granted after strong and unanswered evidence of utility, though the patent had not been used in England during the whole of the term. On grounds of public policy the condition was annexed that the Government and all contractors employed by the Government should be at liberty to use the invention. Re Hughes' patent, 4 L. R., App. Cas., 174; 48 L. J., P. C., 20; 27 W. R. 493.

5. Where the utility of a patent has not been tested by actual employment, for a period of fourteen years, although efforts have been made by the patentee to bring it into use, it raises a very strong presumption against its practical utility, which presumption can only be rebutted by the strongest evidence. Re Allan's patent, 1 L. R., P. C. C., 507; 36 L. J., P. C., 76.

6. Two cognate patents, having different terms to run, extended so that both should expire on the same day. Re Johnson's and Atkinson's patents, 5 L. R., P. C., 87.

II. EFFECT OF.

7. The prolongation of a patent is, by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83, and 16 & 17 Vict., c. 115, the same as a new grant. Re Betts' patent, 1 Moo. P. C. C., N. S., 49; 9 Jur., N. S., 137; 11 W. R. 221; 7 L. T., N. S., 577.

III. GRANT OF, TO ASSIGNEE OF PATENT.

8. The assignees of letters patent may, under the first and fourth sections of the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83, lawfully obtain a renewal of such patents. Ledsam v. Russell, 1 H. L. Ca. 687. And see S. C. 14 M. & W. 574; 16 id. 633.

9. Upon an application by an assignee of a patent for a prolongation of it, the committee, for the protection of the public, will require proof of the petitioner's title, even though the opposing counsel are willing and offer to admit such title. Re Galloway's patent, 7 Jur. 453.

10. Where the executor of the surviving assignee of a patentee petitioned for an extension of the term of the letters patent, and it was established that a valuable consideration had been given for the assignment, and that the assignee had sustained considerable loss, the Judicial Committee, in granting an extension of the term, refused to impose terms upon the petitioners, in favour of the patentee. Re Bodmer's patent, 6 Moo. P. C. 468.

11. Extension of term of letters patent granted to assignees of patentee. Re Hardy's patent, 6 Moo. P. C. 441; 13 Jur. 177.

The inventor and patentee had lost largely by the patent, but his assignees had lately made very considerable profits, and from their position in the trade were likely to command a very large sale of the patent article. The patent was of high merit, and of great service to the public safety. In such circumstances, a prolongation of the term was granted to the assignees for four years, upon conditions, first, that the assignees secured to the patentee half the profits derived from the sale; and, secondly, that the patented article should be sold by the assignees to the public at a certain fixed price. Ib.

In estimating the profits made under a patent, the profits arising from the sale of the patented article for exportation must be included. Ib.

12. To obtain the extension of a patent, the applicant must show its merits, the endeavours of the parties interested to bring it out, and their failure to obtain an adequate remuneration. Re Markwick, 8 W. R. 333; 13 Moo. P. C. 310.

For this purpose satisfactory accounts must be produced and verified. Ib.

An extension will be granted to the assignee of a patent on an adequate remuneration (an annuity) being secured to the patentee. Ib.

1. The Committee has power, under 7 & 8 Vict., c. 69, s. 4, to grant an extension of the term of letters patent to the assignee of the patentee. Re Napier's patent, 13 Moo., P. C., 543; 9 W. R. 390.

Prolongation of the term of letters patent granted to a public company who were the assignees of a patentee. The patentee had ceased to have any connection with the working of the patent, and the assignees were prevented from working it at a profit by reason of the discovery of the gold fields in southern Australia, which caused a derangement and scarcity in the labour market. Ib.

2. Although by 7 & 8 Vict., c. 69, s. 4, the assignee of a patentee is entitled to apply for an extension, yet he does not, unless under peculiar circumstances, stand on the same favourable footing as the original inventor, as the ground that the merits of the inventor ought to be properly rewarded, in dealing with an invention which has proved useful and beneficial to the public, does not exist in the case of an assignee, unless such assignee is a person who has assisted the patentee with funds to enable him to perfect and bring out his invention, and thus to bring it into use. Re Norton's patent, 1 Moo. P. C., N. S., 339.

A petition by the assignee of a patent, which he had purchased from the inventor in 1853, and which he had not employed in any way since that time, although actively engaged in the particular manufacture:—Held, that the non-user during ten years constitutes a sufficient objection to the grant of prolongation. S. C. Exp. nom. Salt, 1 N. R. 557.

3. An extension was recommended in favour of an assignee, on his securing an annuity to the inventor during the subsistence of the new letters patent. Re Whitehouse's patent, 2 Moo. P. C. 496.

4. Where the inventor, a mechanic, had assigned his interest to the patentee, his master, the Judicial Committee, under the circumstances, made it a condition of their recommendation to the Crown to prolong the term of the patent, that the assignee of the patent should secure the inventor an annuity during the period of the extension. Re Russell's patent, 2 Moo. P. C. 496.

5. To entitle an equitable assignee to appear with the legal assignees of a patent, on a petition for a prolongation of the letters patent, the name of such equitable assignee must appear with the other petitioners in the advertisements required by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83, s. 4, and rule 2, made in pursuance thereof. Re Noble's patent, 7 Moo. P. C. 191.

6. An assignee of the patentee who had taken an assignment of four-fifths of the patent within a few months of the expiration of a patent, which had only just been brought into use, for a small consideration, is not entitled to any extension. Re Normand's patent, 3 L. R., P. C., 193; 6 Moo. P. C., N. S., 477.

7. When a patentee entered into an agreement with parties to work the patent, but owing to disputes between them the invention was not prosecuted until a short time before the expiration of the letters patent, an extension was refused. Re Patterson's patent, 6 Moo. P. C. 469; 13 Jur. 593.

8. After an assignee of a patentee had incurred considerable loss in carrying out a patent for a smoke prevention apparatus, a statute passed to compel the owners of furnaces in the metropolis to construct them so as to consume their own smoke:—Held, on an application for a prolongation of the letters patent, that though the Act might, in effect, compel the use of the petitioner's patent, yet that such circumstance formed no objection to a renewal of the term of the letters patent, the merits of the invention and loss incurred in carrying it out being established. Re Foarde's patent, 9 Moo. P. C. 376.

9. Petition for prolongation by a patentee, together with the assignees of a moiety of the patent. After the presentation of the petition, and before the hearing, the patentee died, having by his will appointed his widow executrix and residuary legatee. Extension granted to the assignees on condition that they held the moiety of the patent in trust for the widow of the patentee. Re Herbert's patent, 1 L. R., P. C., 399.

IV. GRANT OF, TO FOREIGN INVENTOR (15 & 16 Vict., c. 83, s. 25).

10. The Judicial Committee holding that a foreigner granting licences for his patent to parties in this country who inserted the advertisement required by the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83, s. 4 was a sufficient compliance therewith, the public advantage having been considerable, and the advantage which had yet accrued to the inventor small, granted an extension for six years. Re De Rosne's patent, 4 Moo. P. C. 416.

11. An importer of a foreign invention by which the public is benefited is entitled to be put upon the same footing as an original inventor when applying for a prolongation of such foreign importation. Re Berry's patent, 7 Moo. P. C. 187.

In a case, therefore, where the invention was of considerable commercial value, and the importers had embarked a large capital upon machinery in trying to introduce it to general use, and incurred considerable loss in so doing, the Judicial Committee recommended an extension of the letters patent for six years. Ib.

12. The importer of an invention from abroad is an inventor within the meaning of the stat. 5 & 6 Will. 4, c 83, and entitled to apply for an extension of the term; but the Judicial Committee will look with jealousy into the merits of the invention imported. Re Claridge's patent, 7 Moo. P. C. 394.

Application for an extension by the trustees of a joint stock company (the assignees of the patentee) refused, the invention imported having been in common use in France, and no great risk or expenditure incurred by the patentee or his assignees in introducing it to the public. Ib.

13. An alien resident abroad, who was interested in an English patent by a foreign inventor, and who had also considerable dealings in this country in respect of sales of the patented machine and in granting licences for the use of such patent, held, in the circumstances, to have such a locus standi as to entitle him to petition the Crown to revoke an order in council for granting an extended term of an English patent, and to recall the warrant for sealing such patent. Re Schlumberger, 9 Moo. P. C. 1. S. C. nom. Re Schlumberger, Exp. Gibson, 2 Eq. Rep. 1.

Quære, whether an alien living abroad, without such interest, could inform the Crown by petition, as to any matters touching letters patent. Ib.

1. Letters patent for an invention communicated by a foreigner resident abroad, extended for five years. The invention (machinery for letter-press printing) was of a meritorious and useful character, but of an expensive nature, and only at the latter end of the term of the letters patent brought into public use; and although the patent had been worked at a profit, it was not, in the opinion of the Judicial Committee, sufficiently remunerative, considering the value of the invention. Re Newton's patent, 14 Moo. P. C. 156; 10 W. R. 731.

2. A patent (a communication from a foreigner abroad) was taken out in England, and the inventor a few weeks afterwards obtained letters patent for the invention in America. An application was made for a prolongation of the English patent before the American patent had expired:—Held, that the case fell within the spirit of the provisions of 15 & 16 Vict., c. 83, s. 25, and the application was refused. Re Newton's patent, 15 Moo. P. C. 176; 9 Jur., N. S., 109.

3. The 15 & 16 Vict., c. 83, s. 25, does not deprive the Judicial Committee of the power to entertain an application for an extension of the term of letters patent taken out first in England though a patent has been obtained for the same invention in a foreign state; and the foreign patent would expire before the expiration of the prolonged term. Re Poole's patent, 1 L. R., P. C., 514.

Secus, if the patent was first obtained abroad by a foreign subject, and afterwards taken out in England. Ib.

4. Exposition of the principles which regulate the Judicial Committee in recommending the Crown to extend the term of letters patent of an invention, consisting of a communication from a foreigner residing abroad, who had previously to the English patent taken out a patent for the same invention in a foreign state. Re Johnson's patent, 4 L. R., P. C., 75; 8 Moo. P. C., N. S., 282.

Where Foreign Patent expired.] 5. The provisions of s. 25 of the stat. 15 & 16 Vict., c. 83, enacting that letters patent obtained in the United Kingdom for patented foreign inventions are not to continue in force after the expiration of the foreign patent, apply only to patents granted in the United Kingdom, subsequent to the passing of that statute. Re Bodmer's patent, 8 Moo. P. C. 282.

6. Section 25 of the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 83, enacts, "That no letters patent for or in respect of an invention for which any such patent of like privileges shall have been obtained in any foreign country, and which shall be granted in the United Kingdom, from the expiration of the term for which such letters patent or privilege was granted or was in force, shall be of any validity." The 16 & 17 Vict., c. 115, s. 7 enacts, that new letters patent granted by way of prolongation, should be granted according to the provision of the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 83. Application was made under the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83, and 2 & 3 Vict., c. 69, by assignees of a patentee, for extension of an English patent for a foreign importation, patented in France. At the date of the application the French patent had expired:—Held, dismissing the petition, that as the foreign patent had expired, no renewed grant would be valid by s. 25 of the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 83, as s. 7 of the 16 & 17 Vict., c. 113, made an extended patent a new patent, within the provisions of s. 25 of the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 83. Re Aube's patent, 9 Moo. P. C. 43.

7. On an application for the prolongation of a patent granted in the United Kingdom in January 1849, it was proved that the applicant obtained letters patent in France in respect of the invention in January 1850, and letters patent in Belgium in respect of the invention in January 1852, which last letters patent had expired at the time of the application:—Held, that the earlier part of s. 25 of the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 83 applies only to cases where patents have been granted in foreign countries before the grant of the patent in the United Kingdom, and that the words in the proviso, "any such patent or like privilege," must be taken to refer to the entire description of the patents mentioned in the foregoing part of the section, and to no others. Re Betts' patent, 1 Moo. P. C., N. S., 49; 9 Jur., N. S., 137; 11 W. R. 221; 7 L. T., N. S., 577.

When a patent is taken out in a foreign country before a patent for the invention in the United Kingdom, the latter patent is to terminate at the same time as the foreign patent. Ib.

Where the term in a foreign patent has expired, a grant of letters patent in the United Kingdom made after that period is of no validity. Ib.

A patent was granted in England for fourteen years to an English subject, who subsequently obtained French and Belgian patents for different terms. On petition a prolongation was granted, notwithstanding the expiration of the Belgian patent. S. C. 1 N. R. 137.

8. When a foreigner patented his invention first in England and afterwards in France, which latter patent, at the date of the application for a prolongation of the English patent, had a year to run, the Privy Council will not recommend the Crown to extend the term upon the chance of the French patent being extended. Re Normand's patent, 3 L. R., P. C., 193; 6 Moo. P. C., N. S., 477.

Held, also, that if the French patent had expired there was no power to recommend an extension of the English patent. Ib.

9. The 15 & 16 Vict., c. 83, s. 25 does not apply where an English patent is taken out in this country, before a patent for the same invention is obtained in a foreign country. Re Winan's patent, 4 L. R., P. C., 93; 8 Moo. P. C., N. S., 306.

A patent by American subjects was taken out in this country, and shortly afterwards in America and France for the same invention. After the expiration of the French patent, and within a few months of the expiration of the American patent, an application was made for a prolongation of the English patent. Such application was refused, as the Judicial Committee would not, on the ground of general policy, recommend a renewal of the English patent after the French patent had been allowed to expire. Ib.

1. A patent was first taken out in America, afterwards in England, and two days after the date of the English patent the invention was patented in France. The French patent was allowed to drop. On an application for a prolongation of the English patent:—Held, that although the Judicial Committee might have jurisdiction under 15 & 16 Vict., c. 83, s. 25, to entertain the application, yet on the ground of public policy, as the French patent had been allowed to expire, they would not, in the exercise of the discretion vested in them, recommend the extension of the term of the English patent. Re Blake's patent, 4 L. R., P. C., 535; 9 Moo. P. C., N. S., 373.

2. An English patent may be renewed though a foreign one has been taken out and allowed to expire. Re Adair's patent, 6 L. R., App. Cas., 176; 29 W. R. 746.

V. ACCOUNT OF PROFITS.

3. In taking an account of the profits and loss of the working of a patent, the patentee is entitled to charge, as part of his expenses, for loss of time in endeavouring to bring the invention into general use. Re Newton's patent, 14 Moo. P. C. 156; 10 W. R. 731.

4. The accounts produced at the hearing of an application for extension of a patent were unsatisfactory, owing to the non-production of the books. The committee recommending a prolongation of the term of the letters patent, directed a proper account of the profits and losses of the patent to be verified by affidavit, with an explanation accounting for the non-production of the books, to be laid before the Attorney-General, subject to which they extended the term. Re Markwick's patent, 13 Moo. P. C. 310; 8 W. R. 333.

5. In calculating whether any profit has been obtained through or by means of a patent, it is correct to deduct, in the first place, beyond the cost price, a fair manufacturer's profit on the articles sold; and the mere preference of the market obtained by the manufacturer is not to be deemed a profit derived from the patent. Re Galloway's patent, 7 Jur. 453.

6. The account of profit and loss of the patentee in working a patent ought to be clear and precise; and it is the duty of a patentee, if engaged in any other business, or as a manufacturer of his own invention, to keep the accounts of the patent and the manufacture separately. Re Betts' patent, 1 Moo. P. C., N. S., 49; 9 Jur., N. S., 137; 11 W. R. 221; 7 L. T., N. S., 577.

If a patentee is also manufacturer of his patent article, in taking account of the profits of the patent he is entitled to deduct his profits as a manufacturer. Ib.

7. The most unreserved and clear statement of the patentee's remuneration is an indispensable condition for extension. Re Hill's patent, 1 Moo. P. C., N. S., 258; 9 Jur., N. S., 1209; 12 W. R. 25; 9 L. T., N. S., 101.

The patentee was also manufacturer and sold the patented articles. In his accounts he deducted two-thirds as profits from the manufacture and sale, and only credited the patent with one-third:—Held, to be an unreasonable deduction. Ib.

Although law expenses by the patentee in maintaining his patent rights are allowed in deduction of his profits, yet where the patentee compromised suits and gave up costs to which he had an apparent title, a deduction on that head will not be allowed. Ib.

8. The books of a petitioner in respect to the profits having been lost during his bankruptcy, the account of profit and of loss was taken upon his own evidence. Re Hutchinson's patent, 14 Moo. P. C. 364.

9. To entitle a patentee to a prolongation of the term of letters patent, he must satisfactorily establish the amount of his profits. Re Trotman's patent, 1 L. R., P. C., 118.

A patentee did not manufacture or sell the patented article (ship anchors), but granted licences to ironsmiths to manufacture, from whom he received royalties. On an application by him for an extension of the term of the letters patent on the ground of inadequate remuneration, the accounts produced of his own expenditure in carrying on the patent being unsatisfactory, and no accounts given of the profits derived by the licences, a prolongation of the letters patent was refused, first, as the patentee's accounts were unsatisfactory, and, secondly, from the patentee having so dealt with his patent rights as to deprive him of the power of showing the amount of profit derived from the working of the patent. Ib.

Licences stand, with respect to the profits, in the same position as assignees of the patent. Ib.

10. A patentee, residing in America, for the purpose of getting the patented article into general use in England, arranged with an agent in England, and in consideration gave him a moiety of the royalties:—Held, that in estimating the profits of the patentee derived from the patent, such moiety was to be deducted. Re Poole's patent, 1 L. R., P. C., 514.

11. The Judicial Committee will refuse to enter upon accounts in a patent case if they have not been filed as required by the 9th rule. Re Johnson's and Atkinson's patents, 5 L. R., P. C., 87.

12. A patentee, in order to obtain a prolongation of the term of a patent, must satisfy the Judicial Committee by his accounts, in a manner which admits of no controversy, what has been the amount of remuneration which, in every point of view, the invention has brought him, and it it his duty to frame the accounts in such a shape as to leave no doubt as to what the remuneration has been that he has received. Re Sawby's patent, 19 W. R. 513; 7 Moo. P. C., N. S., 182.

When the patentee is also the manufacturer, the profits which he makes as a manufacturer, although not strictly profits of the patent, must yet be taken into consideration in estimating the amount of his remuneration. Ib.

Therefore, when a patentee was also the manufacturer of the patented article, and was himself necessarily engaged in fixing and putting up the patented apparatus, and the accounts for such services were so intermixed as to render it impracticable on their face to separate the items of profit received from the patent, and the receipts were large, and even on the balance alleged a considerable gain to the patentee, the Judicial Committee held that such accounts were unsatisfactory, and refused an application for a prolongation of the patent, but without costs. Ib.

1. A prolongation of the term of letters patent for seven years was granted, the invention being a meritorious one, and of great value as a raw material for the manufacture of paper; no profit having been made either by the inventor or his assignees. The statement of accounts furnished being primâ facie satisfactory, the petitioners were allowed to prove the merits of the invention before going into the accounts. Re Houghton's patent, 3 L. R., P. C., 461; 7 Moo. P. C., N. S., 309.

2. A patentee, seeking the grace and favour of the Crown, in applying for an extension of the term of letters patent, is bound to bring his accounts before the committee in such a shape as to leave no doubt what the remuneration has been that he has received from the patent. Re Clarke's patent, 3 L. R., P. C., 421; 7 Moo. P. C., N. S., 255.

A petition for extension, and the accounts furnished by the patentee not containing sufficiently full and accurate information in respect to the patent, or the remuneration received by him, the Judicial Committee declined to recommend a prolongation of the term. Ib.

3. An account of profits and loss filed by a patentee on his application for a prolongation of the term of letters patent, being primâ facie unsatisfactory, the Judicial Committee directed the question of accounts to be taken before considering the merits of the invention. Re Wield's patent, 4 L. R., P. C., 89; 8 Moo. P. C., N. S., 300.

The accounts of the patent not being satisfactorily explained, the application for extension of the term of the patent was refused. Ib.

4. Where a patentee, whether English or foreign, has obtained foreign patents, they should be stated to the Privy Council, and the fullest information afforded as to the profits thereof. Re Adair's patent, 6 L. R., App. Cas., 176; 29 W. R. 746.

A patentee should preserve the clearest evidence of everything which has been paid and received on account of the patent. Whether or not his remuneration has been adequate, his furnishing a satisfactory account is a condition precedent to his obtaining an extension of his term. Ib.

5. Circumstances showing a want of adequate remuneration, an extension of the term of letters patent granted for six years. Re Carr's patent, 4 L. R., P. C., 539; 9 Moo. P. C., N. S., 379.

In estimating the profits derived from the patent, the Judicial Committee will take into consideration a deduction from the profits of the patent for the personal expenses of the patentee for the exclusive devotion of his time in bringing the patent into practical operation and public notice. Ib.

6. Application, under 14 & 15 Vict., c. 99, s. 6, by parties who opposed an extension, for production and inspection of the petitioner's accounts previously to the hearing of the petition, refused, with costs. Re Bridson's patent, 7 Moo. P. C. 499.

VI. OPPOSITION TO.

1. Proceedings on, 5559.
2. Contents of Petition, 5559.
3. Costs, 5560.

1. Proceedings on.

7. Practice respecting hearing of counsel where several parties enter caveats. Re Woodcroft's patent, 3 Moo. P. C. 171.

8. An application by the Lords of the Admiralty to enter a caveat, and be heard against a petition for an extension, such caveat not having been filed within the time required by the rules of the Privy Council Office, refused, as the Attorney-General was present to watch the interests of the Government. Re Smith's patent, 7 Moo. P. C. 133.

In cases for an extension, the Attorney-General represents the Government and the public generally. Ib.

9. The Judicial Committee will not permit a party to be heard in opposition to an application for a prolongation, unless a caveat has been entered in his name. Re Lowe's patent, 8 Moo. P. C. 1.

Any one of the public has a right to enter a caveat, and to be heard in opposition. Ib.

10. A petitioner inserted the last advertisement of his intention to petition for a prolongation on the 24th May, but did not present his petition until the 5th June. The registrar refused to receive the petition, as being too late. Upon a special application for that purpose, it appearing that the delay arose from a mistake of the petitioner's agent, an order was made admitting the petition. A caveat had been entered:—Held, that as the party filing the caveat was interested in sustaining the objection to the reception of the petition, notice of the application must be served on him. Re Hutchinson's patent, 14 Moo. P. C. 364.

11. It is sufficient, prior to tendering evidence of instances of anticipation, to state the grounds of objection to the extension of letters patent without stating all the particulars of those objections. Re Ball's patent, 4 L. R., App. Cas., 171; 48 L. J., P. C., 24; 27 W. R. 477.

2. Contents of Petition.

12. As the recommendation to the Crown for the prolongation of the term of letters patent is a matter of discretion in the Judicial Committee, it is imperatively necessary that the petition for a prolongation should state fairly and fully everything relating to the patent;

an omission to do so is fatal to the application. Re Pitman's patent, 4 L. R., P. C., 84; 8 Moo. P. C., N. S., 293.

When a petition omitted to state that the patent was, in fact, a communication from a foreigner living abroad, who had previously to the English patent patented the invention in America, and that the American patent had expired, though afterwards renewed in America, the Judicial Committee refused the application. Ib.

3. Costs.

1. Opposition to an application for extension or confirmation is rather encouraged than otherwise, and upon a successful opposition the opposer's costs will, in general, be allowed. Re Honiball's patent, 9 Moo. P. C. 378; 3 Eq. Rep. 225.

2. When a petition is abandoned, it is not necessary that the opposers should serve the petitioners with notice of their intended application to the Court for costs of opposition. Re Bridson's patent, 7 Moo. P. C. 499.

Costs given to all the opposers upon petitioner's abandoning petition before hearing. Ib.

3. On a petition for prolongation, a day was fixed for hearing. Objections were lodged against an extension. Before the hearing, the petitioners abandoned the prosecution of the petition, and the costs of the opposition were allowed. Re Hornby's patent, 7 Moo. P. C. 503.

4. The Judicial Committee will exercise a discretion as to the allowance of an opposer's costs upon an abandoned petition for extension of letters patent. Re Milner's patent, 9 Moo. P. C. 39.

A gross sum allowed for costs of opposers, instead of referring their costs to taxation. Ib.

An affidavit of merits by the petitioner, upon the question of costs, rejected, as no copy had been served upon the opposers. Ib.

5. Where there were two opponents to an application for a prolongation of a patent upon substantially the same grounds of objection, the Judicial Committee, upon a successful opposition, allowed a gross sum for the costs of both parties. Re Jones's patent, 9 Moo. P. C. 41.

Opponents' costs directed to be taxed at 100*l.*, and divided between the opponents. Ib.

6. When there were several opponents, on dismissing the petition a lump sum was awarded to the opponents, to be divided pro ratâ for costs. Re Johnson's patent, 4 L. R., P. C., 75; 8 Moo. P. C., N. S., 75.

7. Considerations which induce the Judicial Committee to give costs to bonâ fide opponents in patent cases. Re Wield's patent, 4 L. R., P. C., 89; 8 Moo. P. C., N. S., 300.

IV. Confirmation.

8. The use of an invention in England prior to the date of a patent granted for Scotland:—Held, to invalidate it, and confirmation refused by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83. Re Robinson's patent, 5 Moo. P. C. 65.

9. To entitle a patentee to a confirmation of letters patent, under the stat. 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83, s. 2, the patentee must show that he believed himself the first and original inventor, as, for instance, by evidence of the course of experiments by which he arrived at the knowledge of the invention. Re Card's patent, 6 Moo. P. C. 207; 12 Jur. 507.

Upon an application for a confirmation of letters patent, it was proved that the patent article was not publicly and generally known prior to the letters patent; but that some persons had systematically used an article identical with the patent article, for several years prior to the grant of the letters patent, and that the subject of the patent was little more than an application of a well-known article in trade; in such circumstances:—Held, by the Judicial Committee, that it was not a case in which the statute was intended to apply, and their lordships refused to recommend the confirmation of the letters patent. Ib.

10. The authority conferred upon the Crown by the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83, s. 2, to confirm letters patent is discretionary in the Judicial Committee, to recommend or not a confirmation. Re Honiball's patent, 9 Moo. P. C. 378; 3 Eq. Rep. 225.

The jurisdiction is one which is most cautiously and sparingly to be exercised, as the effect of a confirmation of letters patent is to give force and validity, by a quasi legislative authority, to a grant of monopoly actually void, and to exclude from the use of the invention not only other subjects of Her Majesty in England, but even the first and original inventor, who may have actually brought it into public, though not into general use, before the patent was taken out. Ib.

Two conditions are required from a petitioner applying for a confirmation, to establish to the satisfaction of the Judicial Committee, first, that before the date of the letters patent (the subject of application) the invention was not publicly and generally used; and, second, that the grantee of such letters patent believed himself the first and original inventor. Ib.

The 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83, s. 2, applies to confirmation of letters patent for an extended term, as the grant of such extended term is a grant of new letters patent, which are subject to the same conditions, and open to the same objections, and entitled to the same advantages as the original letters patent. Ib.

In 1852, an assignee of a patentee obtained an extension of letters patent originally granted in 1838. In 1854, it was determined at a trial in an action for infringement, that the letters patent were invalid by reason of the prior use and sale of the patent article. Upon an application by the assignee of the patentee to the Judicial Committee for a confirmation, under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83, s. 2, of the new letters patent, it was proved that the patentee was not the first inventor, and that the principle had been discovered ten years before the date of the original patent, but that the invention, though publicly known, had not been generally used at the date of the grant of the original letters patent, and that the patentee had notice not only of the original invention, but of the use of such invention. In such circumstances, the Judicial Committee refused to recommend the Crown to confirm the letters patent. Ib.

V. Repeal.

1. In a scire facias to repeal a patent, the venue cannot be changed from Middlesex to any other county. Rex v. Haine, 2 Cox 235.

2. The writ of scire facias to repeal a patent does not issue, nor is the fiat for that purpose granted by the attorney-general as of course, semble. Re Prosser, 11 Beav. 306; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 35.

3. A patentee applied to the Court of Chancery to stay all proceedings on a scire facias to repeal the patent, or that a nolle prosequi might be entered, on the ground, first, that the prosecutor was an alien; secondly, that he had no special interest in the patent or the repeal of it, but was acting in collusion with other persons, with a view to oppress the patentee; and, thirdly, that the security for costs given by the prosecutor was improper and insufficient:—Held, that the Court had no authority to interfere in the matter. Reg. v. Prosser, 11 Beav. 306; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 35; 13 Jur. 71.

In the ordinary course of proceeding upon a writ of scire facias to repeal letters patent, it is within the discretion of the Attorney-General to determine upon what or whose information, or on what terms or security, he will permit the action to be prosecuted, and the exercise of his discretion, in the conduct of the action, is not subject to the control of the Court in which the proceeding takes place. Ib.

An illegal monopoly is a public grievance, and the Crown having been informed of such a grievance, and having the power and duty to remove it, if it be such, ought not to be disabled from directing the necessary proceedings to ascertain the truth, because the information was given by an alien, or by a person who had no special or direct interest in the matter, or was endeavouring to promote the interest of some other person, or was actuated by some improper motive. Ib.

The practice of requiring security from the prosecutor in a scire facias to repeal a patent is not founded on any law or rule of court, but seems to have been very properly introduced by the authority of the Attorney-General alone, almost within living memory. There is no instance whatever of the Court having interfered upon that subject. Ib.

4. Bill in equity lies to set aside letters patent obtained by fraud. Att.-Gen. v. Vernon, 1 Vern. 277, 370; 2 Ch. Rep. 353.

5. After a judgment in scire facias in the Court of Queen's Bench, annulling letters patent, and directing that they should be restored to the Court of Chancery to be cancelled, the Lord Chancellor has no jurisdiction to stay the execution of the judgment, his duty in cancelling the enrolment being only ministerial. Reg. v. Eastern Archipelago Co., 4 De G. M. & G. 199; 2 Eq. Rep. 513; 2 W. R. 387.

6. A writ of scire facias having issued out of Chancery to repeal letters patent, the patentee presented a petition to the common law side of the court, alleging that the writ contained improper recitals and suggestions, which, if used as a defence in an action for the infringement of a patent, would be inadmissible, and praying that the writ might be quashed or reformed by striking out the objectionable matter. The Ld. Ch. declined to exercise the jurisdiction reserved to him by the 46th section of the 12 & 13 Vict., c. 109, on the ground that by the 39th section jurisdiction in such cases was conferred on the judges of the superior courts of common law, and that they could more satisfactorily dispose of the question of pleading involved in the case. Reg. v. Hancock, 5 De G. M. & G. 332; 3 W. R. 525.

7. Pending a proceeding in scire facias to repeal a patent, the patentee disclaimed a part. The prosecutor still proceeded, and ultimately failed:—Held, that he ought to pay the costs subsequent to the disclaimer. Reg. v. Mill, 14 Beav. 312.

Application for liberty to sue on a bond, given to the clerk of the petty bag for securing costs to the defendant in scire facias to repeal a patent. Ib.

I. IN GENERAL.

8. A patentee of an invention for improved beaters for threshing-machines granted a licence to the defendants to make, manufacture, and sell machines, as described in the specification, for a term of years, and during the period to apply the invention to other machines made, or to be made, paying a royalty of 1*l.* for every threshing-machine manufactured by them, and the like sum for every machine made, or to be made, to which the invention should be wholly or in part applied by them; and they covenanted to affix royalty plates to every new and altered machine which should be manufactured or applied by them:—Held, that the defendants were not intended to pay royalty merely on every threshing-machine, but that the true construction of the licence was, that they were to pay on all beaters manufactured by them according to the patent, and applied to machines originally, or by way of renewal. Goucher v. Clayton, 11 Jur., N. S., 462; 13 L. T., N. S., 111.

9. A patentee agreed with H. that he should be the sole manufacturer under the patent.

This agreement was embodied in a deed, which was prepared by the solicitor of the patentee, H. employing no legal adviser. The deed was not registered in compliance with the Patent Law Amendment Act 1852, s. 35, until after bill filed. Subsequently the patentee granted a right of manufacture to M., who had full notice of the previous agreement with H. The grant to M. was also unregistered:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the patentee could not avail himself of an objection based upon the non-registration of the agreement with H., and that as the grant to M. was also unregistered, M. also was not entitled to take the objection. Hassall v. Wright, 40 L. J., Ch., 145; 10 L. R., Eq., 509; 18 W. R. 821.

Semble, that registration of the assignment of a patent relates back to the date of the assignment, so as to entitle the assignee to maintain a suit to restrain an infringement instituted between the dates of the assignment and the registration. Ib.

1. A., sole patentee, worked a patent with B. for four years under circumstances which constituted a partnership at will between them, B. supplying all the necessary funds, and A. and B. being extensively advertised as joint patentees. A. afterwards left B., and assigned his patent to C. and D., as promoters of a limited company formed to work the patent. An agreement to assign to C. and D., as well as a subsequent assignment to the company, was duly registered. C. and D. had notice that A. and B. had worked the patent together, but relied upon A.'s statement that B.'s interest was only in the manufacture formerly carried on together with A., and that he had no interest in the patent itself. C. and D. searched the register of patents and found no previous assignment by A. registered. The company was formed with A., C., and D. as the only directors. On an action by the company for an injunction against B:—Held, that B. had acquired a right to work the patent independently of the legal title which was vested in the company. Kenny's Patent Buttonholing Co., v. Somervell and Lutwyche, 26 W. R. 786; 38 L. T., N. S., 878.

Held, also, that all the directors having notice of some claim on the part of B., the company had notice of B.'s right, and that the registering of a company, and registering a legal assignment of the patent to the company, could not deprive B. of this right, and, therefore, that no injunction would be granted. Ib.

On a counter-claim by B:—Held, that B. had not acquired such a right in the patent itself as to entitle him to have the company declared trustees for him of a moiety of the patent. Ib.

2. Where the owner of a patent manufactures and sells the patented article in a foreign country as well as in England, the sale of the article in one country implies a licence to use it in the other. But if he has assigned his patent in either country, the article cannot be sold so as to defeat the rights of the assignee. Betts v. Willmott, 6 L. R., Ch., 239; 25 L. T., N. S., 188; 19 W. R. 369.

3. The defendants, an English company, who were owners of patents in England and Belgium for an invention for ornamenting glass, granted to the plaintiffs, a company incorporated and carrying on business in Belgium, a licence to employ the invention for making glass at their factory in Belgium and not elsewhere. By the terms of the licence, all points in difference were to be submitted to arbitration in Belgium. The plaintiffs assuming their right to do so, sold in England goods manufactured by them under the licence, whereupon the defendants issued circulars warning persons in the trade that the sale in England of glass articles made abroad by employing their inventions, was a violation of their English patent. On application for an injunction to restrain the issue of such circulars:—Held, that the licence did not imply a right to sell goods made by the plaintiffs under the licence in any country where the sale would be a violation of the patent law of the country. Société Anonyme des Manufactures de Glaces v. Tilghman's Patent Sand Blast Co., 25 L. R., Ch. D., 1; 49 L. T. 451; 32 W. R. 71; 53 L. J., Ch., 1.

Quære, whether the plaintiffs if assignees of the Belgian patent would have had the right to sell in England goods manufactured under that patent in Belgium. Ib.

4. A patentee who grants a licence cannot without derogating from his grant publish advertisements and circulars which have the effect of deterring usual customers or the public from dealing with his licencee. Clarke v. Adie, 21 W. R. 456. Affirmed 21 W. R. 764,

5. Injunction granted to restrain an infringement of a patent, at the suit of the exclusive licencees of the patent; their co-plaintiffs, the owners of the patent, having, since bill filed, assigned all their interest in the patent. Renard v. Levinstein, 13 W. R. 382; 11 L. T., N. S., 766; 2 Hem. & M. 628; 5 N. R. 301.

6. A contract for the sale of a patent specifically enforced at the suit of the vendor, although all that he required was the payment of the purchase money. Cogent v. Gibson, 33 Beav. 557.

7. Joint owners of a patent are considered as partners, and where a party had been induced by the fraud of one of such joint owners to purchase from him, by an agreement to which all were parties, the use of a patent right, which turned out to be of no value:—Held, that each of the parties to the contract, one of whom had no interest in the patent at the time of the contract, was liable to refund the whole of the purchase-money fraudulently obtained. Lovell v. Hicks, 2 Y. & Coll. 481; 6 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 85. See S. C. 2 Y. & Coll. 46; 5 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 101.

Quære, as to effect on right of plaintiff to recover the whole from each, had it been proved that he knew that three of the parties to the contract were, by special agreement, entitled in severalty to different proportions of the profits of the patent, and that one of them had no interest in it whatever. Ib.

Semble, that joint owners of a patent are answerable for losses occasioned by their co-adventurers only to the extent of their respective shares. S. C. 2 Y. & Coll. 46; 5 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 101.

8. Agreement to share a patent: 50*l.* down, 50*l.* on the 30th October, 100*l.* on the 30th November, and "as soon as possible, but not later than the 31st December, 300*l.* to be applied in taking out foreign patents." The first 200*l.* was paid and received in payment, though not at the precise periods at which the different sums were to be paid, but the 300*l.* was not paid on the 31st December, nor by the 8th January, to which day the patentee extended the time for payment, that being the last day for enrolling the specification:—Held, that time was of the essence of the contract, it being the object of the parties to procure the foreign patents before the specification was enrolled, and that the patentee was at liberty to rescind the contract. Payne v. Banner, 7 Jur 1051; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 227.

1. An agreement was entered into between four persons who were interested in certain patents and inventions relating to gutta-percha, that all patents taken out, or in the course of being taken, or intended to be taken out, or that might at any time thereafter be taken out by any or either of them, or on account of and for the benefit of any or either of them in relation to the preparation and application of gutta-percha, or the manufacture of any article therefrom, should be assigned to trustees, and held for their common benefit. Subsequently one of the parties took out a patent for "improvements in apparatus and machinery for giving shape and configuration to plastic substances," and refused to assign the patent to the trustees, alleging that it was not comprised in the agreement:—Held, that the patent, so far as it related to gutta-percha, was subject to the trusts of the agreement, and that it could not be treated as not being so, because it was for machinery which might be applied to the manufacture of articles of gutta-percha, and was not for the manufacture of any such articles. Bewley v. Hancock, 6 De G. M. & G. 391; 2 Jur., N. S., 289; 4 W. R. 334.

2. The plaintiff and the defendant entered into an agreement for the joint working of letters patent for an invention. The agreement was for experiments being made in the first instance at the costs of the plaintiff, but under the management of the defendant, after which, if successful to the satisfaction of the plaintiff expressed in writing, the defendant was to be employed by him at a salary and percentage on the profits of the concern. The agreement provided further stipulations as to the working of the concern. The experiments were made, and proved that the invention could be worked on the stipulated terms. The defendant neglected then to work the concern according to his part of the agreement, and the plaintiff worked it at a loss. The defendant absconded. The plaintiff filed a bill to set aside the agreement:—Held, on demurrer, that the plaintiff's remedy was at law, and the demurrer must be allowed. Osborne v. Jullion, 26 L. J., Ch., 6; 4 W. R. 767.

3. D. had verbally agreed with C. to be supplied by C. with machines constructed according to patents of which C. was the owner, and to pay royalties for the use of such machines, and for the use of any machines supplied to him by anybody else which embodied the principle of C.'s patents. D. was afterwards supplied by S. with machines, on the use of which C. claimed a royalty as embodying the principle in his patents, and he also charged D. with an infringement of the patents. D. defended himself against the claim, denying, first, that the agreement amounted to a license; secondly, that the patents were valid; and thirdly, that there had been an infringement:—Held, that the verbal agreement must be treated as a licence. Crossley v. Dixon, 10 H. L. Ca. 293; 9 Jur., N. S., 607; 32 L. J., Ch., 617; 11 W. R. 716; 8 L. T., N. S., 260.

II. OF FUTURE PATENTS.

4. An agreement by the vendor of a patent to assign to the purchaser all future patent rights, which the vendor may hereafter acquire of a like nature to the patent sold, is not contrary to public policy. Printing and Numerical Registering Co. v. Sampson, 19 L. R., Eq., 462; 44 L. J., Ch., 705; 32 L. T., N. S., 354; 23 W. R. 463.

An agreement by which the defendant contracted to sell to the plaintiff company his share of several letters patent relating to inventions applicable to the mechanism or apparatus employed for numbering and printing tickets consecutively, and for containing and delivering tickets or continuous lengths of paper, or other similar materials, contained a recital that it had been agreed that the company should purchase the shares in the several letters patent, and all patent rights and rights of a like nature, of the vendors, with respect to the inventions described in the letters patent, or the specifications thereof or otherwise relating to the mechanism or apparatus employed for numbering and printing tickets consecutively, or to the containing and delivering tickets or continuous lengths of paper or other similar material, and any improvements thereof. Subsequently, the defendant obtained letters patent for an invention of "an improved rotary and multiplicate printing and numbering machine," whereby, according to the specification, strips or lengths of paper, card, or other material could be continuously printed with any desired subject matter, and consecutive numbers impressed thereon; such strips being applicable to the manufacture of railway and other tickets, which required that certain subject matter with consecutive numbers should be printed or impressed thereon:—Held, that the defendant's patent, being a combination of a printing machine, a perforating machine, and a numbering machine, and an invention to produce a result of a like nature or of a similar kind to that which was produced by the invention which he had sold to the company, came within the agreement to assign future patent rights of a like nature, and the defendant was decreed to execute an assignment to the plaintiff company. Ib.

III. ACCOUNT.

5. A patentee filed a bill against a person whom he had licensed to use his invention, and the partner of the latter, for an account on the footing of the license, and for an injunction to restrain the defendants from using the invention in case they should dispute his right to the payments reserved by the licence on the ground that the licence had become void. A general demurrer to the bill was overruled. Haddan v. Smith, 16 Sim. 42; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 43; 11 Jur. 959.

1. E. being owner of one-third of an American patent assigned to N., in consideration that N. would pay to him one-fifth of all profits to arise from the sales of the invention in America, either alone or coupled with improvements patented in England only, for which profits N. was to account, N. retaining all control over the granting of licences, and the taking of accounts. N. made this bargain as agent of a company, for whom he was trustee of the remaining two-thirds of the patent, and of certain other improvements patented in England, and he afterwards became sole licencee and manufacturer of the invention in England, at a fixed price higher than cost price, but was bound to manufacture for the company only. The company granted to G. an exclusive right to sell the invention in America, and directed N. to sell machines to him at certain prices (which were higher than those paid by the company to N.), in consideration that G. would pay to the company one-half the net profits made in America:—Held, first, that G. was not liable to account to E. for profits; secondly, that N. was not liable to account for profits made by him as manufacturer; thirdly, that the company was bound to account to G. for one-fifth of all the profits which they had received from G.,—viz., both in respect of the prices charged to G. for the machines, and also of the moiety of the net profits made by G. in America. Edwards v. Normandy, 12 W. R. 548; 3 N. R. 562.

2. An agreement was entered into between K. and P. that K. should take out a patent for purifying paraffine, and assign it to P.; that P. thereupon would work it for fourteen years, if it could be so long worked with profit; would not purify paraffine by any other process, and would pay to K. a royalty upon all purified paraffine sold; that P. would keep accurate accounts of all paraffine purified according to the patent, render them half-yearly and verify them, and that the provisions of this agreement, and all other provisions usual and proper in such deeds, should be incorporated in the deed of assignment of the patent, such deed to be prepared by counsel to be agreed on by the solicitors of the parties. The patent was taken out, and P. commenced working under it, but shortly afterwards abandoned the use of the process, alleging that it could not be worked at a profit, and refused to pay any royalty. K. thereupon brought an action for royalties, and recovered judgment. Pending this action, P. gave notice to determine the agreement, because the invention could not be worked to a profit. H., after obtaining judgment, filed his bill, asking for an account of subsequent royalties, an injunction to restrain the defendant from purifying paraffine under any other process, and for a reference to chambers to settle a proper deed of assignment, or, if the Court should hold the agreement to have been determined, then for relief against the defendant as an infringer of the patent:—Held, that in a case of this nature it was in the discretion of the Court whether it would direct an account, or leave the parties to their remedy at law, and that, the account being only a part of an agreement which the Court could not wholly enforce, the plaintiff ought to be left to his remedy at law, and that for the same reason the execution of the assignment ought not to be decreed. Kornot v. Potter, 3 De G. F. & J. 447.

3. A patentee agreed with a machine maker, that the machine maker should make machines according to the patent and sell them, taking a certain sum upon each machine for himself, and paying to the patentee as a royalty the amount charged for the machines above that sum:—Held, that the patentee could not maintain a suit in equity for an account against the machine maker as agent. Moxon v. Bright, 4 L. R., Ch., 292; 20 L. T., N. S., 961.

In one case the machine maker received a sum of money for the patentee:—Held, that this was not sufficient to support the suit, and that the patentee's remedy was at law. Ib.

4. When an assignment is made of a share of profits (arising, e.g., from the working of a patent by licencees) the assignee is entitled to an account from the licencee, but the account must be taken once for all in the presence of all the parties interested. The licencee is not bound to account to the assignor and to each assignee of a share separately. And the assignee who asks for an account must place himself in the position of the assignor by offering to pay to the accounting party anything which may be due to him by the assignor. An account of profits will not be directed if it is clear that no profits have been made. Bergmann v. Macmillan, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 423; 44 L. T. 794; 29 W. R. 890.

5. A patentee assigned letters patent to A. and B., who covenanted with him that they, their executors, administrators, and assigns, would use their best endeavours to introduce the invention by granting licences or working the patent or selling it, and that the patentee should be entitled to receive 5*l.* per cent. of all net profits, whether arising from royalties, sale, or otherwise, which should be received by A. and B. or the survivor of them, or the executors or administrators of the survivor, their or his assigns, and that an account of profits should be rendered yearly to the patentee, and his share of profits paid to him by A. and B. and the survivor of them, and the executors or administrators of such survivor, their or his assigns, with a proviso that after a sale had been made of the patent the interest of the patentee in the profits should cease, and a final account be come to. A. and B. had taken the assignment with a view of forming a company to work the patent. The company was formed and the patent made over to them. The patentee sued the company for an account of profits. The company demurred, on the ground that there was no privity between them and the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff's right, if any, was against A. and B. only:—Held, that the plaintiff could sue the company for an account of profits, for that the stipulations of the assignment to A. and B. amounted to a contract that the owners for the time being of the patent should account for and pay to the plaintiff a share of profits unless a sale within the meaning of the deed was effected, and that no person taking the patent with notice of this contract could refuse to give effect to it. Werderman v. Société Générale d'Electricité, 19 L. R., Ch. D., 246.

IV. ESTOPPEL.

1. N. obtained a patent for the application of the principle of smelting iron by the use of heated air applied to furnaces. B. obtained a licence from him to use this process, on the payment of 1*s.* per ton on the iron thus smelted. Disputes, and then litigation, arose between them, and it was agreed, by an instrument dated 11th November 1833 (which recited the previous circumstances), that both parties should withdraw their law processes; that, "in consideration of the present payment of 400*l.*, to be accepted by N. in full of 1*s.* per ton on the whole iron smelted from the erection of B.'s works up to the 11th day of November current, and in consideration of the payment of 1*s.* per ton upon the whole iron which shall be smelted from the 11th of November current till the expiry of the letters patent, by the use of heated air, in any of the modes heretofore applied, or in any other mode falling under the said patent," N. should grant to B. a licence, which further on in the agreement was described to relate to "the application or use of heated air in any of the modes heretofore practised at B.'s works, or in any other mode falling under the description in the said patent, or in the specification thereof." N. afterwards instituted a suit to compel B. to perform this agreement. B. instituted a cross suit to suspend N.'s proceedings, on the ground that the process of smelting by heated air used at B.'s works did not fall within the patent:—Held, that after this agreement, B. could not set up such a defence to the claim of N. Baird v. Neilson, 8 Cl. & F. 726.

2. Validity of patent as between parties contracting to work it and the patentee. Muntz v. Foster, 8 Jur. 206. Affirming S. C. nom. Muntz v. Grenfell, 7 Jur. 121. And see S. C. at law, 6 Man. & Gr. 734 7 Scott N. R. 471; 13 L. J., N. S., C. P., 1; 7 Jur. 1110; 1 D & L. 737, 942.

3. D. had verbally agreed with C. to be supplied by C. with machines constructed according to patents of which C. was the owner, and to pay royalties for the use of such machines, and for the use of any machines supplied to him by anybody else which embodied the principle of C.'s patents. D. was afterwards supplied by S. with machines, on the use of which C. claimed a royalty as embodying the principle in his patents, and he also charged D. with an infringement of the patents. D. defended himself against the claim, denying, first, that the agreement amounted to a licence; secondly, that the patents were valid; and thirdly, that there had been an infringement:—Held, that the verbal agreement must be treated as a licence; that D., while he continued to act under that licence, could not dispute the validity of the patents. He can only be allowed to contend that the second machine does not embody the principle of the patent. Crossley v. Dixon, 10 H. L. Ca. 293; 9 Jur., N. S., 607; 32 L. J., Ch., 617; 11 W. R. 716; 8 L. T., N. S., 260; 1 N. R. 540.

4. The rule that an assignee of a patent is estopped from disputing its validity does not prevent his partner from separately raising that defence to an action for infringement. Heugh v. Chamberlain, 25 W. R. 742.

5. Upon the dissolution of a partnership between the plaintiffs and the defendant, the defendant assigned to the plaintiffs all his interest in a patent which formed part of the assets:—Held, that the defendant could not afterwards set up the invalidity of the patent as against the plaintiffs. Chamberlain v. Crichley, 33 Beav. 374.

6. An agreement to purchase a licence to use a patent will not, in equity, preclude a party from disproving its validity. Baxter v. Combe, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 284.

7. A licencee under another's patent is not estopped thereby from contesting the novelty of such patent. Dangerfield v. Jones, 13 L. T., N. S., 142.

8. A patentee brought an action for damages for infringement against a certain firm, who gave judgment by consent before declaration, and immediately took a licence to use the patent for a term. On a bill being filed by the patentee, after the expiration of the licence, to restrain a further infringement of his patent by the defendants in the action, and certain other persons who had joined the firm after the date of the judgment:—Held, upon motion for decree, that the defendants in the suit were not estopped, either by the licence or by the judgment, from denying the validity of the patent. Goucher v. Clayton, 11 Jur., N. S., 107; 34 L. J., Ch., 239; 13 W. R. 336; 11 L. T., N. S., 732; 5 N. R. 360.

9. The fact of a patent having been found invalid at law upon proceedings between the patentee and third parties, is no answer to a suit, based upon the same patent, for an injunction and consequent relief against a licencee who has covenanted to pay royalties, and is selling the invention, contrary to his covenant, without payment of the royalties. Grover and Baker Sewing Machine Co. v. Millard, 8 Jur., N. S., 714.

10. A licencee under a patent cannot, in any way, question its validity during the continuance of his licence. But he may show that what he has done (in respect of which patent royalties are claimed from him) does not fall within the limits of the patent, but is something extraneous to it. Clarke v. Adie (No. 2), 2 L. R., App. Cas., 423; 46 L. J., Ch., 598; 39 L. T., N. S., 1; 26 W. R. 45. Affirming 3 L. R., Ch. D., 134; 24 W. R. 1007; 35 L. T., N. S., 349.

A licencee under a patent is in a situation analogous to a tenant, who, during the tenancy, cannot dispute the title of the lessor to any of the land held under the lease; but who is, nevertheless, at liberty to show that part of the land he actually occupies is really not comprised within the lease, but belongs to himself under some other right. Ib.

11. A. and B entered into partnership for the purpose of working a patent taken out by B., the partnership deed providing that the patent rights should belong solely to B. During the continuance of the partnership the partners issued circulars asserting the validity of the patent, and warning the public against its infringement, although they had been advised that the patent was in fact void. The partnership, having continued for seven years, was dissolved by deed, and A. and B. each proceeded to manufacture the patented articles for himself; but shortly afterwards B. commenced issuing circulars to A.'s customers asserting that A. was infringing his patent and threatening them with legal proceedings in case they purchased from A. A. then moved for an injunction to restrain B. from issuing these circulars, contending that, the patent being void, he had an equal right with B. to manufacture the articles intended to be protected by it:—Held, that although A. had, during the continuance of the partnership, precluded himself from disputing the validity of the patent, yet, after the expiration of the partnership, he was as much at liberty as any other person to dispute its validity, and that B.'s proper course for asserting his claim to the patent was, instead of issuing the circulars complained of, to have instituted proceedings against A. to establish its validity. On B. declining to undertake to institute any such proceedings, the Court granted the injunction. Aemann v. Lund, 43 L. J., Ch., 655; 18 L. R., Eq., 330; 22 W. R. 789; 31 L. T., N. S., 119.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

1. Whether previous user will invalidate, and what user, if any, can be admitted in contravention of the patent right, are different questions, depending one upon the extent of previous knowledge, the other upon the effect of the grant. Caldwell v. Vanvlissengen, 9 Hare 428; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 97; 16 Jur. 115.

Whether there might not be a case of necessary user of an invention, which the Court would not regard as the infringement of a patent, quære. Ib.

The prohibitory words of the patent, which are addressed only to the subjects of this country, are in aid of the grant and not in derogation of it. Ib.

Foreigners in this country, as well as British subjects, are liable to actions for the injury done by their infringing upon the sole and exclusive right granted by the Crown to patentees of inventions in conformity with the law and constitution of this country; and the powers of the Court of Equity, which are founded on the insufficiency of the legal remedy, must be enforced against them as well as against British subjects. Ib.

2. In determining whether a defendant has infringed the plaintiff's patent, the Court will regard the substance of the invention, and if the defendant has infringed the substance of the invention, although he may have made immaterial variations or used mechanical equivalents, an injunction will be granted. Thorn v. Worthing Skating Rink Co., 6 L. R., Ch. D., 415. n.

3. It is sufficient to constitute user of a patented article, that the same sort of benefit, however temporary and indirect, has been in fact derived from it in its ordinary use. It is immaterial whether the use of the article is active or passive. Betts v. Neilson, 11 Jur., N. S., 679; 34 L. J., Ch., 537; 13 W. R. 1028; 12 L. T., N. S., 719; 3 De G. J. & S. 82; 6 N. R. 221.

4. A patentee can sustain an action for an injunction to restrain a threatened infringement of his patent, even if no actual infringement has taken place. Frearson v. Loe, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 48; 27 W. R. 183.

When articles which are the subject of a patent are made without a licence from the patentee simply for the purpose of bonâ fide experiments, those who so make them are not necessarily liable to an action; but when they are made and used for profit, or with the object of obtaining profit even to a limited extent, such making and using constitute an infringement of the patentee's rights, and will be restrained by injunction. Ib.

5. Where a patent is obtained for the use of particular chemical materials for arriving at a particular chemical result, it is no infringement to arrive at the same result by the use of other chemical materials which were not known to be equivalents for the materials mentioned in the specification at the time when the patent was obtained. Badische Anilin und Soda Fabrik v. Levenstein, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 156; 52 L. J., Ch., 704; 48 L. T. 822; 31 W. R. 913.

Where a patent is obtained for a new process for arriving at a known result, it is no infringement to arrive at the same result by a different process. Ib.

Where a patent is obtained for a new result, and one process of arriving at that result is described in the specification, it is an infringement to produce the same result by any process. Ib.

II. WHAT AMOUNTS TO.

1. In Case of Patents for Combinations, 5566.
2. In Other Cases, 5567.

1. In Case of Patents for Combinations.

6. Semble, it is piracy to use part of an improvement, for which a patent has been obtained, in another improvement. Weiss v. Maw, 4 L. J., Ch., 224.

7. A patent for an entire combination is not infringed by a different combination, for the same object, of the same elements, though important, or of equivalents for them, if not a mere colourable evasion or imitation. Curtis v. Platt, 35 L. J., Ch., 852.

Semble, in considering the question of colourable evasion, the Court will look at the novelty of the object of the combination and of the parts combined. Ib.

A plaintiff alleged an infringement of his patent. The patent was granted in 1854, and specified a combination of mechanism applicable to spinning mules; and the first claim was for the novel construction, combination, and application of mechanism hereinbefore described, whereby one-half of the clutch or catch-box, hereinbefore described, or any mechanical equivalent therefor, is connected or acts upon cams or other similar parts of mechanism direct. The defendant's patent, granted in 1860, specified a combination of mechanism which embodied the leading idea of the plaintiff's patent, and by which one-half of a clutch-box was made to act upon cams direct, and he adopted some of the elements combined by the plaintiff, but he disposed them in a different manner. These were important parts of the prior combination, and, though old, the mechanical contrivances were new in respect of the particular mode in which the plaintiff applied them; and the immediate object of their combination by him was new—viz., to make a catch-box on cams direct. The effect brought about by the direct action of catch-box on the cams had long previously been produced, but less advantageously, by other contrivances of various kinds. The defendant's mode of combination effected the common object of each patent in a more beneficial manner than it was or could be effected by the mode of combination specified in the plaintiff's patent, and it displayed an equal amount of inventive genius:—Held, first, that the plaintiff's claim was limited to the entire combination claimed, as before described in his specification. Ib.

Held, secondly, that the defendant's combination was not a mere colourable evasion, and that there was no infringement. Ib.

1. In a suit to restrain an infringement of a patent, the Court directed four issues to be tried at law, one being, whether the invention was a new manufacture. The judge, in the course of the trial of the issues, expressed his opinion that a question of law would arise, whether there was upon the facts a sufficiency of invention to warrant the granting of a patent. The judge, nevertheless, went on with the trial, and put two issues to the jury: "Is the invention new?" and, "Is it a substantial improvement?" The jury found for the plaintiff in the affirmative upon both issues. Upon the cause coming back to equity Romilly, M. R., took up the point of law reserved, without considering the verdict of the jury, and, on the motion of the defendant, granted a new trial:—Held, on appeal, that the judge in equity ought to have considered the verdict of the jury, and that had he done so, the only point of law remaining would have been this: whether a combination of things previously well known, which combination could be rightfully denominated a substantial improvement, could be the subject of a patent? the answer to which must have been in the affirmative. Spencer v. Jack, 10 L. T., N. S., 242; 1 N. R. 114.

2. When a combination of instruments is the invention patented, an infringement of the patent must be an infringement of the combination. Dudgeon v. Thompson, 3 L. R., App. Cas., 34.

3. A patent for a combination of several improvements is not infringed by using a combination of some only of those improvements. Clark v. Adie (No. 1), 10 L. R., Ch., 667; 33 L. T., N. S., 295; 23 W. R. 898.

The plaintiff, who was assignee of a patent for a machine for clipping horses, made a new machine for the same purpose, for which he did not take out a patent. The plaintiff's machine was very unlike the patented machine, the general combination of the parts of the latter machine not being copied, but a subordinate combination of some of the parts (not expressly or impliedly claimed as a distinct invention in the specification of the patentee) being embodied in the plaintiff's machine. The defendant made and sold clipping machines in exact imitation of the plaintiff's machine:—Held, that the patent did not protect the subordinate combination; that the defendant had not infringed the patent, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to an injunction against the defendant. Ib.

4. In a patent for an arrangement and a combination of parts so as to form an entire machine, and not for any particular part of the machine, protection will not be given to a particular part, the advantages of which are altogether collateral to the invention for which protection is claimed by the specification, and which would not in itself be patentable. Parkes v. Stevens, 8 L. R., Eq., 358; 38 L. J., Ch., 627; 17 W. R. 846.

Therefore protection being claimed by the specification of a patent for improvements in spherical gas lamps for railway stations and public places, for "the arrangement and combination of parts hereinbefore described and represented in the drawings annexed, in the manufacture of railway station and other lamps":—Held, that the use by another of a sliding spherical door for spherical lamps, which was a feature in the patentee's lamps, and one of the parts described in his specification, was no infringement of his patent. Ib.

5. Though the manufacture in this country of the several parts of a patented machine, and the exportation of those parts, may not be an infringement of the patent, the machine being the novelty, and the parts being old, it is otherwise where the part exported is itself the patented invention. Goucher v. Clayton, 11 Jur., N. S., 462; 13 L. T., N. S., 115.

6. A manufacturer who professes to sell to the public a machine under his own name, as one with all the newest improvements, will not be restrained from selling it on an allegation that it is an infringement of the plaintiffs' patent for a machine which was an old machine, but which had not the modern improvements to it. Willcox and Gibbs Sewing Machine Co. v. Wood, 20 L. T., N. S., 10.

2. In Other Cases.

7. The plaintiffs were patentees of a stopper for stoppering bottles containing aerated waters, which was described in their specification as being made "of hard wood, having a greater specific gravity than water, such as lignum vitæ, or other suitable material." The object gained by the patent was that, in filling the bottles in an inverted position, the stopper, which had been thrust into the bottle, would sink of its own weight into the neck, where it would be retained by the gases in the bottle and so stopper it. The defendant obtained a patent for a stopper of wood, originally of less specific gravity than water, to which he affixed a metal clip, which pulled the stopper down till the bottle was filled. The clip was then removed and used in filling other bottles in the same way. There was evidence that the defendant's stopper became by immersion of greater specific gravity than water:—Held, that the defendant's stopper was a colourable imitation of that of the plaintiffs, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction. Barrett v. Vernon, 25 W. R. 343; 35 L. T., N. S., 755.

1. S. took out a patent for an improvement in machinery used for roving cotton. His specification appeared to claim the discovery of the application of the principle of centrifugal force for such a purpose, but he filed a disclaimer, declaring that he intended to claim only the application of centrifugal force in the particular manner described in the specification:—Held, that taking these two instruments together they sustained the patent. Seed v. Higgins, 8 H. L. Ca. 550; 30 L. J., Q. B., 314.

The particular manner described was by the use of "a weight." The defendant employed a machine similar in many respects, but though using weight, or pressure occasioned by weight, as a force, not using "a weight":—Held, that this did not amount to an infringement of the patent. Ib.

2. In a patent for "improvements in instruments for controlling by sound the transmission of electric currents, and the reproduction of corresponding sounds at a distance," the patentee claimed (1) "In an instrument for transmitting electric impulses by sound a diaphragm or tympan of mica, substantially as set forth; (2) In an instrument for transmitting electric impulses by sound, the combination with a diaphragm or tympan of electric tension regulators substantially as hereinbefore described for varying the resistance in a closed circuit substantially as set forth." The plaintiffs, the owners of the patent, used, in the instruments which they manufactured and sold, a diaphragm or tympan of mica to receive the air vibrations produced by the voice; below this diaphragm and in its centre, but of smaller size than it, was a cork, below the cork was a piece of platina foil of the same size as the cork, and in a cavity or box below the platina was placed the substance which was used as a tension regulator. The platina foil formed one electrode and the bottom of the box the other, the current of electricity passing from one to the other through the tension regulator. The plaintiffs used for this purpose lampblack, artificially compressed into a button. The defendants made and sold similar instruments, but they dispensed with the mica diaphragm and the cork, the air vibrations being in their instrument received directly on the platina foil, below which was placed the substance used as a tension regulator. The defendants employed loose particles of coke for this purpose. At the date of the plaintiffs' patent it was not known that the instrument would work without the independent mica diaphragm; this was a subsequent discovery. The defendants adduced evidence to show that their instrument would work equally well if the platina foil above the tension regulator was removed and the air vibrations were received directly on the particles of coke:—Held, that in the defendants' instrument the platina foil acted as a diaphragm or tympan, and that the defendants had infringed the plaintiffs' patent. United Telephone Co. v. Harrison, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 720; 51 L. J., Ch., 705; 46 L. T. 620; 30 W. R. 724.

III. BY TRANSHIPMENT OR IMPORTATION OF GOODS.

3. The importation and sale in England of articles manufactured abroad according to the specification of an English patent is an infringement. Elmslie v. Boursier, 9 L. R., Eq., 217; 39 L. J., Ch., 328; 18 W. R. 665.

4. Demurrer to a bill stating that defendants imported barks and sold them to dyers, who used them in infringement of the plaintiff's patent, overruled. Bancroft v. Warder, Romilly's Notes of Cases, 103.

5. A foreign sovereign bought in Germany shells made there, but said to be infringements of an English patent. They were brought to this country in order to be put on board a ship of war belonging to the foreign sovereign, and the patentee obtained an injunction against the agents of the foreign sovereign and the persons in whose custody the shells were, restraining them from removing the shells. The foreign sovereign then applied to be and was made a defendant to the suit. An order was then made by the Master of the Rolls, and affirmed on appeal, that notwithstanding the injunction he should be at liberty to remove the shells. Vavasseur v. Krupp, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 351; 27 W. R. 176; 39 L. T., N. S., 437.

6. Injunction granted against subjects of the kingdom of Holland, to restrain them from using on board their ships, within the dominions of England, without the licence of the plaintiffs, an invention, to the benefit of which the plaintiffs were exclusively entitled under the Queen's patent. Caldwell v. Vanvlissengen, 9 Hare 415; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 97; 16 Jur. 115.

7. Where a patent has been granted in England for a new process for producing more cheaply a chemical product which was previously known, the importation and sale in England of this substance made abroad according to the patented process is an infringement of the patent. Von Heyden v. Neustadt, 14 L. R., Ch. D., 230; 50 L. J., Ch., 126; 42 L. T. 300; 28 W. R. 496.

8. A patent having been granted in this country for making the handling of nitroglycerine less dangerous, by causing it to be absorbed in porous unexplosive substances, a material manufactured abroad by the patent process was imported into British waters:—Held, that such importation, though for the purpose only of transhipment for exportation, and not for the purpose of having the material landed and stored in this country, was a continuing user in this country of the invention, and hence an infringement. Nobel's

At a trial of an action for alleged infringement of a patent by the importation into British waters of a material manufactured abroad according to the patent process, for the purpose of having it transhipped for exportation, evidence was given that the defendants had acted as custom-house agents for the foreign manufacturing firm, in getting the goods landed and stored in this country. Leave was given to the plaintiff, at the hearing of the trial, to amend the statement of claim by alleging this practice, and that such practice was an infringement:—Held, that the acting as custom-house agents for an importing firm was not an infringement of an English patent, although the importation might have been itself an infringement. Ib.

1. B. held an English patent for the manufacture of a combined metal, to be applied as capsules to put on bottles. T. (who resided and carried on the business of a brewer in Scotland) purchased capsules, made according to the process described in the patent, from a foreign manufacturer, and, in Scotland, put these capsules upon his beer bottles, which he then sent to his agents in England for transhipment and exportation. There was no evidence that the beer was sold in England for consumption here:—Held, that though the capsules were put on in Scotland, their user while the beer remained here was a continued user of them which amounted to an infringement of the patent. Neilson v. Betts, 5 L. R., H. L., 1; 40 L. J., Ch., 317; 19 W. R. 1121. Affirming 37 L. J., Ch., 321; 3 L. R., Ch., 429; 16 W. R. 524; 18 L. T., N. S., 159; 6 N. R. 221. And see 3 De G. J. & S. 82; 34 L. J., Ch., 537; 13 W. R. 1028; 12 L. T., N. S., 719; 11 Jur., N. S., 679.

In ordinary cases, the duty of establishing that the thing patented has been pirated lies on the patentee, and courts of equity grant limited orders of inspection for the purpose of enabling him to discharge that duty. Such orders cannot be granted where the piracy alleged has taken place abroad, and semble, that then it becomes the duty of the defendant to give evidence of a negative character to prove (in answer to the primâ facie case made by the patentee) that the process used was of a different character from that which had been patented. Where that negative evidence was not given by the defendant, but positive evidence on the part of the patentee was given by one workman that he had been employed at the foreign manufactory, and there saw the capsules manufactured by a process not distinguishable from that of the patentee:—Held, that these circumstances justified the conclusion of identity of material and process, and were sufficient warrant for the grant of an injunction. Ib.

IV. BY AGENTS OR SERVANTS.

2. An action was brought against the master of a ship to restrain him from using pumps which were an infringement of the plaintiff's letters patent. He denied having used any pumps which were an infringement of the patent, and did not suggest that the owners ought to be parties. It was shown that the ship was fitted up exclusively with pumps which were an infringement of the letters patent, but had been so fitted up before the defendant, who was not a part owner, had taken command of her; he had nothing to do with putting them on board, and they had never been worked in British waters:—Held, that the injunction was rightly granted on the ground that the defendant, being in command of a ship exclusively fitted up with pumps which were an infringement of the letters patent, was intending to use the patented invention. Adair v. Young, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 13; 40 L. T. 598.

3. A patent was granted in England for an invention rendering nitro-glycerine less dangerous. Foreigners imported into England an article compounded of nitro-glycerine and other substances which they had manufactured abroad according to the patent process. The respondents, acting as Custom House agents for the importers, passed the article through the Custom House, and obtained permission (as required by the Explosives Act 1875) for landing and storing it in magazines belonging to the importers:—Held, that the respondents being only Custom House agents for the importers, and not themselves the importers, and having neither possession of nor control over the goods, their acts did not amount to an exercise or user of the patent, and that no action could be maintained against them for an infringement of the patent. Nobel's Explosives Co. v. Jones, 8 L. R., App. Cas., 5; 52 L. J., Ch., 339; 48 L. T. 490; 31 W. R. 388. Affirming 17 L. R., Ch. D., 721; 50 L. J., Ch., 582; 44 L. T. 593.

4. Where the principals of a firm, which had infringed a patent, were out of the jurisdiction, and not amenable to the process of the Court, the Court restrained the managers, who, though out of the jurisdiction, had appeared to the bill. Betts v. Neilson, 6 N. R. 221.

5. The directors of a company are personally responsible for the infringement of a patent by their workmen, notwithstanding such infringement may be in contravention of orders. Betts v. De Vitre, 37 L. J., Ch., 325; 3 L. R., Ch., 429; 18 L. T., N. S., 165; 16 W. R. 529.

6. A patent consisted of the application of cards or strips of leather covered with wire to rollers at "wide distances." A person who contracted to clothe rollers and supplied to a "nailer" cards of such width that when applied to the rollers they must of necessity leave wide spaces, and who himself paid the nailer, was held to have infringed the patent, though he alleged that his business was that of a cardmaker only, and did not include the nailer's work. Semble, the conclusion would have been the other way if he had merely supplied the cards without making the nailer his agent. Sykes v. Howarth, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 826; 48 L. J., Ch., 769; 41 L. T. 79.

V. IGNORANCE OF EXISTENCE OF PATENT—EFFECT.

7. The doctrine laid down by the Court of Exchequer, that, if a patent has been infringed unintentionally, the patentee is not entitled to redress, disapproved of. Heath v. Unwin, 15 Sim. 522; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 283; 11 Jur. 420. And see S. C. 13 M. & W. 583.

1. Ignorance of the existence of a former invention is no answer to a charge of infringement, where the second invention is capable of being accurately represented as an imitation of the former. Curtis v. Platt, 11 L. T., N. S., 245.

But where an inventor described his invention as "improvements applicable to certain machines commonly known as self-acting mules, particularly those constructed with the improvements of L. and R.," and a second inventor having taken the same elements of construction produced a new combination of agents, arriving at the same result, but by a process of thought in which he did not appear to have derived assistance from his knowledge of the former invention, there was held to be no infringement. Ib.

2. A patentee cannot maintain a suit against a retail dealer who unwittingly sells articles which are an infringement of his patent, provided such retail dealer gives full information as to the persons from whom he obtained the articles complained of, and promises not to retail any more. Betts v. Willmott, 18 W. R. 946. And see Nunn v. D'Albuquerque, 34 Beav. 595.

VI. WHEN PATENT HAS EXPIRED.

3. Injunction granted generally to restrain the sale, both before and after the term limited by the patent, of machines piratically manufactured, while the patent was in force. Crossley v. Derby Gas Light Co., 1 Russ. & M. 166. See also S. C. 4 L. J., N. S., Ch., 25.

4. The plaintiff was a gunmaker, who manufactured rifles, purchasing some of the different parts from various makers, and putting them together to form a complete rifle, which after having been viewed and approved by him, was stamped with his name and trade mark on the lockplate as a guarantee that it had been examined and approved by him. He also fitted to the rifles levers manufactured by himself, for which he had taken out a patent, and these levers were also marked with his name. The plaintiff's rifles so marked with his name had a great reputation. He supplied rifles so marked and guaranteed by him to the Government, and when they became unsuitable for Government purposes, they were taken to pieces and some of the parts mutilated and sold as old stores. The defendant bought some of these old stores, including levers and lockplates with the plaintiff's name and trade mark upon them, and fitted them to old rifle barrels, which had been cut down to the size of carbine barrels, and were not suited to the action which formed part of the rifles as passed and guaranteed by the plaintiff. At this time his patent for the levers had expired:—Held, that the defendant might be restrained from making and selling such firearms. Richards v. Williamson, 30 L. T., N. S., 746; 22 W. R. 765.

VII. PROPERTY IN GOODS INFRINGING PATENT.

5. There is a right of property in an article made in infringement of a patent, although the Court would order the article to be destroyed. Vavasseur v. Krupp, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 351; 27 W. R. 176; 39 L. T., N. S., 437.

A foreign sovereign bought in Germany shells made there, but said to be infringements of an English patent. They were brought to this country in order to be put on board a ship of war belonging to the foreign sovereign, and the patentee obtained an injunction against the agents of the foreign sovereign and the persons in whose custody the shells were, restraining them from removing the shells. The foreign sovereign then applied to be and was made a defendant to the suit. An order was then made by the Master of the Rolls, and affirmed on appeal, that notwithstanding the injunction he should be at liberty to remove the shells. Ib.

VIII. DAMAGES.

1. In General, 5570.
2. Measure of, 5571.
3. Election between Damages and Profits, 5571.

1. In General.

6. In a suit to restrain the further infringement of a patent right, and for the consequent account, where the account is a simple one—such as where licences or royalties have been granted—the Court will assess the amount of consequent damages. And in the case of a complex account, the Court has jurisdiction to direct the necessary inquiries to be made in chambers to ascertain the amount of such an account. Betts v. De Vitre, 11 L. T., N. S., 533; 5 N. R. 165.

But, in the latter case, a trial at law by a jury is the more fitting tribunal by which the amount of such an account can be ascertained. Ib.

Therefore, where a patentee has obtained an injunction to restrain the further infringement of his patent right, and waives the usual account of profits, such an action will be directed, in addition to the injunction, the defendant giving all necessary facilities for the ascertainment of the profits in the meantime. Ib.

The jurisdiction conferred by 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27, of awarding damages in suits to restrain the commission of wrongful acts, applies to the case of suits to restrain the infringement of patents; and the circumstance that the Court was in the habit, before the Act, of affording a partial remedy in such suits by directing an account of profits, constitutes no ground for excluding the jurisdiction newly conferred. S. C. 11 Jur., N. S., 9; 34 L. J., Ch., 289.

7. The Court has jurisdiction under the 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27 to grant an inquiry as to damages, where the patent has expired between the filing of the bill and the hearing, notwithstanding the rule, no injunction no account.

Davenport v. Rylands, 1 L. R., Eq., 302; 12 Jur., N. S., 71; 14 W. R. 243; 14 L. T., N. S., 53.

The inquiry will not be as to damages, if any, as in a trade mark case, but generally. Ib.

1. Where a patent for a combination of machinery only has been infringed, the Court will not order the defendant's machines to be broken up, but will order them to be marked. Needham v. Oxley, 11 W. R. 852; 8 L. T., N. S., 604.

It is in the option of the Court whether it will direct an account of profits, or an inquiry as to damages. It will not direct both. Ib.

When a plaintiff neglects to ask for damages until a jury has given a verdict and been dismissed, the Court will not direct an inquiry as to damages, but will exercise its option by directing an account. Ib.

2. Where bills in equity to restrain the infringement of a patent have been filed against both the person who manufactures and the person who uses the article, and issues of fact have been found for the plaintiff, it is the right of the plaintiff to have not only an account against the manufacturer, but also damages against the person using the article wherever it may be found. Penn v. Fernil, 3 L. R., Eq., 308.

The Court of Chancery has jurisdiction under 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27 to award damages for the infringement of a patent in addition to directing an account of profits; and this although damages may not be specifically prayed for by the bill. Ib.

3. The Court will not entertain a bill for the mere purpose of giving relief in damages for the infringement of a patent, when the bill has been filed so immediately before the expiration of the patent as to render it impossible to have obtained an interlocutory injunction. Betts v. Gallais, 10 L. R., Eq., 392; 18 W. R. 945.

2. Measure of.

4. A patentee of an invention applicable to part of a machine who, himself a manufacturer, has been in the habit of licensing the use of his invention by other manufacturers on payment of a fixed royalty for each machine, having obtained against an infringing manufacturer a decree for damages, "by reason of the user or vending" of the invention, is not entitled to claim, by way of damages, any sum beyond the ordinary royalty. Penn v. Jack, 5 L. R., Eq., 81; 37 L. J., Ch., 136; 16 W. R. 243; 17 L. T., N. S., 407.

Therefore he is not entitled to claim, in addition to his ordinary royalty, a manufacturing profit; and, à fortiori, not such a manufacturing profit as he would have made if every unlicensed machine had been sent to him to be fitted with the invention. Ib.

Secus, if he had been in the habit of charging infringers with a higher royalty than ordinary licencees. Ib.

A plaintiff having, in another suit, obtained a decree against certain wrongful users (not being manufacturers) of unlicensed machines fitted by the defendant with his invention, had in some instances been paid his ordinary royalty by such users:—Held, that, in every such instance, no further royalty was payable by the manufacturer. Ib.

3. Election between Damages and Profits.

5. Where the Court directed an inquiry as to damages, and also an account of profits:—Held, that the plaintiff should be called upon to elect between the two which he would adopt, since an account of profits amounts to a condonation of the infringement. Neilson v. Betts, 5 L. R., H. L., 1; 40 L. J., Ch., 40; 19 W. R. 1121.

6. The rule that, upon a decree against a party for the infringement of a patent, the patentee is not entitled, under 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27, ss. 2, 5, to have both an account of profits and an inquiry into damages, is now established, and applies to every case of infringement. The patentee must therefore elect which of the two forms of relief he will adopt. De Vitre v. Betts, 6 L. R., H. L., 319; 21 W. R. 705.

IX. ACCOUNT OF PROFITS.

7. Practical difficulties in working out a decree directing an account of the profits made by the piratical use of an invention to which the plaintiff had an exclusive right. Crosley v. Derby Gas Light Co., 3 Myl. & Cr. 428; 3 Jur. 692.

8. The right of a patentee to an account of profits made by an infringer is not a demand in the nature of unliquidated damages within s. 31 of the Bankruptcy Act 1869, and the amount of such profits is provable in the bankruptcy of the infringer. Watson v. Holliday, 52 L. J., Ch., 543; 48 L. T. 545; 31 W. R. 536. Affirming 20 L. R., Ch. D., 780; 51 L. J., Ch., 906; 46 L. T. 878; 30 W. R. 747.

The sole defendant becoming bankrupt, his trustees were added as defendants, and an order made that the action proceed against the trustees. The trustees did not move to discharge the order, and on the hearing appeared and cross-examined the plaintiff's witnesses:—Held, that they were liable to the costs of the action, but the account of profits was limited to an account of the profits received by the bankrupt. Ib.

Semble, the order making the trustees parties was improper, and would have been discharged, if an application had been made for that purpose at the proper time. Ib.

9. The right to a decree in equity for an account of the profits made by the manufacture and use of articles, in infringement of a patent, is incident to the right to an injunction to restrain future infringements; and where no case is made for the injunction, the account will not be decreed. Smith v. London & South Western Railway Co., 1 Kay 408; 43 L. J., Ch., 562.

The owners of a patent for a peculiar mode of manufacturing iron wheels for railway carriages, having discovered that several railway companies were violating their patent, brought an action for damages against one of such companies only, but did not in any way give notice to the other companies to discontinue their infringements of the plaintiff's right. In the action, the validity of the patent was disputed, and it was not decided until three years after the patent had expired, when a verdict was given for the plaintiffs, with large damages. Thereupon the plaintiffs filed a bill for an account of profits, and an injunction against another of the companies who had infringed their patent, complaining of acts done nine years before:—Held, that the delay was not excused by the pendency of the action, but was fatal to the plaintiffs' case. Ib.

1. The rule in patent cases, that a court of equity cannot decree an account unless it can grant an injunction, applies, notwithstanding it may appear at the hearing that since an interim injunction was moved for the defendant has sold articles which, had the facts and law been then sufficiently ascertained, the Court would have restrained him from selling. Price's Patent Candle Co. v. Bauwen's Patent Candle Co., 4 Kay & J. 727.

2. A suit had been instituted by a patentee to restrain the defendants from infringing his patent, and asking for an account of profits made by the defendants by sale or manufacture of the materials which formed the subject of the patent. The validity of the patent, and the fact of infringement by the defendants, had been decided in the plaintiff's favour by the Court without a jury. The plaintiff asked, at bar, for damages, or for an account of the profits of which he had been deprived by reason of such infringement. The Court directed an account of profits made by the defendants by the infringement, and an inquiry what sum ought to be paid by the defendants in respect of the damage sustained by the plaintiff. Betts v. De Vitre, 11 Jur., N. S., 9; 34 L. J., Ch., 289.

3. F. obtained a patent for umbrella ribs, and enjoyed it uninterruptedly to its conclusion, with the exception of an action for damages by H. another patentee, who recovered 300*l.* and a manufacture and sale of the ribs by D. six months before it expired. F. filed a bill, and restrained D., and the cause came to a hearing nine months after the expiration of the patent:—Held, that the Court could direct an account, notwithstanding the expiration of the patent; but it must be a case where there was no doubt as to its validity. Fox v. Dellestable, Fox v. Jones, 15 W. R. 194.

Held, that F.'s invention was neither novel nor important, the two requisites to support a patent, and the bill must be dismissed with costs. Ib.

4. A defendant having, in ignorance, infringed the plaintiff's patent submitted and offered before suit to pay the amount of profits made, which were very trifling. At the hearing, though a perpetual injunction was granted, no costs were given, and an account was granted only upon the plaintiff's request, and at his peril. Nunn v. D'Albuquerque, 34 Beav. 595.

X. ALLEGATION OF, BY CIRCULARS OR ADVERTISEMENTS.

See also TRADE, III.

5. A. and B. entered into partnership for the purpose of working a patent taken out by B., the partnership deed providing that the patent rights should belong solely to B. During the continuance of the partnership the partners issued circulars asserting the validity of the patent, and warning the public against its infringement, although they had been advised that the patent was in fact void. The partnership, having continued for seven years, was dissolved by deed, and A. and B. each proceeded to manufacture the patented articles for himself; but shortly afterwards B. commenced issuing circulars to A.'s customers, asserting that A. was infringing his patent, and threatening them with legal proceedings in case they purchased from A. A. then moved for an injunction to restrain B. from issuing these circulars, contending that, the patent being void, he had an equal right with B. to manufacture the articles intended to be protected by it:—Held, that although A. had, during the continuance of the partnership, precluded himself from disputing the validity of the patent, yet, after the expiration of the partnership, he was as much at liberty as any other person to dispute its validity, and that B.'s proper course for asserting his claim to the patent was, instead of issuing the circulars complained of, to have instituted proceedings against A. to establish its validity. On B. declining to undertake to institute any such proceedings, the Court granted the injunction. Axmann v. Lund, 43 L. J., Ch., 655; 18 L. R., Eq., 330; 22 W. R. 789; 31 L. T., N. S., 119.

6. The plaintiff claimed damages and an injunction against the defendant, who was a patentee, and who was alleged in the statement of claim to have systematically threatened persons proposing to deal with the plaintiff with legal proceedings for an injunction, and in certain specified instances to have warned the plaintiff or his customers against infringing his patent. The statement of claim did not allege that the threats and warnings were given otherwise than bonâ fide, or that the defendant intended to continue his course of action. The defendant had not taken any legal proceedings:—Held, that as there was no allegation of want of bona fides, the plaintiff could not be entitled to damages, and that as there was no allegation that the defendant intended to continue his threats, the plaintiff could not go into evidence in support of his claim for an injunction, and he was therefore nonsuited. Halsey v. Brotherhood, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 514; 49 L. J., Ch., 786; 43 L. T. 366; 29 W. R. 9. Affirmed 19 L. R., Ch. D., 386; 57 L. J., Ch., 233; 43 L. T. 640; 30 W. R. 279.

There is no law compelling a man to assert his legal right by action, and this applies to patentees who give notice of infringement. Ib.

In many cases it is a man's duty to give notices to persons that they were infringing his legal rights before he brings an action. Ib.

7. There is no presumption in law in favour of the validity of a patent, and therefore a patentee is not entitled to publish statements of his intention to institute legal proceedings, in order to deter persons from purchasing alleged infringements of his patent, if he has no bonâ fide intention to follow up his threats by taking such proceedings, and the Court will, in such case, restrain him from making such publication. Rollins v. Hinks, 13 L. R., Eq., 355; 41 L. J., Ch., 358; 20 W. R. 287; 26 L. T., N. S., 56.

A person alleging the invalidity of a patent is not bound to assert his claim by scire facias, in order to establish his right to restrain the publication of statements by the patentee, threatening with legal proceedings persons buying articles of his manufacture alleged to be infringements of the patent. Ib.

1. Where a plaintiff brings an action to restrain a defendant from issuing notices to the plaintiff's customers that the plaintiff in selling goods is infringing the defendant's patent rights, it is for the plaintiff to prove that the defendant's statements are false; and if no mala fides is proved, and no damages could be obtained, the Court will not grant the injunction. If in a judicial proceeding the statements are proved to be false in fact, an injunction would be granted against continuing them, as that would be acting mala fide. Burnett v. Tak, 45 L. T. 743.

2. A patentee who grants a licence cannot without derogating from his grant publish circulars or advertisements which have the effect of deterring usual customers from dealing with his licencee. Clarke v. Adie, 21 W. R. 456. Affirmed 21 W. R. 764.

6. Certificate of Breaches, 5578.
7. Evidence, 5578.
8. Interrogatories and Discovery, 5579.
9. Order for Inspection or Analysis, 5580.
10. Appeal, 5581.
11. Costs, 5581.

1. Who may Sue.

3. An exclusive licencee of a patent has a right to use the name of the patentee to restrain any infringement of the patent, and an interlocutory injunction for that purpose will, in a proper case, be granted. Renard v. Levinstein, 2 Hem. & M. 628; 13 W. R. 382; 11 L. T., N. S., 766.

It is no sufficient answer to a motion for an interlocutory injunction in such a case that the party has volunteered to keep an account. Ib.

4. To a bill stating an agreement made between a general agent of the patentees of an American invention to introduce and sell the invention in Great Britain, and the plaintiff, whereby he was to have the sole agency and control of the working of the patent in England, upon certain terms, including a share of royalties and profits, praying for an account for damages, and an injunction to restrain future infringement, the defendants, who were alleged to be using the invention, demurred:—Held, that the plaintiff was a mere agent for the sale of the invention, and was in no such position as gave him the right to file such a bill, which was in the form of a patentee's bill for infringement. Adams v. North British Railway Co., 29 L. T., N. S., 367.

5. The plaintiff brought an action for an account of royalties to which he was entitled for user by the company of his patent. The patent was dated in 1873, and the user was alleged to have begun in that year. The statement of claim showed that in the years 1875 and 1876 the plaintiff had assigned shares in his patent to several other persons, retaining for himself only one-sixth. The company at the hearing took the objection that the other persons interested in the patent should have been made parties:—Held, that one of several joint owners of a patent can sue for an injunction, and even for an account, without joining the other owners. Sheehan v. Great Eastern Railway Co., 16 L. R., Ch. D., 59; 50 L. J., Ch., 68; 43 L. T. 432; 29 W. R. 69.

Secondly, that, even if valid, the objection for want of parties ought to have been taken by interlocutory motion, and could not be entertained at the hearing. Ib.

6. Where a plaintiff files his bill for an injunction to restrain a defendant, the maker of a similar description of articles in trade as himself, which he had designated as patent, from selling those articles, the plaintiff's articles not being, in fact, protected by any patent right, the bill will be dismissed with costs. Morgan v. M'Adam, 15 L. T., N. S., 348.

2. Particulars of Breaches.

7. The practice prescribed by 15 & 16 Vict., c. 83, s. 41, with respect to actions for the infringement of letters patent, ought to be followed in suits in equity as closely as circumstances will permit. Finnegan v. James, 19 L. R., Eq., 72; 44 L. J., Ch., 185; 23 W. R. 373.

A plaintiff in a patent suit ought either to state in his bill the particulars of the breaches complained of, or to deliver along with his bill a written statement of such particulars, which statement need not be filed. A defendant suit ought to set forth in his answer the particulars of any objections on which he relies. Ib.

8. Although upon the trial of questions in a patent suit the particulars of breaches should give the defendant full, fair, and distinct notice of the case intended to be made against him, it is not necessary, in the case of an alleged infringement of a patent for improvements of a particular article (e.g., cartridges), for the particulars to point out the precise portions of the specification alleged to have been infringed when the matter alleged to be an infringement has been made an exhibit. Batley v. Kynock, 19 L. R., Eq., 229; 44 L. J., Ch., 219; 31 L. T., N. S., 573; 23 W. R. 209.

9. Particulars of breaches delivered with a view to a trial of a patent case in the Court of Chancery are sufficient if taken together with the pleadings; they give the defendant full and fair notice of the case to be made against him. Needham v. Oxley, 1 Hem. & M. 248; 9 Jur., N. S., 598; 11 W. R. 745; 8 L. T., N. S., 532; 2 N. R. 267.

10. A plaintiff in equity is bound by the particulars of breaches delivered, and the principle of the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 83, s. 41 is applicable to trials in the Court of Chancery, in which particulars of breaches are ordered, as well as to trials at Common Law. Curtis v. Platt, 35 L. J., Ch., 852.

1. Particulars of breach of a patent alleged divers sales between certain dates, and particularly to two persons. An answer of the defendant admitted a sale to H., a third person. Evidence of the transactions with H. was admitted. Sykes v. Howarth, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 826; 48 L. J., Ch., 769; 41 L. T. 79; 28 W. R. 215.

3. Particulars of Objections.

2. The principle upon which the Court proceeds in regulating the form of particulars of objections on the trial of a patent is to guard against a surprise upon the plaintiff by production on the trial of evidence of prior user or publication of which he has no notice. Therefore, it will require a defendant, in stating those instances on which he intends to rely, to put the plaintiff in possession of all he himself knows, so far as to enable him to identify the instances alleged. Curtis v. Platt, 8 L. T., N. S., 657.

3. Leave granted to a defendant during the trial of a patent case, and after the plaintiff's case was concluded, to amend his particulars of objection by stating a prior publication of the invention, and give evidence in support of such new objection (which was not specified in the particulars delivered before trial), on payment of the costs occasioned by the application. Renard v. Levinstein, 13 W. R. 229; 11 L. T., N. S., 505.

4. A plaintiff, in a suit to restrain an infringement of a patent, who has filed replication, and issues have been refused, is not entitled to require the defendant, by analogy to the practice at law, to deliver particulars of his objections to the validity of the patent. Bovill v. Goodier, 11 Jur., N. S., 900; 14 W. R. 91; 13 L. T., N. S., 489; 35 L. J., Ch., 174; 35 Beav. 264.

5. The object in directing issues to be tried at law is to ascertain the real state of the facts; and therefore the Court will allow further particulars of prior user of the invention to be brought forward on proper notice. Bovill v. Goodier, 36 L. J., Ch., 360.

6. In a patent case, evidence cannot be given on the trial of an issue in respect of objections not specified in the particulars required to be delivered under 15 & 16 Vict., c. 83, s. 41, even though the evidence was not discovered till after the delivery of the particulars; but a specific motion must be made for leave to put it in. Daw v. Eley, 11 Jur., N. S., 923; 14 W. R. 48.

7. Particulars of objections filed by a defendant were ordered to be amended by the insertion of words specifying "the persons by whom, the places where, the dates at, and the manner in which," there had been the alleged user prior to the date of the plaintiff's patent. Penn v. Bibby, 2 L. R., Eq., 548.

In complying with this order the defendant was permitted, in his amended particulars, to preface his statement of the specific instances of alleged prior user with the words "amongst other instances," in order to give him an opportunity of applying for leave to re-amend by inserting any further instances of prior user which he might discover. Ib.

Upon an application by a defendant for leave to re-amend objections by inserting certain further specified instances which had come to his knowledge, he was ordered to pay the costs of the application, and the costs arising out of and consequent upon the reamendment were reserved. Ib.

8. Particulars of objections alleging a prior user must specify with particularity the time, place, and manner in which such user took place. Morgan v. Fuller, 2 L. R., Eq., 297; 14 L. T., N. S., 353.

In a suit to restrain an infringement of a patent for improvements in the construction of carriages, the alleged invention consisting of a particular mode of opening and closing the heads of carriages, particulars of objections stating that head-joints similar to those used in the alleged invention had been, before the date of the patent, commonly used by carriage builders generally throughout Great Britain, and that head-joints, similar to those described in the specification, had been actuated in their motions in the way described, before the date of the patent, by various carriage builders in or near London, Liverpool, Manchester, and Southampton, and various other of the principal towns of Great Britain, are insufficient. Ib.

9. In a patent suit the form of order requiring defendant to furnish further and better particulars of objections should follow the words of the Patent Law Amendment Act, s. 41, and require the defendant to state in his particulars merely "the place or places at, or in which, and in what manner, the invention is alleged to have been used or published prior to the date of the patent," but under such an order the defendant must furnish full and sufficient particulars. Flower v. Lloyd, 45 L. J., Ch., 746; 25 W. R. 17; 35 L. T., N. S., 454.

10. In granting the defendant in a patent action after issue joined, and a day has been fixed for the hearing, leave to amend his particulars of objection, the Court will place the plaintiff in the same position as to discontinuing the action, or disclaiming a portion of his invention, as he would have been if the original particulars of objection had contained the new instances of prior publication proposed to be introduced by amendment; and accordingly all costs incurred by the plaintiff subsequently to the delivery of the original particulars of objection will be ordered to be paid to him by the defendant in case he elects, within a time fixed by the order, to discontinue his action. Form of order. Edison Telephone Co. v. India-Rubber Co., 17 L. R., Ch. D., 137; 29 W. R. 496.

4. Pleading.

11. Where a bill is filed to restrain the infringement of a patent, a sufficient case to justify the injunction must be stated on the bill, as the plaintiff must not depend solely on the admissions contained in the defendant's answer for the granting or continuing of the injunction. Curtis v. Cutts, 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 184.

12. In a bill to restrain an infringement of a patent an express averment of the novelty of the invention protected by the patent is not necessary. Amory or Amery v. Brown, 8 L. R.,

Eq., 663; 38 L. J., Ch., 593; 17 W. R. 849; 20 L. T., N. S., 654.

1. Leave to amend the pleadings given after the plaintiff's evidence was put in. Nobel's Explosives Co. v. Jones, 49 L. J., Ch., 726; 42 L. T., N. S., 754; 28 W. R. 653.

2. The Court will at any time during the progress of a patent suit allow a defendant to raise a fresh issue on the discovery of facts which could not with due diligence have been discovered before. Holste v. Robertson, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 9; 46 L. J., Ch., 1.

3. To a bill in Chancery for the infringement of a patent, the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff was not the first inventor:—Held, that the defendant need not answer any fact alleged by the bill which would not be evidence to go to a jury on such an issue, as, for instance, the accuracy of the specification; the novelty of the process; the assignment of the patent; the expenditure of money on it; the obtaining Scotch and Irish patents for the process or allegations as to the opinions of third parties as to the invention, and the truth of the assertions of third parties respecting it, etc., etc. Young v. White, 17 Beav. 532; 18 Jur. 277; 23 L. J., Ch., 190

On a motion for an injunction to restrain the alleged infringement of a patent, the defendant insisted, first, on the validity of the patent; and, secondly, that he had not infringed it; and an action was directed. Afterwards, the defendant pleaded in equity simply the want of novelty of the patent. This Court on allowing the plea gave the plaintiff liberty to apply to modify the order made on the application for the injunction, so as to make it conformable to the issue tendered by the plea. Ib.

4. In an action to enforce a contract for the sale of a patent without warranty, it is not open to the defendant by way of defence to put in issue the validity of the patent; such a defence may be struck out under (Jud. Act) Ord. XXVII. r. 1. Liardet v. Hammond Electric Light and Power Co., 31 W. R. 710.

5. Issues.

5. Injunction granted against infringement of patent, that the validity of a patent might be tried at law; verdict for the patentee, subject to the opinion of the Court. Upon a case the Court were equally divided. The patentee must bring another action; but the Court on the possession would not impose any terms upon him, nor dissolve the injunction in the meantime. Boulton v. Bull, 3 Ves. 140.

6. Injunction upon possession under a patent until the right can be tried, though subject to considerable doubt; the patent being for improvement upon a machine, the subject of a former patent expired, and the specification described the original machine with the improvement as one entire machine, the subject of the latter patent, not distinguishing the improvements. Harmer v. Plane, 14 Ves. 130.

7. Equitable jurisdiction, upon the 34 Geo. 3, c. 23, is not excluded by the special remedy thereby provided. Independent of that remedy the statute vests in the inventor a right of property, which, though only of three months' duration, equity will protect by injunction, if the title be satisfactorily established. In this case, the evidence as to title not being conclusive, the injunction was dissolved and an issue directed, the defendants keeping an account. Sheriff v. Coates, 1 Russ. & M. 159.

8. Where the validity of the patent was not clear, nor evidence of exclusive possession satisfactory, the Court refused an injunction until the validity had been tried in an action at law; so where, after a verdict, a rule nisi for a new trial was pending, the right at law being still undecided. Collard v. Allison, 4 Myl. & C. 487.

9. In August 1835, a patentee filed a bill to restrain an alleged infringement of his patent, and the defendant having by his answer denied the validity of the patent, and also the fact of the alleged infringement, the plaintiff made no interlocutory application for an injunction, but went into evidence in support of his case, and in May 1839 brought the cause to a hearing. The Master of the Rolls, being of opinion that the plaintiff, upon the evidence, had not made out a case which would have supported an injunction if applied for in the interlocutory stage, refused to give him an opportunity of establishing his title at law by retaining the bill, with liberty to bring an action; and dismissed the bill with costs; and the Lord Chancellor on appeal affirmed this decision. Bacon v. Jones, 4 Myl. & C. 433; 1 Beav. 382; 3 Jur. 476, 994.

10. In a patent case, a motion for an injunction was ordered to stand over for the plaintiff to bring an action to establish his right. The plaintiff obtained a verdict, but the defendant tendered a bill of exceptions, which could not be determined without some considerable delay. Upon the motion being renewed, the Court, under the circumstances, ordered it to stand over till the bill of exceptions had been disposed of. Principles on which this Court proceeds upon an application for an interim injunction in patent cases. Brisdon v. M'Alpine, 8 Beav. 229.

11. In a suit to restrain the infringement of a patent, the plaintiff may, on motion, obtain liberty to proceed to try the question at law, notwithstanding the cause in equity is at issue, if publication has not passed. Walker v. Thomason, 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 218.

12. Upon the trial of an action directed by this Court in a patent case, the plaintiff established the validity of his patent, but failed to prove the alleged infringement. His two principal witnesses were indicted for perjury, but acquitted, evidence (of which the plaintiff had no knowledge at the trial of the action) having been brought forward in confirmation of their testimony which tended to show an infringement. The plaintiff did not move for a new trial at common law after the production of this evidence, and judgment was obtained by the defendants upon the issue as to the infringement found in their favour:—Held, that this Court would not assist the plaintiff, who after obtaining subsequent evidence had allowed the legal right to be concluded against him, by directing an issue upon the simple point as to the infringement, which could not have been obtained for a motion upon a new trial at common law; the circumstance that the plaintiff would be hampered at common law by having to try over again the validity of his patents not being a ground to justify the interference of this Court. Price's Patent Candle Co. v. Bauwen's Patent Candle Co., 6 W. R. 318.

1. T., the plaintiff, a British subject, resident abroad, having conceived an improvement in making pianos, gave to the son of his London agent, who happened to be then on a visit at T.'s house, a full description and drawings of the invention, marked "private," and requested the son, on his return to London, to take out letters patent or to register the invention for him, T. The son returned to London, and delivered the drawings to his father, the defendant M., being T.'s London agent. T. about the same time wrote a letter to M., not marked private, and not desiring him to take out a patent on behalf of the writer, but inquiring generally as to the invention, and whether a patent for it was being taken out. Shortly afterwards M. took out a patent for the improvement in question in his own name, and as for an invention of his own. Then, T. having employed S. to make such pianos on his own account, M. brought an action for the infringement of his patent against S. Thereupon T. filed a bill to restrain the action, and the use of the patent by M. The defendant M. insisted that the invention, as described in T.'s communication, would not work:—Held, on motion for an injunction, that the whole question must stand over to await the result of the action. Milligan v. Marsh, 2 Jur., N. S., 1083.

2. On an infringement of a recent patent, it is not a matter of course to require the plaintiff to establish his right at law, but the Court will have regard to the whole case made on the pleadings and by the evidence. Clark v. Fergusson, 1 Giff. 184; 5 Jur., N. S., 1155.

3. The Court, in a suit respecting the infringement of a patent, will grant an issue to determine whether the invention described in the specification is actually that for which the patent was granted. Needham v. Oxley, 2 N. R. 232.

4. The Court will, since the 25 & 26 Vict., c. 42, enter into the question of the validity of a patent on a motion for an interim injunction. The powers of the Court are not limited by the above Act. The circumstances and the terms under and upon which the Court will still grant an interim injunction to restrain an alleged infringement. Davenport v. Jepson, 1 N. R. 173; 35 L. J., Ch., 204; 1 L. R., Eq., 202.

5. It is the rule of a court of equity not to grant a perpetual injunction to restrain the infringement of a patent, unless the legal validity of the patent has been conclusively established. Hills v. Evans, 31 L. J., Ch., 457; 6 L. T., N. S., 90.

6. In a suit to restrain an infringement of a patent, where there are mingled questions of fact and law, the proper course is for the validity of the patent to be tried by the Court of Chancery, under 25 & 26 Vict., c. 42, and not by an issue at law. Young v. Fernie, 12 W. R. 221; 3 N. R. 270.

The 25 & 26 Vict., c. 42 lays down a rule that all questions of fact brought before the Court are to be determined by the Court itself; the exception contained in the Act operates only by way of permission, and in order to bring a case within the exception the Court must be satisfied that the administration of justice will be more conveniently exercised and promoted by sending the matter to be tried at law. S. C. 9 L. T., N. S., 590.

7. Where two parties have obtained patents for the same invention, the Court will not interfere by injunction, but leave them to try the legal right by scire facias, being disabled, by reason of s. 1 of 25 & 26 Vict., c. 42, from directing a case for the opinion of a court of law. Copeland v. Webb, 11 W. R. 134; 1 N. R. 119.

8. A defendant in a suit to restrain an infringement of a patent is entitled to dispute the validity of the patent, although the plaintiff has obtained a judgment at law against another person establishing its validity; but until he has proved its invalidity he will be restrained from infringing on it. Bovil v. Goodier, 2 L. R., Eq., 195; 12 Jur., N. S., 404; 35 L. J., Ch., 432.

In a suit to restrain an infringement of a patent, the validity of which has been established at law against another defendant, the Court at the hearing being satisfied of the sufficiency of the specification, the utility of the invention, and the fact of the infringement, granted an injunction to restrain him from infringing the patent, and directed an issue to be tried at law as to the novelty of the invention. Ib.

An objection to the validity of a patent, on the ground of the expiration of a foreign patent for the same invention, cannot be taken at the hearing of a suit to restrain the infringement of the patent, unless it has been raised by the answer. Ib.

9. The usual issues may be granted in a patent suit before the hearing of the cause, although the defendant denies the validity of the plaintiff's patent on the ground of the generality of the claim in the specification. Arnold v. Bradbury, 6 L. R., Ch., 706.

10. One hundred and thirty-four suits were instituted against as many defendants by a patentee for infringement of his patent, and interrogatories were served. Seventy-seven defendants, combining together amongst themselves so as to make four bodies in all, moved, before putting in any answers, that the plaintiff might be directed to proceed with one suit only until it should have been determined, or until the validity of the patent should have been finally decided, or until further order; and that the proceedings in the other suits might in the meantime be stayed, or that the time for answering and producing documents might be enlarged, the moving defendants undertaking to be bound by the result of the selected suit so far as the question of the validity of the patent was concerned. The Court, upon terms, and the plaintiff not opposing, made an order with a view of trying before itself the question of validity in the first instance, before entering upon the question of infringement. Foxwell v. Webster, 4 De G. J. & S. 77; 10 Jur., N. S., 137; 12 W. R. 186; 9 L. T., N. S., 528.

11. A defendant in a suit to restrain an infringement of a patent has no right to have the issues of fact referred to a jury ex debito justitiæ; and where the issues raised have been already determined, such reference will in general be refused. But if it appears that there is a really doubtful question at issue, the Court will not decide it for itself if either party desires a jury. Davenport v. Goldberg, 2 Hem. & M. 282; 5 N. R. 484.

1. Where a patentee has once successfully maintained the validity of his patent in a trial before a jury, this Court will not, on the application of the defendants, direct the usual issues as to the novelty of the invention or the sufficiency of the specification to be tried before a jury, unless the defendants have distinctly raised such questions by their answer, or unless it shall appear to the Court, at the hearing of the cause, that such issues ought to be granted. Where a patentee had obtained a verdict at law upon an action brought by him against a person who had infringed his patent, and where the same patentee had obtained a verdict on the usual issues directed by this Court in a suit brought by him against another person for infringement, and where, in a suit brought by the same patentee against a third party for infringement, the defendant had denied the infringement by his affidavits in such a manner that the plaintiff had not ventured to move for an interlocutory injunction, but the defendant had not distinctly denied the want of novelty of the invention, or the sufficiency of the specification, by his answer, and the plaintiff had given notice of motion for a decree, the Court, on the application of the defendant, directed an issue as to the infringement to be tried before a jury at the same time as the motion for decree came on, but refused to direct any other issues to be tried; and where the defendant had not denied infringement by affidavit the Court refused to direct an issue as to it. Davenport v. Goldberg, and Davenport v. Phillips, 5 N. R. 484.

2. Where in a patent suit questions of fact have to be determined, the parties have no absolute right to have those questions tried by a jury. Bovill v. Hitchcock, 16 W. R. 321; 3 L. R., Ch., 417; 37 L. J., Ch., 223.

3. In the absence of special circumstances the ordinary issues in a patent suit will be tried before the Court itself without a jury. Patent Marine Inventions Co. v. Chadburn, 16 L. R., Eq., 447; 21 W. R. 745; 28 L. T., N. S., 614.

Practice on Trial of.] 4. A defendant will not be allowed to add a totally new issue of fact not in any way suggested by his answers to the issues which have been already directed for trial. Morgan v. Fuller, 2 L. R., Eq., 296; 14 W. R. 497.

5. On an issue directed in a patent suit on the question of novelty, the defendant is entitled to have the question of newness of manufacture tried apart from the question of newness of invention. Spencer v. Jack, 3 De G. J. & S. 346; 8 Jur., N. S., 1165; 1 N. R. 114.

6. Where a question of novelty, or infringement, depends merely on the construction of the specification, it is one entirely for the judge; but where it also depends on other circumstances, such as the degree of difference or of similitude between two machines, it is a mixed question of law and fact; what the jurymen find to have been done is a matter of fact, but the judge must apply that fact according to the rules of law, and is entitled and bound to say whether what has been done amounts to an infringement. Seed v. Higgins, 8 H. L. Ca. 550; 30 L. J., Q. B., 314; 6 Jur., N. S., 1264.

The question of infringement is one of mixed law and fact; the construction of the specification is for the Court, with the aid of such facts as are admissible, to explain written documents. The opinion of scientific witnesses is only admissible as proof of facts; their opinion as to whether there has been an infringement or not, though sometimes received in order to save time and trouble, is, strictly speaking, inadmissible, and, if objected to, ought to be rejected. Semble. Ib.

7. The plaintiff obtained letters patent for improvements in the manufacture of iron and steel. In his specification he declared his invention to be the use of carburet of manganese in any process whereby iron is converted into cast steel, and he described the process which he claimed thus:—"I do it by introducing into a crucible bars of steel broken into fragments, mixtures of cast and malleable iron, or malleable iron and carbonaceous matter along with from one to three per cent. of their weight of carburet of manganese." He then stated that he did not claim the use of the mixture of cast and malleable iron and carbonaceous matter as any part of his invention, but only the use of carburet of manganese, in any process for converting iron into cast steel. The defendant produced the same result,—a superior and more valuable description and quality of cast steel,—as certainly and more cheaply, by substituting for the carburet of manganese, its elements—viz., oxide of manganese and coal tar, which, being put into the crucible with the iron, according to the evidence of chemists, would form carburet of manganese before the iron was in a state of fusion, and consequently before any combination therewith could take place. The judge told the jury that there was no evidence of infringement:—Held, a right direction. Unwin v. Heath, 5 H. L. Ca. 505.

8. Where the Court directs an action, instead of granting an injunction against the equitable assignee of a patent, it will not exact from the defendant any admissions as to the validity of the patent. Pidding v. Franks, 1 Macn. & G. 56; 1 H. & Tw. 220; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 295; 13 Jur. 593.

9. A jury empanelled to try certain questions of fact relating to a patent, having been discharged without giving a verdict, Wood, V.-C., refused to decide such questions of fact on the evidence he had heard without the concurrence of both parties; but allowed the questions of law arising on the face of the patent to be argued previously to another trial. Davenport v. Jepson, 1 N. R. 471.

10. The Court, in the exercise of its discretion, will refuse to consider the questions arising on the construction of the specification of a patent, until the evidence on the whole of the case has been heard. Young v. Fernie, 4 N. R. 218.

11. Numerous suits had been instituted for the infringement, by different defendants, of the same patent. The defendants moved to stay proceedings in the several suits, on the ground that the plaintiff ought first to establish the validity of his patent, which they denied:—Held, that, under the circumstances, the Court would take measures to have the question of validity tried first, and would allow all the defendants to be represented at the trial, by three selected by the rest. Foxwell v. Bradbury, 3 N. R. 105, 180.

1. When a patent is taken out for an invention consisting of the combination in one thing of several subordinate parts, the question whether or not a person taking and using a certain number of such parts and omitting others has taken the substance of the invention and thereby infringed the patent is a question not of law but of fact, to be decided by the jury or Court with reference to the circumstances of the particular case. Clarke v. Adie (No. 1), 46 L. J., Ch., 585; 36 L. T., N. S., 923; 2 L. R., App. Cas., 315.

6. Certificate of Breaches.

2. When, at the trial of an action for the infringement of a patent, the Court is of opinion that there has been an infringement by the defendant, but holds on a legal ground that the patent is void, it will not give the plaintiff a certificate, under s. 43 of the Patent Law Amendment Act 1852, that breaches of the patent by the defendant have been proved. United Telephone Co. v. Harrison, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 720; 51 L. J., Ch., 705; 46 L. T., N. S., 620; 30 W. R. 724.

3. A proprietor of a patent filed a number of bills against parties selling and using machines, of which he claimed to be patentee, praying an injunction for inspection, and an account. On a motion of a number of the defendants to stay proceedings, an order was made for the validity of the patent to be tried in the first instance, such trial to be conducted by one or more of the defendants before the Court on behalf of the rest, and to be heard before the Lord Chancellor, with liberty for the others to apply to be made parties to the order, and all proceedings to be stayed in the meantime. Foxwell v. Webster, 12 W. R. 186; 9 L. T., N. S., 528.

The Court will not give a certificate that a special jury was requisite, but will give such certificate as described in 15 & 16 Vict., c. 83, s. 43. Ib.

4. In a suit to restrain infringement of a patent, the Court refused, under the circumstances, to order the destruction of the defendant's machines which had been found to be an infringement of the plaintiff's patent. An inquiry as to the damages sustained by the plaintiffs by the infringement of their patent by the defendant was likewise refused, an issue as to the damages not having been submitted to the jury, which had already in the same suit tried the validity of the plaintiffs' patent. The Court granted a certificate in accordance with the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 83, s. 3., that the validity of the patent had come in question in the suit, and had been determined in favour of the plaintiffs. Semble, it is not necessary to certify for a special jury where questions of fact are tried before the Court itself under the 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27. Needham v. Oxley, 2 N. R. 388.

7. Evidence.

5. Exemplification of part of a patent, not suffered to be read in evidence, notwithstanding the statutes of 3 & 4 of Edw. 6 and 12 Eliz., where the other side have no time to consult the patent roll, and so may be surprised by an imperfect exemplification. Att.-Gen. v. Taylor, Pre. Ch. 59.

6. A licensee of a patented invention was ordered to account for all instruments made by him pursuant to the patent. He alleged that the instruments which he had made were not covered by the patent according to its true construction, and in support of his contention tendered in evidence a prior American specification (a copy of which was in the Library of the Commissioners of Patents, but was not proved to have been known to the patentee), for the purpose of showing that a construction large enough to cover the instruments made by the licencee would make the patent bad for want of novelty, and therefore ought not to be adopted by the Court:—Held, that the evidence was inadmissible. Adie v. Clark (No. 2), 3 L. R., Ch. D., 134; 24 W. R. 1007.

7. In a suit to restrain the sale of a patented article, it is incumbent on the plaintiff not only to prove the sale, but to prove that the article was not made by himself or his agents, Betts v. Willmott, 6 L. R., Ch., 239; 25 L. T., N. S., 188; 19 W. R. 369.

The owner of an English patent manufactured the patented article in France as well as in England. In a suit to restrain the sale of the article in England, the plaintiff proved that it was not made at his manufactory in England, but could not prove that it was not made at his manufactory in France; the bill was dismissed with costs. Ib.

8. Upon the trial of issues in a patent case the plaintiff is entitled to call evidence in reply, for the purpose of rebutting a case of prior user set up by the defendant. Penn v. Jack, 2 L. R., Eq., 314; 14 W. R. 760; 14 L. T., N. S., 495.

But after the evidence for the defence has been summed up, the defendant will not be allowed to adduce further evidence in answer to that given by the plaintiff in reply. Ib.

9. When a defendant to a suit in which replication is filed has given evidence of instances of prior user not mentioned in his answer, and leave has been granted to the plaintiff to adduce fresh evidence to disprove these instances, the defendant will not necessarily be entitled to bring further evidence to rebut the fresh evidence so adduced by the plaintiff. Poupard v. Fardell, 18 W. R. 59.

10. In a patent suit which had been set down for hearing, an application made by the defendant, after notice given to the plaintiff, for leave to produce at the hearing of the cause the evidence as to prior user of a new witness discovered since the closing of the evidence, was allowed. Wilson v. Gann, 23 W. R. 546.

11. In ordinary cases, the duty of establishing that the thing patented has been pirated lies on the patentee, and courts of equity grant limited orders of inspection for the purpose of enabling him to discharge that duty. Such orders cannot be granted where the piracy alleged has taken place abroad, and semble, that then it becomes the duty of the defendant to give evidence of a negative character to prove (in answer to the primâ facie case made by the patentee) that the process used was of a different character from that which had been patented. Where that negative evidence was not given by the defendant, but positive evidence on the part of the patentee was given by one workman that he had been employed at the foreign manufactory, and there saw the capsules manufactured by a process not distinguishable from that of the patentee:—Held, that these circumstances justified the conclusion of identity of material and process, and were sufficient warrant for the grant of an injunction. Neilson v. Betts, 5. L. R., H. L., 1; 40 L. J., Ch., 317; 19 W. R. 1121.

Where a patent had been taken out by D. in 1804, and another patent had been taken out by B. in 1849, and B. took proceedings against N. for infringement, to which N. set up as an answer want of novelty, and proved D.'s patent, evidence of all that was done in the trade to which the patent related between the date of D.'s patent and of B.'s patent was admissible on this question of novelty. Ib.

Of Scientific Witnesses.] 1. Where in a patent case the evidence is conflicting and indecisive on a scientific point, the Court is at liberty to obtain competent independent scientific assistance in determining the matters at issue. Badische Anilin und Soda Fabrik v. Levinstein, 24 L. R., Ch. D., 156; 52 L. J., Ch., 704; 48 L. T. 822; 31 W. R. 913.

Where in a patent case the defendant denies infringement, but objects to state in open court the process he actually practises, on the ground that it is the subject of a valuable secret, of the benefit of which he would be deprived by disclosure, the Court will first ascertain whether the defence fails in all other respects than infringement, and then, unless the defendant prefers to submit to an injunction, will hear the evidence and arguments with respect to the alleged infringement by the secret process with closed doors, and, with a view to further protecting the secret, will order the shorthand notes of the private hearing to be impounded until either an appeal is entered or the right to appeal is abandoned. Ib.

2. Semble, the opinion of scientific witnesses as to whether there has or has not been an infringement ought to be received. Seed v. Higgins, 8 H. L. Ca. 550; 6 Jur., N. S., 1264.

8. Interrogatories and Discovery.

3. A bill having been filed by an assignee of certain alleged patent inventions, for an injunction to restrain the infringements of the patents, and for an account of the profits made by their use, the defendants, by their answer, insisted that the patents were originally invalid; and, also, that if originally good, they have been made void by subsequent acts of the patentee. By the decree made at the hearing of the cause, the bill was retained for three years, with liberty for the plaintiff to bring an action; and the defendants were directed to admit that the plaintiff was the assignee of the patents, and that they (the defendants) had used the alleged inventions; and the plaintiff was ordered to produce certain deeds at the trial, and to admit their execution. The defendants then filed a bill of discovery against the plaintiff, but the discovery sought by that bill had reference only to the acts by which it was alleged that the patents became void subsequently to their creation. The defendant afterwards finding the necessity of a discovery as to the original invalidity of the patents, applied to the Court for permission to file another bill of discovery which should relate to such original invalidity, and the Court granted the permission desired. Whether it was regular to file the first bill of discovery without leave of the Court, quære. Few v. Guppy, 1 Myl. & C. 487.

4. In a suit to restrain the alleged infringement of a patent, the defendant is not bound to answer interrogatories which assume the fact of infringement, as if the fact of infringement be established at the hearing, all the discovery required will be then obtained under the decree, while, if that fact be not then established, the discovery required will be immaterial. A defendant seeking to protect himself from giving such discovery by answer, is not bound to put in a plea denying infringement. Delarue v. Dickinson, 3 K. & J. 388.

5. In a suit to restrain the infringement of a patent, the defendants were required to set out the names and addresses of all persons from whom they had received sums of money for the use of articles alleged to be manufactured in infringement of the plaintiff's rights, even though such persons might reside abroad. Crossley v. Stewart, 1 N. R. 426.

6. Numerous suits having been instituted against different defendants for the infringement of the same patent, the defendants, before any of them had answered, moved to stay proceedings in all the suits but one:—Held, by the Vice-Chancellor, that the Court could not interfere with the plaintiff's right to have a separate answer from each defendant:—Held, also, that in a patent case a defendant would not be excused from answering fully and at once, on the ground that the validity of the patent would require to be established by an issue. Foxwell v. Webster, 1 N. R. 103. But see Foxwell v. Bradbury, 3 N. R. 180.

7. A plaintiff in a patent case, where the novelty of the invention is denied by the answer, has no right to a discovery of the particulars on which the defendant relies, as showing a user of the thing patented prior to the date of the patent. Daw v. Eley, 2 Hem. & M. 725.

8. In a suit to restrain an infringement of a patent which is contested on the ground of anticipation by prior user, the plaintiff is not entitled to discovery from the defendant in answer to a general interrogatory as to the instances of prior user on which he relies. Bovill v. Smith, 2 L. R., Eq., 459.

9. A defendant, though he deny any infringement of the plaintiff's patent, is bound to answer fully, whether he uses in his process the materials mentioned in the specification; whether he makes any addition to those materials; and whether such additions make any difference in the process. Renard v. Levinstein, 10 L. T., N. S., 94.

Nature and extent of the discovery which a plaintiff must give in answer to the defendant's concise statement and interrogatories in respect of a patent. S. C. 11 L. T., N. S., 79; 3 N. R. 665.

1. A plaintiff in a patent suit is bound to answer all the interrogatories of a defendant which are fairly calculated to show that the patent is not a good patent, or that that which the plaintiff alleges to be an infringement is not an infringement. Hoffman v. Postill, 17 W. R. 901; 20 L. T., N. S., 893.

2. Upon a bill charging the defendant with infringing the plaintiff's patent, and asking for an account of his dealings and transactions, and seeking to make him answerable for the profits received by him in consequence of the infringement:—Held, that the defendant must answer the interrogatories, though he disputes the title of the plaintiff, and insists that the discovery will be an act of oppression upon him; and that there was little probability that the Court, at the hearing, would direct an account upon the facts if disclosed. Swinborne v Nelson, 22 L. J., Ch., 331; 1 W. R. 155.

3. A patentee of improvements in brick-cutting machines, who was a manufacturer of the machines by an agent at the agent's works and not a licencee, having obtained a perpetual injunction against defendants, who were also manufacturers of brick-cutting machines, from infringement, the defendants were ordered to file an affidavit stating the number of machines made by them since the date of the patent, and the names and addresses of the persons to whom the same had been sold, and of the agents concerned in the transactions:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to have discovery of the names and addresses of the purchasers, but not of the agents concerned, there being nothing to show that any agents had been employed. Murray v. Clayton, 15 L. R., Eq., 115; 42 L. J., Ch., 191; 21 W. R. 118, 498; 27 L. T., N. S., 644.

4. In a patent action where the plaintiff or defendant, as the case may be, makes out a proper case the Court has jurisdiction to order interrogatories to be answered notwithstanding the provision in the Patent Law Amendment Act 1852 for the delivery of particulars. Birch v. Mather, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 629; 52 L. J., Ch., 292; 31 W. R. 362.

The plaintiff is also entitled under the 41st section of the same Act to the names and addresses of the persons by whom prior user is alleged to have been made as well as the places where the prior user has taken place. Ib.

5. In a suit to restrain the infringement of a patent the defendant was required to state whether he was not making articles in all respects identical with those of the plaintiff, and to set forth in what respects they differed, and by what process they were made:—Held, that the defendant, who alleged prior user by himself and others, had sufficiently answered by stating that, save so far as the articles manufactured by him before the date of the patent were similar to those of the plaintiff, the articles he now made differed from those made by the plaintiff, but he could not show in what they differed without ocular demonstration. Crossley v. Tomey, 2 L. R., Ch. D., 533; 34 L. T., N. S., 476.

Held, also, that the defendant was bound, in alleging prior user by other persons, to set forth the names of some of those persons. Ib.

9. Order for Inspection or Analysis.

6. Form of order for inspection in patent cases. See Davenport v. Jepson, 1 N. R. 307.

7. The plaintiffs were owners of a type-founding patent. The defendant was a printer, who used types alleged to be colourable imitations of the type patented by the plaintiffs. On a bill for an injunction:—Held, that the Court had jurisdiction to order the defendant to deliver a sample of type to the plaintiffs for analysis. Patent Type-Founding Co. v. Walter, 1 Johns. 727; 8 W. R. 353.

In an action against a printer for an infringement of a patent for improvements in the manufacture of type, the improvements consisting in the use of lead, tin, and antimony in certain proportions, the plaintiff applied to the Court under s. 42 of the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 83, for leave to inspect, and if necessary to take specimens of the type for the purpose of analysis. The affidavit stated that he had obtained from the defendant specimens of the type and caused them to be analysed by a chemist who was dead, and that the type so analysed was an infringement of the patent; but did not set out the report of the chemist or state its substance, or whether or not it was in writing. The Court refused to make an order that the plaintiff should be at liberty to take specimens for analysis. S. C. 5 H. & N. 192; 6 Jur., N. S., 103; 29 L. J., Exch., 207.

But the plaintiff subsequently filed a bill in equity against the defendant, and an order was made for inspection and the delivery of a competent portion of the type for the purposes of analysis. S. C. 1 Johns. 727.

Held, also, that laches sufficient to defeat the plaintiffs' right to an interlocutory injunction was no bar to an order on the same motion for inspection and samples. Ib.

8. In a suit to establish the validity of a patent, and to restrain infringement, upon an application by the plaintiff for inspection of all the sewing machines of every kind on the defendant's premises, the defendant was ordered to verify the several kinds of sewing machines which he had sold or exposed for sale, and to produce at his solicitor's office one of each class for inspection by the plaintiff's solicitor, and two of their scientific witnesses. Singer Manufacturing Co. v. Wilson, 13 W. R. 560; 12 L. T., N. S., 140; 5 N. R. 505.

9. The Court must be satisfied, that the plaintiff has made out such a case as at the hearing of the cause he will obtain the relief prayed, and that the previous inspection required by him of the defendant was material to such a case, before it will grant inspection of his process by which an alleged infringement of a patent was to be made out. Piggott v. Anglo-American Telegraph Co., 19 L. T., N. S., 46.

10. An order will not be made on the application of a plaintiff, in a suit to restrain an alleged infringement of his patent, for inspection of the defendant's works and machinery, unless the Court is satisfied that the inspection is essential to enable the plaintiff to prove his case. Batley v. Kynock, 19 L. R., Eq., 90; 44 L. J., Ch., 89; 23 W. R. 52.

In a suit for infringement of a patent for cartridges a motion on behalf of the plaintiff to inspect the defendant's manufactory was refused. Ib.

10. Appeal.

1. Where an order had been made by the Court below directing an issue, and the plaintiff's solicitor had at first intimated his intention to acquiesce in the decision, and the issues had been settled between the parties:—Held, that the plaintiff was not thereby precluded from afterwards appealing against the order, such appeal being presented in reasonable time. Young v. Fernie, 12 W. R. 221; 3 N. R. 270.

2. A. B., a patentee, had obtained a verdict at law establishing his right to a patent, and that such right had been infringed by C. D.; and the Court of Queen's Bench had unanimously discharged a rule nisi for a new trial obtained by C. D. C. D. applied, under s. 35 of the Common Law Procedure Act 1854, for leave to appeal, and leave was granted by the Court of Queen's Bench to appeal upon one point only:—Held, that notwithstanding the pendency of the appeal, A. B. was entitled to an injunction against C. D. to restrain the infringement of the patent, his right having been long enjoyed and established by the verdict of the jury, while an appeal under the Common Law Procedure Act was allowed on grounds of law only, and not on questions of evidence. Lister v. Leather, 5 W. R. 550; 3 Jur., N. S., 433.

3. The 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27, s. 3, does not, by reference to proceedings at common law, impose limits upon the right of appeal previously existing against any order made in the Court of Chancery. Curtis v. Platt, 1 L. R., H. L., 337; 35 L. J., Ch., 852.

Where, therefore, an order had been made in the Court of Chancery by a Vice-Chancellor, on his own findings upon a trial without a jury, and that order had been confirmed by the Lord Chancellor on appeal:—Held, that the order of the Lord Chancellor was the subject of appeal to the House of Lords. Ib.

4. The Court of Appeal in Chancery has not, under the 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27, power, on an application for a new trial, to reverse the findings of a Vice-Chancellor on issues of fact tried before him; but where the issues raise mixed questions of law and fact, if the decision of one of the questions discussed is sufficient to dispose of the case, the Court of Appeal may give a final judgment upon it without ordering a new trial. Simpson v. Holliday, 1 L. R., H. L., 315; 35 L. J., Ch., 811.

11. Costs.

5. Where on the invasion of a patent right the plaintiffs were entitled to the protection of an injunction:—Held, that the injunction having been obtained and submitted to, with an undertaking not to continue the infringement, the plaintiff was, nevertheless, entitled to go on in order to obtain his costs; but semble, the Court would not grant an account of damages. Geary v. Norton, 1 De G. & Sm. 9.

6. In a suit for the infringement of a patent, where the Court considers the plaintiff entitled to full costs as between solicitor and client, the decree or order should contain an express direction that the costs be so taxed, notwithstanding the 43rd section of the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 83 provides that he shall have such full costs unless the judge shall certify that he ought not to have them. Lister v. Leather, 4 Kay & J. 425.

7. On a bill to restrain the infringement of a patent, a motion for injunction was ordered to stand over until after the trial of an action, nothing being said about costs. In the action the plaintiff succeeded on the issue as to the infringement, but failed in establishing the validity of his patent. The bill was afterwards dismissed with costs:—Held, that the defendant's costs of the motion were costs in the cause. Circumstances under which the costs of a third counsel will be allowed. Betts v. Clifford, 1 John. & H. 74.

8. The directors of a limited company, and acting as its agents, infringed a patent, and were made defendants, together with the company, to a suit, the bill in which prayed for an injunction and costs:—Held, that the decree must be made against the directors as well as the company, and that the directors were personally liable to pay the costs. Betts v. De Vitre, 11 Jur., N. S., 9.

Form of order for a perpetual injunction to restrain defendants from further infringement of patent, as to costs personally against directors of a limited liability company, and as to accounts and inquiries to ascertain damages sustained by a patentee in consequence of the infringement of his patent. S. C. 11 Jur., N. S., 217; 12 L. T., N. S., 51.

9. A patentee is entitled to full costs, at the discretion of the judge, under 15 & 16 Vict., c. 83, s. 43, in any suit to protect his rights under the patent, although the validity of his patent is not disputed, and has, in fact, been established in prior suits. Davenport v. Rylands, 1 L. R., Eq., 302; 12 Jur., N. S., 71; 35 L. J., Ch., 204; 14 W. R. 243; 14 L. T., N. S., 53.

10. Where, in a suit to restrain the infringement of a patent, issues are directed and the judge certifies that the validity of the letters patent came in question, the plaintiff cannot, at the hearing of that suit, have more than party and party costs, the provisions of the 15 and 16 Vict., c. 83, applying only to subsequent actions or suits. Penn v. Bibby, 36 L. J., Ch., 277; 3 L. R., Eq., 308; 15 W. R. 192; 15 L. T., N. S., 385.

11. Upon an application by a defendant for leave to re-amend objections by inserting certain further specified instances which had come to his knowledge, he was ordered to pay the costs of the application, and the costs arising out of and consequent upon the re-amendment were reserved. Penn v. Bibby, 2 L. R., Eq., 548.

12. In granting the defendant in a patent action after issue joined, and a day has been fixed for the hearing, leave to amend his particulars of objection, the Court will place the plaintiff in the same position as to discontinuing the action, or disclaiming a portion of his invention, as he would have been if the original particulars of objection had contained the new instances of prior publication proposed to be introduced by amendment; and accordingly all costs incurred by the plaintiff subsequently to the delivery of the original particulars of objection will be ordered to be paid to him by the defendant in case he elects, within a time fixed by the order, to discontinue his action. Form of order. Edison Telephone Co. v. India-Rubber Co., 17 L. R., Ch. D., 137; 29 W. R. 496.

1. In a suit to restrain the infringement of a patent, the plaintiff, shortly before the hearing, obtained the common order to dismiss the bill with costs. Amongst the items in the defendant's bill of costs were charges for drawing particulars of breaches, and having the same settled by counsel, which the master had allowed; charges for remuneration of scientific witnesses, which he had reduced; and a charge for the construction of a model, which he had also reduced:—Held, that the Patent Law Amendment Act 1852 (15 & 16 Vict., c. 83), s. 43, had no application to the case of a plaintiff dismissing his own bill before the hearing; that the allowance of remuneration to scientific witnesses was part of the ordinary practice; and that the expense of having a model made might also be allowed. Batley v. Kynock, 20 L. R., Eq., 632; 33 L. T., N. S., 45.

1. General Principles.

2. In August 1835 a patentee filed a bill to restrain an alleged infringement of his patent, and the defendant having, by his answer, denied the validity of the patent, and also the fact of the alleged infringement, the plaintiff made no interlocutory application for an injunction, but went into evidence in support of his case, and in May 1839 brought the cause to a hearing. The Master of the Rolls, being of opinion that the plaintiff, upon the evidence, had not made out a case which would have supported an injunction if applied for in the interlocutory stage, refused to give him an opportunity of establishing his title at law by retaining the bill, with liberty to bring an action, and dismissed the bill with costs; and the Lord Chancellor, on appeal, affirmed the decision. Bacon v. Jones, 4 Myl. & C. 433; 3 Jur. 994. Affirming S. C. sub nom. Bacon v. Spottiswoode, 1 Beav. 382; 3 Jur. 476.

Consideration of the principles and practice of the Court in granting injunctions in patent cases, upon interlocutory motions and at the hearing. Ib.

3. The Court will not, upon interlocutory application, interfere to restrain the exercise of a patent. Copeland v. Webb, 1 N. R. 119.

4. The Court will, since the 25 & 26 Vict., c. 42, enter into the question of the validity of a patent, on a motion for an interim injunction. Davenport v. Jepson, 1 N. R. 173.

The powers of the Court are not limited by the above Act. Ib.

The circumstances and the terms under and upon which the Court will still grant an interim injunction to restrain an alleged infringement. Ib.

5. Upon the invasion of a patent right, the party complaining has a right to the protection of an injunction, although the other party may promise to commit no further infringement, and may offer to pay the costs of preparing the bill; and if the defendant do not, after injunction obtained, offer to pay the costs of it, the plaintiff may bring the suit to a hearing, and will be entitled to the costs of the suit. Quære, whether, in such a case, the Court will give an account of damages. Geary v. Norton, 1 De G. & Sm. 9.

6. A., in May 1836, became purchaser of a patent, which was obtained in May 1835, and which the defendant, as alleged, subsequent to the date of the purchase infringed. A. obtained an injunction ex parte to restrain the defendant, on an affidavit in support, which stated that the patent had been recorded, and that it became and was good and valid. On motion to dissolve:—Held, that the recency of a patent was no ground for refusing an injunction ex parte to restrain its infringement. Gardner v. Broadbent, 2 Jur., N. S., 1041.

7. In an action for infringement of a patent, judgment was given for an injunction against manufacture or sale. The registrar refused to insert in the minutes an order against importation or exportation. On motion to vary the minutes in this and other particulars:—Held, that the refusal was right, but that in some other particulars the minutes must be varied; the plaintiff to pay the costs of the motion, having failed on the substantial point at issue. British Dynamite Co. v. Krebs, 25 W. R. 846.

2. Affidavit.

8. In order to obtain an injunction against violation of a patent, the party must, at the time of applying, swear as to his belief that he is the original inventor. Hill v. Thompson, 3 Meriv. 622.

9. Affidavits allowed to be read for a patentee of a new invention, upon a motion to dissolve an injunction on the coming in of the answer. Gibbs v. Cole, 3 P. W. 255; Dick. 64.

10. On an application for an injunction to restrain the infringement of a patent, the party must swear, that at the time of making the application he believes that at the date of the patent the invention was new, or had not been previously known or used in this kingdom. Sturz v. De La Rue, 5 Russ. 322; 7 L. J., Ch., 47.

11. A., in May 1836, became purchaser of a patent, which was obtained in May 1835, and which the defendant, as alleged, subsequent to the date of the purchase infringed. A. obtained an injunction ex parte to restrain him, or an affidavit in support, which stated that the patent had been recorded, and that it became and was good and valid. On motion to dissolve, held that the recency of a patent was no ground for refusing an injunction ex parte to restrain its infringement, but that the party seeking such injunction was bound to support his application by a clear and distinct statement, upon affidavit, that he believed the patentee was the original inventor, and that the invention had not been practised at the time when the patent was granted; and as the injunction obtained ex parte was granted upon an affidavit insufficient in this respect, it was dissolved, with costs. Gardner v. Broadbent, 2 Jur., N. S., 1041; 4 W. R. 767.

1. In an injunction suit to restrain an infringement of a patent, a plaintiff moving for leave to proceed at law must file an affidavit of his belief in his title and in the alleged infringement. Mayer v. Spence, 1 John. & H. 87; 6 Jur., N. S., 672; 8 W. R. 559.

Order made upon such an affidavit, notwithstanding an application by defendant that the motion might stand over for the cross-examination of the plaintiff. Ib.

2. Where a defendant to a bill filed to restrain an infringement of a patent by his answer denies the novelty of the invention, the plaintiff, in support of a motion for an injunction, must make a clear affidavit of his belief in the novelty of the invention. Whitten v. Jennings, 1 Dr. & Sm. 110; 6 Jur., N. S., 164.

3. Where Long User of Patent.

3. Where there has been a length of exclusive enjoyment under a patent, the Court will grant an injunction in the first instance, without previously putting the party to establish this right by an action at law; otherwise, where the patent is recent. Hill v. Thompson, 3 Meriv. 622.

4. Principles upon which the Court will interfere to protect a patentee before he has established his right at law in the case of patents which have been long used or enjoyed, or will in the case of new patents suspend its interference until the right at law has been established. Caldwell v. Vanvlissengen, 9 Hare 424; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 97; 16 Jur. 115.

5. The Court will not, in the first instance, interfere by injunction to restrain the infringement of a patent unless there has been long and uninterrupted enjoyment under it, but will direct an action to be brought to try the legal right. Delay in filing the bill is a ground for refusing the injunction. Baxter v. Combe, 1 Ir. Ch. R. 284. And see Betts v. Menzies, 10 H. L. Ca. 117; 3 Jur., N. S., 357.

6. If the answer to a bill to prevent the infringement of a patent deny the invention to be new, and also the enjoyment under the letters patent, and state (as is the fact) that the specification is imperfectly set forth in the bill, the Court will dissolve an injunction previously obtained, on affidavit, giving the plaintiff liberty to bring an action, although the defendant admits by his answer that he has made machines upon the principle comprised in the letters patent. Curtis v. Cutts, 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 184; 3 Jur. 34.

Long and exclusive enjoyment, under letters patent, will entitle a party to an injunction until an action can be tried at law. Ib.

7. Although a patent is of long standing, yet if, from the nature of the alleged invention, or the conflicting evidence as to its novelty, its validity appears to be doubtful, or if the evidence of exclusive possession is not satisfactory, the Court will not grant an injunction until the title has been established at law. Collard v. Allison, 4 Myl. & C. 487.

After the patentee had obtained a verdict in an action brought to try the validity of the patent, the Court refused to grant an injunction to restrain the infringement of the patent, on the ground that a rule nisi for a new trial had been obtained and was pending in the court of law, and that the legal title of the patentee was therefore still undecided. Ib.

8. Where there is a primâ facie case of an infringement of a patent, the length of time which the patent has been enjoyed by the patentee will influence the Court in granting an injunction against the parties who are alleged so to have infringed his rights. Davenport v. Richard, 3 L. T., N. S., 503.

Letters patent were dated in November 1851, which were duly assigned to the plaintiff. The defendant's letters patent were dated in January 1859, after the Patent Law Act 1852:—Held, that the first patentees without registration were to be considered as sole owners. Ib.

9. Although it is the ordinary rule of the Court not to grant an injunction, unless either the validity of a patent has been established, or the patent has been undisputed for many years, the circumstances of the case may be such as to induce the Court to depart from that rule. Renard v. Levinstein, 10 L. T., N. S., 94. Affirmed 10 L. T., N. S., 177.

10. An interim injunction will not be granted to restrain the infringement of a patent several years old but never established by legal proceedings, unless there has been an actual user of the patent for a considerable time. Plympton v. Malcolmson, 20 L. R., Eq., 37; 44 L. J., Ch., 257; 23 W. R. 404.

11. The Court will interfere by interlocutory injunction in support of a patent right, where the patent is an old one, and there has been long and undisturbed enjoyment of it, or where its validity has been established elsewhere, and the Court sees no reason to doubt the result, or where the conduct of the defendant has been such that as against him there is no reason to doubt the validity of the patent. Dudgeon v. Thomson, 22 W. R. 464; 30 L. T., N. S., 244.

The fact of an interdict having been granted against an infringer in Scotland is, as against him, sufficient primâ facie evidence of the validity of a patent for the United Kingdom to warrant an interlocutory injunction. Ib.

12. Where a patent had been in force for twelve years, and had been the subject of four suits against different persons, all of which terminated favourably to the patentee, and in two of which verdicts had been given in favour of the validity of the patent:—Held, that in a fifth case the patentee was entitled to an injunction pending the trial of the legal right, although a fresh fact was brought forward, tending to impeach the novelty of the invention. A patentee does not acquiesce in the infringement of his patent by omitting to proceed by scire facias to set aside a subsequent patent extending to part of his invention, unless such subsequent patent is put in practice. Newall v. Wilson, 2 De G. M. & G. 282.

An allegation as to the defendant's inability to be answerable in damages:—Held, not irrelevant upon a motion for an injunction against the infringement of a patent. Ib.

1. The doctrine that "there is no presumption in law in favour of the validity of a patent," or "where letters patent have been recently granted an injunction will not be granted until the right has been established," is not correct. Halsey v. Brotherhood, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 514; 49 L. J., Ch., 786.

4. Delay, Effect of.

2. A special injunction, on notice, to prevent the infringement of a patent, refused on the ground of delay, notwithstanding the Court had a strong impression in favour of the plaintiff's right. An injunction was refused, and the plaintiff put to establish his legal rights. Bridson v. Benecke, 12 Beav. 1.

He was successful on the trial, but the defendants tendered a bill of exceptions. An injunction was granted, under the circumstances, before the bill of exceptions had been disposed of. Ib.

3. Where an interlocutory injunction to restrain an infringement of a patent was moved for in a suit in which the bill was filed in July, and it appeared that the plaintiff wrote complaining of the infringement in the preceding November, and knew of the defendant's proceedings in the previous August, the injunction was refused on the ground of delay. Bovill v. Crate, 2 L. R., Eq., 388.

4. Where the patent was obtained in 1846, the alleged infringement of it took place in 1847, and the bill was not filed for more than two years afterwards, the injunction was refused. Baxter v. Combe, 1 Ir. Ch. D. 284.

5. F. contrived a grate, which he termed "F.'s Patent Kitchener," but no patent was ever taken out. H., formerly a servant of F., obtained surreptitiously lists of his customers and copies of his plans, etc., and used them in constructing an exactly similar article, which he sold under the name of "F.'s Patent Kitchener," but there was no proof that he represented the articles so sold by him as having been actually made by F. Plaintiff suffered four months to elapse without taking any steps:—Held, that the misrepresentation as to the article being patent was so far fraudulent, that, looking also to the lapse of time, the Court would not interfere summarily by injunction to prevent defendant using plaintiff's name in such manner; and therefore the bill was retained for six months, with liberty to bring an action in the meantime. Flavell v. Harrison, 17 Jur. 368; 22 L. J., Ch., 866; 10 Hare 467; 1 W. R. 213.

6. The owners of a patent for a peculiar mode of manufacturing iron wheels for railway carriages, having discovered that several railway companies were violating their patent, brought an action for damages against one of such companies only, but did not in any way give notice to the other companies to discontinue their infringements of the plaintiffs' right. In the action the validity of the patent was disputed, and it was not decided until three years after the patent had expired, when a verdict was given for the plaintiffs, with large damages. Thereupon the plaintiffs filed a bill for an account of profits, and an injunction against another of the companies who had infringed their patent, complaining of acts done nine years before:—Held, that the delay was not excused by the pendency of the action, but was fatal to the plaintiffs' case. Smith v. London & South Western Railway Co., 1 Kay 408; 23 L. J., Ch., 562; 2 W. R. 310; 2 Eq. Rep. 428.

The right to an account is an entirely ancillary right, and is given by equity as its own mode of estimating damages in cases where it has been necessary to interfere primarily by injunction. Ib.

5. Suspending.

7. After a trial before the Vice-Chancellor, without a jury, in which issues were found for the plaintiff, a motion for a new trial having been refused by the Vice-Chancellor and on appeal refused by the Lord Chancellor was being taken by appeal to the House of Lords. The Court declined to suspend the final order for an injunction pending the appeal to the House of Lords. Penn v. Bibby, Penn v. Fernie, 3 L. R., Eq., 308; 36 L. J., Ch., 277; 15 W. R. 192.

8. In an action to restrain the infringement of a patent for improvements in the method of making ornamental tin plates the plaintiff obtained an injunction. The defendant, being about to appeal, moved to suspend the injunction pending the appeal, offering to give any undertaking as to damages that the Court might think fit to impose, and to prosecute the appeal with diligence, and alleging that if he was prevented from carrying out the numerous contracts he had in hand, the result would be to destroy their connection and to cause him irreparable damage:—Held, no ground for suspending the operation of the injunction, for that the defendant could buy the articles in the market and so fulfil his contracts. Flower v. Lloyd, 36 L. T., N. S., 444.

6. Undertaking as to Damages.

9. Since the 21 & 22 Vict., c. 27, s. 2, empowering the Court to award damages in cases in which it has jurisdiction to entertain an application for an injunction against the commission of any wrongful act, the Court will be more strict than ever in requiring the plaintiff, as a condition previous to his obtaining an interim injunction against the alleged infringement of a patent, to abide by any order it may make as to damages. Tuck v. Silver, 1 Johns. 218.

10. An allegation as to the defendant's inability to be answerable in damages:—Held, not irrelevant upon a motion for an injunction against the infringement of a patent. Newall v. Wilson, 2 De G. M. & G. 282.

11. In a suit to restrain the infringement of a patent relating to roller skates, the plaintiff moved for an injunction against the defendant until the hearing:—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction upon giving an undertaking as to damages. Inasmuch as the defendant's trade was only a new one, there would be less hardship in stopping it and requiring the plaintiff to give an undertaking as to damages than in compelling the plaintiff to rely upon the defendant's undertaking to keep an account of his sales and profits. Plimpton v. Spiller, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 286; 35 L. T., N. S., 656; 25 W. R. 152.

I. IN GENERAL.

1. Stoppage no payment at law or in equity, unless under special circumstances, and in case of special demands where the balance only is the debt. Jeffs v. Wood, 2 P. W. 128.

2. Money paid into court upon an injunction and laid out is security, and not payment. Broughton v. Pitchford, 6 Madd. 295.

3. Payment of money to a trustee, with notice of the trust, is a mis-payment, though the trustee had judgment and execution against the person that paid the money. Pritchard v. Langher, 2 Vern. 197.

4. Creditor is not obliged except by special agreement to take his debt by driblets. Wilkinson v. Sterne, 9 Mod. 299.

5. If the bailiff of a manor pays rent into a wrong hand he must pay it over again. Townsend v. Ash, 3 Atk. 340.

6. A. bound to B. in a bond of 1,000*l.* for payment of 500*l.*; afterwards A., and C. as his surety, give a bond to B. of 200*l.* for payment of 100*l.* as a further security for so much of the 500*l.* Then A. assigns a judgment to B. of 500*l.* towards a further satisfaction of the debt, and B. receives several sums on his judgment, and A., by the consent of B., receives 30*l.*, also part of the money secured on his judgment. This shall not go in exoneration of any part of the money secured by the 200*l.* bond, as it would do if B. had actually received it and lent it to A. Halford v. Byron, Pre. Ch. 178.

7. Before a payment by a debtor to or under the direction of his legal creditor can be impeached or avoided, to the prejudice of the debtor, it must be shown clearly either that the debtor was subjected to the obligation of seeing to some particular mode of application of the money which was not pursued, or that the debtor, having notice of circumstances rendering it inequitable for the legal creditor to receive or direct the payment, could reasonably and with safety have avoided making the payments. Rose v. Clarke, 1 Y. & Coll. 534.

Where a bond debt, which was made the subject of settlement, was afterwards paid (contrary to the terms of that settlement) to the husband, by the direction of the obligees of the bond, and the debtor had notice of the existence of such settlement, and had been present as a relation of the wife when it was read over; but the settlement did not in express terms refer to this bond, but stated the amount of the debt to have been paid by the wife to the trustees of the settlement: it was held, that the debtor was not liable to pay the money over again. Ib.

8. An averment in an answer of defendant being ready to pay, where his obligation was to offer payment, is no defence against the demand for an account. Stratford v. Aldborough (Lord), Beat. 239.

9. It is quite clear, according to the principles stated in Cash v. Kennion (11 Ves. 314), that a debtor making default in payment at a particular time and place, is bound to make good the payment, according to the rate of exchange then and there existing; and it was held no ground for dispensing with the rule, that the agent of the creditor had authorised the debtor to retain the money "until a better time," having done so upon the representation of the debtor, which was not proved to be true, of certain impediments, arising from the political circumstances of the country, to the remittance of the sum in the manner agreed upon. Bertrand v. Bertrand, 2 Moo. P. C. 212.

1. A bond given at Dublin, or a note in Jamaica, must be paid in the current money. The same with regard to a will. Saunders v. Drake, 2 Atk. 465.

2. A., resident in Amsterdam, being the owner in possession of a plantation in British Guiana, by an instrument executed on her behalf by her attorney in London in the year 1817, sold the plantation, cum annexis, to B., for 100,000 guilders, "Holland currency," and 30,000*l.* sterling, taking, as part of the consideration money, a first mortgage on the plantation for the 100,000 guilders:—Held, that the term in the mortgage-deed, "Holland currency," coupled with the fact of Amsterdam being the place mentioned for payment, meant Dutch currency and not colonial currency. Macrae v. Goodman, 5 Moo. P. C. 316; 10 Jur. 555.

3. Bill alleging fraud as to quantity and quality of goods sold, not discovered till they were exported to America; that they were in consequence sold at a loss; and that plaintiff, being threatened with an action, paid the original price according to contract, under a protest that he would seek relief in equity; and praying an account and payment in respect of the loss, and a commission to America. Demurrer allowed. Kemp v. Pryor, 7 Ves. 237.

4. A debtor who was under arrest gave to the creditor at whose suit he was imprisoned a warrant of attorney to confess judgment for the whole amount claimed. On bill filed by the debtor for an account and for an injunction to restrain the creditor from suing on a judgment entered up by force of the warrant of attorney:—Held, that the arrangement having been entered into by the debtor deliberately, with full knowledge of the circumstances, and with professional advice, the bill must be dismissed with costs, although one of the debts for which the warrant of attorney was given, was barred by the Statute of Limitations. Richards v. Curlewis, 3 Eq. Rep. 278; 18, Beav. 492.

5. The obligor of a bond, which had been afterwards assigned to a trustee, of which assignment the obligor of the bond had notice, but not of the particular terms of the trust, was held not liable for payments not warranted by the trust made by him under the direction of the trustee, but only for such payments as he had made without such direction. Roberts v. Lloyd, 2 Beav. 376.

6. Payment by a trustee to an infant cestui que trust, nineteen years of age, on the false representation by herself and her parents, that she had attained the age of twenty-one, held to be a discharge to the trustee for the sum so paid. Overton v. Banister, 3 Hare 503; 8 Jur. 906.

7. Payment of money into a banking-house to be placed to the credit of another, upon a condition; the money in the meantime to stand in the bankers' books in the name of the party paying it in. It is at his risk, and the loss is his, if the bankers fail before the condition is complied with, though the other party had written to desire it to be paid in generally. Calley v. Short, Coop. 148. Affirmed Jac. 631.

8. A., a creditor of a firm, held securities from one of its members for moneys advanced by him, at different times, to the firm, but claimed a balance beyond what those securities would cover. All the creditors of the firm agreed to accept a composition "of 7*s.* for every 20*s.* due to the said creditors respectively." A. was the first to sign this deed; but added to his signature the words "without prejudice to any securities whatever that I hold." The other creditors signed in their respective order, under A.'s signature:—Held, that such a composition, thus accepted, did not affect the rights of A. upon his previous securities, but only related to the balance beyond the sum they would cover, and that he might afterwards enforce those securities in equity. Duffy v. Orr, 1 Cl. & F. 253; 5 Bli., N. S., 620.

9. A. and B., trustees of a will under which the plaintiff was entitled to a share of residue, which she had assigned to C. and D., the trustees of her marriage settlement, paid it to C. alone, without the knowledge of D. They afterwards transferred a legacy of stock settled upon similar trusts to C. and D., by whom it was subsequently sold out, and the proceeds were received by C. alone. D. left to C. the general management of the trust estate, and the choice of investments. Both funds were partially misapplied and lost by C. The plaintiff sought to have both funds made good:—Held, that the bill was not multifarious, though it asked no relief against A. and B., with respect to the legacy fund. Margetts v. Perks, 12 W. R. 517.

Held, also, that the conduct of D. did not justify A. and B. in considering C. as his agent authorised to receive the money. Ib.

10. The Court, being satisfied that a debtor had the means to pay, ordered payment of the debt by instalments (although the payment of such instalments would, it was alleged, drive the debtor into bankruptcy and cause a forfeiture of the income from which such instalments were obtainable), or, in default, committal to prison. Re Imperial Mercantile Credit Association, Lewis's case, 21 W. R. 505; 42 L. J., Ch., 379; 28 L. T., N. S., 396.

11. A creditor may have by contract a good charge for his debt on sums to become due from himself to the debtor. Exp. Mackay, Exp. Brown, Re Jeavons, 42 L. J., Bky., 68; 8 L. R., Ch., 643; 21 W. R. 664; 28 L. T., N. S., 828.

An agreement by a creditor for an extension of his security to arise in case of the debtor's bankruptcy, is against the policy of the bankruptcy law, and void. Ib.

A patentee assigned his patent in consideration of royalties, with an agreement that the assignees should retain half the royalties in payment of a debt due from him to them; and a provision that in case of his bankruptcy or liquidation they might retain the whole of the royalties. In his liquidation:—Held, that the assignees had a valid charge on the half of the royalties, giving them the usual rights of secured creditors; but that the provision giving them a right to retain the whole of the royalties in case of bankruptcy was a fraud on the bankruptcy laws, and void. Ib.

Effect of Part Payment.] 1. As a general rule part payment of a debt raises in law an implied promise to pay the balance. But part payment will not change what is originally a mere moral obligation into a legal debt. Mostyn v. Mostyn, Exp. Barry, 39 L. J., Ch., 780; 5 L. R., Ch., 457; 18 W. R. 657; 22 L. T., N. S., 461.

II. VOLUNTARY OR BY MISTAKE.

2. When money has been voluntary paid under a mistake the remedy is at law and not in equity. Lamb v. Canfield, 43 L. J., Ch., 408.

3. Sum of money paid by mistake by assignee of one bankruptcy to assignees of another bankruptcy, and divided amongst creditors, directed to be repaid out of future effects. Exp. Bignold, 2 Madd. 470.

4. Construction of a clause in a marriage settlement. A court of equity will not direct payments made under a mistaken construction of doubtful clause in a settlement to be refunded after many years of acquiescence by all parties, and after the death of one of the authors of the settlement, especially where subsequent family arrangements have proceeded on the footing of that construction. Clifton v. Cockburn, 3 Myl. & K. 76.

5. The distinction between voluntary and compelled payments has been exploded in our courts for more than a century past. Ashe v. Berry, Beat. 260.

6. A. B. on a sale of certain lands covenanted with C. D., the purchaser, to protect him against "all judgments, charges, and incumbrances, etc." It subsequently appeared that the lands were liable to a judgment, confessed previously to the lands coming into the possession of C. D., and proceedings having been commenced by the conusee against the lands, and A. B. having been called upon by C. D. and having accordingly, and in fulfilment of his covenant, paid off the amount of the judgment:—Held, that this was not a voluntary payment. Aicken v. Macklin, 1 Dr. & Wal. 621.

7. Voluntary payment, conclusive both in equity and at law, on the principle that litigation is not to be multiplied. Goodman v. Sayers, 2 Jac. & Walk. 263.

III. BY BILLS.

8. In the absence of an agreement to the contrary, the acceptance of a bill of exchange only suspends the remedy for a debt. Re London, Birmingham, and South Staffordshire Bank, 11 Jur., N. S., 316; 34 L. J., Ch., 418; 13 W. R. 446; 12 L. T., N. S., 45.

A banking company which had a lien upon the shares of any shareholder for moneys due from him to the bank took bills of exchange for a debt owing by a shareholder to the bank:—Held, that its lien continued until the bills arrived at maturity. Ib.

9. Quære, whether a debt for which a bill of exchange is given is thereby completely extinguished, so as to be incapable of supporting a fiat if the bill be negotiated and be out of the possession of the creditor at the time of the act of bankruptcy. Exp. & Re Magnus, 2 M. D. & De G. 604; 6 Jur. 808.

10 Manager of colliery paying creditor on it by bill of exchange, which was dishonoured, colliery remains liable to the payment of original debt. Tempest v. Ord, 1 Madd. 89.

11. Where a debtor delivers to his creditor his promissory note for the amount of the debt, the debt may be considered as actually paid, if the creditor at the time of receiving the note has agreed to take it in payment of the debt, and to take upon himself the risk of the note being paid, or if from the conduct of the creditor, or the special circumstances of the case, such an agreement is legally to be implied. But in the absence of any special circumstances, the transaction does not amount to a discharge of the original debt, but a mere extended credit. Sayer v. Wagstaff, 5 Beav. 415; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 161. Affirmed 14 L. J., N. S., Ch., 116; 8 Jur. 1083.

12. Where it was optional with a creditor to receive payment for an advance to a company, either in shares or money, and a cheque was sent to him by the company's secretary in payment, which, after keeping two days, he returned, requesting to be paid in shares, but in the interim attended a meeting of the company, where his conduct led to the inference that he had accepted the cheque:—Held, that such conduct amounted to an acquiescence in the payment, and debarred him from all further claim to the shares. Ferguson v. Wilson, 14 L. T., N. S., 12.

13. When by the contract for sale and purchase of goods it is stipulated, that payment should be made by the buyers' acceptances of the sellers' drafts, if before the time for delivery of the goods the purchaser becomes insolvent or the acceptances are dishonoured, the vendor still has a lien for unpaid purchase money. Difference in this respect between acceptances of the purchaser and those of a third person. Gunn v. Bolckow, Vaughan, & Co., 44 L. J., Ch., 732; 10 L. R., Ch., 491; 32 L. T., N. S., 781.

By a contract for the supply of iron rails it was agreed, that payment should be made by buyers' acceptance of sellers' drafts at six months' date, against inspector's certficate of approval and wharfinger's certificate of each 500 tons being stacked ready for shipment. Inspector's certificates and wharfinger's certificates were from time to time handed to the buyers in exchange for their acceptances, and were pledged with T. as security for advances made by him, it being an alleged custom of the trade to treat such certificates as delivery warrants. The buyers having become insolvent before the first acceptance became due:—Held, first, that the delivery of the acceptances did not constitute a valid payment for the rails according to the contract. Ib.

Held, secondly, that no custom of the trade could give to the certificates the effect of warrants, and T., therefore, had no lien on the rails. Ib.

14. Bills of exchange are not proper subjects of mortgage, and are prima facie presumed to be given in part payment as they become due. Hills v. Parker, 14 L. T., N. S., 107.

15. Where, upon the sale of a ship to A. and B., in which A. was to be interested in one-third, and B. in two-thirds, and upon the execution of the bill of sale, although expressing that B. had paid two-thirds of the purchase money, only one-third was actually paid, and

A.'s acceptances given for the remainder, which were, from A. becoming bankrupt, dishonoured:—Held, that B. remained liable to the vendor for the unpaid purchase money, notwithstanding the bills were accepted by A. alone. Lynn v. Chaters, 2 Keen 521.

1. Vendor's lien on the estate for the purchase money not discharged by taking bills of exchange, which are to be considered not as a security, but as a mode of payment. Grant v. Mills, 2 Ves. & B. 306.

2. Where, by articles under seal, a party covenanted to pay a certain sum for certain work by bills, to be drawn by B. and accepted by himself:—Held, that as a covenant to pay a certain sum it constituted a specialty debt. Copland v. Martin, 9 Sim. 433.

3. By the Dutch law the satisfaction of the principal debt extinguishes the mortgage or pledge on which it is secured, unless there is an express contract for keeping alive the original security. Where, therefore, the drawee of bills of exchange, which had been dishonoured, accepted and paid other bills for the amount, taking an assignment of the mortgage upon which the original bills were secured:—Held, by the Judicial Committee, that there being no contract or sufficient evidence to show that the intention of the parties was to keep the mortgage alive, such acceptance and payment operated as an extinguishment of the principal security, and not as a transfer of the bills for which it was originally given. Wilkinson v. Simpson, 2 Moo. P. C. 275.

4. Bill taken for an antecedent debt, without indorsement, proving bad, the antecedent debt may be resorted to, but if the bill is discounted without indorsement, and no antecedent debt, it is evidence of a purchase, and there is no demand. Exp. Blackburne, 10 Ves. 206.

5. A., the holder of a bill, not having paid the consideration for it, remitted the bill to C., from whom he had ordered shipments of corn. C., hearing of A.'s insolvency, endeavoured to stop the corn in transitu. C. brought an action on the bill against the plaintiff, who applied for an injunction, on the ground that the answer would show that there was nothing due from A. to C., and that A. had paid no consideration. The Court refused to stop the action, but stayed execution till the coming in of the answer and further order. Holford v Werthemann, 2 W. R. 51.

6. B. deposited foreign bonds with C., a stockbroker, for the purpose of obtaining a loan thereon. C. obtained the loan by depositing the bonds with A. B. having paid C. the money for redeeming these bonds, is subsequently informed by C. that the money has not been applied for that purpose, but to C.'s own use. B. induces C. to recover the bonds from A. upon the understanding that he (B.) will provide the funds to meet the cheque to be given by C. to A. for their recovery. C. gives A. a crossed cheque for the amount due, and receives back the bonds. The bonds were delivered to B., who thereupon refused to provide the funds for meeting the cheque given to A., which was dishonoured. C. died:—Held, that A. was entitled to recover from B. the amount due upon C.'s dishonoured cheque, or to have the bonds delivered up to him; B. not being entitled to withdraw from his undertaking to meet C.'s cheque on the faith of which the bonds were obtained from A., or to hold them against the person who was rightful owner to the extent for which they were pledged:—Held, also, that there was no such negligence on the part of A. in accepting the crossed cheque without inquiry whether there were assets to meet it as to disentitle him to relief. Mocatta v. Bell, 4 Jur., N. S., 77; 27 L. J., Ch., 237.

7. By a contract under seal between A., a vendor of the one part, and B. and C., joint purchasers of the other part, B. and C. agreed to pay a certain sum for the subject matter of sale, such payment to be made by instalments, and to be partly in cash, and partly by bills to be drawn by A. and accepted at his option by either B. or C. A. exercised this option by drawing upon C., and after a large portion of the purchase money had been duly paid in cash, and by the acceptances of C., which had been duly honoured, A. further elected as to such portion of the balance of the purchase money as was to be paid by bills, to take the acceptances of C., and received such bills accordingly. Before the bills became due, and while they were in the hands of third parties, both B. and C. stopped payment. A., after having proved against C.'s estate for the amount of the bills, and having received dividends thereon, sought to prove against B.'s estate for the balance of the purchase money which remained unpaid in consequence of the insufficiency of C.'s estate:—Held, that the contract was a contract to pay, and that A. was entitled to have recourse to the estate of B. for the balance of the purchase money remaining unpaid. Exp. Pearce, Re British and American Steam Navigation Co., 17 W. R. 1077; 8 L. R. Eq. 506.

IV. APPROPRIATION OF.

8. Application of indefinite payments, by the rules of the civil law giving the first option to the debtor, the second to the creditor, to be expressed at the time of payment; but if no express declaration by either, presuming an intention in favour of the debtor; or if the debts are equal in their nature, then applying the payments according to priority. Devaynes v. Noble, Clayton's case, 1 Meriv. 605.

In cases as of a banking account, where there has been a continuation of dealings, the appropriation (in the absence of express declaration) can only be made on the ground of presumption arising from the priority of receipts and payments. If any other appropriation is to be made, it is incumbent on the creditor to declare his intention at the time of payment. Ib.

9. According to the Scotch law, where money is paid by a debtor without specific appropriation by him to a creditor to whom he is indebted on several accounts, the creditor may at his option impute it to any of such debts; and it was held that he might do so, when the effect of such option was to leave a mortgage subsisting upon land in Demerara, which is subject to the Dutch law. Campbell v. Dent, 2 Moo. P. C. 252.

10. The entry by creditor in the books of the provost-marshal of St. Vincent, though according to the law of that island conclusive evidence of payment, and though made twenty-three years ago, without being questioned in the meanwhile, was held to be not so as to the appropriation of the sum, against a receipt previously given, admitting the sum to be paid upon a different account from that stated in the entry, the receipt referring the payment to the separate account of the debtor, the entry to a joint account on which he was liable together with others. Fraser v. Birch, 3 Knapp, 380.

1. Where there was a running cash and bill account between the bankrupt and a banking company, who were under considerable advances to him, but part of these advances arose out of illegal transactions; and the bankrupt from time to time deposited bills, and made payments, without any specific appropriation, or any settled account between him and the bankers:—Held, that the payments must be appropriated in reduction of the earlier items of the account, and of the legal, and not the illegal, part of the demand. Exp. Randleson, 2 Dea. & Ch. 534.

2. A. is entitled to a rent-charge issuing out of a real estate, and to an allowance out of the same estate for the maintenance of her children during their minority. The tenant for life suffers both the rent-charge and the maintenance to run greatly in arrear, but from time to time pays money to A. on account generally. In this case A. is entitled to carry the money so received to such of the two accounts as she pleases. Morgan v. Jones, 1 Bro. P. C. 32.

3. When there are two debts, money paid generally shall be applied in discharge of that first contracted, and surplus shall go towards the second. Wentworth v. Manning, 2 Eq. Abr. 261.

4. If debtor by mortgage and by bond pay money to creditor generally, the creditor may apply it to either debt. Wilkinson v. Sterne, 9 Mod. 427.

5. A. indebted by specialty and also on simple contract pays several sums and enters them in his book as paid on account of what was due by specialty. This entry not sufficient to make the application. Manning v. Westerne, 2 Vern. 606.

Quicquid solvitur, solvitur secundum modum solventis. But this rule is to be understood when the person paying, at the time of payment declares on what account he pays the money; but if the payment is general, the application is in the person receiving. Ib.

6. Quicquid solvitur, solvitur secundum modum solventis: therefore, where a man pays money generally, and is indebted for principal and interest, it shall be applied to reduce the interest in the first instance. So, if he be indebted in two sums, the one bearing interest, and the other not, the payment shall be applied to the credit of that debt which carries interest, or is the most penal upon the debtor, even though the creditor declares he received it on the other account. Chase v. Box, 2 Freem. 261.

7. A creditor by judgment and also by bond, receives 200*l.*, in part, of the purchase of the estate of the debtor, but gives no notice that he would apply it to the bond debt. It shall be applied towards satisfaction of the judgment. Brett v. Marsh, 1 Vern. 468.

8. An elegit creditor, who has obtained an order that the receiver do pay him a moiety of the rents, is entitled to apply these rents, in the first instance, to the payment of the interest which has accrued due on the principal sum since obtaining the order, though at the time the sum due amounted to the penalty of the bond. O'Bierne v. Mahon, 1 Jones 442.

9. A., indebted on security carrying interest and on simple contract, pays money generally, it shall be taken to be paid towards discharge of the debt which carried interest. Heyward v. Lomax, 1 Vern. 24. See also Bois v. Cranfield, Styl. 239; Vin. Abr. tit. Payment (M.), pl. 1. Periss v. Roberts, 1 Vern. 34. Manning v. Westerne, 2 Vern. 606. Meggott v. Mills, Ld. Raym. 287. Anon, 2 Mod. 236. Bowes v. Lucas, Andr. 55. Goddard v. Cox, 2 Stra. 1194. Hammersley v. Knowlys, 2 Esp. 665. Dawe v. Holdsworth, Peake N. P. 64.

10. Where bankers, with the knowledge of an act of bankruptcy committed by their customer, took a guarantee from a surety on his behalf to secure to a given amount all sums then or thereafter to become due from the customer, but the surety had no notice of the act of bankruptcy, and afterwards paid to the bankers the full sum for which he was a guarantee without specifying to which portion of the banker's debt the payment was to be applied:—Held, that such payment was to go in reduction of that portion of the banker's debt which was provable under the fiat, and not of that which was not provable. Exp. Sharp, Re Mason, 3 M. D. & De G. 490; 8 Jur. 1012.

11. A., with others, committee of a joint-stock company, mortgaged premises of the company, and covenanted personally for payment of the money, and afterwards executed a bond for another debt. On the death of A., who held shares in trust for the company, which were decreed to be sold and applied in payment of the debts for which A. was liable:—Held, that his representatives were entitled to have the proceeds applied in payment of the bond debt in priority of the mortgage. Lawrence v. Kempson, 7 Beav. 574.

12. When the obligee of a bond bearing interest had, under the bankruptcy of one of the obligors, received dividends amounting altogether to 20*s.* in the pound on the principal debt, he was allowed, in a suit to administer the estate of the co-obligor, to appropriate each successive dividend to the payment, in the first instance, of the arrear of interest due at the time of such dividend being made. Bower v. Marris, Cr. & Ph. 351; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 356.

13. A. gives his promissory note to B., who by deposit thereof at the bank raises money which he pays to A., being indebted to him. Accounts are subsequently settled between A. and B., but the promissory note remains at the bank. The money being still due by B. to the bank, B. becomes insolvent, and the bank brings an action against A. for the note. A. insists that the note has been discharged by B. in the course of his dealings with the bank. Injunction granted to restrain the action at law, and inquiries directed whether B. was a consenting party to the state of the accounts in the bank books; and secondly, whether the sums paid into the bank by B. were paid in with specific appropriations. Mostyn v. Burdekin, 3 Jur. 52.

1. A solicitor transacted business for his client and had at the same time a judgment against him bearing interest. The client having made general payments from time to time, the solicitor was held justified in applying those payments to his account for costs accruing due, although the interest on the judgment against his client was accumulating at the same time. D'Arcy v. Burke, 2 Ir. Eq. R. 1.

2. A., the widow and administratrix of B., continues B.'s trade after his decease; B., at his death, was indebted to C. on balance of account. A. continues to receive goods from, and to make payment to C., as B. had done, and she is charged in account by C. with the debt. The payments made by her to C. exceed the debt, but a balance is ultimately due to C.: —Held, that B.'s debt was discharged by A.'s payments, and that the ultimate balance cannot be proved as a debt against B.'s estate. Sterndale v. Hankinson, 1 Sim. 393.

3. Where an equitable mortgagee claiming to be a creditor of the mortgagor, both on the mortgage, and on a trade account, at the request of the mortgagor, lent the title deeds to enable the latter to complete a transfer of the premises, the mortgagee acquiescing in the sale, and the mortgagor paid over the first instalment of the purchase money to him:—Held, that it was to be taken as paid by the mortgagor on account of the mortgage debts, and could not be appropriated to the trade debt, although there was no express appropriation by the debtor at the time of payment. Young v. English, 7 Beav. 10; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 76.

4. L., a partner in a firm at Grenada, employs a firm at St. Thomas's to supply articles to fulfil a contract, which the St. Thomas's firm do, believing the contract to have been entered into on behalf of the Grenada firm. The other partners of the Grenada firm write to the St. Thomas's firm to disclaim this contract:—Held, that the Grenada firm were liable for all advances in respect of the contract made by the St. Thomas's firm previously to the day of their receipt of the disclaimer, or subsequently to it, in consequence of liabilities which they had previously incurred, and that the Grenada firm were entitled to credit for all payments made in respect of the contract prior to that day, or subsequent to it, if specifically made in respect of the account then due, and for the balance of all payments made generally in respect of the contract subsequently to that day, after satisfying the amount due to the St. Thomas's house by L. alone. An account current kept by the St. Thomas's house of all their transactions with the Grenada house, both prior to and after the disclaimer of the contract, held not to be evidence of specific appropriation by them of the sums they had received. Smith v. Ure, 2 Knapp 188.

5. The firm of J. F. & Sons, as agents of the plaintiffs, supplied goods to the firm of S. & W., upon the footing of the latter becoming debtors to the plaintiffs. They also supplied the same firm with other goods on their own behalf. They made no distinction in their accounts between the goods supplied by them as agents of the plaintiffs, and those which they supplied on their own behalf. E. F. was a partner in both firms:—Held, that communications made by the firm of J. F. & Sons to the plaintiffs, admitting a large debt to be due from the firm of S. & W., and undertaking that E. F. would use his influence as a partner with S. & W. to secure its reduction, upon the faith of which communication the plaintiffs forbore to sue S. & W., precluded that firm from treating their debt to the plaintiffs as one which had been liquidated by the appropriation of the payments made by them to the firm of J. F. & Sons in order of date. Wickham v. Wickham, 2 Kay & J. 478.

6. A. B., a married woman, conveyed her separate estate to C. D. in trust to sell, etc., and pay a debt due to him from her, and further advances, not exceeding in the whole more than 400*l.*, and to hold the surplus for her separate use. C. D. afterwards made further advances, far exceeding the limit, part of which was paid upon bills drawn on him by A. B., with directions "to charge the same to the account of" her separate estate:—Held, that C. D. was not entitled to appropriate his receipts, in the first place, in payment of the advances not covered by the security, the Court considering that C. D.'s receipts could not be considered as indefinite payments; that he had them only for the purpose of paying off the charge, and afterwards for A. B.'s separate use; and that, upon the true construction of the instruments, C. D. was bound to apply the separate estate, which he received, in satisfaction of the charge, and could only consider the surplus, after such satisfaction, as subject to the disposition of C. D., or liable to such ordinary lien as he might acquire by advancing money to her. Smith v. Smith, 9 Beav. 80.

7. A Calcutta firm, by a letter dated in January, and received in London on the 11th March, 1841, directed their London correspondents to hold a sum of money (equal to a lac of rupees at the current rate of exchange), payable on the 19th November following out of remittances and consignments on the general account, at the disposal of a creditor of the Calcutta firm in Liverpool. The Calcutta house at the same time acquainted the Liverpool house of the directions which had been given. The London house informed the Liverpool house that they had received and registered the order; and after stating that they were in advance of the Calcutta house, and declining to accept bills for any part of the amount, said, that if remittances should come forward to enable them to meet the wishes of the Calcutta house, they would lose no time in advising the Liverpool house. The London house, also, in acknowledging to the Calcutta house the receipt of the order, said that the state of their accounts did not then warrant them in meeting the requisition, but they would meet it, if in a position to do so, before November. The Calcutta house revoked the order by a letter of January 1842, received by the London house on the 12th March, 1842:—Held, that the effect of the triple correspondence between the Calcutta house and the London house, the Calcutta house and the Liverpool house, and the London house and the Liverpool house, entitled the Liverpool house, as against the London house, to an account in equity of the balance on the 12th March, 1841, on their general account with the Calcutta house (giving the London house credit in such account for all liabilities incurred by them on behalf of the Calcutta house on that day), and of the consignments and remittances of the Calcutta house to the London house in the general account, which came to the hands of the latter between the 12th March, 1841, and the 12th March, 1842. Malcolm v. Scott, 6 Hare 570.

The London house might have declined the appropriation, and returned the balance of the account to the Calcutta house; but they could not, as against the Calcutta house, have retained any balance due to the Calcutta house, except for the purpose which the latter had directed. Ib.

Semble, that the London house was not merely bound to pay to the Liverpool house the amount directed, so far as the balance of account on the 19th November, 1841, enabled them to do so, but was bound to appropriate all the remittances and consignments from the Calcutta house on general account, from the receipt until the revocation of the order, after reimbursing themselves in respect of their advances and liabilities on behalf of the Calcutta house at the time they received it. Ib.

Semble, that the communications between the Calcutta house and the London house, and the Calcutta house and their Liverpool creditor, would not have entitled the latter firm to the account as against the London house, without the communications which took place between the London and Liverpool firms. Ib.

1. A., a solicitor in the country, received from a client a sum of money, which was to be paid by him into the Court of Chancery, on the client's account. A. obtained a bill for the sum from a country banker, and remitted it to his bankers in London, without stating the reason for which the amount had been paid to him. At the same time, he was indebted to his bankers in 450*l.*, for which they held securities, and as to which they kept an account separate from his general account. A. died, and a few days afterwards the bill became due and was paid, and the bankers carried the amount to A.'s general account. The bankers for some time after they had received notice from the client of the circumstance under which the amount of the bill had been paid to A., continued to keep the accounts separate, but ultimately they deducted the 450*l.* from the proceeds of the bill, and paid the balance to his executrix:—Held, that as there was no agreement binding the bankers to keep separate accounts as to the 450*l.* and the amount of the bill, and as they had no notice till after the amount was received, of the purpose for which it was intended to be applied, the client was not entitled to recover from them any part of the proceeds of the bill. Grigg v. Cocks, 4 Sim. 438.

2. Messrs. B., shipowners at South Shields, had dealings with K. & Co., bankers in London. The course of dealing was, that Messrs. B. drew bills on K. & Co., which K. & Co. accepted for the accommodation of Messrs. B.; and in order to provide for the payment of these acceptances, Messrs. B. remitted to K. & Co. cash, and deposited with them bills payable to Messrs. B., and the amount of these bills was received by K. & Co. and placed by them to the credit of Messrs. B.'s cash account. Both firms became bankrupt, K. & Co. in July 1812, and Messrs. B. in August of the same year; there was then a large balance owing by Messrs. B. to K. & Co. on the cash account, K. & Co. being also liable to a large amount upon bills accepted by them for the accommodation of Messrs. B., and having in their hands bills also to a large amount deposited with them by Messrs. B. to provide for the payment of such acceptances. Before any dividend was declared upon the estate of K. & Co. their assignees realized from the deposited bills more than sufficient to liquidate the cash balance due from Messrs. B. The holders of the accommodation bills proved against both estates, and were fully paid, receiving from each estate at different times dividends to the amount of 10*s.* in the pound; the sum thus paid in dividends by the estate of K. & Co. exceeded by above 6,000*l.* the total sum realized from the deposited bills. No debt was proved or attempted to be proved by the estate of K. & Co. against the estate of Messrs. B. until 1847, when a further portion of the outstanding estate of Messrs. B. was realized, but to an amount insufficient to complete a payment of 20*s.* in the pound to their creditors, exclusively of K. & Co.:—Held, on a claim being made on behalf of the estate of K. & Co. for that purpose, that the assignees of K. & Co. were entitled to prove as a debt due from the estate of Messrs. B. the amount of the cash balance and also the 6,000*l.*; and that in respect of the 6,000*l.*, and until thereby the sum was repaid, they were entitled to the benefit, as to any future dividends, of the proofs made against the estate of Messrs. B. by the accommodation bill holders. Held, also, that the cash balance was not liquidated by the receipt of the larger sum from the deposited securities by the assignees of K. & Co. previously to the declaration of the first dividend, they being entitled, under the circumstances of the case, to appropriate the sum so received in the way they considered most beneficial to their estate; and that as to the right of the assignees of K. & Co. to stand in the place of the bill holders, the case fell within the provisions of the statute 49 Geo. 3, c. 121. The general doctrine is, that a creditor holding a security is entitled to apply it in discharge of whatever liability of the bankrupt debtor he may think fit. Where two firms deal together, one making payments for and accepting bills for the accommodation of the other, and receiving cash and bills from the accommodated firm by way of payment of and security for the outlay and liabilities made and incurred, the question how the proceeds of the bills so remitted are to be applied must depend on the contract of the parties, express or implied. In a case where, in the absence of express contract, the course of dealing might have led to the presumption that the agreement between the parties was that the proceeds of each bill as it was paid should be applied, as far as it would go, in discharge of the cash balance, this presumption was not held to extend to the event of bankruptcy, or to establish any agreement which prevented the party who was in the position of a surety from insisting against the bankrupt principal on the same rights on which he might have insisted in the absence of contract. Exp. Johnson, 3 De G. M. & G. 218; 22 L. J., Bky., 65.

1. A., a railway contractor, undertook to construct the line of a railway company (L.), and to provide the necessary funds, and act as paymaster. He was also employed to construct the lines of several other railway companies, all forming part of the same railway system. He employed B. as engineer, and paid him various sums, so as, according to the allegation, fully to satisfy the debt due from the company L., and with knowledge by B. that the payments were made with the moneys of L., and for the specific purpose of discharging their debt; B., however, claimed the right to appropriate the payments to the debts due from the other companies, for whom also he had been employed by A. to act as engineer, and brought an action against company L. for the whole amount of their debt. Company L. thereupon filed a bill against B., the other railway companies, and A., for a declaration that B. was not at liberty to appropriate the payments made to him so as to attribute no part of them to the debt of L., for an apportionment and an account between the several companies, and for an injunction to restrain B.'s action. Demurrer allowed for want of equity, as the question of appropriation might have been raised by way of defence to the action, and dealt with at common law; and for multifariousness, as the several companies had been improperly made parties to a suit arising out of a dispute as to the amount paid for work and labour, between company L. and the person employed by them. Aberystwith and Welsh Coast Railway Co. v. Piercy, 12 W. R. 1000; 10 L. T., N. S., 778; 2 Hem. & M. 713.

2. In a suit by a railway company against a debtor, a final decree was made that he was bound to pay to the company 54,590*l.* This decree was registered against him as a judgment in Yorkshire, where he had real estates. There were at the time two other suits pending by the company against him, in which they claimed from him two other sums of 4,104*l.* and 14,831*l.*, but only decrees for accounts had been made. An agreement was entered into between the company and him for the compromise of his liability in all the three suits. By this agreement he was to pay to the company 33,000*l.* out of the purchase money of an estate which he had contracted to sell, and he was to give the company a mortgage (subject to prior charges) on other estates to secure the sum of 14,566*l.*, which was to be paid in two instalments on two appointed days, but if the two instalments were not paid on the appointed days all the original rights of the company were to be reserved. The sum of 33,000*l.* was paid and the mortgage was given, but the instalments were not paid. The company brought up the prior charges and then filed a foreclosure bill against him and some subsequent mortgagees. It was decided that, according to the true construction of the agreement, the company was not remitted to their original rights merely by way of penalty, but that on failure to pay the two instalments they were entitled to recover the full amount of the original debt due to them. In taking the accounts the company sought to appropriate the 33,000*l.* which they had received in payment in the first instance of their unsecured debts—i.e., these two debts in respect of which they had not any final decree registered: —Held, that, according to the true construction of the agreement, the sum of 33,000*l.* was intended to be paid by way of a composition ratably upon the amount of all the three debts, and that consequently the company had no right to appropriate the 33,000*l.* in any other way. Thompson v. Hudson, 19 W. R. 645; 24 L. T., N. S., 301; 6 L. R., Ch., 320; 40 L. J., Ch., 28.

3. A., being indebted to B. on three promissory notes, was applied to by B. for payment on account of interest, but without referring to any debt in particular; in consequence of this application, A. paid 5*l.*; at the time of this payment, two of the notes were barred:—Held, that the payment must be attributed as made exclusively in respect of the note not barred, and that the effect was as to it to prevent the operation of the Statute of Limitations. Nash v. Hodgson, 6 De G. M. & G. 474; 1 Jur., N. S., 946; 25 L. J., Ch., 186; 3 Eq. R. 1025. Reversing on this point 2 Eq. Rep. 1091.

4. A payment by a surety must be appropriated in accordance with his intention, and cannot be controlled for the benefit of the principal. Waugh v. Wren, 1 N. R. 142.

5. A minor's estate was subject to a mortgage on which more than six years' interest was due. On a reference to the Master to inquire what charges affected the minor's estate, and the principal and interest due thereon, it appeared that certain payments had been made for interest generally:—Held, that the payments should be appropriated to the interest which accrued within six years. Re FitzMaurice, 15 Ir. Ch. R. 445.

6. A mining company was formed upon the cost-book principle. In December 1865 calls were made on the shareholders, which H. and J., two of the shareholders, failed to pay. In February 1866 G., who was a creditor of the company for a considerable sum, at the instigation of the company commenced an action against H. for the debt due by the company. The company was desirous by means of this action to compel H. to pay his calls. When the action came on for trial, and a jury had been sworn, it was arranged that a verdict should be found against H, for the amount of calls due from him and costs, and this having been done, judgment was entered up for the amount of the verdict. In May 1866 G., at the instigation of the company, brought a similar action against J. The sum claimed included a part of the debt claimed in the action against H. as well as a debt subsequently incurred by the company. At the trial the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff for a sum which was afterwards raised by the Court to 787*l.* Before judgment could be entered up J. petitioned to wind up the company, and a winding-up order was made, and also an order to stay proceedings in the action by G. against J. After the action against J. various sums were paid by the company to G. These sums exceeded the 787*l.*, but the evidence showed that the intention of the company in paying them was to apply them in discharge of the debt due to G. before the action against H. On the footing of such an appropriation a balance remained due from the company to G., and he carried in a claim in the winding up for that balance, and that claim was admitted:—Held, that the claim was properly admitted, the company having a right to attribute the payments made by them to H. to the earlier debt. Exp. Jackson, Re Wheal Ludcott and Wrey Consols Mines Co., 21 L. T., N. S., 67; 17 W. R. 745.

1. When in the course of trade dealings between A. and C. the accounts between them are periodically made up in such a manner as to show that sums paid to the credit of A. have, at the termination of each periodical account, been allowed for so as to diminish A.'s indebtedness upon that account, the parties have applied the principle of Clayton's case (1 Meriv. 605) for themselves; and, therefore, a debt due on balance of account from A. to B., whose account with A. C. took over, was held to be extinguished by subsequent credits given by C. to A. in the above-mentioned account between them. Exp. Smith, Re Hamilton, 25 W. R. 760.

2. The account of a customer of a firm consisted of debits and credits arising from the purchase and sale of goods. The partnership was dissolved, the customer being then greatly indebted to it, but the account was continued in the same mode by the succeeding firm:—Held, that the doctrine of appropriation of payments applied to the debtors' account. Laing v. Campbell, 36 Beav. 3.

3. Where a lessee tendered rent which had accrued subsequently to breaches of covenant, as rent, but the lessor took it as compensation for occupation, expressly reserving the right of re-entry, it is, by force of the rule, "solutio accipitur in modum solventis," a waiver of the forfeiture in respect of such breaches as were known to the lessor. Croft v. Lumley, 6 H. L. Ca. 672 4 Jur., N. S., 903; 27 L. J., Q. B., 321.

Per Erle, waiver also of known and unknown breaches, where the latter differed not in circumstances from those he knew of—e.g., several breaches of the same covenant. Ib.

Per Watson, waiver of all the breaches before the accrual of the rent received. But, per Crompton, J., the receipt of such rent is not necessarily a waiver; but the question is, was it in fact received with an intention to waive, and declare the lease still in force? The rule relied on applies only to the case of two distinct debts or demands, and an appropriation by the payer to one of them. Ib.

4. S. guaranteed the account of T. at a bank by two guarantees, one for 150*l.*, the other for 400*l.* By the terms of the guarantees the surety guaranteed to the bank "the repayment of all moneys which shall at any time be due from" the customer "to you on the general balance of his account with you;" the guarantee was moreover to be "a continuing guarantee to the extent at any one time of" the sums respectively named, and was not to be considered as wholly or partially satisfied by the payment at any time of any sums due on such general balance; and any indulgence granted by the bank was not to prejudice the guarantee. S. having died, leaving T. and another executors, the bank on receiving notice of his death, without any communication with the executors beyond what would appear in T.'s pass-book, closed T.'s account, which was overdrawn, and opened a new account with him, in which they did not debit him with the amount of the overdraft, but debited him with interest on the same, and continued the account until he went into liquidation, when it also was overdrawn:—Held, by the V.-Ch., that payments in after the death of the surety went in discharge of the overdraft, alike on the terms of the guarantee, and on the principle of Clayton's case (1 Mer. 572, 605), and that, as the amount of such payments exceeded the overdraft, the bank were not entitled to prove against the estate of the father-in-law. But held, on appeal, that there was no contract, express or implied, which obliged the debtor and creditor to appropriate to the old overdraft the payments made by the debtor after the determination of the guarantee, and that the bank were entitled to prove against the estate of S. for the amount of the old overdraft less the amount of the dividend which they had received on it in the liquidation. Re Sherry, London & County Banking Co. v. Terry, 25 L. R., Ch. D., 692; 53 L. J., Ch., 404; 50 L. T. 227; 32 W. R. 394. Reversing 49 L. T. 556; 32 W. R. 270.

5. M., being entitled to the lessee's interest in lands at C., in 1868, deposited, inter alia, the title deeds with a bank, to secure any balance due or to become due, accompanied by a letter of deposit. On the 21st November, 1870, he wrote to the manager of the bank, O., asking for the title deeds of C. in exchange for other securities, and stating that he had agreed to put C. in settlement on his marriage; and at the same time he deposited other securities with O. on behalf of the bank. O. thereupon drew two lines through the memorandum of 1868, in the deposit book, and wrote at the foot of the entry "annexed list cancelled and new ones substituted." The bank, however, refused to give up the deeds of C. On the occasion of his marriage, M. executed a settlement, dated the 24th November, 1870, and registered on the 8th February, 1871, charging C. with a sum of 3,000*l.*, which, subject to life interests for himself and wife, was settled in trust for the children of the marriage. M., who was a solicitor, drew the settlement and was the only solicitor engaged in the transaction. Subsequently, in 1871, M. gave the bank a further letter of deposit, in which the title deeds of C. were included. None of the letters of deposit were registered. After the settlement M. paid in to the credit of his current account at the bank sums of money exceeding the amount due from him at the date of the settlement. In a paper attached to the letter of deposit of 1870, O. made a memorandum, stating that it was cancelled by the letter of deposit of 1871, which was taken in case of any irregularity in the former transaction. O. deposed that he did not intend to give up the security of the deposit of 1868, that he had a general authority to substitute one security for another, but not to give up a security altogether:—Held, that the money paid in by M. to his current account with the bank after the 24th November, 1870, must, in the absence of express appropriation, be deemed to be appropriated to the debt due by him previously to that date, which was therefore discharged by such payments. Re Macnamara's Estate, 13 L. R., Ir., 158.

1. A merchant at Gibraltar acted as agent for L., a merchant in Liverpool, and also for M., another merchant in the same place, L. and M. having also dealings together. The Gibraltar merchant was accustomed to send to L. monthly accounts of sales of coal which L. had sent to Gibraltar, giving him credit for the proceeds, and debiting him with commission and other expenses. In 1854 L. applied to M. to make him advances, which he agreed to do, provided L. would give orders to the Gibraltar merchant to remit him out of the proceeds of the sale of L.'s coals the sum he might advance. The Gibraltar merchant having a general account with M., instead of actually remitting these advances to him, entered to his credit the amount which he was instructed from time to time by L. to remit, and in the course of his business remitted bills to M. for collection, including some drawn on L. In March 1856, M. requiring further security for any future advances he might make, L. gave him a mortgage on a ship for them, he having previously given him security on the ship for two sums, which had been advanced to him. In August 1856 L. signed the equity of redemption in the ship to the plaintiff, and on the 2nd September he became bankrupt. On the 4th September the plaintiff sent to Gibraltar to take possession of the ship, tendering to M. 900*l.*, being the amount he thought due to him. The ship, which had previously been advertised for sale, was sold to the defendants, who were registered as owners. Some of the bills drawn by the Gibraltar merchant on L., and remitted to M., were dishonoured, but the amounts credited to M. by the Gibraltar merchant remained undiminished and undisturbed. Upon the plaintiff filing a bill to have the sale of the ship set aside, and for an account: —Held, that as M. had consented to substitute for the remittance a credit in the general monthly account, and as the bills remitted were not in respect of those particular items, but indiscriminately for collection, he had no right to select any particular item of credit, and attribute the dishonoured bill to that item, so as to prejudice third parties. M'Larty v. Middleton, 9 W. R. 861; 4 L. T., N. S., 852.

V. NON-PERFORMANCE OF AGREEMENTS RESPECTING AND REVIVAL OF DEBT.

2. A creditor agreed with his debtor to take 11*s.* in the pound, to be paid by instalments; and the debtor, after the first payment, became a bankrupt. Lord H. held, the whole might be proved under the commission. Exp. Bennet, 2 Atk. 527.

Where a creditor agreed to take less than his debt, provided it be paid at the day, and the debtor fail, the general rule of equity is that he cannot be relieved. Ib.

3. A debt being payable by instalments, with interest, the debtor made default in payment of one of the instalments. By a deed, reciting that the creditor had agreed to give the debtor time upon having the payment of the debt secured to him, with interest, "by the instalments and in manner thereinafter appearing," provision was made for payment of the debt, with interest, by instalments different from the former ones, with a proviso, that upon default being made in payment of any instalment, the whole unpaid portion of the debt, with interest, should become immediately payable. The debtor made default:—Held, that the proviso was not in the nature of a penalty, and that a court of equity ought not to restrain the creditor from enforcing immediate payment of the whole moneys remaining due. Sterne v. Beck, 1 De G. J. & S. 595; 2 N. R. 346. Reversing 2 W. R. 12.

4. D. was indebted to C. in 69,000*l.* By deed between D., C., and S. a surety, C. covenanted that if D. or S. should pay him 38,000*l.* on a day named, he would accept it in full satisfaction of the whole debt. D. covenanted to pay it on the day, and D. and S. covenanted to pay interest on it to the day and afterwards. Default was made in payment, but interest was, for four years afterwards, received by C. on the 38,000*l.*:—Held, that D. was liable for the whole debt of 69,000*l.*, and was entitled to no equitable relief against the default in payment on the day fixed. Ford v. Chesterfield (Earl), 19 Beav. 428; 2 W. R. 640.

5. A. obtained a judgment against B. for 563*l.* 12*s.* 10*d.*, but agreed to take 200*l.* in discharge, B. giving three acceptances for that sum, and depositing some waggons as security. If none of the bills were paid at maturity, the judgment to be enforceable against B. The last of the bills would mature in March 1871. B. subsequently made payments on account of the bills, and another settlement of account took place in March 1871, when A. claimed 118*l.* 11*s.* 5*d.*, as the balance due on B.'s three acceptances, and it was agreed that B. should give his acceptance for that sum in full of all demands under the three acceptances or otherwise, and deposit title deeds as security. B. did not pay the bill for 118*l.* 11*s.* 5*d.* at maturity, but tendered the money four days after it had been presented to his bankers, which A. refused, declining also to give up the waggons and title deeds:—Held, that as B. had not performed the terms of the first agreement, A. was remitted to his original right as existing at that time, and was at liberty to enforce the judgment. Barton v. Hobson, 30 L. T., N. S., 230.

6. The reservation of a right to have full payment of money actually due on an existing contract, should there be a failure to pay a smaller sum on a day certain, cannot be treated as a penalty. Thompson v. Hudson, 4 L. R., H. L., 1; 38 L. J., Ch., 431. Reversing 2 L. R., Ch., 255; 36 L. J., Ch., 388; 15 W. R. 697; 16 L. T., N. S., 254; 2 L. R., Eq., 612; 14 W. R. 597.

Therefore, where a certain sum is due, and the creditor enters into arrangements with his debtor to take a less sum, provided that sum is secured in a certain way and paid at a certain day; but if any of the stipulations of the arrangement are not performed as agreed upon, the creditor is to be entitled to recover the whole of the original debt, such remitter to his original rights will not constitute a penalty, and equity will not interfere to prevent its observance. Ib.

If, in such a case, it is one of the stipulations that a mortgage is to be given on a certain day, and it is not given till two days afterwards, and is then accepted by the creditor, such acceptance, though a waiver as to the mortgage, is not a waiver of the creditor's general rights on the contract. Ib.

H. was indebted to T. and S. in three different sums of money, which were the subjects of suits in chancery. In the first and third of these suits the sums had been ascertained, but no final decree had been made respecting them. In the second suit there had been a final decree. H. wished for time and facilities to be afforded him for payment of these debts. T. and S. consented, and deeds were executed, by which it was arranged that H. should admit the amount of the debts claimed in the first and third suits, and should not use his power to appeal against the decree in the second suit; that he should give a first mortgage on his real estate as a security, and that he should pay certain amounts on certain days. On these conditions T. and S. were to accept smaller sums in satisfaction. The deeds contained provisoes which (in different forms of language) expressly reserved to T. and S. the right, if any of the stipulations in the deeds were violated, to enforce payment of the original amounts found and admitted to be due:—Held, that this reservation of the right to enforce existing debts on non-payment of the smaller and covenanted amounts, was not a penalty against which equity would grant relief. Ib.

1. Pending the execution of decrees in suits between A., lessee, and B., under-lessee, for the balance of rent, C. purchased B.'s interest in the under-lease. For the protection of the property, suits were then brought by C. against A. An ikrarnamah, or agreement, was afterwards entered into by A. and C., to put an end to the litigation. This agreement recited that C. was indebted to A. in a certain sum, which C. agreed to pay, upon a remission by A. of part of his claim, in two instalments at specified dates; and the agreement then provided that if default was made by C. in paying the instalments then that the remitted money was to be held due to A. by C., and secured upon certain property comprised in the under-lease, as well as by making C. himself liable. No place was specified, nor was there any custom established by the evidence where the money was to be paid. The instalments were paid, but not until some time after the days specified in the agreement. The money had been tendered to A.'s mookhtar, but refused by him, from the fact of A. being absent, and also on the ground that interest was not tendered. A. afterwards brought an action against B. and C. to recover the sum remitted by the ikrarnamah, on the ground that by the conditions of that agreement the instalments should have been punctually paid upon the specified days, which had not been done, nor had any legal tender been made:—Held, first, that although A. had agreed to remit part of his demand on condition of receiving payment on specified days, or in default that the remitted sum was to be paid, yet that there was nothing in the agreement which made the payment of the instalments on the days fixed the essence of the contract, and that the Judicial Committee would not apply the technicalities of the English law with respect to breach of contracts to such an agreement. Ram Gopal Mookerjea v. *Massey*k, 8 Moo. Ind. App. 239.

Held, secondly, that the penalty could not be enforced, as there was a bonâ fide endeavour to pay the money on the specified days. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the agreement was substantially performed by the payments, and that a strict legal tender was not necessary. Ib.

VI. DEDUCTION OF INCOME AND PROPERTY TAX.

2. Executor of obligor of bond having by mistake paid debt and interest without making deduction for property tax provided for by bond, though six years had elapsed:—Held, entitled to have it refunded. It would have been otherwise in case of the obligor himself having paid it. Smith v. Alsop, M'Clel. 623; 13 Price 823.

3. On a reference to the Master to compute interest on the simple contract debts of a testator, the income tax, in respect of interest on a bill of exchange due from the estate, was deducted from the same interest; and, it appearing to have been the uniform practice of the Masters to deduct the income tax from interest on bills of exchange and promissory notes, the Court declined to disturb the practice, and held the deduction to be properly made. Dinning v. Henderson, 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 273; 14 Jur. 1038.

4. Though in dealings between merchants, in discounting bills and the like, and in loans made for short periods, the income tax is not deducted, yet in a mortgage transaction the mortgagor is entitled to deduct it. Mosse v. Salt, 32 Beav. 269.

5. A debtor, making payments to his creditor from time to time for interest, without deducting property-tax, will not be allowed, upon finally settling the debt, to deduct the amount of back payments in respect of such tax from the balance of the debt due at the time of settlement. Re Turner, 13 W. R. 104; 11 L. T., N. S., 352.

6. When a fund was assigned to trustees to pay a fixed sum annually to creditors pro ratâ, with interest till payment:—Held, that the assignor was entitled to deduct income-tax on the payments in respect of interest. Crane v. Kilpin, 6 L. R., Eq., 334; 37 L. J., Ch., 913; 18 L. T., N. S., 350.

7. Where executor paid interest on legacy for seventeen years, without deducting property-tax:—Held, he could not afterwards deduct out of future interest due the amount of property-tax on preceding payments. Currie v. Goold, 2 Madd. 163.

See also ANNUITY, XII. 2—VENDOR AND PURCHASER.

VII. PRESUMPTION OF.

8. Where a debt is claimed by the plaintiff, and is disputed by the defendant, who admits that it has not been paid, lapse of time cannot raise a presumption of payment, but may afford a presumption against the original existence of the debt. Christopher v. Sparke, 2 Jac. & Walk. 223.

1. A decree to carry into execution an erroneous decree being reversed, the cause was remitted, with leave to amend the bill, by adding parties and making a better case as to the original claim, notwithstanding the lapse of sixty years from the date of the deed by which the debt was secured, and of forty years from the date of the erroneous decree. As between the plaintiff creditor, and the debtor, there is no presumption from lapse of time, in such a case, and upon such state of the pleadings, that the debt has been paid. But other creditors, whose debts ought to have been provided for by the decree, might have a right to raise that question. Hamilton v. Houghton, 2 Bligh 169.

2. S. being indebted to P., in 2,300*l.*, by sundry securities affecting his real estate, joins P., in 1775, in assigning all said securities to L., as security for 1,800*l.* then lent by L. to P. The interest on 1,800*l.* was regularly paid by S. and his heirs to L., but no interest on the surplus of the 2,300*l.* was paid either to P. or L. since 1755:—Held, that the payment of the interest on the 1,800*l.* preserved the right to demand the interest on the surplus, notwithstanding the lapse of time, and that under the circumstances no presumption of the surplus having been paid could arise. Loftus v. Swift, 2 Sch. & Lef. 642.

3. Every fair presumption is to be made against a stale demand. Matters of record are presumed. Deeds are presumed to be lost. Pickering v. Stamford (Lord), 2 Ves. J. 583.

Presumptions are to be made in favour of a charity. Ib.

4. An executor of a house steward to Lord B., after an acquiescence of seventeen years, set up a demand for a large sum for business done by this testator, which Lord B.'s representatives resisted on the Statute of Limitations. Per cur. Satisfaction is to be presumed from the length of time, for it is not to be imagined, if anything was really due to the plaintiff, he would have been quiet under it. Lacon v. Briggs, 3 Atk. 105.

5. Where no demand of principal or interest for twenty years, satisfaction will be presumed, except in cases of mortgages. Mortgagee is supposed continuing in possession, and mortgagor tenant at will to him. Leman v. Newnham, 1 Ves. 51.

6. In a case of account, in which the Master had stated that it was in his mind impossible to arrive at that degree of certainty which he was anxious to obtain, the Court allowed an exception to his report upon reasonable presumption. Fenner v. Agutter, 1 Myl. & K. 120.

7. The presumption of payment of a bond after twenty years may be repelled by evidence that obligor had no opportunity or means of paying. Fladong v. Winter, 19 Ves. 196.

8. Presumption of payment of a bond upon twenty years or less, without payment of interest, unless repelled by circumstances. Hillary v. Waller, 12 Ves. 266.

Mortgage presumed satisfied, no interest having been received for twenty-five years. Ib.

9. Where no demand has been made on a bond for twenty years, the judge will direct a jury to find it satisfied. Gratwick v. Simpson, 2 Atk. 144.

10. Bond fraudulently obtained fifty years back, under circumstances, deemed satisfied. Hancock v. Hancock, 10 Mod. 438.

11. Producing receipt for interest within twenty years, indorsed on bond by obligee, is sufficient against presumption of payment, though no proof of when written. Barrington (Lord) v. Searle, 3 Bro. P. C. 593.

12. A bond twenty-two years old shall not be recovered where no interest had been demanded, though the obligor and obligee were neighbours until the last eight years. Carpenter v. Tucker, 1 Ch. Rep. 42. Geofrey v. Thorn, id. 88. Dennis v. Nourse, id. 106.

VIII. EVIDENCE.

Sufficiency.] 13. A witness stated that he believed, from a reference to his books of account, and from inspection of a cheque and other documents which were produced to him at the time of his examination, that A., on a certain day, paid 500*l.* to B.:—Held, that this was not sufficient evidence of payment. Cator v. Croydon Canal Co., 4 Y. & Coll. 405. Affirmed 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 89.

14. Payment of debt, without taking receipt, is relievable in equity on oath of parties only. Anon, Cary 2.

15. The entry by creditor in the books of the provost-marshal of St. Vincent, though according to the law of that island conclusive evidence of payment, and though made twenty-three years ago, without being questioned in the meanwhile, was held to be not so as to the appropriation of the sum, against a receipt previously given, admitting the sum to be paid upon a different account from that stated in the entry, the receipt referring the payment to the separate account of the debtor, the entry to a joint account on which he was liable together with others. Fraser v. Birch, 3 Knapp 380.

To Explain.] 15. Although the title deeds of a person seised of land are not in general admissible in evidence against third persons to prove the truth of the facts therein asserted, yet where they are offered to show, not that a certain sum was due and paid for a rent-charge, and not for rent of land in the occupation of those who made the payment, but to show what the intention in making that payment probably was, and what they supposed their rights and liabilities to be, the deeds are clearly admissible. Att.-Gen. v. Stephens, 6 De G. M. & G. 111; 2 Jur., N. S., 51; 25 L. J., Ch., 888.

In 1635 the Earl of Pembroke became tenant, either at will or from year to year, of six acres and a half of charity lands lying interspersed within his Roehampton estate, for which 6*l.* per annum had ever since been paid. In course of time this estate became split up into several portions, passing into the hands of new purchasers from time to time. From recitals in early conveyances it appeared that the whole estate was treated as subject to this charge of 6*l.* per annum, together with three other perpetual charges of 40*l.*, 10*l.*, and 1*l.* per annum. According as parts of the estate were sold off, those parts were exonerated from these charges, until at last the mansion-house and thirty-one acres of the estate, the property of the defendant, alone remained charged therewith. The defendant and his ancestor had paid this 6*l.* per annum for many years. Upon an information by the trustees of the charity for a commission to mark out the boundaries of the six acres and a half:—Held (reversing 1 Jur., N. S., 1039), that although the defendant had for a long series of years paid the 6*l.* to the parish, upon receipts purporting to be for rent of parish land, he was not precluded from saying that he did not hold the land; and that he was at liberty to refer to his title-deeds to show the animus solvendis, and to rebut the entries in the parish books, which were relied on to show that he had by his payments admitted himself to be an occupier of land. Ib.

Held, also, that the information must be dismissed, the relators not having shown that the portion of the R. estate in the possession of the defendant included the six acres and a half mentioned in the agreement of 1635. Ib.

8. One gives her son other lands in lieu of lands entailed, and by her will gives the entailed lands to her daughter, and takes a bond from her son to permit her daughter to enjoy the entailed lands. The son dies leaving an infant son, who, being in possession of the lands that came in recompense, brings an ejectment of the entailed lands. By reason of the infancy of the grandson the bond could not be sued. The daughter brings a bill, and is decreed to be quieted in possession of the entailed lands, until six months after the infant comes of age, and then the infant may show cause. Thomas v. Gyles, 2 Vern. 232.

9. Where title is defective, and acquiesced in with knowledge of its being so, then the possession is quieted. Shine v. Gough, 1 Ball. & B. 444.

10. A bill of peace praying an injunction to stay the defendants, who have an interest in the manor of Tunbridge, from proceeding at law against the plaintiffs, for building houses on the manor without leave, and that they may accept of such a compensation as the Court shall think reasonable. Here the Court dissolved the injunction, as it cannot be applied to as an arbitrator, nor have any legislative authority, but acts in a judicial capacity. Conyers v. Abergavenny (Lord), 1 Atk. 285.

11. Where there has been a possession of a fishery for a considerable length of time, a person who claims a sole right to it may bring a bill to be quieted in the possession, though he has not established his right at law; and it is no objection on demurrer to such bill, that the defendants have distinct rights, for upon an issue to try the general right, they may at law take advantage of their several exemptions and distinct rights. York (Mayor) v. Pilkington, 1 Atk. 282; 9 Mod. 273.

12. Demurrer to bill to establish a right to an oyster fishery, as being a matter triable at law, allowed; the dispute being only between two lords of manors. Tenham (Lord) v. Herbert, 2 Atk. 483.

Where a man sets up an exclusive right, and the persons who controvert it are numerous, and he cannot by one action at law quiet that right, he may file a bill of peace, and the Court will direct an issue to determine the right as between lords of manors and their tenants, or tenants of one manor and another. Ib.

13. A person having, in articles of partnership, covenanted not to do certain acts after a specified period of time, the Court will not, before the arrival of that period, grant an injunction to restrain him from acting in breach of his agreement, nor for mischief which is no breach at law of the covenant between the parties. Coates v. Coates, 6 Madd. 287.

14. A bill for an injunction to restrain defendants from disturbing plaintiff in his possession of ferries cannot be sustained as a possessory bill, unless there be an averment of three years' possession; a statement that the plaintiff had recovered judgment against one of the defendants in an action brought for disturbing him in the enjoyment of the ferries is not sufficient. Hemphill v. M'Kenna, 2 Con. & L. 76; 3 Dr. & War. 183; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 57.

1. When a large number of persons has similar legal claims against one, he can, by a bill filed against some of them, restrain the proceedings of all until the question as to the validity of the claims has been decided. Sheffield Waterworks v. Yeomans, 2 L. R., Ch., 8.

Where 1,500 certificates of costs under a special Act had been lodged with a custos provided by the Act, which certificates would, under certain circumstances, operate as judgments against a company, the validity of the certificates being disputed by the company, a bill by them against the custos, and five of the persons claiming certificates as representing the others, is a proper bill of peace. S. C. 15 W. R. 76; 15 L. T., N. S., 342.

2. A bill to determine manorial customs may be filed by one person, but only as a bill of peace. Phillips v. Hudson, 15 W. R. 370; 36 L. J., Ch., 301; 16 L. T., N. S., 221; 2 L. R., Ch., 243.

Where there were only two tenants of a manor, a bill by one of them against the lord, seeking a declaration of commonable rights, cannot be maintained as a bill of peace. Ib.

A bill in equity will lie against the lord by one copyholder, on behalf of himself and the other copyholders, being numerous, to have their rights of common ascertained; but one copyholder, not suing on behalf of all, cannot maintain such a bill. Ib.

I. PRIVILEGES.

3. A peer is privileged from arrest under process from the Ecclesiastical Courts. Westmeath v. Westmeath, 9 L. J., Ch., 177.

4. Where the husband was a lunatic, the wife, though an Irish peeress, committed for not producing him. Wenman's (Lord) case, 1 P. W. 701.

5. A plaintiff, who is a peer, and out of the jurisdiction, must give the usual security for costs. Aldborough (Lord) v. Burton, 2 Myl. & K. 401.

6. Peer not to be a receiver. Att.-Gen. v. Gee, 5 Ves. & B. 208.

7. Where peer is to perfect answer by examination, etc., he is upon his honour; but where he comes himself to make satisfaction, etc., or to answer interrogatories and examination as witness, he is on his oath. Meers v. Stourton (Lord), Dick. 21; 1 P. W. 146; 2 Salk. 512.

8. A peeress ordered to produce deed, confessed in her answer, on honour only, not on oath. Hamilton v. Gerrard, Pre. Ch. 92.

9. An amendment in the title of an answer being necessary,—namely, instead of "the farther answer to the original amended bill," entitling it "the farther answer to the original bill," and "the answer to the amended bill"; the answer so amended must, in the case of a peer, be again tested upon honour, as in the case of a common defendant it must be resworn. Peacock v. Bedford (Duke), 1 Ves. & B. 186.

10. Peeress answering upon honour, in exactly the same situation as another defendant answering on oath. Gilpin v. Southampton (Lady), 18 Ves. 469.

11. A peer returning a rental must verify it by affidavit. Rathborne v. Aldborough, Hayes 334.

12. The answer of a peer, upon his protestation of honour, may be read on the question of costs. Dawson v. Ellis, 1 Jac. & Walk. 524.

13. Process of contempt cannot issue against a peer. Pheasant v. Pheasant, 2 Vent. 342.

14. Construction of the General Order, 23rd January, 1794, in the case of a peer defendant, that in the cases specified, upon application for time to answer, the defendant enter his appearance, and undertake, that if the answer is not put in, a sequestration, i.e., a sequestration absolute. Gregor v. Arundel (Lord), 8 Ves. 87.

After two insufficient answers, defendant is not entitled to six weeks' time to answer. S. C. 6 Ves. 144.

15. Service of a subpœna to appear, and of an order for a sequestration nisi, upon a peer, at a time when he was beyond the jurisdiction, by leaving them at the peer's town residence:—Held, under the circumstances, to be good service. Thomas v. Jersey, 2 Myl. & K. 398.

16. Since the union with Ireland, Irish peers, with the exception of those who are members of the House of Commons, are entitled to every privilege except sitting in the House of Lords. Robinson v. Rokeby (Lord), 8 Ves. 601.

17. Peers and M.P.'s, if they trade, are liable to bankrupt laws. Exp. Meymott, 1 Atk. 200.

18. A non-trader, having privilege of parliament, was liable to be made a bankrupt under the Bankruptcy Act 1861, s. 69. Exp. Morris, Re Newcastle (Duke), 5 L. R., Ch., 172; 21 L. T., N. S., 380; 18 W. R. 79.

II. GRANT OF.

19. If one be created a baron, viscount, etc., by patent, and after, in the same patent, the honour is granted to another in remainder, it operates as a new grant; for the king has no reversion of the honour in him, though he has the power of appointing the succession. Rex v. Purbeck (Lord), Show. P. C. 5, 11.

20. Whether a subject can refuse a peerage created either by patent or by writ. Egerton v. Brownlow (Earl), 4 H. L. Ca. 1.

1. Letters patent were granted by the Crown to a commoner, purporting to create him a baron for life, with a seat in parliament; the letters patent were followed by a writ of summons to parliament in the usual form. The House of Lords referred it to a Committee for Privileges to examine and consider the letters patent, and to report their opinion thereon. This reference was made without any previous reference of the matter by the Crown to the House. The committee reported "that neither the letters patent, nor the letters patent with the usual writ of summons issued in pursuance thereof, can entitle the grantee therein named to sit and vote in parliament." The House affirmed the resolution. Wensleydale Peerage, 5 H. L. Ca. 958; 2 Macq. H. L. Ca. 479.

The Committee declined to put a question to the judges on this matter, which did not involve the validity of the patent for all purposes, but only the right under it to sit and vote in the House of Lords. Ib.

2. A patent conferring a barony contained a clause that, if any person taking under the patent should succeed to a certain earldom, then, and so often as the same should happen, the succession to the dignity should devolve upon the son of the grantee, or the heir who would be next entitled to succeed to the dignity if the person succeeding to the earldom was dead without issue male. In pursuance of executory trusts in the grantee's will, an estate was settled to follow the dignity with a clause following the above clause in the patent. The earldom having devolved on the second son of the grantee (who succeeded her in the dignity):—Held, that, whether the clause in the patent was valid or not, the clause in the settlement took effect, and took effect so as to shift the estate immediately. Cope v. De la Warr (Earl), 42 L. J., Ch., 870; 8 L. R., Ch., 982; 22 W. R. 8; 29 L. T., N. S., 565.

Quære, whether the Crown has any power to make a conditional limitation of a peerage. Ib.

Semble, that the Crown has not an unlimited power of limiting dignities in any way that it pleases, and that it cannot create a mode of succession to a title totally unknown to the law. Ib.

3. The Crown cannot give to the grant of a dignity or honour a quality of descent unknown to the law. Wiltes Peerage, 4 L. R., H. L., 126.

A limitation to heirs in the grant of a peerage may be incapable of taking effect, and yet the patent, so far as the grantee himself is concerned, may not be void. Ib.

In the reign of Richard II. an earldom was created habendum et tenendum, "A. et hæredibus suis masculis in perpetuum." The grantee sat in parliament as earl under this creation:—Held, that it did not create a dignity descendible to his heirs male general. Ib.

The earl was beheaded by Henry of Lancaster when he invaded England, and before he had received or even claimed the crown. There was no evidence whether there had been any trial, or form of trial, before the beheading. When Henry was declared king, a proceeding took place in parliament in which the Commons were represented to have prayed that all that was done in "the pursuit, arrest, and judgment" of the earl might be declared good for the common profit of the realm. The king, with the assent of the lords temporal, declared that it was so. This proceeding was entered on the Placita Coronæ in parliament, but not on the rolls of parliament. Semble, that this was not an Act of Parliament. Ib.

But it was a solemn adjudication pronounced by the king in open parliament at the prayer of the Commons, and with the advice of the Lords, and must be taken as a parliamentary declaration, that, whatever had been the nature of the grant to the earl, it was wholly at an end. Ib.

4. There can be no use or trust in the case of a peerage. Buckhurst Peerage, 2 L. R., App. Cas., 1.

Therefore when, in a patent of peerage, there were successive limitations of the peerage in the ordinary form of descent, and then a clause was introduced which, on the happening of a collateral event, would transfer the enjoyment of the peerage from the existing peer and his heirs to a new holder, such clause was held to be invalid. Ib.

One clause in a patent may be invalid without affecting the validity of the patent itself. Ib.

III. DESCENT.

5. An Irish peerage, of which the title was as old as the reign of Hen. 2, was claimed as a peerage in fee tail, descendible to females, created by writ of summons in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. It appeared that, upon several occasions previous to that time, the male heir had succeeded to the title when there were females living nearer in descent; but it was contended that in such cases the title was in abeyance between co-heiresses, and that the more remote male heir had in each case been ennobled by writ of summons. It was shown, however, that during the time that the owners of the title, who were Catholics, were excluded from parliament, the title had gone, as if descendible in tail male, and the person from whom the claimant made title as having been ennobled by summons, would himself also have been entitled to the peerage as heir male. The claim was held not to have been made out, on the ground that the conclusion suggested by the facts was, that the peerage in question, however created, was descendible in tail male. Slane Peerage, 5 Cl. & F. 23; 10 Bli., N. S., 1.

It was strongly argued that the summons to sit in the Irish parliament did not, as it does in England, create a peerage in fee tail descendible to females, sed quære. Ib.

6. A summons to parliament, and a sitting under it, is evidence of a title to a peerage descending to the heirs of the body, including females; so likewise is it evidence of a similar title, where there have been several summonses, both prior and subsequent to a sitting in parliament, and a sitting in parliament, though no sitting under a summons, has been proved, proof being adduced that during the period of that sitting there were no writs of summons in existence. Hastings Peerage, West 621; 8 Cl. & F. 144; and see other points there discussed. Ib.

7. It appeared, by the parliamentary pawns of 36 Hen. 8 and 1 Edw. 6, that a writ had been directed to "Thomas Lord Wharton" for each of these parliaments, but there was no evidence of his sitting in either of them, or of the writ itself. The journals of the House of Lords showed that he was summoned to and sat in the parliament of 2 Edw. 6 and subsequent parliaments. Creation of baronies by patent was not then unusual; but no patent, or record, or other trace of a patent creating the barony of Wharton could be found:—Held, that the said barony was created by a writ and sitting in the 2 Edw. 6, and was descendible to heirs general of the body. Wharton Peerage, 12 Cl. & F. 295.

1. In a claim to an ancient Scotch dignity, if no patent or other instrument of creation can be produced, it may be presumed that the dignity was created by patent or charter, limiting it in the manner in which it has been actually enjoyed; and if that enjoyment be shown to have been confined to heirs male, in exclusion of nearer heirs female, the dignity must be held to be a male honour, always descendible to the heirs male of the body of the first grantee. Crawford & Lindsay Peerages, 2 H. L. Ca. 534.

2. In the absence of the instrument of creation of a Scotch peerage, the limitations are taken from usage to be to the grantee and his heirs male general. Perth Earldom, 2 H. L. Ca. 865.

On the death of a peer, leaving his eldest son and heir, who had been attainted, the peerage does not vest in him, nor, on his death, in the nearest heir male, but is forfeited, as much as if he had been a peer at the time of the attainder. Ib.

A peerage limited to a man and his heirs male, is one entire estate, and no substitution of heirs takes place. Ib.

A peerage limited to a man and his heirs male whomsoever is forfeitable under the Act 26 Hen. 8, c. 13. Ib.

3. Where it was shown that the ancestor of the claimant had first sat in parliament in the 25 Hen. 8, but it did not appear by what right, and again in the 28 Hen. 8, on which latter occasion his name appeared among the list of the lords summoned; and upon a diligent search no patent could be discovered, though the patent rolls were complete:—Held, that such ancestor must be presumed to have been called by writ; and there being only one instance in this country of a writ with a limitation of the grant (i.e., in Bromflete's case), that such writ must be taken to have created a peerage in fee, descendible to females. Vaux Peerage, 5 Cl. & F. 526.

4. B. claimed the right to be summoned to sit in the House of Peers as a baron, by reason of his being, under a will of the Earl of B., tenant for life of the castle, manor, etc., constituting the Barony of B. The claim was disallowed. Berkeley Peerage, 8 H. L. Ca. 21; 8 Jur., N. S., 21.

The right to sit in the House of Peers by reason of the tenure of particular lands, if it ever existed, has long been discontinued, and does not exist. Ib.

The law of the peerage depends entirely on usage, both as to the power of the Crown and as to any claim that may be made by a subject. Ib.

5. It is a settled rule of law as to Scotch peerages that where the origin of the honour is lost in antiquity, and so does not appear in any direct proof, the presumption is that it was in its creation limited to males only. Herries Peerage, 3 Macq. H. L. Ca. 585; 2 L. R., H. L. (Sc.), 258.

Though, however, this is undoubtedly the rule, yet as it was always in the power of the Sovereign to make an honour descendible on females as well as males, the general presumption will give way wherever there are circumstances sufficient to show in any particular case that females as well as males were included in the original destination. Ib.

It is the presumption in Scotch peerage law that where the patent of creation does not appear, the descent is limited to heirs males. Ib.

On the other hand, it is equally certain and equally clear that that presumption may be rebutted. Ib.

The legal presumption in favour of heirs male may be rebutted by authoritative evidence, but not by inferential deduction. Ib.

By the Scotch peerage law, a husband might sit in parliament jure uxoris. Ib.

So by the same law a peeress might resign her dignity in favour of her eldest son. Ib.

There never was in Scotland a doctrine corresponding with the English doctrine of abeyance in peerage cases. Ib.

6. The word peerage in the fifth clause of the fourth article in the Act of Union of Great Britain and Ireland, 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 67, means the status and condition of a peer; and therefore where one person held many titles, by any one of which he could sit in the Irish House of Peers, so long as any one of those titles remained in him or his descendants, the loss of any of the others did not constitute an extinction of a peerage. Formoy Peerage, 5 H. L. Ca. 716.

A. before the union with Ireland was a peer of Ireland, by the title of Earl M. That title had descended to him from an ancestor, to whom it was granted, with the usual limitation to the heirs male of his body. Before the union took effect, A. received a new patent, creating him Baron of M., remainder to the heirs male of his body, failing whom, to B. and the heirs male of his body. A. died without leaving male heirs of his body, and the Earldom of M. was left without a successor, and the barony of M. passed to B.:—Held, that this was not such an extinction of a peerage as was contemplated by the Act of Union, and consequently could not be taken as one of those extinctions, on the happening of which the Crown could create a new Irish peerage. Ib.

Quære, whether, when the validity of an existing grant of a peerage is questioned, the attorney-general is bound to appear to support it. Ib.

Attainder. Effect.] 7. An attainder was pronounced in 1538—9 against Margaret Pole and against her son Henry Pole. He was beheaded in that year. She was for a time spared. She united in her own person three baronies, described as having been created by writs of summons and sittings—Montacute (1299), Monthermer (1309), and Montacute

(second of that name, 1357). By the ordinary course of descent Henry would have succeeded to these baronies had he survived his mother. He had himself sat in parliament under the title of Henry Pole, Lord Montague, and was so described in the inquisition taken after his execution in 1539. The attainder against his mother was by Henry VIII. put in force in 1541, when she was beheaded. In 1553 an Act was passed (1 Mary, sess. 2, c. 1), intituled "An Act for the restitution in blood of the heirs of Henry Pole, late Lord Montague." The Act, a private Act, was in the form of a petition to the queen from the two ladies Katherine and Winifred, the only children of Henry. It recited his attainder, and prayed that they and their heirs might be restored and enabled onely in blood as daughters and heirs of Henry, and enabled to demand, ask, have, hold, and enjoy all such honours, castles, manors, lordships, etc., and all other manner of hereditaments, which at any time shall come, remain, descend, or revert from any lineal or collateral ancestor of "your said subjects," etc., "other than such castles, manors, lordships, etc., which were of Henry in possession, reversion, remainder, or otherwise," at the day of his attainder. Margaret was not mentioned in the Act:—Held, that this Act had no effect on the attainder of Margaret, which still remained in full force. It only entitled the two ladies and their heirs to claim inheritances which they might derive from persons as against whose succession the attainder of Henry Pole himself would have been an obstacle. There was, therefore, no succession to the first three peerages, which must be traced through Margaret. Montacute and Monthermer Peerages, 7 L. R., H. L., 305.

Held, also, that it was, at least, highly probable that the barony of Montague, by which title Henry had sat in parliament, was (with a mere change of the spelling of the name) one of those held by his mother, and for which he had received a writ of summons in her lifetime; and that the Act 1 Mary, which was not a reversal of his attainder, but only an Act for the restitution in blood of his heirs, had no effect on the barony in respect of which he had sat in parliament. Ib.

The fact that a son was sitting in parliament by a writ of summons in virtue of a barony belonging to a parent would not, if that parent was attainted, save that barony from the consequences of that attainder. Ib.

1. One of several co-heirs to a barony in abeyance, which had been created by a writ of summons, was attainted of treason, and his heir and descendants were restored in blood by Act of Parliament:—Held, that it is competent to the Crown to terminate the abeyance in favour of the heir of the person so attainted, even though honours, etc., were accepted on the restoration of blood, or of the heir of any of the other co-heirs. Braye (Barony), West 1; 6 Cl. & F. 757. S. P. Camoys (Barony), West 34; 6 Cl. & F. 789. Beaumont Peerage case, 6 Cl. & F. 868.

2. Scotch peerages, created by patents in 1616 and 1633 respectively, and limited to the grantee and his heirs male, descended through the line of his eldest son, and became in 1699 vested in the fifth baron and earl, who was attainted of high treason in 1715, and died in 1729, without leaving issue. His collateral heir, descended from a younger son of the first peer, claimed the dignities in 1848:—Held, that the attainder was a bar. Southesk Earldom, 2 H. L. Ca. 908.

IV. RIGHT TO SIT IN PARLIAMENT.

3. Since the Union, a Scotch peer cannot, by virtue thereof, sit and vote in parliament. Queensberry's case, 1 P. W. 584.

4. Under 10 & 11 Vict., c. 52, s. 4, when the right to a Scotch peerage, or the right to vote in respect of a peerage, is established and notified to the lord clerk registrar by order of the House of Lords, no one except the individual whose right is so established will, during his or her life, be allowed to vote in respect of such peerage until the House of Lords otherwise directs. Breadalbane Peerage, 2 L. R., H. L. (Sc.), 269.

5. Assuming that, in fact, there existed in the reign of Henry II. a barony of Berkeley, enjoyed by successive barons in respect of the possession of certain hereditaments, no legal right to be summoned to and sit in parliament for such a barony can exist at the present day in any tenant for life or devisee of such hereditaments. Berkeley Peerage, 8 H. L. Ca. 21; 4 L. T., N. S., 686.

The 11th section of the 12 Car. 2, c. 24, has not the effect of preserving such barony by tenure, if it ever existed. Ib.

V. CLAIMS, PROCEDURE AND EVIDENCE ON.

6. A peer disinherited by his ancestor is entitled to the favour of the Court, and on bill and answer to have the family deeds brought before the Master, in order to see whether anything can be discovered for his advantage. Suffolk (Earl) v. Howard, 2 P. W. 177.

7. An Irish earldom was created, and a holder of that earldom was afterwards created a viscount of the United Kingdom; the patent granting the viscounty described the grantee by the name and title of the Irish earldom. On the death of one holder of these titles, his eldest son received a writ of summons to attend the House of Peers as an English viscount. He did so, and took his seat as a viscount. He subsequently petitioned to have his claim to vote for representative peers of Ireland allowed, and it was allowed. After his death, his son received a writ of summons as an English viscount, and took his seat in that character. He then petitioned to be admitted to vote for representative peers of Ireland, in virtue of the Irish earldom. The petition came before the Committee for Privileges. The patents creating the Irish earldom and the English viscounty, the writ of summons to the previous viscount, and the entry on the journals showing that the preceding peer had taken his seat, and likewise the resolution of the Committee for Privileges admitting his claim to vote for representative peers, were all proved:—Held, that this was not sufficient to establish the title of the present claimant; that the evidence must be such as would of itself, if the claim was now made, without reference to any previous claim, be sufficient to establish it. Such evidence not being producible at the moment the consideration of the claim was adjourned. Donoughmore Peerage, 3 H. L. Ca. 822.

1. Ancient documents of a public character brought from the proper repository are, in the absence of patents of parliamentary records, admissible as evidence of the creation and existence of peerages; and semble, that by the law of Scotland, contemporaneous history is admissible for the same purpose. Cranford and Lindsay Peerages, 2 H. L. Ca. 534.

An ancient patent without the seal, but with the attestation thereof duly verified, is admissible evidence. Ib.

An ancient Scotch dignity might, before the Union, be conveyed by the possessor, together with the territory thereto annexed, to another branch of the family, or even to a stranger, with the king's authority; or it might be resigned to the king, to be regranted by a new patent, with different destinations and with its old precedency. Ib.

A witness, brought to prove a copy of an old document, should be able to read and understand the original when he compared the copy with it. Ib.

Printed copies of records rejected, the original being accessible. Ib.

A patent without a seal, or any record of it, admitted on proof of the attestation. Ib.

An admission by the attorney-general, in a peerage case, is not binding on a subsequent committee. Ib.

A person accustomed to ancient manuscripts, saying that, by a careful examination of certain signatures, he had, in his mind, such a distinct knowledge of the handwriting as to be able to say, without immediate reference to them, whether any letter shown to him was or was not written by the same person:—Held, a competent witness. Ib.

Statements in writing, by a deceased person, of facts within his knowledge relating to the state of his family, without a view to a suit or claim of peerage, are admissible in proof of pedigree. Ib.

2. On a claim to a Scotch peerage, there being no patent or charter of creation or inrolment thereof discovered, a copy of an inrolment of a commission under the Great Seal and king's sign manual, dated in February 1605, directing the commissioners to create James Lord Drummond Earl of Perth was received, and held, in conjunction with subsequent entries in the parliament record, to be sufficient proof of the creation of the earldom. Perth Earldom, 2 H. L. Ca. 865.

3. Queen Mary's creation of the earldom of Mar in 1565 proved by a long train of circumstantial evidence. Mar Peerage, 1 L. R., App. Cas., 1.

4. B. married C. in facie ecclesiæ in 1851, had issue, and died in 1872. In an attempt by A. to set up a previous irregular Scotch marriage, a witness gave evidence that B. told him repeatedly after 1851, that A. was his wife and not C.:—Held, that such evidence was not admissible. Dysart Peerage, 6 L. R., App. Cas. (Sc.), 489.

Effect of the statute 37 & 38 Vict., c. 64 (1874), held not necessary to decide. Ib.

In an attempt on the part of A. to set up an irregular marriage according to the law of Scotland between herself and B., statements prepared by D., the plaintiff, in an action against B. as the alleged husband of A. for A.'s board and lodging; which statements were signed—and in one case, corrected by interlineations—by deceased persons, who, if alive, would have been competent witnesses, were sought to be used as evidence:—Held, that they were not admissible. Ib.

5. Where it was shown that the ancestor of the claimant had first sat in parliament in the 25th Hen. 8, but it did not appear by what right, and again in the 28th Hen. 8, on which latter occasion his name appeared among the list of the lords summoned; and, upon a diligent search, no patent could be discovered, though the patent rolls were complete:—Held, that such ancestor must be presumed to have been called by writ; and there being only one instance in this country of a writ with a limitation of the grant (Bromflete's case), that such writ must be taken to have created a peerage in fee descendible to heirs general. Vaux Peerage, 5 Cl. & F. 526.

Where there are several co-heirs to a dignity, and some only claim it, they must give notice to the others. Ib.

The minutes of the Committee for Privilege case, in another peerage case, stating a monumental inscription to have been either admitted or proved, are not evidence of such inscription. Id. 541.

6. If a claimant omit to give evidence of the creation and limitation of one of several dignities to which he states, in his petition, that he is of right entitled, the Committee for Privileges will not report that he has made good his claim to that dignity on the presumption that it descended from the same ancestor with the other dignities to which the claimant has proved his right. Huntly Peerage, 5 Cl. & F. 349.

In a claim of peerage, it is not sufficient that the petition to the Crown should state that the claimant is of right entitled to the dignity, but it must also pray that he may be declared so entitled; and the defect cannot be supplied by the House, but there must be a new petition to the Crown. Ib.

Upon a claim to a Scotch peerage, where no patent of creation could be found, but it appeared from the records of parliament, that the ancestor, through whom the claim was made, had sat in parliament by the title alleged to have been vested in him, an original instrument, purporting to be a grant under the Great Seal of the dignity in question, which was extracted from the repositories of the family, was admitted in evidence. Ib.

7. Same doctrine held as in last case, and also that the use of the term banneret, as applied to the ancestor in the writ, did not take the case out of the rule, the term banneret, if not synonymous with baron, being at any rate not inconsistent with it. Camoys (Barony), West 34; 6 Cl. & F. 789.

8. Held, that an entry in the journals of the Committee of Privileges was, upon trial of a claim to vote at the election of representative peers for Ireland, good evidence of the limitations in a patent of peerage, without producing the patent. Re Dufferin & Clanboye (Lord), 4 Cl. & F. 568.

9. The House of Peers is the only tribunal to determine claims to dignities; and where a question of law arises, the course is by petition to the Crown claiming the dignity, in order that it may be referred by the Crown to the House, with the report of the Crown law officers annexed, when the House will adjudicate on the right, and report to the Crown. Waterford's (Earl) case, 6 Cl. & F. 134.

An adjudication in that form by the Irish House of Peers is as binding on that of the United Kingdom, as one by the latter on the claims to the British peerage; but a resolution of the House, affirming the report of its committee, is not equivalent to an adjudication upon a reference from the Crown. Ib.

Forms of proceeding and adjudication on claims of peerage. Id. 33.

The 28 Hen. 8, c. 3, vested in the Crown of England "all honours, manors, castles, seignories, jurisdictions, and all other possessions and hereditaments held by certain persons named, or by any person to their use, in Ireland":—Held, contrary to the opinion of Sir E. Coke and other judges, upon a reference from the Crown upon the case of a claimant's ancestor, that the titles held by these persons were not taken away by the Act. Ib.

1. It is the privilege as well as the duty of the Irish attorney-general to attend the House of Lords on the investigation of claims to Irish peerage, but he may, with leave of the House, depute counsel to attend for him. Roscommon's (Earl) case, 6 Cl. & F. 97.

Documents put before the House by a claimant, although not admitted in evidence:—Held, to be fit matter for observation by his adversary's counsel, to prevent prejudice. Ib.

The pedigree of a claimant as a descendant from the seventh son of the first peer, created by letters patent, stated that that peer left seven sons, that the issue of the first and second were extinct, and the four next died without issue. There being no contemporaneous account of them, and no evidence but reputation in the family, which agreed with the pedigree:—Held, that it might be presumed they died without issue, especially as, during a long contest for the dignity, no descendant from them claimed it. Ib.

On investigation of a claim to vote at the election of representative peers in Ireland, the minutes of proceedings and of evidence taken in an investigation of the same claim before the Irish House of Lords, including depositions taken under an order of that House:—Held, admissible here (the witnesses being dead), not only against the Crown, but against a counter claimant (who had since come forward), who was not a party to the inquiry, but was cognisant of it. Ib.

In consequence of his right being doubtful, and of an adverse claim, the petitioner was required to give in a printed case, containing his pedigree and references to proofs. Ib.

A claimant to a peerage having made out a primâ facie case, but being unable by reason of his poverty to go on with it, the attorney-general was ordered to take it up at the expense of the Crown, but the House makes such orders reluctantly. Ib.

2. Circumstances in which the Committee for Privileges will receive in evidence the printed minutes and proceedings before a former committee on the same peerage. Beaumont Peerage, 6 Cl. & F. 868.

3. It is a settled rule that where after a careful search no patent can be found, the writ of summons and the sitting under it are conclusive evidence of a peerage in fee. Braye (Barony), West 1; 6 Cl. & F. 757.

The minutes of evidence and proceedings before the Committee of Privileges in one case, are not necessarily receivable as evidence in another case. Ib.

A claimant of a barony as co-heir is required not only to give notice to the other co-heirs known to be in existence (and notice through the post office is not sufficient), but also primâ facie proofs of pedigree of such of them as decline to claim, to enable the House to report to the Crown. The proper course for a co-heir is to petition the Crown to terminate the abeyance arising from an attainder in his favour, but if he does not claim and has an interest, he will be allowed to appear and protect it. Ib.

4. Semble, that on a claim to an ancient barony, minutes of proceedings on a former claim before the King in Council are admissible in evidence in the House of Lords. A long abeyance of a barony in fee, satisfactorily explained, is no objection to a claim. Fitzwalter Peerage, 10 Cl. & F. 946.

An ancient barony in fee, after having been enjoyed by the lineal heirs of the first baron successively for centuries, then becoming dormant for some time, was claimed and again enjoyed by one who, after full investigation, was found to be the heir of the first and last barons; it afterwards fell into and remained in abeyance among his co-heirs for more than eighty years. Semble, that it is not necessary for one of these co-heirs claiming the barony to give proofs of the first creation, and of the divers mesne descents of it. Ib.

5. How far is the fact of the precedency of an old peerage being given to a person called by summons by the same title evidence that he sat by virtue of his right by descent to the old peerage, quære. Slane Peerage, 10 Bli., N. S., 1; 5 Cl. & F. 23.

If, on a claim of peerage, an important question of law arises, the committee will depart from the ordinary rule, and hear two counsel on each side. Ib.

F., a petitioner for the barony of Slane, as heir male (the petition being referred to the attorney-general, but no report made thereon), was admitted to appear by counsel, and oppose a claimant as heir general. Ib.

In a claim of peerage, where there is no patent of creation, nor inrolment of such patent, and the contemporaneous Lords' journals are not in existence, an old MS. book, purporting to be copied from the journals by an officer whose duty it was to prepare lists of peers present and absent, will be received as evidence of a peer's sitting in parliament. Ib.

6. The Committee for Privileges will in its discretion permit documents to be proved by printed minutes of proceedings before a former committee on the same peerage, but as a rule, will require the production of the original documents. Berkeley Peerage, 8 H. L. Ca. 21; 4 L. T., N. S., 686.

Semble, that where the nature of the peerage, and not the pedigree of a claimant, is in question, a plate erected in St. George's Chapel, Windsor, on the installation of a particular person as knight of the garter, is not admissible to prove the description given of him. Ib.

A report of the proceedings on another and different claim of peerage can only be referred to for the purpose of argument, but cannot be received in evidence. Ib.

A claim of a barony by tenure was made by a devisee (tenant for life) of an estate which was said to give the right to the peerage. A person who did not claim the estate:—Held, to have no locus standi, to be heard in opposition to the claim. Ib.

1. A. claimed a peerage. An estate was alleged to be annexed to the title. Persons who, in the event of the peerage being extinct, would be entitled to the estate, but who alleged that their title would be defeated if the claim to the peerage should be established, were allowed to appear, and be heard in opposition to the claim. Shrewsbury Peerage, 7 H. L. Ca. 1.

A copy of a plate of the arms of knights of the garter existing in the Chapel Royal at Windsor, was received in evidence, the plate itself not being removable, except by authority of the Queen, and no such plate having been removed since first put up in the reign of Henry 5. Ib.

Though the rule in peerage cases is, that the original will must itself be produced to the committee, a copy of a will brought by the officer from the Prerogative Court was admitted in evidence, such will having been made at the time when the course of the officers of that Court was to take copies of wills, and to return the originals to the executors, and the persons now opposing the admission of the copy were the representatives of those executors. Ib.

When the Legislature has directed that a particular rule as to evidence shall be adopted in every court of civil judicature, though these words do not include a Committee for Privileges, such committee will, if the rule itself is convenient, adopt and act upon it. The 17 & 18 Vict., c. 125, s. 27, which permits in all courts of civil jurisdiction comparison of handwriting as a means of evidence, was therefore adopted by the committee. Ib.

If a party is admitted to oppose a claim of peerage, he must make his opening statement after the claimant's evidence has been closed, whether the claimant's counsel sum up or not. Ib.

A barrister who had attended as counsel for the claimant of a peerage, during the whole of one session, was, at the commencement of the next, appointed attorney-general. The Committee for Privileges allowed him to continue to act as counsel for the claimant, and accepted the solicitor-general as his representative on the part of the Crown. Ib.

2. The decision of the Committee for Privileges as to the advice it shall give Her Majesty upon one particular claim of peerage does not resemble the decision of the House sitting as the tribunal of ultimate appeal upon a question of law in a suit between two adverse parties; it is in no sense a judgment, and cannot, therefore, be treated as a binding authority in another claim of peerage even though the terms of the patents in the two cases may be like each other. Wiltes Peerage, 4 L. R., H. L., 126.

3. When the Crown is pleased to refer to the House of Lords the consideration of a patent of peerage, it becomes the duty of the House to inform the Crown what is the construction to be put upon the terms of any clause in the patent. Buckhurst Peerage, 2 L. R., App. Cas., 1.

VI. OTHER MATTERS.

4. Quære, whether Court of Chancery has jurisdiction for purpose of deciding on plea, to determine to which party the dignity belonged. Strathmore (Earl) v. Strathmore (Countess), 2 Jac. & Walk. 541.

5. Legacy left to procure a dukedom, void. Kingston (Earl) v. Pierepont, 1 Vern. 5.

6. The Sovereign cannot hold a peerage; accordingly, where a member of the royal family, who was a peer of Ireland, succeeded to the Crown, the peerage became extinct. Oranmore's (Lord), 2 H. L. Ca. 910.

7. Although the status of a peer requires him to attend the House of Lords ad consulendum et defendendum reginam, whenever summoned for that purpose, and may subject him to a fine for non-attendance, he is not thereby precluded from exercising the right, which every free man possesses, of changing his place of residence, and going abroad and acquiring a foreign domicil. Hamilton v. Dallas, 33 L. T., N. S., 495; 45 L. J., Ch., 15; 1 L. R., Ch. D., 257; 24 W. R. 264.

I. LIQUIDATED DAMAGES OR PENALTY.

8. A bond of indemnity, given to protect a purchaser of land against adverse claims threatened at the time of the purchase, is valid to the full amount of the penal sum named in it, notwithstanding that such penal sum greatly exceeded the original purchase money; there being no equity in the circumstances of the case to justify an interference with the legal right, and the purchaser having, in discharge of the claim and expenses incidental, expended a larger sum than the full amount of the penal sum named in the bond.

Osborne v. Eales, 2 Moo. P. C., N. S., 125; 12 W. R. 654.

1. A contractor undertook to do certain works within a given term, or to pay certain fixed sums; whether these were penalties or unliquidated damages, was not necessarily the subject of a bill in equity, but might properly have been decided in an action at law. The fact that a bond with a penalty had been given to secure the payment of them, was itself strong evidence to show that they were liquidated damages. Ranger v. Great Western Railway Co., 5 H. L. Ca. 72.

Where under a contract for the execution of railway works certain payments were to be made by the contractor to the company, in the event of his non-compliance with certain terms of the contract:—Held, that these payments were not penalties, but liquidated damages, which the company might set-off against the demands of the contractor under the contract, on these grounds, viz., (1) the injury to be guarded against was one incapable of exact calculation; (2) the sum to be paid was not the same for every default, but increased as the inconvenience would become more and more pressing; and (3) the payments themselves were secured by the penalty of a bond, which was inconsistent with their being themselves penalties to secure something else. Consideration at large of the rights and liabilities of the contracting parties under such a contract. Ib.

2. The law on the question of penalty or liquidated damages may now be considered, after a great number of decisions not perhaps all of them strictly reconcilable with each other, to be, however, at length satisfactorily settled; and the hinge on which the decision in every particular case turns is the intention of the parties, to be collected from the language they have used. The mere use of the term "penalty," or the term "liquidated damages," does not determine that intention; but, like any other question of construction, it is to be determined by the nature of the provisions and the language of the whole instrument. One circumstance, however, is of great importance towards the arriving at a conclusion; if the instrument contains many stipulations of varying importance, or relating to objects of small value calculable in money, there is the strongest ground for supposing that a stipulation, applying generally to a breach of all or any of them, was intended to be a penalty, and not in the way of liquidated damages. Dimech v. Corlett, 12 Moo. P. C. 199.

3. A., being indebted to B. in a sum of money payable by instalments, and having made default in payment of an instalment, executed a deed whereby, in consideration of B. forbearing to take proceedings in bankruptcy against him, he covenanted to pay the debt by fresh instalments, with a proviso that, if he should make default in payment of any instalment, the whole debt should be immediately recoverable:—Held, that the proviso was not a penalty against which relief could be had in equity, but an essential part of the security created by the deed. Sterne v. Beck, 2 N. R. 346; 1 De G. J. & S. 595. Reversing 2 N. R. 12.

4. The reservation of a right to have full payment of money actually due on an existing contract, should there be a failure to pay a smaller sum on a day certain, cannot be treated as a penalty. Thompson v. Hudson, 4 L. R., H. L., 1; 38 L. J., Ch., 431. Reversing 2 L. R., Ch., 255; 36 L. J., Ch., 388; 15 W. R. 697; 16 L. T., N. S., 254; 2 L. R., Eq., 612; 14 W. R. 957.

Therefore, where a certain sum of money is due, and the creditor enters into arrangements with his debtor to take a lesser sum provided that sum is secured in a certain way and paid at a certain day, but if any of the stipulations of the arrangement are not performed as agreed upon the creditor is to be entitled to recover the whole of the original debt, such remitter to his original rights does not constitute a penalty, and equity will not interfere to prevent its observance. Ib.

H. was indebted to T. and S. in three different sums of money, which were the subjects of suits in Chancery. In the first and third of these suits the sums had been ascertained, but no final decree had been made respecting them. In the second suit there had been a final decree. H. wished for time and facilities to be afforded him for payment of these debts. T. and S. consented, and deeds were executed by which it was arranged that H. should admit the amount of the debts claimed in the first and third suits, and should not use his power to appeal against the decree in the second suit; that he should give a first mortgage on his real estate as a security; and that he should pay certain amounts on certain days. On these conditions T. and S. were to accept smaller sums in satisfaction. The deeds contained provisoes which (in different forms of language) expressly reserved to T. and S. the right, if any of the stipulations in the deeds were violated, to enforce payment of the original amounts found and admitted to be due:—Held, that this reservation of the right to enforce existing debts on non-payment of the smaller and covenanted amounts, was not a penalty against which equity would grant relief. Ib.

5. Land was sold to a company incorporated by Act of Parliament for the purpose of making docks. The contract for sale provided that the purchase money was to be 4,000*l.*, of which the sum of 2,000*l.* was to be paid at once, and the remainder in three months. The contract contained a proviso that in case the balance of the purchase money, with interest, should not be entirely paid off by the 1st November 1869 (and in this respect time was to be of the essence of the contract), it should be lawful for the vendors, notwithstanding that a conveyance of the property might have been executed, to enter upon the property, and the same to have again and enjoy as in their former estate, without any obligation to repay to the company any money which they had already paid, which was to be absolutely forfeited to the vendors. The first instalment of the purchase money was paid, but no part of the balance was ever paid. The company failed, and was ordered to be wound up:—Held, that the above clause was merely in the nature of a penalty, and that the vendors had no right to recover possession of the land if the balance of the purchase money was paid. Re Dagenham (Thames) Dock Co., Hulse's claim, 21 W. R. 898; 8 L. R., Ch., 1022; 43 L. J., Ch., 261.

1. N., in April 1875, contracted with the governors of a school to build and complete a school house by the 31st December following. The contract contained a variety of stipulations, with remedies for the breach of them, and concluded with a clause, that, in case the contract was not in all things duly performed by M., he should pay to the governors 1,000*l.* as liquidated damages. N. failed before the 31st December, and his trustee repudiated the contract:—Held, that this was a penalty and not liquidated damages. Exp. Capper, Re Newman, 46 L. J., Bky., 57; 4 L. R., Ch. D., 724; 25 W. R. 244; 35 L. T., N. S., 718. Reversing S. C. sub nom. Exp. Odiham School (Governors), Re Newman, 46 L. J., Bky., 6; 25 W. R. 100; 35 L. T., N. S., 558.

2. Semble, a penalty is something which the debtor is bound to pay, over and above his original liability, as a punishment. Exp. Burden, Re Neil, 16 L. R., Ch. D., 680; 29 W. R. 879.

3. A lease contained a covenant that a house, to be built immediately adjoining the house in which the lessor lived, should be built for a private family, under a penalty of 10*l.* yearly additional rent, if the lessor should convert his house to any public use:—Held, that the 10*l.* a year additional rent was a penalty, and not liquidated damages, and that the lessor was not restricted to suing for the additional rent, but was entitled to an injunction to restrain the tenant's converting the house into a public-house. Bray v. Fogarty, 4 Ir. R., Eq., 544

4. In a mortgage bond, given to secure the due payment by instalments of a sum due, a provision making the total sum due enforceable on any default, is not to be considered a penalty. Wallingford v. Mutual Society, 5 L. R., App. Cas., 685; 50 L. J., Q. B., 49; 43 L. T. 258; 29 W. R. 81.

5. In a mortgage of chattels, which was duly registered as a bill of sale, to secure the repayment of 400*l.* then advanced, and a further sum of 144*l.* for interest and expenses, by instalments payable every three months, and in default of payment of any one instalment the whole amount remaining unpaid to become immediately due, followed by a proviso that, in default of payment of the moneys secured, or any part thereof, or if the mortgagor should become a liquidating debtor or bankrupt, or upon the happening of certain other contingencies, the mortgagee might enter, sell, and repay himself the whole of the sums due to him upon the security of the mortgage. The mortgagor having become a liquidating debtor:—Held, that the provisions of this mortgage were not in the nature of a penalty, and that the mortgagee was entitled to possession of the property comprised in the mortgage deed. Exp. Cochrane, Re Sendall, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 698; 48 L. J., Bky., 31; 38 L. T. 820; 26 W. R. 818.

6. The plaintiff entered into a contract with the defendant, who was a builder, to sell him an estate for 70,000*l.*, which was to be expended by the defendant in building on the estate. The contract contained numerous provisions, and amongst other things that a deposit of 5,000*l.* should be paid by the defendant into the bankers to the joint account of the plaintiff and defendant, of which 500*l.* was to be paid on the execution of the contract, and the remainder within seven months. If the plaintiff could not make a good title the deposit of the 500*l.* was to be returned, and the plaintiff was to pay the defendant 5,000*l.* as liquidated damages. And if the defendant should commit a substantial breach of the contract, either in not proceeding with due diligence to carry out the works, or in failing to perform any of the provisions of the contract, then and in either of such events the deposit of 5,000*l.* should be forfeited, and if it had not been paid the defendant should forfeit and pay to the plaintiff 5,000*l.* by way of liquidated damages, and the agreement should be void and of no effect, and the plaintiff should regain possession of the estate; but credit was to be given to the defendant for all moneys actually expended; and it was provided that such breach should not be the consequence of a misconstruction of the meaning of any of the provisions of the contract. The defendant did not pay the 500*l.* deposit, and altogether failed in carrying out the contract, and the plaintiff brought an action to recover 5,000*l.* as liquidated damages:—Held, that the condition of forfeiture was not intended to apply to the payment of the deposit of 500*l.* which was to be paid on the execution of the contract, but to a substantial breach of any of the subsequent stipulations, and therefore the 5,000*l.* was not to be regarded as a penalty, but as liquidated damages, the payment of which could be enforced against the defendant. Wallis v. Smith, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 243; 52 L. J., Ch., 145; 47 L. T. 389; 31 W. R. 214.

Where a contract contains a condition for payment of a sum of money as liquidated damages for the breach of stipulations of varied importance, none of which is for payment of an ascertained sum of money, the general rule is, that the sum named is not to be treated as a penalty, but as liquidated damages. Ib.

But whether it would not be treated as a penalty if one of the stipulations was of very trivial importance, quære. Ib.

Where there is a condition for the forfeiture of a deposit for the breach of various stipulations, even though some of them may be very trivial, or for payment of a fixed sum of money, the forfeiture will be enforced and not treated as a penalty. Ib.

II. RELIEF IN EQUITY.

7. Where A. gave a bond to B. for 20*l.* not to disparage his trade, which bond was forfeited; equity would have relieved, if the penalty had been larger, as 100*l.* or upwards. Tale v. Ryland, 1 Ch. Ca. 183.

8. Where the penalty of a bond is only to secure the enjoyment of a collateral object, equity will grant an injunction against a suit for the recovery, and an issue quantum damnificatus to try the real damage. Sloman v. Walter, 1 Bro. C. C. 418.

1. A bond for performance of covenants to build a bridge, and the price of the bridge having been actually paid, an injunction granted to restrain an action on the bond, and an issue quantum damnificatus ordered, the sum mentioned in the bond being penalty. Errington v. Aynesley, 2 Bro. C. C. 341.

2. However equity may afford relief against a clause nomine pœnæ, it has never yet assisted in taking advantage of a penalty. Doneraile v. Chartres, Ridgw. P. C. 134.

Where a sum is forfeited nomine pœnæ, it shall be demanded on the precise day. Ib.

3. If a man agree not to do an act, and enter into a bond with a penalty to be forfeited on his doing it, the penalty is never to be considered as to the price for doing such act; but the Court will relieve by injunction until the actual damage sustained shall be ascertained by an issue. Hardy v. Martin, 1 Cox 26.

4. Bond by plaintiff to defendant to secure his faithful services as an agent; plaintiff also deposited 100*l.* in defendant's hands; plaintiff executed his commission imperfectly; Lord Chancellor would not decree the penalty of the bond, but left defendant to his quantum damnificatus at law. Benson v. Gibson, 3 Atk. 395.

5. If A. is bound to pay money at a day and place by penalty, though from some circumstance or other he is prevented, yet equity will only allow obligee to take principal and reasonable damages. Anon., Cary 1.

The like favour is extended to purchase, etc., of lands. Ib.

6. Defendant found plaintiff naked, and going to bed with his wife drunk (as was suggested by plaintiff); defendant took up an axe, and under terror, plaintiff gave him a note for 500*l.*; this was in June: in August plaintiff gave him a bond and judgment, and in October he surrendered a copyhold as a further security. Plaintiff had told several persons that his debt to defendant was a bargain for grass. On a bill to set aside these securities, the Court refused to relieve further than against the penalties. Goodman v. Scuse, Gilb. Exch. Rep. 9; 2 Eq. Abr. 183.

7. Plaintiff was sued upon a bond at law, and pleaded solvit ad diem, and by his bill in equity he charged fraud and want of consideration. The Court relieved against the penalty, but decreed the principal, interest, and costs to be paid. Duval v. Terry, Show. P. C. 15.

8. A court of equity will relieve against the penalty for not performing an unreasonable contract. Thompson v. Harcourt, 1 Bro. P. C. 193.

9. Where defendant had plaintiff in execution, and refused to discharge him without payment of the penalty, defendant was decreed to refund all he had received, except principal, interest, and costs. Friend v. Burgh, Rep. temp. Finch 437.

10. Chancery will not suffer a penalty to be demanded, if the party will perform that for the non-performance of which the penalty is given. Hele v. Hele, 2 Ch. Ca. 88.

11. Sureties relievable against penalties in bond. Anon., Cary 12.

12. Equity will not relieve against the terms of an agreement, though it may seem in nature of a penalty. Small v. Fitzwilliams, Pre. Ch. 102.

13. The Court will relieve against the breach of a condition precedent, where it is in nature of a penalty. Wallis v. Crimes, 1 Ch. Ca. 90.

14. A. articles to buy land, and pays part of the purchase-money; afterwards he enters into several orders of court to pay the residue by such a day, or, in default thereof, to give up the articles, and lose what he had before paid. Court will relieve, though these articles have not been complied with. Vernon v. Stephens. 2 P. W. 66.

15. Relief against forfeiture where compensation can be given, applies only to cases of contract, not to the provisions of a statute, or conditions in law. Where penalty is only designed to secure the money, then relief may be given against it. Keating v. Sparrow, 1 Ball. & B. 374.

16. Though in cases of non-payment of money the Court will relieve against penalty or forfeiture, yet when it is not a question of penalty or forfeiture, but a privilege is conferred upon payment of money at a stated period, the privilege is lost, if the money be not paid accordingly. Davis v. Thomas, 1 Russ. & M. 506; Taml. 416; 9 L. J., Ch., 232.

17. The practice of the courts of law, compelling a plaintiff on a bond not to take execution beyond his real debt, does not oust the jurisdiction of this Court in awarding an injunction; demurrer to a bill on that ground overruled. Codd v. Wooden, 3 Bro. C. C. 73.

18. A. files his bill against B., C., and D., to have certain promissory notes given up to be cancelled, alleging a case of fraudulent conspiracy against B., C., and D., by which they obtained the promissory notes. The charge of conspiracy was altogether negatived by the defendants' answers; but it was admitted by them that the promissory notes were obtained from A. in lieu of a statutory penalty which A. incurred by cheating B. at cards:—Held, that A. was entitled to have the notes delivered up to be cancelled. Osbaldiston v. Simpson, 13 Sim. 513; 7 Jur. 736.

It would be an extremely dangerous thing to allow parties to be the judges in their own cause, and to determine in their own favour what should be the amount of the penalty to be paid. Ib.

19. Plaintiff in a charter-party may sue for the whole penalty, though a part only remains due, but on offering to pay principal, interest, and costs, defendant at law may be relieved in equity. Forward v. Duffield, 3 Atk. 555.

A bill for relief upon a bond submitting to pay what is due; if the obligee will put in a bad answer, and insist on more than is really due, he shall lose his costs in equity, though entitled to his costs at law if he sue upon the bond. Ib.

20. Relief by injunction against the strict performance of a penalty. Shearman v. MacGregor, 1 W. R. 302; 11 Hare 106.

A bond was conditioned to pay a sum of money on a given day, or to perform an agreement keeping a life policy on foot. The plaintiff did not pay one of the premiums on the proper day, but, subsequently to action brought for the principal sum, revived the policy at the original policy premium. The Court held, that the fact of the plaintiff having put himself into his original position as regarded the security of the policy, was not a sufficient ground for granting relief, but restrained the action on another ground, viz., that under the peculiar circumstances of the case appearing in the bill and affidavits, the plaintiff might have been under a mistake as to his liabilities in respect of a family arrangement. Ib.

1. Where parties mutually enter into various covenants, and further covenant that, on breach of any one covenant by either of the parties covenanting, the sum of 100*l.* should be paid as liquidated damages for breach of the covenant, it is in the discretion of the Court to restrain breach of covenant. Coles v. Sims, 2 W. R. 151; 23 L. J., Ch., 258.

2. The Court will interfere by injunction to restrain the breach of an agreement with a proviso for the payment of a penalty upon breach, unless such penalty is plainly intended by the parties to be liquidated damages. Clark v. Watkins, 1 N. R. 227.

3. A. mortgaged his property to D. to secure 700*l.*, agreed by D. to be taken in lieu of a judgment debt of 3,000*l.*, and the 700*l.* was to be payable by instalments at certain times, and if not punctually so paid, D. was to be remitted to his original rights, and to have the mortgage security also. The judgments were assigned, by a contemporaneous deed, to trustees for D., and on punctual payment of the 700*l.* for A. and B. A. had previously mortgaged his property to B. as a counter security, and for other debts. The instalments were not paid punctually, and the 3,000*l.* was therefore claimed in full:—Held, that though the Court would not interfere if the arrangement were between him and D. only, yet, as the rights of B. were involved, the condition in default of punctual payment should be treated as a penalty, and relieved against, and this equity could be enforced by A. as well as by B. Carroll v. O'Connor, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 200.

4. The assignee of a lease executes a bond to indemnify the original lessees against the covenants contained in the original lease; he afterwards quits the country; the house is left untenanted, and the original lessees are obliged to pay the rent reserved. The assignee having subsequently returned to England, makes a compromise with them for the sum then due in respect of his non-performance of the covenants, and shortly afterwards goes abroad. They demise the house to a person who continues in possession till the end of the term:—Held, that this mode of dealing with the premises does not give the assignee any title in equity to relief against the legal effect of his bond. Anderson v. Bailey, 1 Russ. 313.

5. Five shillings per week allowed by way of nomine pœnæ if either of the half-yearly payments of an annuity was in arrear forty-two days after it became due, the Court will direct it to stand as a security for legal interest when the principal sum is not regularly paid. Aylet v. Dodd, 2 Atk. 238.

III. ELECTION TO PAY.

6. Where a covenant is not to do a particular act, and a penalty or forfeiture is annexed to the doing of that act, this penalty does not authorize the party to do the act; and before the act is done, the Court will restrain him by injunction; but if the act is done, the penalty must be paid, and the amount is unimportant. French v. Macale, 2 Dr. & War. 269; 1 Con. & L. 559; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 573.

7. If a man agree not to do an act, and enter into a bond, with a penalty to be forfeited on his doing it, the penalty is never to be considered as the price for doing such act; but the Court will relieve by injunction until damage sustained shall be ascertained by an issue. Hardy v. Martin, 1 Cox 26.

8. A court of equity will relieve against the penalty for not performing an unreasonable contract. Thomson v. Harcourt, 2 Bro. P. C. 193.

9. A proviso in articles for the purchase of an estate, that if either should break the agreement, he should pay 100*l.* to the other. Defendant, on being offered two years' purchase more, accepted it, notwithstanding his agreement. Lord Hardwicke decreed a specific performance of the articles. Howard v. Hopkyns, 2 Atk. 371.

The offering to pay the stipulated sum will not vacate the agreement, for it is no more than the common case of a penalty. Ib.

A penalty has never been held to release parties from their agreement; for though incurred, they must perform the agreement, notwithstanding. Ib.

10. A solicitor's clerk executed a bond to his employer; the condition, after reciting an agreement that the clerk should give a bond not to carry on the business of a solicitor within fifty miles of a given place, was, that if he carried on business within the specified distance, then, provided he paid to the solicitor 1,000*l.* as liquidated damages, the bond should be void. The clerk commenced business as a solicitor within the distance. On a bill filed by the solicitor:—Held, that he was entitled to an injunction restraining the clerk from practising within the specified distance. Howard v. Woodward, 10 Jur., N. S., 1123; 34 L. J., Ch., 47; 13 W. R. 132; 11 L. T., N. S., 414; 5 N. R. 8.

11. A. agreed to grant B. an underlease of premises, and he covenanted, that if his lessors should refuse to grant him a licence to underlet to B., or in case such licence should not be obtained before a certain day, he would pay B. 1,000*l.*, which sum it was agreed should be damages ascertained and fixed for not obtaining such licence. A. refused to apply for a licence to underlet, and such licence was not in fact granted by the day named. Upon a bill for specific performance:—Held, that the clause did not give A. the right to abstain from applying for the licence, and to pay the 1,000*l.* by way of penalty, and specific performance was decreed. Long v. Bowring, 10 Jur., N. S., 668; 12 W. R. 972; 10 L. T., N. S., 683.

12. On marriage, the two fathers agree to settle lands: one does so; the other gives a bond of 600*l.*, with 1,200*l.* penalty if he fail. He has not election afterward to forfeit the 600*l.* or settle; the settlement being the primary agreement, and the 600*l.* only a penalty or further security. Chilliner v. Chilliner, 2 Ves. 528.

13. A., in consideration of the intended marriage of his niece, entered into a bond, with a penalty conditioned to give by will or otherwise, into or in trust for her or the issue of the intended marriage, so much in money or in valuable effects, as he should by his will give or bequeath to any one of his next of kin, or to any other person whosoever:—Held, that this condition was not to be satisfied by the penalty, but must be specifically performed. All voluntary assignments and transfers of personal property, and all conveyances of real estate purchased subsequently to the date of the bond, in which real estate or personal property the obligor retained a life interest, were declared to be in the nature of testamentary dispositions, to be considered in equity, for the purpose of giving effect to the true intent of the agreement in the bond, as if the said estates had been given or devised by the obligor's will. The persons entitled to the benefit of the bond were declared to be specialty creditors upon the obligor's estate, for satisfaction of their claims under the bond. Logan v. Wienholt, 1 Cl. & F. 611.

A bond conditioned to convey lands for money received is considered in equity as articles, and the condition shall be performed in specie. Anon., Mos. 37.

II. ASSIGNMENT OF, 5609.
1. In General, 5609.
2. Military, 5610.
3. Indian, 5610.

I. RIGHT TO.

1. Under the provisions of the Superannuation Act 1859, the question whether or not a pension shall be granted to a public servant is to be decided by the commissioners of the Treasury; and until they have decided to grant a pension no public servant can maintain an action in respect thereof. Edmunds v. Att.-Gen., 47 L. J., Ch., 345; 26 W. R. 550; 38 L. T. 213.

2. The Superannuation Act 1859, s. 2, after prescribing a scale of superannuation allowances for civil servants according to length of service, provides that, if any question shall arise as to the claim of any civil servant for superannuation under this clause, "it shall be referred to the commissioners of the Treasury, whose decision shall be final." Where, therefore, a civil servant makes a claim for superannuation allowance to the commissioners of the Treasury, and their lordships decide upon the amount of the allowance to be made, such decision is final, and cannot afterwards be made the subject of litigation in any civil tribunal. Cooper v. Reg., 14 L. R., Ch. D., 311; 49 L. J., Ch., 490; 42 L. T. 617; 28 W. R. 611.

3. To entitle the widow of an officer in the army to the pension from government, the marriage must have taken place before he retired from the service. Perry v. Woods, 3 Ves. 204.

II. ASSIGNMENT OF.

1. In General, 5609.
2. Military, 5610.
3. Indian, 5610.

1. In General.

4. Purchaser of pension granted by King Geo. 3, and which necessarily ceased on king's death, not entitled to pension which was granted by Geo. 4, merely in continuance of the former one. Clay v. St. John, 2 Sim. & S. 32; 2 L. J., Ch., 15.

5. A pension for past services may be alienated; but a pension for supporting the grantee in the performance of future duties is inalienable. Davis v. Marlborough (Duke), 1 Swan. 74; 2 Wils. 130.

The estates, which, by 5 Ann, c. 3, are limited to the then Duke of M. for life, remainder to S. his duchess for life, remainder to the heirs male of the body of the duke, remainder to all and every of his daughters, in such manner as the titles are thereinbefore limited, in order that they may always "go along and be enjoyed with the titles and dignities," with a proviso restraining alienation to the prejudice of persons in the remainder, are not inalienable, and the rents and profits may be effectually aliened by the person in possession, as against himself. The pension granted by 5 Ann, c. 4, "for the support of the dignities" of the Duke of M., and his posterity, payable out of the revenues of the post-office, to such persons severally and successively to whom the same should come, by virtue of that Act, with a proviso, that the acquittance of every such person should be a sufficient discharge, is alienable. Ib.

Courts of equity may apply a peculiar principle to Acts restraining alienation, in the construction of which they agree with the courts of law. S. C. 2 Swan 133.

6. Pension to A. or his assigns, when assigned is a grant, not a chose in action. M'Carthy v. Goold, 1 Ball & B. 386.

Sequestrators directed to receive a pension to A. and his assigns, payable at the Treasury, in the hands of the assignee. Ib.

7. A question being raised whether a pension granted by the Crown to one of the officers in the Custom House, upon the abolition of the office, was assignable:—Held, that there was sufficient doubt on the point to induce the Court to protect the fund till the title was disposed of; and for this purpose to restrain the receiver-general from paying over any part of the compensation which was then in his hands. Tunstall v. Boothby, 10 Sim. 542; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 294.

1. The Lords of the Treasury directed A. to be placed on the superannuated list of the customs, at a retiring allowance of 1,000*l.* per annum, payable quarterly by the receiver-general of customs. A. assigned the allowance to B. for a valuable consideration. The Court, in a suit by B. against A. and the receiver-general of customs, restrained the receiver-general from paying over to A., and A. from receiving from the receiver-general, moneys in the hands of the latter on account of the arrears of the allowance. Hall v. Lack, 7 Jur. 527.

2. E., a retired storekeeper of one of Her Majesty's dockyards, entitled to payment from the Treasury of a pension or superannuation allowance of 155*l.* a year, assigned such pension to the plaintiff to secure a loan of money. E. afterwards became insolvent, and included the debt due upon the plaintiff's security in his schedule. The Commissioner of the Insolvent Debtors' Court, by his order, made in presence of counsel for the plaintiff, recommended that 50*l.* a year, part of the insolvent's pension, should be paid by the paymaster-general to the provisional assignee of the Insolvent Debtors' Court, for the benefit of the creditors of the insolvent. The plaintiff declined to prove as creditor under the insolvency; but, having filed a bill, moved for an injunction to restrain E. from applying for, or receiving, or enabling any other person to receive, the balance of his pension left after the appropriation of the annual sum recommended by the Commissioner:—Ordered accordingly. Lloyd v. Eagle, 5 Jur., N. S., 187; 28 L. J., Ch., 389.

2. Military.

3. If a colonel in the army makes an assignment of the off-reckoning of any year for the clothing of that year, and has before anticipated such off-reckoning of that year for the clothing of the foregoing year, he shall be answerable in his own person, if the agreement be so worded as to charge him, and the off-reckonings of the following year are so far diverted by altering the establishment of the regiment as not to be applicable to make good the payments. Tidcombe v. Boddington, Pre. Ch. 143.

4. The difference received by an officer upon retiring on half-pay is assignable. Price v. Lovett, 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 270; 15 Jur. 786.

5. The half-pay of an officer is not assignable or attachable, on principles of public policy, lest he should not be forthcoming when his services are wanted. M'Carty v. Gould, 1 Ball & B. 389.

6. An assignment of the half-pay of an officer in the army is bad in equity as well as at law. Stone v. Liddordale, 2 Anstr. 533.

7. An assignment by a retired military officer of his pension for valuable consideration is void under the 47 Geo. 3, c. 25, and the Court refused an injunction to restrain the officer from applying for or receiving the pension. Lloyd v. Cheetham, 3 Giff. 171; 7 Jur., N. S., 1272; 30 L. J., Ch., 640; 9 W. R. 924; 4 L. T., N. S., 576.

8. B., formerly an officer in the army, obtained a grant of a pension from the Crown, not for a term of years, or for the whole period of life, but "until further order," for wounds received in actual service in India in 1845. In 1853 B. assigned his pension to the plaintiff to secure payment of redeemable annuities granted to him by B. for valuable consideration. The indentures contained a power of attorney authorizing the plaintiff to receive the pension, which was payable quarterly; and they also contained covenants by the defendant to do all necessary acts to enable the plaintiff to receive the pension. The War Office, to avoid being affected by any charges on such pensions, refused to recognise any assignment, or to pay the pension, except the power of attorney were in the form used in and recognised by such office, and which was revocable by the grantor. The defendant executed such power of attorney, but subsequently, without notice to the plaintiff, revoked it, and proceeded to receive and appropriate the entire amount of the pension. The plaintiff filed a bill against B.; and on motion for that purpose the Court granted an injunction in 1858 to restrain him from receiving the pension, and from executing a power of attorney authorizing or permitting any person other than the plaintiff to receive it. No receiver was appointed, and no order for costs was made. Knight v. Bulkeley, 4 Jur., N. S., 527; 27 L. J., Ch., 592; 6 W. R. 610.

Subsequently the Court, on the application of the plaintiff, ordered B. to execute a proper power of attorney for the purpose of enabling the plaintiff to receive the pension; and made the injunction granted in 1858, perpetual against B. revoking the power, or doing any act whereby the plaintiff's right to receive the pension might be intercepted. S. C. 5 Jur., N. S., 817.

9. D., by his marriage settlement, agreed that if he then was, or should during the intended coverture, at one time and from one source, become entitled to any real or personal property of the value of 100*l.* or upwards for any estate or interest whatsoever, he and all necessary parties should execute and do such assurances and things as should be necessary for vesting the same in the trustees of the settlement. He was at the time of his marriage in receipt of half-pay (as lieutenant in the navy), which he subsequently commuted, under 34 & 35 Vict., c. 36, for 2,175*l.*:—Held, that the commutation money was not bound by the agreement in the settlement. Churchill v. Denny, 20 L. R., Eq., 534; 44 L. J., Ch., 578; 23 W. R. 825.

3. Indian.

10. The 47 Geo. 3, s. 2, c. 25, making void the assignment of military pensions, does not apply to a pension granted by the East India Company. Heald v. Hay, 3 Giff. 467; 8 Jur., N. S., 379; 31 L. J., Ch., 311; 10 W. R. 264; 5 L. T., N. S., 740.

11. The 46 Geo. 3, c. 69, and 47 Geo. 3, s. 2, c. 25, do not apply to pensions granted by the government of India to military persons employed in India, for the purpose of the Indian Government. Carew v. Cooper, 4 Giff. 619; 12 W. R. 198; 3 N. R. 188. And see 12 W. R. 586; 10 Jur., N. S., 429.

A pension awarded by the Secretary of State for India, subsequently to the Act for the better government of India (21 & 22 Vict., c. 106), to an officer in Her Majesty's Indian army upon his retirement from service, and also an annuity granted by the Secretary of State for India to the same officer, in addition to his retiring pension, are assignable. S. C. 10 Jur., N. S., 11; 33 L. J., Ch., 289; 12 W. R. 767; 9 L. T., N. S., 641.

1. Property, including a pension payable by the Secretary of State for India, was mortgaged to the plaintiff, and subsequently to one of the defendants. Upon a bill for foreclosure the common decree was made, and it was also ordered that, in the event of the foreclosure becoming absolute, the mortgagor should execute a power of attorney enabling the mortgagee to receive the pension. James v. Ellis, 19 W. R. 319; 24 L. T., N. S., 12.

2. A debtor executed a deed of assignment of all his property, except a pension from the East India Company, to a creditor to secure a past debt:—Held, that as this pension could not pass to his trustee in bankruptcy, it formed no substantial exception from the assignment, and the assignment was therefore an act of bankruptcy. Exp. Hawker, Re Keely, 41 L. J., Bky., 34; 20 W. R. 322; 26 L. T., N. S., 54; 7 L. R., Ch., 214.

3. Explanation by a second answer does not take away the opportunity of indicting upon the former answer. Edwards v. M'Leay, 2 Ves. & B. 258.

4. That an indictment for perjury upon the answer has been found by the grand jury is not a ground for reviving an injunction. Clapham v. White, 8 Ves. 35.

5. Where a corporation aggregate are defendants, they are not liable to prosecution for perjury, though their answer be never so false. Wych v. Meal, 3 P. W. 310.

6. Suit in chancery for perjury committed there must be by Latin bill, and issue tried in K. B., and defendant shall not be sworn to his plea, nor examined on interrogatories, unless that Court had absolute authority in perjuries before 5 Eliz., c. 9, saved by 13 sec. Anon., Dyer, 288 pl. 51.

On application to produce on trial a record of Court, the Court has no jurisdiction to inquire whether there be probable ground for the prosecution, or what may be the motives of the prosecutor, it being only interested to see that the record be not defaced. Ib.

13. A defendant's answer will be taken off the file for the purposes of an indictment for perjury, when the preparatory steps have been taken, and the time of trial is near at hand. Curtis v. ——, 1 Hog. 132.

14. An affidavit will be taken off the file for the purposes of an indictment for perjury, when the preparatory steps have been taken, and the time of trial is near at hand. The affidavit to support the motion should not enter into the merits of the indictment. Swift v. Quinlan, 1 Hog. 132.

15. A testator bequeathed the residue of his estate to his wife A. G. for her life, and the legatee, describing herself as A. G., widow, filed a bill against the executors for the administration of the estate; but, it appearing that J. P., the first husband of the legatee, was living at the time the ceremony of marriage was performed between her and the testator; and at the time of filing the bill, she filed a supplemental bill, describing herself as A. P. alias A. G., by her next friend, against J. P., for the purpose of making her husband a party to the suit:—Held, that this was not such an alteration of the frame of the record as to render the evidence taken in the first cause inadmissible at the hearing of the two causes; and that the amended description of the plaintiff in the supplemental bill could not affect the liability of a witness examined in the original suit to be indicted for perjury, if he swore falsely. Giles v. Giles, 1 Keen 685.

16. Semble, where, under an Act of Parliament, an affidavit in a petition matter required by the Act may be sworn before the petition is filed, any indictment for perjury in such an affidavit can be sustained. Clendinning v. O'Malley, 1 Con. & L. 363; 2 Dr. & War. 210.

PERPETUATION OF TESTIMONY.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES, 5612.
II. BILL FOR, WHEN PROPER, 5612.
III. TAKING EVIDENCE ON, 5613.
IV. PUBLICATION AND USER OF DEPOSITIONS, 5614.
V. PLEADING, 5615.
VI. DISMISSAL OF BILL FOR WANT OF PROSECUTION, 5615.
VII. HEARING AND COSTS, 5615.

I. GENERAL PRINCIPLES.

1. Distinction between examination to perpetuate and de bene esse. In a suit for the former purpose, after the examination, there is an end to the issue. Morrison v. Arnold, 19 Ves. 671.

2. Distinction between a bill to perpetuate testimony and a bill of discovery. The former is not a bill of discovery in the strict technical sense of the term. Ellice v. Roupell, 32 Beav. 299; 9 Jur., N. S., 530; 32 L. J., Ch., 563, 624; 11 W. R. 579; 8 L. T., N. S., 191; 2 N. R. 3. And see 32 Beav. 308.

A bill of discovery must be in aid of proceedings pending or about to be instituted, but the existence of such proceedings would be fatal to a bill to perpetuate testimony. Ib.

A bill to perpetuate testimony cannot, by amendment, be converted into a bill of discovery. Ib.

3. The plaintiffs filed a bill to perpetuate testimony as to the validity of a deed, which question, they alleged, could not at present be tried. After the defendants had, by answer, admitted the plaintiffs' right to perpetuate the testimony, the plaintiffs filed another bill, raising the question of the validity of the same deed. A motion by the defendants to stay proceedings in the suit to perpetuate testimony, on the ground of the existence of the second suit, was refused with costs. Ellice v. Roupell, 32 Beav. 318.

4. It was not intended by the 5 & 6 Vict., c. 69, to give a party seeking to perpetuate testimony rights stronger than those which would belong to him in an actual and present litigation. Campbell v. Dalhousie (Earl), 1 L. R., H. L. (Sc.), 462; 22 L. T., N. S., 879.

II. BILL FOR, WHEN PROPER.

5. A bill to examine witnesses in perpetuam rei memoriam is not proper, until the party has established his right at law. Pawlet v. Ingres, 1 Vern. 308.

6. Upon a bill to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses touching a right to a way, the plaintiff must set out the way exactly in his bill per et trans, as he ought to do in a declaration at law. But such a bill ought not to be brought for such trivial things as right of common, or for ways or watercourses, or at least not till after a recovery at law. Gell v. Haynard, 1 Vern. 312.

7. Bill lies to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses to prove a modus; but quære if it will lie to establish a modus. Somerset v. Fothorby, 1 Vern. 185.

8. A bill will not lie to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses to a lunatic's will in his lifetime, made before his lunacy. Sackvill v. Aylesworth, 1 Vern. 105.

9. Bill will not lie to perpetuate testimony, etc., before trial, unless affidavit be made of the witnesses being infirm and unable to travel. Philips v. Carew, 1 P. W. 117.

10. Where lands are devised by will, and there is no opportunity to prove and establish it at law, a bill to perpetuate testimony thereto will lie. Anon., Pr. Reg. 74.

11. A man cannot bring a bill to examine witnesses in perpetuam rei memoriam to establish his title, until he has made it good by a verdict at law, if he is under no impediment of trying his title at law. Parry v. Rogers, 1 Vern. 441.

12. Devisee shall not examine witnesses in perpetuam rei memoriam, to prove a will against a purchaser without notice, till the will has been established by a verdict at law. Bechinall v. Arnold, 1 Vern. 354.

13. Court will not give leave to plaintiff to examine witnesses to perpetuate testimony, though in case of a purchase of reversion, where there can be no trial at law during the estate for life. Hitchcock v. Sedgwick, 2 Vern. 159.

14. A tenant in tail out of possession, cannot bring bill to perpetuate testimony. Brandlyn v. Ord, 1 Atk. 571.

15. A man who is in possession of a fishery, may bring a bill to examine his witnesses in perpetuam rei memoriam, and establish his right, though he has not recovered an affirmance of it at law. Secus, if he is not in possession. Dorset v. Girdler, Pre. Ch. 531.

16. Bill to perpetuate testimony of legitimacy of plaintiff, entitled to remainder in tail, after estate for life. Demurrer by seventh and eighth in remainder, after plaintiffs and other defendants, all infants, overruled; any interest, however slight, being sufficient. Dursley (Lord) v. Berkeley, 6 Ves. 251.

Next of kin of lunatic, however hopeless his condition, have no interest whatever in the property, and cannot, therefore, restrain bill to perpetuate testimony. So heir apparent cannot have a writ de ventre inspic. in life of his ancestor; but they may contract upon their expectations, and may perpetuate testimony with reference to interest so created. Id. 260.

Bill to perpetuate will not lie where defendant might immediately bar that right. Id. 262.

17. This Court will not take the least step against a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, not even to perpetuate testimony against him. Jerrard v. Saunders, 2 Ves. J. 458.

18. Demurrer to bill to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses in aid of plaintiff's defence to an action, because the agreement relied on as a defence, and touching which the testimony of witnesses was sought to be perpetuated, was, as stated by the bill, corrupt and illegal, and because the subject matter of the bill was altogether unfit to be the subject of discussion in a court of equity, allowed at the rolls; overruled on appeal. Longfield v. Aubrey, 2 Moll. 426.

1. Landlord may file a bill to perpetuate evidence of a demand, made under the Tenantry Act, on his tenant to renew. Keating v. Sparrow, 1 Ball. & B. 372.

2. Demurrer will lie to bill to perpetuate, if it does not state that no action can be immediately brought. Angell v. Angell, 1 Sim. & S. 83; 1 L. J., Ch., 6.

3. Quære, whether equity has jurisdiction to entertain bill to perpetuate testimony to claims to a dignity. Belfast (Earl) v. Chichester, 2 Jac. & Walk. 439.

Issue in tail cannot file bill to perpetuate testimony, even in case of an entail that cannot be barred. Ib.

A dignity is entailed on A., who dies leaving issue two sons, B. and C. To bill filed in lifetime of B., by his eldest son, for perpetuating testimony of his father's marriage, demurrers by eldest son of C., who was dead, and attorney-general, were allowed. Ib.

4. Semble, this Court has jurisdiction to perpetuate testimony with a view to proceedings in foreign courts. Morris v. Morris, 2 Ph. 205; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 286; 11 Jur. 93.

5. A bill to perpetuate testimony cannot be filed but by a person who has some interest, present or future, and not by those who would be next of kin to a lunatic if he was to die immediately. Smith v. Att.-Gen., Romilly's Notes of Cases, 54; 6 Ves. 256, 260.

6. To support a bill to perpetuate testimony, the plaintiff must have an interest; but the minuteness or remoteness of it is no objection, A mere contingency, however near and valuable (with the exception of the case of a wager), the expectation of issue in tail, heir apparent, or next of kin of a lunatic, is not sufficient; therefore a demurrer to a bill by tenant in tail in remainder and his issue, to perpetuate testimony of the validity of his marriage, allowed. Allen v. Allen, 15 Ves. 130.

7. A bill to perpetuate testimony relating to a matter which is the subject of an existing suit against the plaintiff is demurrable, although the plaintiff could not himself have made such matter the subject of present judicial investigation. Spencer (Earl) v. Peek, 3 L. R., Eq. 415; 15 W. R. 478.

See also V. post.

III. TAKING EVIDENCE.

8. Affidavit must be made of service on defendant of subpœna to examine witnesses in perpetuam rei memoriam before they can be so examined. Hatcham v. Winchcombe, Cary 34. S. P. Porter v. Baker, Id.

9. Commission to examine in perpetuam rei memoriam granted to examiner of court. Barentine v. Harbert, Cary 43.

10. Commission to examine in perpetuam rei memoriam granted. Hearing v. Fisher, Cary 110.

11. Commission to examine in perpetuam rei memoriam, on oath that witness is impotent and sick. Bagshawe v. ——, Robins v. Foster, Cary 35.

12. Leave given to plaintiff, before answer, to sue a commission in a suit to perpetuate testimony, the defendant having been attached, and still refusing to answer. Lancaster v. Lancaster, 6 Sim. 439.

13. Bill to perpetuate testimony of modus being amended, by adding essential party, after commission executed, but before publication, a new commission was granted. Biddiford v. Partridge, 3 Anstr. 646.

14. In a suit to perpetuate testimony, motion for a further examination of witnesses as to the facts lately discovered, refused on the ground that a demurrer to a supplemental bill for the same purpose had been allowed. Knight v. Knight, 1 Jac. & Walk. 165.

15. After a replication filed in a suit to perpetuate testimony, it is not necessary to obtain an order to examine witnesses. Allen v. Hacket, 11 Ir. Eq. R. 355.

16. The depositions of a witness who was examined in perpetuam rei memoriam were suppressed on a petition after his death, and the examiner discharged and committed for foul practice and irregularity in the taking of them, the plaintiff being suffered by the examiner to instruct him, and the witness being corrupted; and as he had been examined on a trial to the same points, the plaintiff might give evidence of what he swore. Hosier v. Hart, Mos. 321.

17. Commission to examine in perpetuam rei memoriam granted to examiner of Court. Barentine v. Harbert, Cary 43.

18. A commission to examine witnesses de bene esse, upon a bill to perpetuate testimony, though the defendant had not appeared, and was not in contempt. Allen v. Annesley (Earl), 2 Jones 260.

19. Examination de bene esse granted to plaintiffs in a bill to perpetuate testimony after subpœna served, but before appearance of infant defendants, in contempt by the messenger's return that they had absconded and were not to be found, on affidavit of the materiality of the evidence and danger of its loss, and undertaking to proceed with all due diligence to issue, and examination in chief to be proved before publication of the depositions de bene esse. Frere v. Green, 19 Ves. 319.

20. Witnesses being old and infirm, and resident out of the jurisdiction, the Court, in a suit to perpetuate testimony, before appearance of some of the parties, made an order for their examination de bene esse. Campbell v. Att.-Gen., 11 Jur., N. S., 922; 14 W. R. 45; 13 L. T., N. S., 356.

As to Evidence de bene esse and Commissions to examine generally.] See PRACTICE (EVIDENCE).

Discovery.] 21. The only discovery which a plaintiff in a bill to perpetuate testimony can require from a defendant is a sufficient admission of his title to examine such witnesses as they may think fit, on the various matters and issues stated in the bill. Ellice v. Roupell, 32 Beav. 308.

22. An appellant, on a bill to perpetuate testimony, under 5 & 6 Vict., c. 63, obtained from the Court of Chancery a subpœna duces tecum, directed to the respondents. The appellant, being unable to enforce this writ against the respondents who were resident in Scotland, applied to the Court of Session, under 22 Vict. c. 20, to compel them to search for and exhibit the documents mentioned in the subpœna. The respondents stated as a reason for non-search and non-production of the documents, that they were locked up in the muniment room at a certain castle, and that though they were, as trustees of the late owner of the castle, in possession of the key of the muniment room, yet they could not search that room, because there was a dispute between them and the present owner of the castle as to the right of the possession of the documents:—Held, that the respondents could not be compelled to produce the documents. Campbell v. Dalhousie (Earl), 22 L. T., N. S., 879; 1 L. R., H. L. (Sc.), 462.

It was not intended by 5 & 6 Vict., c. 69 to give to the person who wished to perpetuate testimony, as against the person with whom he contemplated a future litigation, rights of any stronger character than those which would be possessed by him in a suit actually commenced; and it is of course that, when parties are in immediate litigation, they cannot investigate the title-deeds of the opponent. Ib.

IV. PUBLICATION AND USES OF DEPOSITIONS.

1. Commission having been issued, etc., to examine witnesses in perpetuam rei memoriam a year past, publication ordered. Gravenor v. Brearton, Cary 33.

2. Witnesses examined in perpetuam rei memoriam, one dead other sick, moved to use testimony, and granted. Senhawes v. Senhawes, Cary 88.

3. Publication of depositions of witnesses examined in perpetuam rei memoriam, cannot pass by a side bar rule; but there must be a special motion for the purpose. Green v. Green, 1 Hog. 312.

4. Depositions in in perpetuam rei memoriam not published in the life of the witness, except on incapacity to travel by sickness, etc.; such orders, except in the excepted cases, proceeding on affidavit of the death of the witness, some expressly declaring that the depositions of the other witnesses shall not be read. Morrison v. Arnold, 19 Ves. 670.

5. Publication of depositions of witness who is dead taken on bill to perpetuate may be moved for as of course. Bourne v. Bligh, 1 Price 307.

6. Publication ordered of the depositions of a deceased witness, examined on the behalf of the defendant, under the plaintiff's commission, on a bill to perpetuate testimony. Abergavenny (Earl) v. Powell, 1 Meriv. 434.

7. On a bill for examining witnesses in perpetuam rei memoriam:—Held, that publication of the depositions should not be allowed unless in a strong case. Harris v. Cotterell, 3 Meriv. 678.

8. The Court will not make an order for the publication of depositions taken in a suit, to perpetuate testimony, whilst the witnesses are alive. Barnsdale v. Lowe, 2 Russ. & M. 142.

9. Court will not order copies of depositions taken to perpetuate testimony of witnesses to be delivered out for the purpose of perfecting title to an estate, even where witnesses are dead. Teale v. Teale, 1 Sim. & S. 385.

10. It is no objection to the publication of depositions which have been taken in a suit to perpetuate testimony, that the proceedings for which they are required are in the court of a foreign country, or that other depositions taken in a similar suit in that country have already been published. Morris v. Morris, 2 Ph. 205; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 286; 11 Jur. 93.

11. In a suit to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses, liberty was given to the plaintiffs, under the 13 Geo. 2, c. 9, to pass publication of depositions of witnesses examined de bene esse in the cause. Scanlan v. M'Coy, Fl. & K. 366.

12. Depositions of witnesses examined under a bill to perpetuate testimony, in aid of an ejectment, and who were resident abroad and refused to come to this country, ordered to be published. Biddulph v. Camoys (Lord), 19 Beav. 467.

A similar application refused, as to a witness in England, who, on account of blindness and infirm state of health, was stated to be unable to leave home, and who had stated his age to be eighty-three. Ib.

A witness, examined under a bill to perpetuate testimony, was very old, and unable, through illness, to leave his home without danger; another was resident in Canada. Their depositions were ordered to be published and produced at the trial about to take place, and that either party might make such use of them "as by law they can." S. C. 20 Beav. 402.

13. Order to read on the trial of an issue, the depositions of a living witness taken in a suit to perpetuate testimony, the witness being too infirm to attend at the trial. Watkins v. Atchison, 10 Hare (App.) 46.

The defendant having obtained an order for the payment of his costs by the plaintiffs, which order recited that the testimony of the witness had been taken, the depositions of the witness must be regarded as having been completely taken, and are not therefore to be excluded on the ground of the want of a sufficient cross-examination. Ib.

On the examination and cross-examination of an aged and infirm witness labouring under deafness, the questions were put, and answers received, through the medium of the daughter of the witness; and the examiner certified that the state of the witness did not permit the examination to be proceeded with without danger to her life, and that much of the cross-examination and all the re-examination had been pretermitted. The defendant afterwards obtained an order for his costs, which recited that the testimony of the witness had been taken:—Held, that the defendant having concurred in the mode of examination adopted, could not afterwards object to the use of the testimony by impeaching its fidelity on that ground. Ib.

14. Semble, there has been no alteration in the rule, that, in suits to perpetuate testimony, the evidence given ought to be kept secret until the time for using it arrives. Ellice v. Roupell, 2 N. R. 3; 32 Beav. 299; 9 Jur., N. S., 530; 32 L. J., Ch., 563, 624; 11 W. R. 579; 8 L. T., N. S., 191.

15. Depositions in the custody of the Court, which were taken in a former suit to perpetuate testimony, were ordered to be published, on the application of one of the parties to a subsequent suit, the other of whom was a stranger to the former suit, and the time for taking evidence in the second suit was extended in order to give both parties an opportunity of considering the information so obtained; the Court being of opinion that though the depositions might not themselves be evidence, they might be the means of supplying valuable information to both parties. Vane v. Vane, 45 L. J., Ch., 589; 24 W. R. 565. Varying 24 W. R. 453; 34 L. T., N. S., 477.

V. PLEADING.

1. Bill to perpetuate cannot pray other relief. Anon., 2 Vent. 366.

2. In a bill to perpetuate testimony of a right of common and way, the plaintiffs claimed in right of their estates, or otherwise; this is too loose: a demurrer therefore allowed. Cressett v. Mytton, 3 Bro. C. C. 481. And see 1 Ves. J. 449.

3. Demurrer to bill to perpetuate, and that plaintiff could try eo instanti, allowed. North v. Gray, Dick. 14.

4. Demurrer will lie to bill to perpetuate, if it does not state that no action can be immediately brought. Angell v. Angell, 1 Sim. & S. 83; 1 L. J., Ch., 6.

5. Bill to perpetuate testimony merely, ought not to be brought to a hearing; but if it prays relief, the defendant may set it down for dismissal. Vaughan v. Fitzgerald, 1 Sch. & Lef. 316.

6. To a bill to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses with respect to the execution and attestation of a will of 1845, whereby a will of 1838, under which the defendant claimed, was stated to be revoked; the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff put the defendant by force out of a part of the lands, and that the remainder was in the occupation of tenants under leases or from year to year, who had not acknowledged the plaintiff's title or paid him rent due, and that the plaintiff would, by action at law against the tenants, forthwith try the title:—Held, on the authority of Dew v. Clarke (1 Sim. & S. 108), that the plea was good. Lindesay v. Lindesay, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 508.

7. The plaintiffs filed a bill to perpetuate testimony. The defendants put in a full answer, and replication having been filed, witnesses were examined. The plaintiffs afterwards amended their bill, and filed fresh interrogatories. The defendants pleaded to the amended bill that the plaintiffs, since filing the original bill, had instituted another suit, in which they made the several matters raised in issue by the amended bill the subject of judicial investigation:—Held, that the plea was bad; that although it might have been good if filed to the original bill, yet that the defendants, having answered the original bill, could not plead to the amended bill. The plea was ordered to stand for an answer, with liberty to the defendants to except. Ellice v. Roupell, 9 Jur., N. S., 530; 32 L. J., Ch., 563, 624; 11 W. R. 579; 8 L. T., N. S., 191; 32 Beav. 299; 2 N. R. 3.

The plaintiffs having excepted:—Held, that although a bill to perpetuate is, to a certain extent, a bill of discovery, yet it is so only to the extent of enabling the plaintiffs to obtain the relief asked by the bill, viz., the examination of witnesses as to the issues raised by the bill; and that the answer already put in being sufficient for that purpose, the plaintiffs could not require a further answer. Ib.

8. A bill to perpetuate testimony alleged that the plaintiff was in possession of lands, and if any proceedings were taken by the defendant to recover the land, the plaintiffs would be able by the testimony of creditable witnesses to prove their title, and disprove that of the defendant. The defendant put in a voluntary answer, whereby he deposed that it was not true that the plaintiff was in possession, but, on the contrary, that he (the defendant) was in possession. The plaintiff replied. Thereupon the defendant did not plead, but moved to dismiss the plaintiff's bill, on the ground that a plaintiff out of possession could not bring the bill without alleging that he could not immediately bring an ejectment:—Motion ordered to stand over, with liberty to either party to examine such witnesses as he might be advised to prove that he was in possession. Brigstocke v. Roch, Wedgwood v. Roch, 3 L. T., N. S., 401; 7 Jur., N. S., 63.

VI. DISMISSAL OF BILL FOR WANT OF PROSECUTION.

9. Bill to perpetuate testimony may be dismissed for want of prosecution any time before replication and examination. If cause is set down to be heard, the bill will be dismissed with costs, so as not to prejudice the perpetuating the testimony. Anon., Ambl. 237; 2 Ves. 497.

10. A motion to dismiss a bill to perpetuate testimony for want of prosecution is irregular. The proper application is that the plaintiff may proceed within a given time, or may pay the defendant his costs. Wright v. Tatham, 2 Sim. 459. And see Barham v. Longman, id. n.

11. A bill to perpetuate testimony is not dismissed for want of prosecution, but the plaintiff is ordered to proceed forthwith, and complete his examination, or pay the defendant his costs. Skrine v. Powell, 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 18.

12. A bill for a commission to examine witnesses abroad in aid of an action at law cannot be dismissed under the 93rd General Order. Parr v. Howlin, Sau. & Sc. 124.

An order for a commission to examine witnesses should specify the time within which it is to be executed, but where no time has been specified, the proper application is that the plaintiff should proceed within a given time, or pay the defendant his costs, or semble, that the defendant might apply to discharge the order for a commission, on the ground of unreasonable delay in proceeding upon it. Ib.

13. The Court will not, even before replication, dismiss a bill to perpetuate testimony for want of prosecution, but will order the plaintiff to reply, and examine his witnesses, and procure the examination to be completed by a certain time, and in default thereof to pay to the defendant his costs of the suit. Beavan v. Carpenter, 11 Sim. 22.

VII. HEARING AND COSTS.

1. Bill to perpetuate by devisee and no relief prayed, defendant has costs, if he do not examine witnesses. Blinkehorne v. Feast, Dick. 153.

2. On a bill brought to prove a will per testes, and to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses, the defendant has no other remedy to have his costs than by moving for them. —— v. Andrews, Barnard. 333.

And though the defendant has cross-examined the plaintiff's witnesses, yet if he has examined no witnesses of his own, he shall be allowed his costs. Ib.

And the circumstance that the defendant has brought a cross bill makes no difference as to his right to costs in the original cause upon the return of the commission. Ib.

3. Where a devisee brings a bill merely in perpetuam rei memoriam and the heir-at-law only cross-examines the witnesses produced to confirm the will, he is entitled to his costs; but if he examines witnesses to encounter the will, he shall not have his costs. Berney v. Eyre, 3 Atk. 387.

4. Plaintiff having examined his witnesses under a bill to perpetuate, defendant moved for his costs. Order to show cause granted. Bower v. Thomson, 1 Fowl. 50.

5. Where a plaintiff in a bill to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses has examined, and thereby had the fruit of her bill, neither herself nor defendant is entitled to costs. Coddrington v. England, 2 Atk. 167.

When a multiplicity of actions has been brought where the custom might have been tried in one, it is such a vexation that the plaintiff in equity shall have the costs both in law and equity. Ib.

6. Where it appears reasonable, though not absolutely necessary, to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses to a will, the Court will, in the case of a purchaser, allow him his costs. Mackrell v. Hunt, 2 Madd. 37. n.

7. On a bill to perpetuate testimony, defendant entitled to costs of answering, there being no examination of witnesses. Lecky v. Murray, 1 Ball & B. 391.

8. Defendant to a bill to perpetuate testimony, entitled to his costs immediately after the commission executed, upon the allegation that he did not examine any witnesses. Foulds v. Midgley, 1 Ves. & B. 138.

9. A bill for perpetuating testimony only, ought not to be brought to a hearing; if it be, it will be dismissed with costs; but plaintiff has the benefit of the depositions at law, notwithstanding such dismissal. Hall v. Hoddesdon, 2 P. W. 162. Anon., 2 Ves. 497; Ambl. 237.

10. Bill to perpetuate testimony merely ought not to be brought to a hearing; but, if it prays relief, the defendant may set it down for dismissal. Vaughan v. Fitzgerald, 1 Sch. & Lef. 316.

11. A bill for perpetuating testimony, if brought to a hearing, will be dismissed with costs. Ellice v. Roupell, 32 Beav. 308.

12. A defendant to a bill of discovery, and to perpetuate the testimony of witnesses, is entitled to his costs of the discovery, although he has examined witnesses in chief. Shrine v. Powell, 15 Sim. 81; 9 Jur. 1054.

13. A wealthy lunatic had made two wills before he was found lunatic. The Court, without giving any opinion whether a bill to perpetuate testimony as to their validity would lie, ordered that such costs as the Master should think proper of a bill to be filed with his approbation for that purpose should be paid out of the lunatic's estate. Re Taylour, 6 L. R., Ch., 416.

I. General Principles.

1. Perpetuity discountenanced in Chancery. Anon., Cary 8.

2. An executory devise to arise within the compass of a reasonable time, is good; twenty, nay, thirty years have been thought a reasonable time, so as to be within the compass of a life or lives: for, let the lives be never so many, there must be a survivor, and it is but the length of the surviving life; the Court declined to go one step farther, for such limitations make an estate unalienable, every executory devise being a perpetuity as far as it goes, viz. an estate unalienable, though all mankind join in the conveyance. Scatterwood v. Edge, Salk. 229.—Note: Twisden, J., used to say "all the candles were lighted at once;" at this day it is clearly agreed, though formerly in many cases held otherwise, that a devise to an infant en ventre sa mere, is good though he be born after testator's death, and he shall take by way of executory devise. Taylor v. Bydall, 1 Freem. 243.

3. The trusts of term were limited to J. for life, then to E. for life, then to L. for life, then to the first and other sons of L. to be begotten on the body of M., with remainders, etc., remainders over; all limitations after that, to L. for life; the sons of L., not being born, are void. Apprice v. Flower, Poll. 27.

4. A., seised in fee, has two sons, B. and C., both unmarried, and devises his land to trustees in fee for 500 years in trust to pay 50*l.* per annum to his eldest son B. for life, with power of distress, and on several other trusts (some of which are remote), remainder to the first and every other son of B. in tail; remainder to C., the second son, for life, remainder to his first, etc., son in tail; remainder over. By the better opinion, this is a good executory devise to the first son of B. Gore v. Gore, 2 P. W. 28.

5. Executory devise, which may postpone the vesting beyond lives in being, and twenty-one years, etc., cannot be supported on possibility that the estate may vest sooner. Griffith v. Vere, 9 Ves. 134.

6. The rule, as to executory devise allowing any number of lives in being a reasonable time for gestation, and twenty-one years, is now the clear law. Thellusson v. Woodford, 4 Ves. 319. Affirmed 11 Ves. 112.

The number of contingencies for an executory devise not material, if they are to happen within the limits allowed by law. Ib.

Every executory devise is good that does not tend to a perpetuity; i.e., that does not tend to make an estate unalienable beyond the period allowed by law as to legal estates. Ib.

7. A limitation, by way of executory devise, which is not to take effect until the determination of a life or lives in being, and a term of twenty-one years, as a term in gross, and without reference to the infancy of any person, is a valid limitation; secus if, to the term in gross of twenty-one years, be added the number of months equal to the longest or ordinary period of gestation. This being held to be the established rule, a decree of the Court below, declaring that a limitation by way of executory devise, which was not to vest until after the expiration of a term in gross of twenty years from the decease of the survivor of twenty-eight persons who were living at the testator's decease, and of whom seven only were to take interests under the devise, is a valid limitation, was affirmed accordingly. Cadell v. Palmer, 1 Cl. & J. 372. Affirming S. C. nom. Bengough v. Edridge, 1 Sim. 173; 5 L. J., Ch., 113.

8. One of a testator's sons was illegitimate, but mentioned in the will in every respect as the other sons:—Held, that his life must be considered in estimating a time for accumulation mentioned in the will. Burt v. Sturt, 1 W. R. 145.

9. A gift is too remote unless, according to the intention of the testator, some person must necessarily be in existence, with legal power to dispose of the property within the period limited by the rules of law. Curtis v. Lukin, 5 Beav. 147; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 360; 6 Jur. 721.

A gift must not only vest within the time limited by the rule against perpetuities, but the interests of the respective parties in the property must be capable of ascertainment within that period, otherwise the gift will be void. Ib.

10. Trusts and provisions contained in a will may be void for remoteness, although in the event the Court of Chancery would order trustees to administer the property in a similar manner to that pointed out in the will. Turwin v. Newcome, 3 Kay & K. 16; 3 Jur., N. S., 203. S. C. nom. Turvin v. Newcome, 5 W. R. 35.

11. There may be a particular clause in a will which on one construction appears to offend against the law relating to perpetuities; but if it is fairly capable of another construction which avoids that objection, the latter construction will be preferred, especially if it is found to be in accordance with the general intention of the will. Martelli v. Holloway, 5 L. R., H. L., 532; 42 L. J., Ch., 26.

12. In ascertaining whether a bequest falls within the rule against remoteness, the words of the testator are first to be taken, and their meaning determined; and it is then to be considered whether that meaning brings them within the operation of the rule. Pearks v Moseley, 5 L. R., App. Cas., 714; 50 L. J., Ch., 57; 43 L. T. 449; 29 W. R. 1.

13. The Court will not look out of a will to decide a question of remoteness; and therefore, where there was a general bequest to the children of a married woman for life, with a gift over on the death of all such children, the Court refused to take into consideration the fact of her having passed the age of child-bearing at the date of the will, and by reading the bequest as a gift to her children then living, to render the gift over valid. Re Sayer, 36 L. J., Ch., 350; 15 W. R. 617; 16 L. T., N. S.,

203; 6 L. R., Eq., 319. And see S. C. 18 L. T., N. S., 787. See also Cooper v. Laroche, 43 L. T., N. S., 794; 29 W. R. 438.

1. The meaning of the word "survive" in a limitation of property, is, that the person to survive shall be living at the time of the event which he is to survive; it does not mean living at any time whatever after the event referred to; consequently a gift over, if there should be no child, or remoter issue of A. who should survive the testator and A., and should live to attain twenty-one, is not void for remoteness. Gee v. Liddell, 35 Beav. 631, 658.

II. Foreign Property or Foreign Will.

2. Validity of a bequest in England of personal estate to be laid out in lands in Scotland according to limitations creating a perpetuity. Fordyce v. Bridges, 10 Beav. 90; 17 L. J., N. S., Ch., 81; 10 Jur. 1020.

3. The validity of a testamentary disposition of an English leasehold is governed by the law of England, and not by the law of the testator's domicil. Freke v. Carbery (Lord), 16 L. R., Eq., 461.

Where, therefore, a testator domiciled in Ireland by his will gave an English leasehold to trustees upon trusts for sale and investment, and directed the investments to be held upon such trusts as were thereby declared concerning his general personal estate, and the trusts declared of the general personal estate included trusts for accumulation extending beyond any of the periods allowed by the Thellusson Act (which does not apply to Ireland):—Held, that although the validity of the trusts of the general personal estate was not questioned, still the Thellusson Act applied to the English leasehold and the proceeds of the sale thereof, and that the trust for accumulation of the investments of the proceeds of sale in excess of the periods permitted by that Act was invalid. Ib.

III. Limitations after a Term of Years in Gross or on a Remote Event.

4. A limitation, by way of executory devise, which is not to take effect until after the determination of a life or lives in being, and a term of twenty-one years, as term in gross, and without reference to the infancy of any person, is a valid limitation; secus if, to the term in gross of twenty-one years, be added the number of months equal to the longest or ordinary period of gestation. This being held to be the established rule, a decree of the Court below, declaring that a limitation by way of executory devise, which was not to vest until after the expiration of a term in gross of twenty years from the decease of the survivor of twenty-eight persons who were living at the testator's decease, and of whom seven only were to take interests under the devise, is a valid limitation, was affirmed accordingly. Cadell v. Palmer, 1 Cl. & F. 372. Affirming S. C. nom. Bengough v. Edridge, 1 Sim. 173; 5 L. J., Ch., 113.

5. The testator directed the application of the surplus income of his estate for the maintenance of his children during their minority or apprenticeship, and the application of certain sums for their advancement, and, after his youngest child should have attained twenty-one, he directed his executors to divide any surplus in their hands every three years during his wife's life or widowhood, and, after her death or marriage, every year equally amongst his children or their heirs, instead of any one that might happen to be dead, until the expiration of fifty years from the time of his death; and that at the end of the said fifty years the executors should sell his remaining estate, and pay, discharge, or divide the money for the same amongst his children (naming them), or any of their heirs in their stead; if any of his said issue should die without lawful issue, such share or shares of those so dying to belong to the survivors or their lawful heirs equally:—Held, that the gift did not direct a substitution, once for all, of persons to take each child's share at a given time, not too remote, but contained a running direction to the trustees to pay the income, from time to time, during the whole period of fifty years to the children, or, in case of their deaths, to such of their lineal descendants as might from time to time come in esse; that the limitations of the property at the end of the term of fifty years were void for remoteness. Speakman v. Speakman, 8 Hare 180.

6. Bequest of personalty to A. for life, remainder to B., and in the event of B., or any heir of his, not being living, then between the brothers of testator equally: the remainder over on the death of B. in the lifetime of A., supported as not too remote against the claim of B.'s personal representative. The Court availing itself of slight expressions to effectuate the intention, the word "then" was construed as an adverb of time, not of contingency. Baker v. Lucas, 1 Moll. 481.

7. Gift by the testator to his wife, for her life, or until her second marriage, of the interest of his real and personal estate, which, whether arising from rents or public securities, was to be applied for the benefit of herself and children; and if she married again, he declared that her power and benefit under his will should cease; and when thirty years were expired, he ordered all his property, both freehold and leasehold, to be sold, and two-thirds to be divided among his children living at that period or to their heirs, and one-third to be invested for the benefit of his wife; and after her decease, he bequeathed such third to his children then living and to their heirs:—Held, that the gift at the end of thirty years was not liable to objection on the ground of remoteness; that there was no substitution of the legatee created by the gift to the children, "or to their heirs," but that the word "or" must be read "and;" and that the children of the testator living at the end of thirty years (who were also the same children as were living at the death of the widow) were entitled to the proceeds of the sale of the estate, and also to the intermediate rents after the death of the widow and before the expiration of the thirty years. Lachlan v. Reynolds, 9 Hare 796.

1. A testatrix gave and devised her dwelling-house and premises to trustees, upon trust that they should, immediately after her funeral, cause the doors and windows of every room thereof (except the kitchen, middle attic, and hall) to be well and effectually bricked up from the outside, with the furniture therein, for a period of twenty years; and from and after that term, the testatrix devised the property to a devisee for life, with remainder to another person in fee. Although the will had been disputed in the Probate Court, probate was eventually granted:—Held, that the directions regarding the blockade must be treated as ineffectual, and that there was intestacy, as to the term of twenty years, in the property, which must be distributed as undisposed of real and personal estate. Brown v. Burdett, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 667; 52 L. J., Ch., 52; 47 L. T. 94.

2. A testator bequeathed leaseholds in Church Street, having sixty years unexpired, and as to which there was no obligation on the part of the lessor to renew, to A. for life, with remainder to the children she should leave, and in default to R. He bequeathed to trustees other leaseholds upon trust, to accumulate the rents until the leases of the Church Street property "should become nearly expired," and then to apply such part thereof as should be necessary in the renewal of the Church Street property "for the benefit of the respective persons to whom he had before by his will given the same," and the residue, after answering the purpose aforesaid, he gave to his residuary legatees. The testator died before the Thellusson Act came into operation:—Held, that the trust for accumulation and renewal was void for remoteness and uncertainty. Curtis v. Lukin, 5 Beav. 147; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 380; 6 Jur. 721.

3. A testator bequeathed five leasehold houses, having about fifty-four years to run, to his daughter for life, with remainder to her children; and after the expiration of any of the leases, he directed his trustees to convey to his daughter and her children one or more of the five freehold houses of equal annual value, or as near as could be, to the expired leasehold:—Held, that the decree was neither invalid for remoteness nor uncertainty. Wood v. Drew, 33 Beav. 610.

4. A testator, who died in 1811, was entitled to the reversion of an estate expectant on the death of his son, without issue living at his death. By his will, after reciting that he was entitled to the reversion on the death of his son without issue generally, he devised it to trustees to sell upon the death of his son, without issue generally, and divide the produce:—Held, that the trust was not void for remoteness. Lewis v. Templer, 33 Beav. 625; 12 W. R. 928; 10 L. T., N. S., 638.

IV. Validity of Limitations Dependent on Remote Limitations.

5. Devise to A. for ninety-nine years, if he should so long live; remainder to his first son, then unborn, for ninety-nine years, if he should so long live, and so on in tail male to such first son lawfully issuing for ever; and for want and in default of such issue of such first son, to the second and other sons successively for ninety-nine years only in case he should so long live, and that such eldest son, or the issue of such elder son, should have no greater estate than for ninety-nine years, determinable at his decease; and if there should be no issue male of A., at the time of his (A.'s) death, or in case there should be such issue male, at that time, and they should all die before twenty-one without issue male, then to B. for ninety-nine years, if he should so long live, etc.:—Held, that A. took under the will an estate for ninety-nine years in the freehold estates determinable with his life, and the same estate in the leasehold, if they should so long continue, and that upon his death, his first son would take an estate for ninety-nine years in the freehold, determinable with his life, and the remainder of the term in the leaseholds; but that the limitations to the second and other unborn sons of A. were void, as tending to perpetuity; and the limitations over to B., etc., after these void limitations were not accelerated, but were void also. Beard v. Westcott, T. & R. 25.

6. If the interest of an unborn child of a person in being, does not vest when such unborn child attains twenty-one, the gift is too remote and void, and the limitations over are void also. Palmer v. Holford, 4 Russ. 403. See also Hayes v. Hayes, id. 311; 6 L. J., Ch., 141.

7. A testator gave his real and personal estate to trustees on trust to pay the proceeds to his eldest grandson for life, with remainder to his children who should attain twenty-five, but if he should die without having any children, then to his other grandchildren. The eldest grandson died without issue:—Held, that although the gift to the children of the eldest grandson was void for remoteness, the subsequent limitation to the younger grandchildren was good. Goring v. Howard, 16 Sim. 395; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 105.

8. Bequest to A. for life, and afterwards to her children equally "to be vested" on such as should attain twenty-five, and "to be payable" as soon as might be, after that age should be attained, with powers of maintenance and advancement out of their "vested or expectant portions," with a gift over to B. if no child should attain twenty-five:—Held, first, that the gift to the children was too remote; and, secondly, on A.'s death, without having been married, that the gift to B. could not take effect as an alternative limitation to a person in esse at the date of the will. Re Thatcher, 26 Beav. 365.

9. Where a gift includes in one description persons capable and persons incapable by reason of remoteness, the entire gift is void, and the Court will not so remodel the will as to support such of the bequests as are not too remote, while it rejects the rest. Kerr or Ker v. Dungannon (Lord), Dr. & War. 509; 1 Con. & L. 335; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 382.

10. A power being given to appoint an estate among children. Quære, whether it is well executed by giving to a son for life, with remainder to his sons in tail. Quære, whether, where the first use is illegal, it shall defeat the limitation over, or accelerate their coming into possession. Robinson v. Hardcastle, 2 Bro. C. C. 22.

1. A testator devised lands upon trust to pay the rents and profits to a tenant for life, and after her decease and until her youngest child should attain twenty-five, to pay the rents and profits for the maintenance of her children, and, on the youngest child attaining twenty-five, to sell and divide the proceeds among all the children of the tenant for life then living, and the issue of such as should be dead:—Held, that the trust for maintenance was separable from the rest, and was not bad for remoteness, whether the trust for sale was so or not. Gooding v. Read, 4 De G. M. & G. 510; 21 Beav. 478.

2. A gift to B. for life, remainder to his children to vest in them at twenty-five, with directions for advancement and maintenance, and accumulation in the meantime for the benefit of those children; the gift to the children being void for remoteness, the direction to accumulate, not being a substantive direction, but only a part of the original provision, will not be established up to the age of twenty-one, but is wholly gone. Pickford v. Brown, 2 Kay & J. 426; 2 Jur., N. S., 817; 25 L. J., Ch., 702; 4 W. R. 473.

See also VIII. IV. 5 post.—POWER, XVI.

V. Alternate Contingent Limitations.

3. If a limitation is made dependent on the happening of either of two events, one of which is too remote, but the other is not, it will take effect if the latter event happens. Minter v. Wraith, 13 Sim. 52.

4. Effect was given to a gift over in one of two alternatives which happened, though the other was too remote. Cambridge v. Rous, 25 Beav. 409.

Bequest to trustees for A. for life, and after her death, to divide between her children when they should attain twenty-seven, and in the event of A. not bearing any child at her death, then over. A. had no issue:—Held, that the gift over took effect. Ib.

5. Though a gift over may, as to one alternative, operate as an executory devise, it will not necessarily do so as to another; and if the second is that which in fact occurs, the gift may be treated as a good contingent remainder. Doe d. Evers v. Challis, 7 H. L. Ca. 531; 29 L. J., Ch., 121; 5 Jur., N. S., 825; 7 W. R. 622.

The invalidity of one alternative will not necessarily defeat the other. Ib.

Devise to E. for life, "and from and after her decease to such child or children as she may have, if a son or sons, who shall live to attain the age of twenty-three, and if a daughter or daughters, who shall live to attain the age of twenty-one, as tenants in common," etc., and in case of the death of any son under twenty-three, or daughter under twenty-one, the share to go to the survivors attaining those ages. And in case E. has only one son to attain twenty-three, or a daughter to attain twenty-one, to such son or daughter. "And also, in case E.'s children shall die under" the ages mentioned, "or if she has none," then to J. A. and S. for life, and afterwards to their sons and daughters, on attaining the above ages respectively. There were similar devises to J. A. and S., but in the devises to J. and S. nothing was said as to total absence of issue; in that to A., the words used were "and farther, in case A. shall die without issue." E. first, and A. afterwards, died without ever having had a child:—Held, that on the death of A. the gift over in favour of a daughter of J., who had attained twenty-one, took effect as a contingent remainder, because no prior estate was divested or displaced, and when the particular estate (the life estate of A.) determined the contingency on which the remainder was to take effect, had occurred. Ib.

Held also, that though the gift over on the death of E.'s sons under twenty-three was void for remoteness, the gift over on her death, without having had issue, was not thereby affected. Ib.

A. died without ever having had issue:—Held, that though in the devise to her the not having issue was not expressed, it was necessarily implied in the provision as to her dying without children who should attain twenty-three or twenty-one, and therefore, on her death without ever having had issue, the gift over took effect. Ib.

6. Where there are gifts over which are void for perpetuity, and there is a subsequent and independent clause on a gift over which is within the line of perpetuity, effect cannot be given to such clause, unless it will accord with previous valid limitations. Monypenny v. Dering, 2 De G. M. & G. 145; 17 Jur. 467; 22 L. J., Ch., 313. And see S. C. 15 Jur. 1050; 14 Jur. 1083.

A gift over, made in words, comprising only one event, will not be construed as made on two events, although in point of fact it may consist very reasonably of two branches, unless it is so expressed by the testator. Ib.

7. Bequest of personal property for A. for life, and after her decease to children when at the age of twenty-seven respectively; and in the event of her not leaving any child or children, or of the death of all under twenty-seven over; the limitation over too remote. Cambridge v. Rous, 8 Ves. 24.

8. A testatrix, by her will, devised her estates to a son, charged with 1,000*l.* payable to trustees, upon trust to pay the interest to her daughter for life, and, after her decease, upon trust to dispose thereof unto or amongst the child and children of her daughter, to be a vested interest or vested interests on their respectively attaining the age of thirty years; and the testatrix declared, that, if any child or children of her daughter should die under the age of thirty years without lawful issue, the share or shares of him, her, or them so dying, as well original as accruing by survivorship, should go to the survivors or survivor, in equal shares, if more than one, and become vested at such ages or times as his, her, or their original share or shares. The daughter had two children,—one, who died in her lifetime, aged twenty-seven years; and another, who survived her, and attained the age of thirty years:—

Held, that the word "vested" was used in the sense of "not subject to be divested," or "indefeasible;" and that the bequest of the 1,000*l.* after the decease of the daughter, to her child and children, was a valid bequest creating a vested interest in the children who survived her, and the representatives of the child who died in her lifetime; and that the gift over only was void for remoteness. Taylor v. Frobisher, 5 De G. & Sm. 191; 16 Jur. 283; 21 L. J., Ch., 605.

1. A testator devised his freehold estates in Worcestershire to his third son and his issue male, with remainder to his fourth son and his issue male, in strict settlement; and he devised his freehold estates in Cardiganshire to his fourth son and his issue male, with remainder to his fifth son and his issue male, in strict settlement. By a shifting clause it was provided that if his fourth son, or any issue male of his fourth son, should become actually entitled to the possession of his Worcestershire estates, and if his fifth son or any of his issue male should be then living, the limitations of his Cardiganshire estates in favour of his fourth son, or his issue male, should absolutely cease. He bequeathed his leasehold estates in Cardiganshire to trustees upon such trust as, regard being had to the difference in the tenure of the premises respectively, would best or most nearly correspond with the uses declared of the Cardiganshire freeholds. The third son died a bachelor in the lifetime of the fourth son, who thereupon entered into possession of the Worcestershire estates:—Held, that the shifting clause was divisible, and in the events which happened was not bad for remoteness. Miles v. Harford, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 691; 41 L. T. 378.

See also preceding subdivision.

VI. Application of Rule in Carrying out Executory Trusts.

2. A. devises land to the Drapers' Company in trust, to convey to B. for life, remainder to his first, etc., sons for their lives successively, and so to their male issues for their lives, remainder over. Though this be a vain attempt of a perpetuity, yet the trustees shall make as strict a settlement as may be; making all the persons in being but tenants for life; but the limitation to the son unborn must be in tail. Humberston v. Humberston, 2 Vern. 735; Pre. Ch. 455; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 128; 1 P. W. 332.

3. Trust of a term during the respective minorities of the respective tenants for life or in tail in possession, etc., to receive and lay out the rents, etc., in stock, to accumulate for such persons as should, upon the expiration of such minorities, or death of the minors, be tenants in possession, or entitled to the rents, and of the age of twenty-one, is too remote, and being void in its creation, is incapable of modification, so as to establish it in the extent to which it might have been originally carried. Southampton (Lord) v. Hertford (Marquis), 2 Ves. & B. 54.

4. Covenant in marriage settlement to settle leasehold estates in trust for such persons, and such or the like estates, ends, intents, and purposes, as far as the law would allow, as declared concerning real estates, limited to the first and other sons in tail male, with several remainders; the Court, in executing the covenant, declared that no person should be entitled to the absolute property unless he should attain twenty-one; or die under that age leaving issue male. Newcastle (Duke) v. Lincoln (Countess), 3 Ves. 387. But see the variations in this decree, id. 398. n., and 12 Ves. 218, on appeal.

5. Devise in trust for a son of the testator's nephew A., at the age of twenty-four; if he have no son, to a son of the testator's great-nephew B.; but if neither have a son, then to a son of the testator's great-niece's daughter, taking his name; whoever should take, not to be put in possession of any of the testator's effects until twenty-four, nor the executors to give up their trust till a proper entail be made to the heir male by him. This is an executory trust in tail for an only son of A., in ventre at the testator's death, and not void for uncertainty, nor too remote. Blackburn v. Stables, 2 Ves. & B. 367.

6. Lord Le Despencer, being seized in fee of an ancient barony, conveyed real estates to trustees to the use of himself for life, remainer to the use of his eldest son for life, and then on trust to be settled, so far as the law would permit, so as to go along with the title, and so that during every suspension or abeyance of the same, within the limits prescribed by law for strict settlement, the rents should be equally divided among the co-heirs per stirpes of the person or persons by whose death or deaths without issue male the abeyance was occasioned, as by three counsel, of which the solicitor or attorney-general should be one, should be advised and directed. It was contended that the general intention of the settlor being to create a perpetuity, the defect was not cured by the saving clause above stated; but the Court having suggested one way in which the intention of the settlor might be carried out within the legal limits, referred it to the Master to approve of a settlement. Bankes v. Le Despencer, 10 Sim. 576; 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 185; 4 Jur. 601.

7. A settlement made by the third Earl of Harrington declared the manner in which a mansion-house and certain estates in the county of Derby should descend. A will of the settlor, made many years afterwards, gave personal chattels "in trust for the person or persons who for the time being shall, under the settlement of my mansion-house and estates, be in the actual possession of the mansion-house and estates, to the end and intent that all and singular such [personal chattels] may be deemed and considered as heir-looms, to go along and for ever be used and enjoyed with the same mansion-house and estate (so far as the rules of law or equity will permit), but so nevertheless as that the same chattels personal shall not, as to the effect or purpose of transmission, vest absolutely in any person or persons who by virtue of any settlement shall or may become seised of or entitled to the mansion-house and estates for an estate of inheritance, either in possession or reversion, or otherwise, unless such person shall attain the age of twenty-one, or dying under that age, shall leave issue inheritable under the limitations in any settlement thereof":—Held, that this was not an executory devise. Harrington (Countess) v. Harrington (Earl), 5 L. R., H. L. 87; 40 L. J., Ch., 716.

Held, also, that the proviso that no tenant in tail should take absolutely unless he attained twenty-one, was a condition inseparably annexed to the gift, so that any tenant in tail must take subject to it, and if the proviso was void the whole gift was void. Ib.

1. Testator gave his freehold and copyhold estates and his personal estate to certain persons (whom he appointed his executors), in trust out of his personal estate, and by sale or mortgage of his freehold or copyhold estates, to raise money sufficient to pay his debts, funeral expenses, and legacies, and out of the rents and interests of so much of his real and personal estate as should not be sold or disposed of for those purposes, to pay certain annuities and such sums as his trustee should think sufficient for the maintenance of his son John and his children (if he should have any), and to accumulate the residue of the rents and interests during the life of John, and after John's decease to stand seised of his real estates in trust for John's first son, and the heirs of the body of such first son successively as they should be in priority of birth, and for the several and respective heirs of the body and bodies of every such son, and, for default of such issue, for A. for life, with remainder to his sons in tail, with remainder to B. and his sons, and to C. and D. and their sons, in like manner, with remainder to his own right heirs for ever; and he declared that his trustees and executors should stand possessed of his personal estate after John's death, in trust for such person and persons, in the same order and succession and for such and the same estates and interest, as were thereby declared concerning his real estates, so far as the nature of the property, the rules of law and equity, the deaths of parties, and other contingencies would admit of. The testator died in 1780; his son John was his heir-at-law and customary heir. John, and A., B., C., D., died without issue:—Held, that the trusts subsequent to the trust for the first son of John were not void for remoteness, and that the ultimate trust of the personal estate, as well as of the freehold and copyhold estates, vested on the testator's death in his son John as his heir-at-law at his death. Boydell v. Golightly, 14 Sim. 227; 9 Jur. 2.

2. Construction of a trust for division amongst the children of the brothers so long as the law would allow—gift of real and personal estate to testator's seven brothers for life, and after death of survivors in trust to apply yearly income to such of their children as should appear to them to stand in need of the same, and after the law admitted of no further division, then to convey to the eldest son of his brother B. then living:—Held, that the trust for division ceased twenty-one years after the decease of the surviving brother. Pownall v. Graham, 33 Beav. 242.

3. A testatrix directed her trustees to settle her property, but in such a way that some of the limitations would be void for remoteness:—Held, that in carrying the directions into effect, the Court would modify the limitations, so as to make them consistent with the rules of law and equity. Lyddon v. Ellison, 19 Beav. 565; 18 Jur. 1066.

4. A testator devised his freehold estates in Worcestershire to his third son and his issue male, with remainder to his fourth son and his issue male, in strict settlement; and he devised his freehold estates in Cardiganshire to his fourth son and his issue male, with remainder to his fifth son and his issue male, in strict settlement. By a shifting clause it was provided that if his fourth son, or any issue male of his fourth son, should become actually entitled to the possession of his Worcestershire estates, and if his fifth son or any of his issue male should be then living, the limitations of his Cardiganshire estates in favour of his fourth son, or his issue male, should absolutely cease. He bequeathed his leasehold estates in Cardiganshire to trustees upon such trusts as, regard being had to the difference in the tenure of the premises respectively, would best or most nearly correspond with the uses declared of the Cardiganshire freeholds. The third son died a bachelor in the lifetime of the fourth son, who thereupon entered into possession of the Worcestershire estates:—Held, that the fifth son was entitled to the rents and profits of the Cardiganshire leaseholds, because they were given upon an executory trust; and, assuming the shifting clause, if applied verbatim to the leaseholds, to be bad for remoteness, it ought to be so modified as to render it free from that objection. Miles v. Harford, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 691; 41 L. T. 378.

Held, also, that the shifting clause was divisible, and in the events which happened was not bad for remoteness. Ib.

VII. Cy Près Doctrine.

5. A. devises lands to the Drapers' Company, in trust to convey to B. for life, remainder to his first, etc., sons for their lives successively, and so to their issues male for their lives, remainder over. Though this be a vain attempt of a perpetuity, yet the trustees shall make a strict settlement as may be, making all the persons in being but tenants for life; but the limitation to the son unborn must be in tail. Humberston v. Humberston, 2 Vern. 738; Pre. Ch. 455; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 128; 1 P. W. 332.

6. Though the law will not admit a perpetuity, yet the intent of the party, so far as is consistent with its rules, ought to be observed. Smith v. Packhurst, 3 Atk. 136; 2 Stra. 1105.

7. Devise to A., B., and C., etc., share and share alike, for their lives, and so to be continued from issue to issue for life; but if any of them die, leaving no issue, their shares to go to the survivors for their lives, and the issue of such of them as then shall be dead, and for default of any issue then over:—Held, that A., B., C., etc., take estate tail with cross-remainders. Mortimer v. West, 2 Sim. 274.

The case of Humberston v. Humberston (1 P. W. 332) is not applicable, as in this case the trust is not executory, but the devisees take by direct devise to themselves. Id. 282.

1. Devise to A., the daughter of the testator, for life, and after her decease to all and every the child or children of A., male or female, begotten or to be begotten, and their assigns, for their respective lives, and, after the decease, and respective deceases, of such child or children of A., to all and every the child or children of all and every such child or children of A., male or female, to be begotten, and the heirs of his, her, and their respective body and bodies, as tenants in common; and in case of the death of any of the said children of such child or children of A., and failure of issue of his, her, or their body or bodies respectively, then as well the original as the accrued share of such of them so dying without issue to go to the survivors or survivor, others or other of them, as tenants in common, if more than one; and for default of such issue over. A. had three children born in the lifetime of the testator and living at his decease, and another was born after the testator's death; one of the three born in his lifetime died during the life of A., without issue:—Held, that the children of A. took as tenants in common, and not as joint-tenants; that, inasmuch as the children of the afterborn child of A. could not take as purchasers, the devise would be supported according to the rule of cy près or approximation, by giving an estate tail to the afterborn child of A.; that the rule of cy près, being an arbitrary principle of construction, introduced to effect the intention of a testator in the exigency of a particular case, was not to be applied, except when the necessity of the case required it, and that therefore, although the devise was to the children of A., as a class, the children of A., born in the testator's lifetime, would take estates for life, and the estates devised to the children of the afterborn child would alone be altered; that cross-remainders were to be implied between the children of A., and, therefore, that the three children of A. who survived or left issue took according to their respective estates the share of the child of A. who died without issue, and that the inequality among the devisees, some of them being tenants in tail, and other tenants for life with remainder to their issue in tail, was no objection to the implication of cross-remainders among them. Vanderplank v. King, 3 Hare 1; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 497; 7 Jur. 548.

2. Under a power to devise among children, the testatrix gives to A., one of the children, for life; remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders; remainder to first and other sons, etc.; remainder to B., another son in the same way: quære, whether, the excess being void, the power is null, and the heir-at-law shall take, or the sons should take successive life estates as good under the power, or whether, to maintain the general intent, the sons shall take estates tail. Griffith v. Harrison, 3 Bro. C. C. 410.

3. Under a power to appoint to children an appointment to a child for life with remainder to her children is not a valid appointment, but the excess is void. But the whole shall not be considered as unappointed, but be appointed cy près. Pitt v. Jackson, 2 Bro. C. C. 51. See also Re Dennehey, 17 Ir. Ch. R. 97.

4. The doctrine of cy près is applicable to the construction of a will made in exercise of a power. Stackpoole v. Stackpoole, 2 Con. & L. 506; 4 Dr. & War. 320; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 18.

5. By articles, the wife's fortune, and an equal sum advanced by the husband, were agreed to be settled for the husband for their joint lives, and if he should die first leaving issue by her, for her life; after her decease as to the capital in such manner as he should appoint; in default of appointment to be divided equally among the issue at twenty-one, with maintenance and survivorship after marriage. In pursuance of the articles, an estate purchased with the fund was settled upon the husband for the joint lives of him and his wife; remainders to trustees to preserve, etc.; remainder in case of his death first, without issue, to certain uses; remainder, in case of his death first, leaving any child or children, to the wife for life; remainder to the child or children in such shares as the husband should appoint; for want of appointment, equally in tail, with cross-remainders; remainder to the heirs of the husband. Children only are the objects; and an appointment to a child for life, remainder to his children as he shall appoint, is an excess of power; and the doctrine of cy près, by giving the child an estate tail, is not applicable; but the appointment is void for the excess only; and what is ill appointed, goes as in default of appointment. Bristow v. Warde, 2 Ves. J. 336.

6. J. M., by his will, devised the Maytham Hall estate, being of gavelkind tenure, to trustees, upon trust to sell a competent part for the payment of debts, and subject thereto upon trust for P. M. for life, and after his decease for the first son P. M. for life, and after his decease for the first son of such first son, and the heirs male of his body, and in default of such issue for every other son of P. M. successively for the like interests and limitations, and in default of issue of the body of P. M., or in case of his not leaving any at his decease, for T. G. M., the eldest son of T. M., for life, and after his decease for the first son of T. G. M., and the heirs male of his body; and in default of issue of the body of the said T. G. M. for every other son of T. M. successively, for the like estates and interests, and on failure of all such issue of the body of T. M. upon trust for him and his heirs and assigns for ever. P. M. never had any children:—Held, that P. M. took an estate for life, with remainder to his first unborn son if such son had been born, and that all the remainders over were void; held, also, that effect was to be given to the gift over to T. M. and his sons, in default of issue of the body of D. M., etc., as an independent claim, and that it was subsequently valid. Moneypenny v. Dering, 2 De G. M. & G. 145; 17 Jur. 457; 22 L. J., Ch., 313. And see S. C. 15 Jur. 1050; 14 Jur. 1083; 7 Hare 568.

Although by the doctrine of cy près, or by implication, as applied to the construction of a will, an estate may be carried otherwise than or otherwise, unless such person shall attain the age of twenty-one, or dying under that age, shall leave issue inheritable under the limitations in any settlement thereof":—Held, that this was not an executory devise. Harrington (Countess) v. Harrington (Earl), 5 L. R., H. L. 87; 40 L. J., Ch., 716.

Held, also, that the proviso that no tenant in tail should take absolutely unless he attained twenty-one, was a condition inseparably annexed to the gift, so that any tenant in tail must take subject to it, and if the proviso was void the whole gift was void. Ib.

1. Testator gave his freehold and copyhold estates and his personal estate to certain persons (whom he appointed his executors), in trust out of his personal estate, and by sale or mortgage of his freehold or copyhold estates, to raise money sufficient to pay his debts, funeral expenses, and legacies, and out of the rents and interests of so much of his real and personal estate as should not be sold or disposed of for those purposes, to pay certain annuities and such sums as his trustee should think sufficient for the maintenance of his son John and his children (if he should have any), and to accumulate the residue of the rents and interests during the life of John, and after John's decease to stand seised of his real estates in trust for John's first son, and the heirs of the body of such first son successively as they should be in priority of birth, and for the several and respective heirs of the body and bodies of every such son, and, for default of such issue, for A. for life, with remainder to his sons in tail, with remainder to B. and his sons, and to C. and D. and their sons, in like manner, with remainder to his own right heirs for ever; and he declared that his trustees and executors should stand possessed of his personal estate after John's death, in trust for such person and persons, in the same order and succession and for such and the same estates and interest, as were thereby declared concerning his real estates, so far as the nature of the property, the rules of law and equity, the deaths of parties, and other contingencies would admit of. The testator died in 1780; his son John was his heir-at-law and customary heir. John, and A., B., C., D., died without issue:—Held, that the trusts subsequent to the trust for the first son of John were not void for remoteness, and that the ultimate trust of the personal estate, as well as of the freehold and copyhold estates, vested on the testator's death in his son John as his heir-at-law at his death. Boydell v. Golightly, 14 Sim. 227; 9 Jur. 2.

2. Construction of a trust for division amongst the children of the brothers so long as the law would allow—gift of real and personal estate to testator's seven brothers for life, and after death of survivors in trust to apply yearly income to such of their children as should appear to them to stand in need of the same, and after the law admitted of no further division, then to convey to the eldest son of his brother B. then living:—Held, that the trust for division ceased twenty-one years after the decease of the surviving brother. Pownall v. Graham, 33 Beav. 242.

3. A testatrix directed her trustees to settle her property, but in such a way that some of the limitations would be void for remoteness:—Held, that in carrying the directions into effect, the Court would modify the limitations, so as to make them consistent with the rules of law and equity. Lyddon v. Ellison, 19 Beav. 565; 18 Jur. 1066.

4. A testator devised his freehold estates in Worcestershire to his third son and his issue male, with remainder to his fourth son and his issue male, in strict settlement; and he devised his freehold estates in Cardiganshire to his fourth son and his issue male, with remainder to his fifth son and his issue male, in strict settlement. By a shifting clause it was provided that if his fourth son, or any issue male of his fourth son, should become actually entitled to the possession of his Worcestershire estates, and if his fifth son or any of his issue male should be then living, the limitations of his Cardiganshire estates in favour of his fourth son, or his issue male, should absolutely cease. He bequeathed his leasehold estates in Cardiganshire to trustees upon such trusts as, regard being had to the difference in the tenure of the premises respectively, would best or most nearly correspond with the uses declared of the Cardiganshire freeholds. The third son died a bachelor in the lifetime of the fourth son, who thereupon entered into possession of the Worcestershire estates:—Held, that the fifth son was entitled to the rents and profits of the Cardiganshire leaseholds, because they were given upon an executory trust; and, assuming the shifting clause, if applied verbatim to the leaseholds, to be bad for remoteness, it ought to be so modified as to render it free from that objection. Miles v. Harford, 12 L. R., Ch. D., 691; 41 L. T. 378.

Held, also, that the shifting clause was divisible, and in the events which happened was not bad for remoteness. Ib.

The case of Humberston v. Humberston (1 P. W. 332) is not applicable, as in this case the trust is not executory, but the devisees take by direct devise to themselves. Id. 282.

1. Devise to A., the daughter of the testator, for life, and after her decease to all and every the child or children of A., male or female, begotten or to be begotten, and their assigns, for their respective lives, and, after the decease, and respective deceases, of such child or children of A., to all and every the child or children of all and every such child or children of A., male or female, to be begotten, and the heirs of his, her, and their respective body and bodies, as tenants in common; and in case of the death of any of the said children of such child or children of A., and failure of issue of his, her, or their body or bodies respectively, then as well the original as the accrued share of such of them so dying without issue to go to the survivors or survivor, others or other of them, as tenants in common, if more than one; and for default of such issue over. A. had three children born in the lifetime of the testator and living at his decease, and another was born after the testator's death; one of the three born in his lifetime died during the life of A., without issue:—Held, that the children of A. took as tenants in common, and not as joint-tenants; that, inasmuch as the children of the afterborn child of A. could not take as purchasers, the devise would be supported according to the rule of cy près or approximation, by giving an estate tail to the afterborn child of A.; that the rule of cy près, being an arbitrary principle of construction, introduced to effect the intention of a testator in the exigency of a particular case, was not to be applied, except when the necessity of the case required it, and that therefore, although the devise was to the children of A., as a class, the children of A., born in the testator's lifetime, would take estates for life, and the estates devised to the children of the afterborn child would alone be altered; that cross-remainders were to be implied between the children of A., and, therefore, that the three children of A. who survived or left issue took according to their respective estates the share of the child of A. who died without issue, and that the inequality among the devisees, some of them being tenants in tail, and other tenants for life with remainder to their issue in tail, was no objection to the implication of cross-remainders among them. Vanderplank v. King, 3 Hare 1; 12 L. J., N. S., Ch., 497; 7 Jur. 548.

2. Under a power to devise among children, the testatrix gives to A., one of the children, for life; remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders; remainder to first and other sons, etc.; remainder to B., another son in the same way: quære, whether, the excess being void, the power is null, and the heir-at-law shall take, or the sons should take successive life estates as good under the power, or whether, to maintain the general intent, the sons shall take estates tail. Griffith v. Harrison, 3 Bro. C. C. 410.

3. Under a power to appoint to children an appointment to a child for life with remainder to her children is not a valid appointment, but the excess is void. But the whole shall not be considered as unappointed, but be appointed cy près. Pitt v. Jackson, 2 Bro. C. C. 51. See also Re Dennehey, 17 Ir. Ch. R. 97.

4. The doctrine of cy près is applicable to the construction of a will made in exercise of a power. Stackpoole v. Stackpoole, 2 Con. & L. 506; 4 Dr. & War. 320; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 18.

5. By articles, the wife's fortune, and an equal sum advanced by the husband, were agreed to be settled for the husband for their joint lives, and if he should die first leaving issue by her, for her life; after her decease as to the capital in such manner as he should appoint; in default of appointment to be divided equally among the issue at twenty-one, with maintenance and survivorship after marriage. In pursuance of the articles, an estate purchased with the fund was settled upon the husband for the joint lives of him and his wife; remainders to trustees to preserve, etc.; remainder in case of his death first, without issue, to certain uses; remainder, in case of his death first, leaving any child or children, to the wife for life; remainder to the child or children in such shares as the husband should appoint; for want of appointment, equally in tail, with cross-remainders; remainder to the heirs of the husband. Children only are the objects; and an appointment to a child for life, remainder to his children as he shall appoint, is an excess of power; and the doctrine of cy près, by giving the child an estate tail, is not applicable; but the appointment is void for the excess only; and what is ill appointed, goes as in default of appointment. Brixton v. Warde, 2 Ves. J. 336.

6. J. M., by his will, devised the Maytham Hall estate, being of gavelkind tenure, to trustees, upon trust to sell a competent part for the payment of debts, and subject thereto upon trust for P. M. for life, and after his decease for the first son P. M. for life, and after his decease for the first son of such first son, and the heirs male of his body, and in default of such issue for every other son of P. M. successively for the like interests and limitations, and in default of issue of the body of P. M., or in case of his not leaving any at his decease, for T. G. M., the eldest son of T. M., for life, and after his decease for the first son of T. G. M., and the heirs male of his body; and in default of issue of the body of the said T. G. M. for every other son of T. M. successively, for the like estates and interests, and on failure of all such issue of the body of T. M. upon trust for him and his heirs and assigns for ever. P. M. never had any children:—Held, that P. M. took an estate for life, with remainder to his first unborn son if such son had been born, and that all the remainders over were void; held, also, that effect was to be given to the gift over to T. M. and his sons, in default of issue of the body of D. M., etc., as an independent claim, and that it was subsequently valid. Moneypenny v. Dering, 2 De G. M. & G. 145; 17 Jur. 457; 22 L. J., Ch., 313. And see S. C. 15 Jur. 1050; 14 Jur. 1083; 7 Hare 568.

Although by the doctrine of cy près, or by implication, as applied to the construction of a will, an estate may be carried otherwise than in the exact form and manner indicated by the testator, yet it must always be in favour of a class or part of a class of persons intended to be provided for by the testator. Ib.

Where an estate is so limited to A. as should generally raise by implication an estate tail, but there are added limitations to the children of A. which are void for remoteness, it is not a general rule to reject these limitations as unimportant, and to give to A. an estate tail, although cases may arise in which this would be done in favour of the clear intention of the testator. Ib.

The cases of Pitt v. Jackson (2 Bro. C. C. 51), and Nicholl v. Nicholl (2 W. Bl. 1159), observed on. Ib.

1. A settlement was made, in pursuance of articles previous to the marriage, to convey to the use of the husband for life, remainder to the wife for life, remainder upon trust to convey unto and amongst all or any of the children, in such parts and proportions, etc., as the husband and wife, or the survivor, should, by deed or writing, with or without power of revocation, or by will, appoint, and in default of appointment, to the first and other sons in tail male; remainder, subject to trusts that failed, to the heirs of the husband. A joint appointment by deed, subject to a proviso for revocation and reappointment by the husband and wife, and the survivor, was held well revoked by the wife surviving; and by the same deed a reappointment to the daughter and two sons successively for life, with remainders in tail to the grandchildren, and the ultimate remainder to the daughter in fee, was held void for the excess beyond the power, viz., the estates to the grandchildren, and the ultimate limitation upon them to the daughter, and the principle of cy près is not applicable: all beyond the life estate of the children, therefore, shall go as in default of appointment. Brudenell v. Elwes, 7 Ves. 382.

2. The doctrine of cy près does not apply to personal estate; therefore, where, under a power to appoint personal estate to children or issue, an appointment is made to a son for life, then among all his children; if none, to him, his executors, etc., the limitation to his children being void because not retained within the legal bounds, cannot be made good cy près. Routledge v. Dorril, 2 Ves. J. 357.

3. The doctrine of cy près is not to be extended. Hale v. Pew, 25 Beav. 335.

The cy près doctrine is inapplicable when the limitation to unborn children gives them a fee. Ib.

4. Intention to give life estates to persons not born in the lifetime of the testator aided, so far as the law will allow, by the cy près doctrine. East v. Twyford, 9 Hare 729.

5. The cy près doctrine of construction considered and explained in Hampton v. Holman, 5 L. R., Ch. D., 183; 46 L. J., Ch., 248; 25 W. R. 459; 36 L. T., N. S., 287.

A father gave freehold, copyhold, and leasehold estates for his daughter for life, and should she live to become marriageable, leaving a child or children, for the support and maintenance of such child, if there was only one, and if more than one in fair and equal proportions, "for and during the term of their natural lives, and in like manner to their children and children's children, each family having among them the father's or mother's share," with a gift over on the death under twenty-one or before marriage of his daughter: —Held, that the daughter took an estate for life only, and not an estate tail. The limitations after the daughter's life estate were not at all void, but her children (if she left any) would take life estates. Ib.

6. Devise in trust for A. for life, with remainder in trust for B., C., and D. and the survivor for their lives, and for the issue of them respectively for their lives, for ever, as tenants in common with a gift over on their death without issue, or in case of the death of all their issue; and a direction that the before stated entails to B., C., and D., and their respective issues were to be equally divided amongst the daughters as well as the sons of them and their issue:—Held, that B., C., and D. took equitable estates in remainder for their lives and the life of the survivor with cross-remainders between them, and that on the death of the survivor, all the children of B., C., and D. took equitable estates as tenants in common in tail with cross-remainders between them in tail. The doctrine of cy près established by Humberston v. Humberston (1 P. W. 332) is applicable to such a devise, and not merely to a will of an executory character. Parfitt v. Hember, 4 L. R., Eq., 443.

7. Under a power to appoint to children, an appointment to a child for life, remainder to his children, who are incapable of taking, may give the child an estate tail. Line v. Hall, 22 W. R. 124; 29 L. T., N. S., 568.

A father having power to appoint an estate to any one or more of his children by will, gave it with other property, of which he was owner in fee, to trustees for a term of 1,000 years, to raise portions for grandchildren (not objects of the power), with the usual proviso for cesser in case the term should be incapable of taking effect, with remainder after the expiration of the term, and in the meantime subject thereto, to one of his sons (an object of the power) for life remainder to his issue in tail. The objects of the term were not satisfied: — Held, that the will operated as an execution of the power, and that the son took under the cy près doctrine an estate tail. S. C. 43 L. J., Ch., 107.

6. An executory devise to a person unborn, when he shall attain the age of twenty-one years, is good: and there is no danger of a perpetuity. Stephens v. Stephens, Forrest. 228.

7. If the interest of an unborn child of a person in being, does not vest when such unborn child attains twenty-one, the gift is too remote and void, and the limitations over are void also. Palmer v. Holford, 4 Russ. 403. See also Hayes v. Hayes, id. 311; 6 L. J., Ch., 141.

8. A., possessed of a term, devised it to his wife for life, remainder to his first son for life, and if he die without issue, to his second son, etc. The remainder to the second son was held void. Love v. Windham, 1 Lev. 290; 2 Ch. Rep. 14.

9. A., having issue several sons, the eldest non compos, created a term for years, and by another deed declared the trusts thereof to his second son, and the heirs male of his body, remainders to his other sons, provided that if his eldest son died without issue, or not leaving his wife enceinte with child, living the second son, then the said term to remain to the third son, and the heirs male of his body, with like limitations to the other sons: the eldest son died without issue, living the second; this limitation to the third son was held good by Lord Nottingham, contra the opinion of the three chief justices who assisted him. Norfolk's (Duke) case, 3 Ch. Ca. 1. This decree was reversed by North, C. S. Vide 1 Vern. 163; but upon appeal to the lords, Lord North's decree was reversed, and Lord Nottingham's established. Note, executory devises and limitations of the trust of a term are governed alike.

10. A testatrix gave and devised her dwelling-house and premises to trustees, upon trust that they should, immediately after her funeral, cause the doors and windows of every room thereof (except the kitchen, middle attic, and hall) to be well and effectually bricked up from the outside, with the furniture therein, for a period of twenty years; and from and after that term, the testatrix devised the property to a devisee for life, with remainder to another person in fee. Although the will had been disputed in the Probate Court, probate was eventually granted:—Held, that the directions regarding the blockade must be treated as ineffectual, and that there was intestacy, as to the term of twenty years, in the property, which must be distributed as undisposed of real and personal estate. Brown v. Burdett, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 667; 52 L. J., Ch., 52; 47 L. T. 94.

11. A testator, in 1641, devised real estates at Abbotts Langley to or for the benefit of Sydney College, Cambridge, and Trinity College, Oxford, "for the only use, education in piety and learning of four of the descendants of my brothers and sisters, and three of the descendants of the brother and sister of my first wife, and three of the descendants of the brothers and sisters of my second wife; and in default of such to their next poor kindred, for the first by the father's side, for the second by the mother's side, and the lease of the said Langley to be at one-third part under true value, to my wives' kindred ever, viz., brothers and sisters there and at Harrow." G. was a descendant of a brother or sister of a wife of the testator, and a lessee of part of the property demised to Trinity College, Oxford. He claimed to be entitled, by virtue of the direction as to leasing contained in the will, to a perpetual right of renewal of his lease for ever, on the same terms as were therein contained:—Held, that the direction as to the leasing was void in law as tending to create a perpetuity; and that the colleges took the property devised to them for charitable purposes discharged therefrom. Att.-Gen. v. Greenhill, 12 W. R. 188; 9 L. T., N. S., 500; 3 N. R. 236.

The lessee was the sole defendant on the record; Sydney College, Cambridge, not being a party to the suit:—Held, that G. sufficiently represented the descendants of the brothers and sisters of the testator and his wives. Ib.

Held, also, that as the Court decided in favour of the colleges, the absence of one of them from the record was immaterial. Ib.

12. S. B. gave all his property, real and personal, to trustees to sell, and directed the proceeds and all his moneys to be invested for the benefit of his three daughters for their respective lives for their separate use, the interest to be paid to each, and on the decease of each one of them the principal from which the parent's share was derived to go to the children at twenty-one, with remainder to their children at twenty-one:—Held, that the three daughters did not take absolute interests, and that the gift over was void for remoteness. Whitehead v. Bennett, 1 W. R. 406; 1 Eq. Rep. 561; 22 L. J., Ch., 1020.

13. W. S., by his will, directed the interest of the residue of his estate to be paid to his children during their respective lives; and, after their decease, to be divided equally between all his surviving grandchildren who should be then living, share and share alike, until the youngest should attain twenty-one years, when he directed the whole to be turned into money, and to be divided equally between all such of his said grandchildren, and the children and child of any such grandchild as might then be dead, leaving lawful issue, such children or child to take only his or their parent's share; and if there should be only one such grandchild who might live to attain the age of twenty-one, then upon trust for such grandchild, his or her heirs, executors, etc.:—Held, that the bequest was confined to the children of the grandchildren who should be living at the death of all the testator's children; and that the children of a grandchild who died in the lifetime of some of the testator's children, did not take any interest under his will. Quære, if the bequest was not void for remoteness. Smith v. Farr, 3 Y. & Coll. 328; 8 L. J., N. S., Exch., Eq., 46.

1. Real and personal property was devised and bequeathed to trustees on trust to pay a moiety of the income to J. for her life, and the other moiety of the income to E. for her life; and on the death of "either" the property was to be held in trust for all the children of "each" who should be living at her decease when and as they should respectively attain the age of twenty-three years or, being daughters, should marry under that age, in equal shares:—Held, that on the death of J., who died first, her children took the moiety held in trust for her of the property in exclusion of the children of E. England v. England, 17 W. R. 719; 20 L. T., N. S., 648.

Held, also, that the gifts to the children of J. and E. were not void on the ground of remoteness. Ib.

2. Under a gift by a testator to his daughter for her life, with remainder to her children, with remainder, in the event of any such children dying under twenty-one, to their children who should survive his daughter and attain twenty-one; and after several intermediate limitations, with a limitation over, provided there should be no child of his daughter, or, being such, they should not attain twenty-one, or leave issue who should attain twenty-one:—Held, that the limitation over was intended to take effect only on failure of grandchildren who should survive the testator's daughter, and not attain twenty-one, and was, therefore, not too remote. Trickey v. Trickey, 3 Myl. & K. 560.

3. A testator directed that the annual interest only of the residue of his property, of whatever kind, should be divided into as many equal parts as there might be children of A., share and share alike, as each of the children should come of age, and that in case any one of the children should die without any children, then and in that case his or her share of the annual interest should devolve to the surviving children, share and share alike, and so on successively, until the whole amount of the interest of the residue should come into the hands of the grandchildren and great grandchildren of A.:—Held, that the children took immediate interests for life, and that there was no intestacy by reason either of incomplete disposition or of uncertainty or remoteness. Wetherell v. Wetherell, 1 De G. J. & S. 134; 9 Jur., N. S., 368; 32 L. J., Ch., 476; 11 W. R. 274; 8 L. T., N. S., 39.

Restraint on Alienation.] 4. A clause restraining anticipation in a gift to a class which may contain unborn persons is invalid. Re Michael, 46 L. J., Ch., 651.

5. Testator gave a sum of money for the separate use of his daughter, a feme sole, and declared that she should not be at liberty to sell or dispose of it, and if she attempted so to do, that such sale should be void. The daughter afterwards married:—Held, that the restraint on alienation was void, there being no gift over. Newton v. Reid, 4 Sim. 141.

6. Under several bequests to living persons for life, with remainder to their children born and unborn, with a general proviso that the shares of females shall be for their separate inalienable use:—Held, that the restriction against anticipation applied only to the tenants for life, in consequence of a direction for payment to the children and a proviso that their receipts should be good discharges. Armitage v. Coates, 35 Beav. 1.

7. Bequest of a fund in trust for A. for life, and after her death in trust for her children living at her death, and the issue then living of any child then dead, in equal shares, the issue to take their parent's share; any legatees, being females, to take their sole and separate use without power of anticipation. A. survived the testator, and died leaving two married daughters who were born in the testator's lifetime:—Held, reluctantly following previous decisions, that the restraint on anticipation was void as infringing the rule against perpetuities, and that the daughters were accordingly entitled to have the fund paid to them in moieties, on their separate receipts, discharged from such restraint. Re Ridley, Buckton v. Hay, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 645; 48 L. J., Ch., 563; 27 W. R. 527.

See Further as to Restraints on Alienation.] POWER, XVI. III.

II. CHARITIES OR PUBLIC INSTITUTIONS. GIFTS TO.

8. Bequest to the corporation of R. on certain trusts for the benefit of the poor of the town of R., with a proviso that, if the corporation of R. should, for one whole year, neglect to observe the directions of the will, the gift should be utterly void, and the property be transferred to the corporation of L., in trust for a hospital in the town of L. After the corporation of R. had acted in disregard of the directions of the will, with the knowledge of the corporation of L. and the hospital, for more than twenty years, a suit was instituted on behalf of the hospital, claiming the property under the proviso:—Held, first, that a contingent limitation over, of property, from one charity to another, is not within the principle of the rule against perpetuities; and, therefore, that the limitation in question was no infringement of that rule. Secondly, that the limitation might well take effect, notwithstanding the rule, that a charitable purpose shall not be disappointed by the neglect of the trustee; the testator in this case having expressly made the gift over to depend upon the conduct of the trustee. Christ's Hospital v. Grainger, 1 Macn. & G. 460; 1 H. & Tw.

533; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 33; 14 Jur. 339. Affirming 16 Sim. 83; 12 Jur. 276.

1. Devise to a corporation and other trustees upon trust to distribute the rents and profits annually, on a certain day, amongst certain families, according to their circumstances, as in the opinion of the trustees they might need such assistance, whose names were thereinafter mentioned, viz. (naming twenty-four persons):—Held, not void as tending to create a perpetuity. Liley v. Hey, 1 Hare 580; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 415; 6 Jur. 756.

2. A devise to a man and the heirs of his body, and if he shall go about to alien his estate shall cease, and the lands go over to a charity; the devise over is void, it tending to create perpetuity. Pewterers Co. v. Christ's Hospital (Governors), 1 Vern. 161.

3. Testator, by a codicil to his will, reciting that certain lands produced a clear yearly rent of 237*l.*, devised them to trustees in trust for charitable purposes; he then directed that, in the event of there being an increase of the rents of the said lands by any new letting, the surplus so to arise should go to the only use and behalf of the person or persons of the S. and C. families, who, for the time being, should be lords or ladies of the manor of D.; and in case the said families did not protect the said charities, or if the said families should become extinct, then and in either of such cases, the trustees were to apply the said surplus rents, in addition to the provision already made, for the charity:—Held, that the gift of the surplus rents to the members of the S. and C. families was a good equitable devise in fee, and that the gift over to the trustees of the charity was bad for remoteness. Commissioners of Charitable Donations v. Clifford, 1 Dr. & War. 245.

4. Where funds, directed to charitable purposes, were to be provided for by accumulation, but no period prescribed, although it must necessarily have exceeded the legal period:—Held, that the direction was void, and that ulterior dispositions, therefore, failed; but, a clear intention being manifested to devote the property directed to accumulate to charitable purposes, a reference ordered, the Master cy près to settle a scheme. Martin v. Margham, 14 Sim. 230. S. C. nom. Martin v. Maugham, 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 392; 8 Jur. 609.

5. The Penzance Public Library was established and kept on foot by the subscriptions of certain inhabitants of Penzance for the purpose of purchasing and preserving books for the use of such subscribers. The subscribers were elected by ballot, and the management of the library conducted, according to printed rules, by officers chosen by the subscribers from amongst themselves. By one of these rules it was provided that the property in the books, and everything else belonging to the library, should be altogether vested in the officers for the time being, who should be trustees for the subscribers; and another rule provided, that the institution should not be broken up so long as ten members remained:—Held, that a devise of freeholds to the trustees for the time being of the Penzance Public Library, to hold to them and their successors for ever, for the use, benefit, maintenance, and support of the library, was void, as tending to a perpetuity. Carne v. Long, 2 De G. F. & J. 75; 6 Jur., N. S., 639; 29 L. J., Ch., 503; 8 W. R. 570. Varying 4 Jur., N. S., 474; 27 L. J., Ch., 580. And see Thompson v. Shakespeare, 1 De G. F. & J. 399.

6. A gift to a building fund of a mechanics' institution established and maintained by subscriptions of its members to provide them with a library, reading-room, lectures, and the like, and capable of dissolution only by nine-tenths of the members present at a general meeting, is a gift tending to perpetuity and void. Re Dutton, Exp. Peake, 48 L. J., Exch., 350.

7. A testator gave 500*l.* to trustees to apply the income in aid of the Ringwood Friendly Society, a society whose funds were raised by the subscriptions of its members, and were applicable for their benefit in case of sickness, lameness, or old age. Some time after his death the society was dissolved:—Held, that the society was not a charitable institution, and that the gift was invalid as aiming to create a perpetuity, and was not, on the dissolution of the society, applicable cy près. Re Clarke, 45 L. J., Ch., 194; 24 W. R. 233; 1 L. R., Ch. D., 497.

8. A gift "of the upper storey of four specific houses or shops, to be occupied by the several members and descendants of K. T. C. and L. K. W., as already proposed," i.e., as the context showed, as a family house for the use of two separate families, is void for uncertainty, and as denoting an intention to create a perpetuity. Yeap Cheah Neo v. Ong Cheng Neo, 6 L. R., P. C., 381.

A devise of "two plantations, in which the graves of the family are placed, to be reserved as the family burying-place, and not to be mortgaged or sold," is void as a devise in perpetuity. Ib.

A direction that "a house for performing religious ceremonies to my late husband and myself be erected" is void; such a devise being in perpetuity, and not for a charitable use. Ib.

9. When there is a clear intention to give to charitable purposes, and the gift is immediate, there is no resulting trust for the next-of-kin, although the particular application of the fund directed by the will would not of necessity take effect within any assignable limit of time, and could never take effect at all except upon the occurrence of uncertain and contingent events. But if the gift to charity is conditional and the condition is so remote and indefinite as to transgress the rules of law against perpetuities, the gift fails ab initio. Chamberlayne v. Brockett, 21 W. R. 299.

Personal estate effectually given to charity is taken out of the scope of the rules of law against perpetuities. Ib.

III. COVENANTS.

10. A. conveyed land to B., reserving the minerals, and covenanted that in case he, his heirs or assigns, should at any time sell the minerals under the adjoining land, he, his heirs or assigns, would offer to B., his heirs or assigns, the reserved minerals at the same price per acre:—Held, that the covenant was not obnoxious to the rules against perpetuities, and the offer must be made in writing. Birmingham Canal Co. v. Cartwright, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 421; 48 L. J., Ch., 552; 27 W. R. 597; 40 L. T. 784.

1. By a deed which recited that the plaintiff company were seised in fee of certain land not required for the purposes of their railway, the company conveyed the land to G. P. in fee, and G. P. covenanted that he, his heirs, and assigns would at any time thereafter, whenever the land might be required for the railway, and whenever thereunto requested by the company on a six months' notice, reconvey on receiving the same sum as that paid by G. P. Fourteen years afterwards the defendant purchased the lands from G. P.'s heir, with notice of the above covenant. The company then gave notice to the defendant to reconvey, and on his refusing brought an action against him for specific performance:—Held, by Kay, J., that an executory interest in property to arise on a future event which may not happen within the limits of the rule against perpetuities is void, though it be limited to an ascertained person who can release it at any time. The dictum in Gilbertson v. Richards (4 H. & N. 277, 297) and the decision in Birmingham Canal Co. v. Cartwright (11 L. R., Ch. D., 421) dissented from. But held, by Kay, J., that in the present case the covenant did not create any estate or interest in land, and therefore was not obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities, and that specific performance must be decreed, the covenant being binding on an alienee with notice on the principle of Tulk v. Moxhay (2 Ph. 774). But held, by the Court of Appeal, that as the covenant gave to the company an executory interest in land to arise on an event which might occur after the period allowed by the rules as to remoteness, it was invalid on the ground of remoteness. Birmingham Canal Co. v. Cartwright (11 L. R., Ch. D., 421) overruled. The doctrine of Tulk v. Moxhay (2 Ph. 774) only applies to restrictive covenants and not to covenants to do acts relating to the land. London & South-Western Railway Co. v. Gomm, 20 L. R., Ch. D., 562; 51 L. J., Ch., 530; 46 L. T. 449; 30 W. R. 620. Reversing 45 L. T. 505.

2. Insertion of covenant for renewal of lease in renewed lease enforced, though tending to perpetuity. Bridges v. Hitchcock, 5 Bro. P. C. 6.

3. By a deed dated 1529, conveying lands to a municipal corporation for charitable purposes, the corporation covenanted that when a term of ninety-nine years in a farm, part of the hereditaments granted, should expire, if any of the heirs of the body of a person named in the grant, becoming of consanguinity and kindred of the grantor, should come, claim, and make lawful request of the corporation to have a new grant and lease to him or her, to be made within one year next after it should fortune the same farm to be void and come into the hands of the corporation, that then and as often as any such chance should fall, the corporation, upon such request to them so made, should make or cause to be made a new lease and grant of the form to such heir, so making request, for thirty-one years, and no more nor less, reserving to them and their successors twenty marks of annual rent during the term. The corporation from time to time granted renewed leases under this covenant, the last lease being granted in 1815. In 1723 a decree was made ordering the corporation to grant a fresh lease according to the covenant; in 1732 a decree was made for carrying out the former decree, with a variation arising from subsequent circumstances, but on neither occasion was the question of remoteness raised, nor was the attorney-general a party to the proceedings, the suits not being hostile as against the corporation, who did not dispute the right to renewal:—Held, that the covenant did not create a right in the nature of an estate tail, but was intended to confer a right on the persons who at the expiration of each lease should for the time being answer the description of heirs of the body of W., and that it was therefore void as tending to a perpetuity. Hope v. Gloucester (Corporation), 2 Jur., N. S., 27; 25 L. J., Ch., 145; 7 De G. M. & G. 647. And see Pollock v. Booth, 9 Ir. R., Eq., 229, 607.

Held, also, that as the question of perpetuity was not raised in, nor was the attorney-general a party to, the old suits for granting fresh leases, the decrees in those suits did not establish the validity of the covenant as against the charity. Ib.

Although presumptions are made in support of long possession and ancient usage, no such presumption could be made as would establish such a right to renewal as was provided for by the covenant in question, semble. Ib.

4. A deed contained a covenant for quiet enjoyment, free from quit-rent and crown-rent; and, by a contemporaneous deed of indemnity, lands were conveyed to a trustee and his heirs, upon trust to permit and suffer the vendors and their heirs to take the rents and profits, until the purchaser and his heirs, or any person deriving title under him, should be molested, disturbed, or damnified, by reason of certain judgments and incumbrances, or any judgment or incumbrance affecting the lands, or any of them, or until some suit at law or in equity should be commenced or proceeded on against the purchaser, his heirs or assigns, or the purchased lands and premises or any part thereof, from the recovery of or on account of the said or any other incumbrance or incumbrances; and immediately after any such disturbance, molestation, or injury, out of the rents and profits of the indemnity lands, by sale, demise, or mortgage of a competent part, to raise and levy from time to time such sums as might be sufficient to pay off and discharge the incumbrances affecting, or that might affect the lands. In 1827 quit-rent and crown-rent were claimed and paid out of the purchased lands. In 1828 the indemnity lands were mortgaged by persons claiming under the vendors. In 1839 a report, finding that there were no incumbrances except those named in the report on the indemnity lands, was made, and confirmed by a decree in a suit in which the sums then paid for quit-rent and crown-rent might have been, but were not claimed. In 1858 an order was made, giving leave to the owner of the purchased lands to go before the Master and file a charge in respect of his demand for quit-rent and crown-rent accrued since the date of the report and decree:—Held, first, that the claimant was not precluded by the finding in the report and decree from proving his demand. Massy v. O'Dell, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 22.

Held, secondly, that the demand was not barred by the Statute of Limitations. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that the trust in the indemnity deed to indemnify the purchaser was not void for remoteness. Ib.

1. A deed of conveyance contained an agreement that certain land, described in the deed, should "never be hereafter sold, but should be left for the common benefit of both parties and their successors." In a suit brought to compel the removal of a house alleged to have been built on the land in contravention of the agreement:—Held, that the agreement was one the performance of which might be enforced in equity, because on the true construction of its terms it amounted, not to a perpetual restriction of sale, but to an agreement on the part of the grantor to leave the land in the state in which it was at the time of the conveyance; and because the agreement contemplated, not an uncertain and indefinite use of the land by the parties, but that the land should be left open for the advantage of the parties as adjoining proprietors. McLean v. McKay, 29 L. T., N. S., 352; 21 W. R. 798.

IV. GIFTS TO A CLASS.

1. In General, 5629.
2. When Ascertained at Death of Testator, 5633.
3. Where Interests of Donees are Vested, 5634.
4. Where Gift over by Way of Substitution, 5636.
5. Severance of Valid from Remote Shares, 5637.
6. Gift to an Individual and a Class, 5639.

1. In General.

2. A gift to the children born or to be born of persons living, to vest at twenty-three, is void for remoteness; where, in a bequest to a class, the gift as to some is void for remoteness, it will be bad as to the whole class. Cromek v. Lumb, 3 Y. & Coll. 565.

3. A testator, during the lives of the children which M. G., his daughter (who was living), "had or should have," devised the rents of an estate on trust for them, for their lives, with a substituted gift to the issue of any child dying leaving issue during that period, and a gift over to the survivors of the children, on the death of any without leaving issue. The Court, considering that, by the terms of the gift, children born after the testator's death would be included:—Held, that the substituted gift to the issue of the grandchildren was void. Gooch v. Gooch, 14 Beav. 565; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 238; 15 Jur. 1165; 1 W. R. 397. Affirmed 3 De G. M. & G. 366; 22 L. J., Ch., 1069.

Devise in trust, after the decease of the testator's surviving grandchildren (children of a living daughter), to settle an estate on the eldest living grandson of his daughter in fee, and to sell the other real estate, and divide the produce between all the grandchildren of the daughter except the eldest. The Court, considering that this would include unborn great-grandchildren of the testator, decided that both the gifts to the great-grandchildren were void. Ib.

4. A devise, after a life estate to testator's son A., in these words, "to all and every my grandchildren, the children of my said son A., and three daughters, B., C., and D., who shall attain the age of twenty-four years":—Held, void for remoteness, although there were no grandchildren not born in the testator's lifetime. Newman v. Newman, 10 Sim. 51; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 354.

5. Where a testator, after giving certain sums in certain shares among the six children of A., naming them, to be vested and payable at twenty-five, with certain provisions for their maintenance until then, afterwards gives another sum of 6,000*l.*, subject to certain life interests, to all the children then born or hereafter to be born, to be vested and payable at twenty-five, and with the like trust for maintenance, and subject to the like provisions and conditions, as the legacies before given to the children then born and named:—Held, that the legacy of 6,000*l.* was void for remoteness as to all the children, both those then born and also the unborn. Comport v. Austen, 12 Sim. 218.

6. Testator bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees, in trust to pay the income of one-third part to his daughter Sarah, for life, and upon her death, to stand possessed of that third in trust for her child or children, and to be transferred to them on their attaining twenty-five; but in case his daughter should have but one child her surviving, then the whole of the one-third part to go to such only child on his attaining twenty-five, and be transmissible to his executors, and in case his daughter should leave no child her surviving, or in case she should leave a child who should not attain twenty-five, then over:—Held, that the children were not intended to take vested interests until they attained twenty-five, and that therefore the bequest to them was void for remoteness. Judd v. Judd, 3 Sim. 525. S. C. nom. Judd v. Hobbs, 8 L. J., Ch., 119.

7. On a bequest of ——l. amongst such children of the testator's daughter as should be living at the time the eldest child should attain twenty-four, and the issue of such as should be then dead, to be equally divided per stirpes, and not per capita, but without interest in the meantime; the daughter, at the testator's death, had three children, of the respective ages of thirteen, twelve, and nine:—Held, that the intention being that only those children of his daughter should take who should be alive when the eldest child for the time being should attain twenty-four the bequest was void for remoteness. Dodd v. Wake, 8 Sim. 615.

8. Bequest of residue after decease of testator's widow, to be divided equally amongst children, the son's shares to be paid immediately, and as to the daughters' to be invested for them for life, with remainder between all their children, to become vested at twenty-five, remainder over, in case of either of his daughters having no child attaining twenty-five, to the children of the others who should attain that age:—Held, that such gift over was too remote and void, and that the bequest to the daughters in the first instance being absolute, and the conditional limitation not being such as would legally take effect, the absolute interest remained according to the original gift. Ring v. Hardwick, 2 Beav. 352; 4 Jur. 2.

1. Bequest in trust for all the children (then unborn) of A., to be vested at twenty-five for sons, and at that age or marriage for daughters, with a subsequent direction that, if only one child, the whole should be paid to that child at twenty-five, or marriage with consent, if a daughter:—Held, that the vesting, and not the payment only, was postponed till twenty-five or marriage, and that the bequest was void for remoteness. Griffith v. Blunt, 4 Beav. 248; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 372.

2. A testator bequeathed personal property to his trustees and executors, upon trust to pay the dividends to his daughter, during her life, to her separate use, and after her decease to pay the principal unto all and every her children, who should live to attain twenty-three years of age, share and share alike, with benefit of survivorship in case any of them died under that age; with limitations over in case there should be no child or children, or being such, all of them should die under twenty-three years without lawful issue. The daughter had a child who died under age in the daughter's lifetime:—Held, that the bequests to the children, and the subsequent limitations, were too remote. Bull v. Pritchard, 1 Russ. 213.

3. In a devise of real estate, upon trust for the daughter of the testator for her life, from and after her decease to convey such estate unto and equally between and among all and every the child and children of the daughter who should live to attain the age of twenty-three years, and to his, her, and their heirs and assigns for ever; and in case there should be no such child or children, or, being such, all of them should die under twenty-three without issue, then over, with power to apply for maintenance the interest of such child's share, notwithstanding such child's share should not be then absolutely vested:—Held, that the limitation to the children of the daughter, and the limitations over, in default of such children, are void for remoteness. Bull v. Pritchard, 5 Hare 567; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 136; 11 Jur. 34.

4. A testatrix gave the interest of her residuary estate to her four sisters during their lives, and directed that, on their deaths, the interest of their respective shares should, at the discretion of her executor, be applied to the maintenance and education, or accumulated for the benefit of the children of each of them so dying, until such children should respectively attain the age of twenty-two years, when they were to be entitled to their mother's share of the principal; with limitations over, in the event of the death of any of them under that age:—Held, that the children of the sisters were not to take a vested interest till they attained twenty-two. And that all the gifts subsequent to the life estates given to the sisters, were void as being too remote. Vandru v. Geddes, 1 Russ. & M. 203; Taml. 361; 8 L. J., Ch., 63.

5. Bequest of personal property to A. for life, and after her decease to children when at age of twenty-seven respectively; and in the event of her not leaving any child or children, or of the death of all under twenty-seven, over:—Held, that the limitation over was too remote. Cambridge v. Rous, 8 Ves. 24.

6. A gift of residuary estate in trust for such child or children of A., as being a son or sons should live to attain the age of twenty-five years, or being a daughter or daughters should live to attain that age, or marry, equally to be divided between them, if more than one; but if but one, then the whole to that one, their, his, or her heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns, according to the nature and quality thereof; provided that if any of them should die under such age or time as aforesaid, leaving issue him or her surviving, such issue should take the same share as his, her, or their parents, attaining such age as aforesaid, would have done; with provision for applying the income of the share of every such child, or his or her issue, or a sufficient part thereof, in their maintenance and education, and for an application of a reasonable part of the expectant share of any such child or their issue, to his, her, or their advancement, notwithstanding their minority:—Held, to be void for remoteness. Boreham v. Bignall, 8 Hare 131; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 461; 14 Jur. 265.

7. Testator bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees, in trust, as to one-third for his daughter for life, and, after her decease, in trust for her children, and to be paid to them on attaining twenty-five; but, if his daughter should leave but one child her surviving, then the whole third to go to and become the property of such only child upon its attaining twenty-five, and be transmissible to its executors, but, in case his daughter should leave no child her surviving, or in case she should leave a child who should not attain twenty-five, then over:—Held, that the bequest to the children was void for remoteness. Hunter v. Judd, 4 Sim. 455.

8. Testator bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees, in trust for his wife for life, and, after her decease, "to preserve the then remaining part of my estate for the grandchildren of my brother C., to be by them received in equal proportions when they shall severally attain the age of twenty-five years, and when the youngest shall have attained the age of twenty-five years, and he or she shall have received their final dividend or share of my estate, the trust shall cease." Testator left his widow and mother surviving. Eight grandchildren of the brother were in existence at the widow's death, and several were born afterwards:—Held, that the bequest was not void for remoteness; but that those only of the grandchildren who were in existence at the widow's decease, were entitled to share in the testator's residuary estate. Kevorn v. Williams, 5 Sim. 171.

9. A testatrix, having a son and two daughters, gave 6,000*l.* 3 per cent. stock to her son for life, remainder as to one moiety of it to his eldest male child living at her decease, and as to the other moiety to his other children; she also gave 6,000*l.* like stock to her daughters for their respective lives in equal shares, remainder to their children; and she further gave a sum of bank stock to her three children in equal shares during their lives, and the share of each was at his or her death to revert to their issue in equal shares. Subsequently she made a codicil, in which she desired that her grandchildren's shares of those two stocks should be settled upon them for their lives, and afterwards upon their children:—Held, that by the operation of the codicil, the moiety of 3,000*l.* 3 per cent. stock which, by the will, was given absolutely to the eldest male child of the testatrix's son living at her death, was well limited to that male child for life, with remainder to his children; that as to all the other bequests, the attempt to extend the limitations to great-grandchildren was ineffectual; and that the absolute interests given by the will to the grandchildren were not destroyed or restricted by the codicil. Arnold v. Congreve, 1 Russ. & M. 209; Taml. 347; 8 L. J., Ch., 88.

1. A testator, after devising and bequeathing all his real and personal estates to trustees, on trust from time to time to receive the rents and profits, and therewith to pay various legacies and annuities, directed that they should invest the surplus rents and profits at interest, and suffer the same to accumulate; and he declared that they should stand seised of his said trust estate and the accumulations, upon trust that, when and as soon as any son of either of his nephews A. and B. should have attained the age of twenty-five years, a valuation of his said trust estate should be made, and that the same should then be divided into as many equal lots as there should be sons of his said nephews then living, and thenceforth separate accounts should be kept of the respective portions; and that each of his said nephews' sons, when and as they should respectively arrive at the age of twenty-five years, should choose one of such portions as the share to be allotted to him and his children; and that thenceforth the said portion or share should be held by trustees, upon trust for the person so selecting the same for his life, and after his decease upon trust as to one equal moiety for his eldest son and his heirs, executors, etc.; and as to the other moiety for the rest of his children and their heirs, executors, etc., in equal proportions, and if but one child both moieties for such child absolutely; but if any or either of his said nephews' sons should die under their respective ages of twenty-five years, or having attained that age should afterwards die without leaving issue, the share or shares intended for the person or persons so dying should go to the others and other of the said nephews' sons; and if all but one should die without leaving issue, the trustees should stand seised and possessed of the whole trust estate, in trust for such one surviving nephew's son for his life, and for his children and child as aforesaid; but if all the testator's said nephew's sons should depart this life without leaving issue, then upon trust for such person as should at that time be the testator's heir. At the time of the testator's death A. and B. had several sons living, and B. had another son born afterwards:—Held, upon the construction of the will, that the trusts for accumulation and division of the property comprised all the sons of the nephews who should be living when the first of them should attain twenty-five; and as the son who should first attain that age might not be born until after the testator's death, the gifts were too remote, and therefore void; and the testator's real estates upon his death became vested in his heir. Boughton v. Boughton, 1 H. L. Ca. 406. Affirming, with a variation, S. C. nom. Boughton v. James, 1 Colly. 26; 8 Jur. 329.

2. Bequest to A. for life, with remainder to such of his children as should live to attain twenty-five, equally, with an imperative direction, that the interest thereof, while any person presumptively entitled should be under twenty-five, should be applied for his maintenance and a discretionary power of advancement:—Held, void for remoteness. Southern v. Wollaston, 16 Beav. 166.

The marginal note of Bute (Marquis) v. Harman (9 Beav. 320), is incorrect, the bequest having been held void for remoteness. Ib.

3. A gift of a legacy to A. for life, and afterwards to pay and divide it amongst all his children who shall attain the age of twenty-five, is not too remote, if, by the death of A. at such a time before the testator, all the children must necessarily attain twenty-five within twenty-one years after the testator's death. Southern v. Wollaston, 16 Beav. 276; 22 L. J., Ch., 664; 1 W. R. 86.

4. A testator devised his real estate to his executors upon trust to pay the rents for the support of his wife and his present or future grandchildren during the life of his wife, and upon her decease upon trust to convey the property to his present or future grandchildren as they should attain the age of twenty-five, to hold the same unto his said grandchildren, their heirs and assigns for ever, as tenants in common:—Held, that the devise was void for remoteness. Blagrove v. Hancock, 16 Sim. 371; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 20; 12 Jur. 1081.

5. The doctrine laid down in Leake v. Robinson (2 Meriv. 363), as to remoteness, applies to real as well as to personal estate. Walker v. Mower, 16 Beav. 365.

Devise and bequest of real and personal estate to trustees for A. for life, and afterwards "to convey and assure" equally between all A.'s children, on their respectively attaining twenty-one, with a gift over on A.'s death without "leaving any child." There was one child who survived A., and died an infant:—Held, that such child did not take a vested interest; and, secondly, that the gift over did not take effect. Ib.

6. A testator devised his estates to trustees, in trust, after C.'s decease, "in case she should leave only one child which should survive her," to pay 200*l.* a year for his maintenance until he should attain twenty-five; and from and after such only child should attain that age, to raise 10,000*l.*, and pay the same to him at that age. Or, in case C. should, at her decease, have two or more children, then to raise an annuity for their maintenance, until they should respectively attain twenty-five, and when they respectively attained that age, to pay each an equal share of the 10,000*l.* The plaintiff was en ventre sa mere at the testator's death, and was the only child of C. who survived her:—Held, that the bequest of the 10,000*l.* was too remote. Merlin v. Blagrave, 25 Beav. 125.

1. Bequest of personal estate to A. for life, remainder to the children of A. equally, and in default of issue of A., upon trust to sell and divide equally amongst B. and C. and all their children "then" living, share and share alike:—Held, that the gift was not too remote, and that B. and C. and their children living at the death of A. alone took the personal estate as tenants in common absolutely. Cormack v. Copous, 17 Beav. 397.

B. died before A., but, nevertheless, she was held to take a share. Ib.

2. Gift of an annuity to testator's wife, with a declaration that the same was intended and should be taken in full satisfaction of all and all manner of claims and demands whatsoever which she at any time might or could have, or which, without provision or declaration, she could or might have at the time of testator's decease, of, into, or out of any part of his real or personal estate under any settlement, or on account of any dower or thirds which she might, could, or would in any manner have or demand out of, or in respect of, any part of his estate or effects in any manner howsoever. In the events which happened, part of the testator's estate was undisposed of by reason of the absence of a gift over upon the termination of a life interest therein:—Held, that the widow, having enjoyed the annuity, was, by the declaration annexed to the gift of the annuity, excluded from a distributive share in the part of the property undisposed of. Gift of all testator's freehold, leasehold, and copyhold estates, and all his personal estate, to trustees and their heirs, etc., upon trust to pay to his wife the sum of 1,200*l.* per annum by equal quarterly payments during her life, with a direction that from her decease the said sum of 1,200*l.* per annum so to be paid unto her as aforesaid should go to and be equally divided amongst all his children then living share and share alike:—Held, not a perpetual annuity, but to inure in shares for the respective lives of the children only, after the wife's death. Gift of residue unto and amongst all and every testator's child and children living at his decease, share and share alike, for life; and in case any of them being daughters should marry, and should happen to depart this life in the lifetime of her or their husbands, then the testator directed that the part or share, parts or shares, of her or them so dying should go to or be paid to her or their respective husband or husbands for his or their life or lives, and from and after his or their decease should be equally divided unto and amongst all and every child and children of his said daughter and daughters then living share and share alike; and in default of any such child or children, then he directed such part or share, or parts or shares, should go in a certain manner:—Held, that inasmuch as the daughters might marry husbands not born at the testator's death, the gift over to the children of the daughters after the life interests of their husbands was void for remoteness. Lett v. Randall, 3 W. R. 564; 1 Jur., N. S., 747; 24 L. J., Ch., 708.

3. A gift, by will, of real and personal estate to trustees, upon trust, to pay half the income to E. for life, and after her death to her child or children equally; the shares of sons to be vested in them on attaining twenty-five, and of daughters on attaining that age or day of marriage, which should first happen; and in the meantime to be applied for their maintenance, with survivorship in case of the death of any child before twenty-five or marriage respectively, with a similar gift to S. and her children of the other money, and a gift over in case of the death of either E. or S. without leaving issue, or leaving such and they should all die under twenty-five:—Held, that the limitations to the children of E. and S. were void for remoteness. Pickford v. Brown, 2 Kay & J. 426; 2 Jur., N. S., 781; 25 L. J., Ch., 702; 4 W. R. 473.

Held, also, that the direction for maintenance was altogether void. Ib.

4. Devise in trust for A. for life, and, after her decease, to apply the rents for the benefit of her children, until the youngest attained twenty-five; and, as soon as the youngest should have attained twenty-five, to sell and "pay and divide" the produce equally "among such of the children of A. as should be then living, and issue of such, if any, of her children as might be then dead," such issue to take their parents' share only:—Held, that the gift of the income was valid, but that the gift of the corpus was void for remoteness. Read v. Gooding, 21 Beav. 478; 4 De G. M. & G. 510.

5. Bequest to a living person for life, and afterwards to his children, followed by a declaration that these interests should be considered a vested interest at the age of twenty-five, and a gift over to the issue of any dying under twenty-five:—Held, too remote. Rowland v. Tawney, 26 Beav. 57.

6. Limitations of a term to trustees, upon trust to raise portions for the children of A. surviving A. and B., "to vest in and to be paid and payable to" them at their ages of twenty-four, with maintenance, etc., meanwhile, out of the expectant or presumptive shares, and a gift over on the death of all before their share should become vested:—Held, void for remoteness. Re Blakemore, 20 Beav. 214.

7. A testator bequeathed the income of his residuary estate between his three children, and when any child died, his part to be equally divided amongst the testator's surviving grandchildren; and likewise, if any of his grandchildren died, their part to be divided amongst the survivors of his other grandchildren:—Held, that the gift over, upon the death of a grandchild, to the surviving grandchildren, was void for remoteness. Courtier v. Oram, 21 Beav. 91.

8. A testatrix appointed a trust fund to two trustees, in trust to pay the dividends to A. for life, and after his decease she gave the dividends to two others, B. and C., for life; and after the decease of the survivor, she gave, bequeathed, willed, and directed the principal to be divided into two parts, and one of them to be "transferred or paid" to the children of those two persons respectively at the age of twenty-five years:—Held, that the gift to the children was void for remoteness. Chance v. Chance, 16 Beav. 572.

9. Trust funds are settled, subject to life interests, in the husband and wife, as portions for the children of the marriage, to be vested interests in them at twenty-five if sons, or at twenty-five or marriage if daughters; and to be payable at the same times if after the death of tenants for life; and if not, then immediately on the death of tenants for life. Survivorship between the children in case of their death before twenty-five, or twenty-five or marriage respectively. Maintenance to be given out of the annual income of shares before they should become payable:—Held, that the shares did not vest till twenty-five, and the gift therefore too remote. Re Morse's Settlement, 4 W. R. 148; 25 L. J., Ch., 192; 2 Jur., N. S., 6; 21 Beav. 174.

1. Gift of residue of real and personal estate to A. for life, and after her decease, in trust for all her sons and daughters who should attain twenty-two equally, with a power to apply the "annual income or fund" for their maintenance or "benefit" during their "minority": —Held, void for remoteness. Thomas v. Wilberforce, 31 Beav. 299.

2. Gift to trustees upon trust to permit A. to take the rents and profits for life, and after his decease in trust for all and every the children or child of A. who should live to attain twenty-five, but not otherwise; with a direction to the trustees to apply the annual income of the trust estates and premises for the use and benefit of the children of A. until they should severally attain the age of twenty-five:—Held, void for remoteness. Cam v. Salmon, 5 W. R. 31.

3. A testator gave his residuary real and personal estate to his daughter for life, and after her death he directed it to be paid to her surviving children as soon as they should arrive or come to the age of twenty-two respectively, with a direction that the share of the child or children dying under twenty-two should go to the other child or children who should attain twenty-two; and directed that only the interest of the share of the child or children who died under the age of twenty-two should be paid to them respectively:—Held, (affirming 11 Jur., N. S., 791), that the gift was contingent upon the children attaining twenty-two, and therefore void for remoteness. Re Bulley, 11 Jur., N. S., 847; 13 L. T., N. S., 264.

4. A testatrix gave property to three persons successively for life, one of whom was unborn at her death, and after the decease of the survivor to all the children of S., the first tenant for life, in equal shares, and the child or children of such of the children of S. as should be then dead, with an absolute gift over in case there should be no child or grandchild of S. then living:—Held, that the limitation over to the children and grandchildren of S. being a gift to a class to be ascertained at the death of a person not in being at the decease of the testatrix was void for remoteness. Stuart v. Cockerell, 39 L. J., Ch., 729; 5 L. R., Ch., 713; 18 W. R. 1057; 23 L. T., N. S., 442. Affirming 7 L. R., Eq., 363; 38 L. J., Ch., 473; 20 L. T., N. S., 513.

5. A testator gave the residue of his property to A. for life, with remainder to her children as she should appoint, and, subject thereto, in trust for all the children of A. who should attain twenty-three or marry under; the will contained provisoes giving a discretionary power to the trustees to apply all or any part of the income of any share for maintenance and education during minority, and directing that the surplus income should be accumulated, such accumulation to be added to the principal of the share whence the same should have arisen, with a further discretionary power to apply the accumulated fund or any part thereof also for maintenance and education: —Held, that the gift to the children of A., in default of appointment, was void for remoteness. Bowyer v. West, 19 W. R. 598; 24 L. T., N. S., 414.

6. A testator devised his real estate to trustees in fee for T. for life, with remainder to the trustees to preserve contingent remainders, with remainder to the first and other sons of T. in tail male with other remainders over, with a proviso that the real estate should not vest in any person thereby made tenant for life or in tail until he should have attained twenty-five, and the rents and profits were in the meantime to form part of the personal estate:—Held, that the direction in reference to vesting amounted to a limitation void for remoteness, and that the direction was not modified by a provision for maintenance in the meanwhile. Lushington v. Penrice, 16 W. R. 836; 18 L. T., N. S., 597.

7. A bequest of personalty to A. for life, with remainder to his issue male and the survivors for their lives, with remainder to the issue female of A. and the survivors for their lives, with remainder "to the executors, administrators, and assigns of the survivor of A., or such issue, male or female, who shall happen to be such survivor," is a bequest to a class, which is necessarily ascertainable within the limits prescribed by the rule against perpetuities, confers an absolute contingent interest in such one of that class as may be the survivor, and is not void for remoteness. Avern v. Lloyd, 37 L. J., Ch., 489; 5 L. R., Eq., 383; 16 W. R. 669; 18 L. T., N. S., 282.

8. A gift to such of four persons as should survive twelve months after the death of persons in being, and the issue then living who should attain twenty-one or marry of any of the four persons who should have died, is void altogether, as being a gift to a class the members of which were not ascertainable within twenty-one years after the death of persons in being. Bentinck v. Portland (Duke), 47 L. J., Ch., 235; 7 L. R., Ch. D., 693; 38 L. T., N. S., 58; 26 W. R. 278.

2. When Ascertained at Death of Testator.

9. Testator gave the residue of his personal estate unto and among all and every the children, sons and daughters, of his daughter Elizabeth, in equal shares and proportions, as and when they should attain their respective ages of twenty-two years:—Held, that the children of the testator's daughter living at the testator's death were the only objects of the bequest, and that it was not void for remoteness. Elliott v. Elliott, 12 Sim. 276; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 239.

10. In considering the validity of limitations, the state of the family at the death of the testator (and not at the date of his will) is to be regarded; and therefore if a gift be to such of the children of a particular parent as shall attain a greater age than twenty-one years, and the parent die in the lifetime of the testator, and the class be ascertained at the testator's death, the gift is valid. A limitation to the unborn children of the testator's children for their lives was not void for remoteness only, because it was a gift to persons who might be unborn at the death of the testator. Williams v. Teale, 6 Hare 239.

1. Gift to trustees for E. W. for life, and after his decease to assign, etc., to all his children who should be living at his decease, and who should be or live to attain twenty-five, and to apply the income in the meantime for their maintenance. E. W. died in 1837, leaving eleven children; the testator died in 1845. Four only of the children of E. W. survived; the youngest attained twenty-five in 1848:—Held (following Williams v. Teale, 6 Hare 239), that the gift was not void for remoteness. Southern v. Wollaston, 22 L. J., Ch., 664; 16 Beav. 276.

Gift to A. for life, and after his death to all his children who should be living at his death, and who should attain the age of twenty-five years; with a direction to apply the whole income in maintenance:—Held, that the gift was not void for remoteness, the tenant for life having died in the lifetime of the testator. S. C. 1 W. R. 86.

2. Testator gave his real and personal property upon trust for the children of his daughters who should live to attain twenty-five. At his death one of his daughters had a child who had attained twenty-five:—Held, that this gift was not void for remoteness, but was a valid gift to such of the children living at the testator's death as should attain twenty-five. Pichon v. Matthews, 10 L. R., Ch. D., 264; 48 L. J., Ch., 150; 39 L. T. 531.

3. Gift by will of "a sum of 500*l.* a-piece to each child that may be born to either of the children of either of my brothers lawfully begotten":—Held, that a grandchild of one of the testator's brothers, born a little more than seven months after the death of the testator, was entitled to a legacy of 500*l.*, the gift not being too remote. Storrs v. Benbow, 17 Jur. 821; 22 L. J., Ch., 823; 3 De G. M. & G. 390; 1 W. R. 115, 134, 420.

Distinction, on the question of remoteness, between such a gift and a gift of a sum in gross to be divided amongst a class. Ib.

3. Where Interests of Donees are Vested.

4. A testator having bequeathed a yearly sum to a person for life, gave the annuity, upon the death of the annuitant, to the eldest surviving son of A., and failing the male issue of A., to the daughters of A. living at the demise of such male issue; at the death of the annuitant, A. had no son living, but had two daughters:—Held, that the gift to the daughters of A. was not too remote, and that they were entitled to the annuity. The same testator gave the residue to his widow during her life, and at her demise to the eldest surviving son of A., upon his attaining twenty-five (the trustees being directed to apply the interest to his use till he attained that age), or failing such male issue, to the daughters of A. living at the demise of the last of such male issue: the only son of A. died under twenty-five in the lifetime of the widow, leaving two daughters of A. him surviving:—Held, that if there had been any son of A. living at the death of the widow, he would have taken a vested interest in the residue, though he had not then attained the age of twenty-five. That the gift over of the residue to the daughters of A., was not too remote, and that in the events which happened they, upon the death of the widow, became entitled to the residue. Murray v. Addenbrook, 4 Russ. 407; 8 L. J., Ch., 79.

5. Testator gave his real and residuary personal estate in trust to pay an annuity to his nephew, and, subject thereto, in trust for his daughter for life, remainder in trust to pay the income for the maintenance of all and every such child or children as she might leave at her decease during his, her, or their minority; and when the youngest should have attained twenty-five, to pay, assign, and transfer the income, together with the principal, to the children, the same to be divided equally between them, share and share alike; but if any of them should die leaving a child or children who should attain twenty-one, then to pay and assign the share of such child to such his or their child or children; and the testator then expressed his further will to be, that his trustees should immediately after his nephew's decease, convey, release, and assign all his freehold and leasehold estates unto the heir or heirs, who should be legally entitled thereto; and in case his daughter should leave no child or children, or they should die under age and unmarried, then in trust to pay and assign the income, together with the whole residue, unto and equally between his next-of-kin. The daughter left five children living at her death, all of whom attained twenty-five:—Held, that the trust for them was not void for remoteness, but that they took vested interests in the trust property on their mother's death. Milroy v. Milroy, 14 Sim. 48; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 266; 8 Jur. 284.

6. Bequest to A. for life, with remainder to her children who should attain twenty-five, with a clause for maintenance during minority and for accumulation of surplus income:—Held, that the gift to the children was not void for remoteness. Bute (Marquis) v. Harman, 9 Beav. 320.

7. Bequest to A. for life, with remainder to such of his children as should live to attain twenty-five, equally, with an imperative direction, that the interest thereof, while any person presumptively entitled should be under twenty-five, should be applied for his maintenance and a discretionary power of advancement:—Held, void for remoteness. Southern v. Wollaston, 16 Beav. 166; 22 L. J., Ch., 664; 1 W. R. 86.

The marginal note of Bute (Marquis) v. Harman (9 Beav. 320) is incorrect, the bequest having been held void for remoteness. Ib.

8. A bequest to trustees of the testator's residuary estate, with a direction to apply so much of the interest, dividends, and profits as may be necessary for the maintenance and education of the children of the testator's daughters, until they should respectively attain the age of twenty-four, and then to divide the principal equally between them, with a gift over in case any of them should die under twenty-four without leaving issue, is not void, as too remote, but gives a present vested interest with an executory bequest over in case of death under twenty-four without leaving issue. Bland v. Williams, 3 Myl. & K. 411; 3 L. J., N. S., Ch., 218.

1. A gift of personalty to trustees for A. for life, and after his death in trust for the children of A., "as they severally attained twenty-five years," the income to be applied during their respective minorities by their guardian for their maintenance, etc., with a gift over, in case no child of A. should live to attain twenty-five:—Held, to be vested, and not too remote. Davies v. Fisher, 5 Beav. 201; 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 338; 6 Jur. 248.

2. Bequest of a residue for life to A., who had no child, and at his death leaving a son 5,000*l.* to be deposited in the hands of trustees to accumulate for such son for his use on his attaining the age of thirty years, and the rest to be equally shared between him and the other children; the general division to take place as each respectively attained the age of twenty-four years:—Held, not void in any part, as the 5,000*l.* vested at the time of the severance and the shares of the residue must be taken to vest at the same time. Grest v. Grest, 5 Beav. 123.

3. Testator gave his real and personal estates to trustees, and directed them to invest his personal estate in the purchase of land, and to pay the rents, subject to certain annuities, to his son for life, and in case his son should die leaving behind him no legitimate issue then he directed the trustees to pay the rents to his, the testator's, widow for life; but in case his son should die leaving behind him legitimate issue, then, at the end of six months after the eldest male child then living of his son should have attained twenty-five, or, in default of male issue, the eldest female child then living of his son should have attained twenty-one, to convey all the estates to the eldest male child, or in default of male issue to the eldest female child, and to his or her heirs of his or her body lawfully begotten, absolutely for ever. The testator then (in case his son should die during the minority of such eldest male or female child) provided for their maintenance, and then declared that, in case his son should not die during such minority, his estates should continue on the trusts aforesaid until six months after his son's death, and then pass to his son's eldest male or female child in manner before expressed; and in case his son should die leaving no legitimate issue, then after the death of the testator's wife the estates to be conveyed to other persons. The testator's son married, and had a son born after the testator's death. The Court, holding the trust for the grandson not to be void for remoteness, and the grandson having survived his father and attained twenty-one (but being under twenty-five), and all the annuitants being dead, ordered the estates to be conveyed to him. Jackson v. Marjoribanks, 12 Sim. 93; 5 Jur. 885.

4. Where there is a gift to trustees within three months after the testator's decease, in case any child or children of his son should be then living, to invest a sum of money in trust for such children, equally, who should attain twenty-one, the dividends to be payable to and become vested in the meantime, with absolute discretion in the trustees as to maintenance, it is not a condition precedent; the limitation is not too remote, and there must be an investment and accumulation for the benefit of the children of the son, the dividends going with the capital. Edmunds v. Waugh, 6 W. R. 589; 4 Drew. 275.

5. Gift by will to daughters for life, and afterwards to "pay and divide" amongst their issue (children) then living, at twenty-five, the whole interest being given in the meantime for their maintenance during minority:—Held, that the gift to the children was not too remote. Tatham v. Vernon, 29 Beav. 604.

6. A testator declared that the bequest to one daughter C. should be enjoyed by her for life, and then be put in trust for the benefit of the children she might leave, and to be divided at twenty-five. And he in like manner directed the bequest of his second daughter M. should be paid to her for life, and after her death "may be continued in trust, and may be divided equally between her children after they have attained the age of twenty-five":—Held, that the bequest to the children of M. was not remote, and they took vested interests at their birth. Saumarez v. Saumarez, 34 Beav. 432.

7. A testator, by will, made in 1821, bequeathed the residue of his personal estate and effects to trustees, upon trust to accumulate until the principal, with the accumulations, should amount to 3,000*l.* or thereabouts; and when and so soon as such principal and accumulations should amount to 3,000*l.* or thereabouts, then he directed them to invest the same, and distribute the interest among certain persons for life; and after the decease of the survivor, to distribute the principal amongst the issue of such persons:—Held, that the gift of the fund was not void for remoteness, as, although the sum named might not be accumulated within the period allowed by law, there would be no suspension of vesting; the residue and accumulations, whatever the amount might be, would vest immediately on the death of the survivor of the tenants for life. Oddie v. Brown, 5 Jur., N. S., 635; 28 L. J., Ch., 54; 4 De G. & J. 179. Reversing 4 Jur., N. S., 605; 6 W. R. 531.

8. By a will, stock was, after the death of a tenant for life, to be divided and paid amongst the children of such tenant for life; if more than one, equally, on attaining twenty-four; and if but one, the whole to be paid to such one child on attaining twenty-four, and in the meantime the interest and dividends to be applied for the use and benefit of such children or child, as the case might be:—Held, that the gift was not void for remoteness, the children taking vested interests as they came in esse. Bell v. Cade, 2 John. & H. 122; 10 W. R. 38; 5 L. T., N. S., 523; 31 L. J., Ch., 383.

9. A bequest to trustees of a testator's leaseholds and personal estate, upon trust for his granddaughter for life, and after her death upon trust for all and every the child and children of his said granddaughter, until they attained the age of twenty-five years, or died leaving issue; and then upon trust for such child and children so attaining the age of twenty-five years or dying leaving issue, with a gift over in case they should all die under twenty-five without leaving issue, is not void for remoteness as to the children, but gives them an immediate vested interest. Hardcastle v. Hardcastle, 1 N. R. 83.

1. A testator directed his trustees to raise 15,000*l*., and after the determination of certain prior life interests given to T. and his widow to divide and transfer one-fifth of the fund to and amongst the children of T. equally as and when they should attain the age of twenty-five, applying from time to time the income of the presumptive share of each child, or so much as the trustees for the time being might think fit for his and her maintenance and education until such share should become payable as aforesaid; but if T. should leave no children him surviving, or if he should, and they should all die before attaining the age of twenty-one, then to pay and transfer the fifth part to the other persons therein referred to:—Held, that the children of T. took vested interests, and consequently that the gift to them was not void for remoteness. Fox v. Fox, 19 L. R., Eq., 286; 23 W. R. 314.

4. Where Gift over by Way of Substitution.

2. Bequest of personal estate, in trust, when and as the child and children of A. should severally attain the age of twenty-one, to pay and divide the same equally between them and the children of such of them (if any) as might depart this life under the age of twenty-one, but so, nevertheless, that children of any deceased child, on attaining twenty-one, should take between them such share only as the parent would have taken if living:—Held, not too remote. Packer v. Scott, 33 Beav. 511.

3. A testator gave his residuary real and personal estate upon trust for his wife for life, and after her death upon trusts for the testator's issue, with executory trusts for his sister and her issue; and in default of such issue of himself and his said sister, "or upon their total extinction under twenty-one years old," he bequeathed the said residuary estate unto his first cousins by their mother's side, and the issue of such of them as might happen to be dead per stirpes, and to their heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns for ever as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants:—Held, first, that the gift to the cousins was not too remote. Secondly, that it was not a gift to a class to be ascertained at a future period, but that the first cousins ex parte maternâ living at the testator's death took vested interests liable to be divested to the extent required to let in other first cousins born before the period of distribution. Thirdly, that the shares of first cousins who died before the period of distribution leaving no issue were not divested, but went to their real and personal representatives. Fourthly, that the share to a first cousin who died before the period of distribution leaving children went to those children. Baldwin v. Rogers, 3 De G. M. & G. 649; 17 Jur. 267; 22 L. J., Ch., 665.

4. A testator by his will devised real estate to trustees in trust to receive the rents during the life or lives of the survivor of all the children which M. G. had or should have, and after certain deductions, to apply them in the upport of M. G. and in the maintenance and education of all her children which she should from time to time have living, in equal shares between her and them. The will then contained further trusts providing that after all the children of M. G. mentioned in the above devise, and the youngest of them, attained twenty-one, the rents should be divided among the said children and the issue of any one of them that should happen to die leaving issue, equally, and the survivors and survivor of them until the death of the longest liver of the children, and after the death of the longest liver, then to convey the estates to the eldest living grandson of M. G.:—Held, that a trust was created for the benefit of the children of M. G., who were in a state of minority; that it included children born after the death of the testator, and was for all children who might be alive from time to time until the period when the younger of the living children of M. G. should attain twenty-one:—Held, also, that the further trust, substituting the issue for the parent, and the ultimate trust to convey the estates, were void for remoteness. Gooch v. Gooch, 3 De G. M. & G. 366; 22 L. J., Ch., 1089. Affirming 21 L. J., Ch., 238; 15 Jur. 1165; 14 Beav. 565; 1 W. R. 397.

5. A testator directed his trustees, after the death of the longest liver of his son, his daughter, and any widow whom the son might leave, to sell his real estate and to stand possessed of the proceeds and of the rents and profits until sale, upon trust to pay and apply them "unto and equally amongst all and every the child and children of my son W. and daughter M. share and share alike, and the lawful issue of such of them as may be then dead leaving issue, such issue to be entitled to no more than their parent or respective parents would have been if living." He directed that if his daughter's son then living should die without leaving issue, or, leaving issue, all of them should die under age and unmarried, the trustees should pay the share which would have been payable to him under the above trusts to the children of J.; and that if the testator's son died without leaving issue, or all of them died under age and unmarried, the trustees should pay the share which would have been payable to them under the trusts aforesaid, to the children of J. and M. The heir-at-law claimed the corpus as undisposed of, on the ground that the disposition of the proceeds of sale was void for remoteness as being a gift to a class not ascertainable till at or after the death of the son's widow, who might be a person unborn at the testator's death:—Held, that the gift was not a gift to such children of the son and daughter as should be living at the period of distribution and the issue of such of them as should be then dead, but a gift to all the children of the son and daughter, with a gift over by way of substitution of the shares of such of them as might die before the period of distribution leaving issue—that when the gift over of any share was void for remoteness the original gift remained unaffected—and that the heir-at-law had no title. Re Goodier, Goodier v. Johnson, 18 L. R., Ch. D., 441; 45 L. T. 515; 51 L. J., Ch., 369; 30 W. R. 449.

6. A bequest of the residue after the death of the testator's wife to the testator's children then living, and such issue then living of any children then deceased as should attain the age of twenty-three as tenants in common according to the stocks and not to the individual objects, and so that the issue of deceased children might take by way of substitution the shares of their respective parents, is void for remoteness. Smith v. Smith, 5 L. R., Ch., 342; 18 W. R. 742.

5. Severance of Valid from Remote Shares.

1. Where there is a gift to a class, some of whom are within the rule against perpetuities, and some not, but the class itself and the shares of each cannot be ascertained within the legal limits as to time, the whole gift is void. But where the individual shares of the members of the class can be ascertained within the proper periods, the gift is valid as to those within the rule against perpetuities, though invalid as to the rest. Wilkinson v. Duncan, 30 Beav. 111; 9 W. R. 915; 7 Jur., N. S., 1182; 5 L. T., N. S., 161; 30 L. J., Ch., 938.

If a stated sum is given to each member of a class, wholly independent of the same, or a similar gift to every other member of a class, and cannot be affected whether the others receive their legacies or not, the gift as to those who are within the limits allowed by law. Ib.

Property was bequeathed by an uncle in trust to his nephew A. for life, with power to him to appoint it amongst his children. A. directed the trustees "to pay 2,000*l.* to each of his daughters, as and when they should respectively attain twenty-four," and to pay the residue "between his sons equally, as and when they should respectively attain twenty-four":—Held, that the bequests were valid as to such of A.'s daughters as were three years of age at his death, but void for remoteness as to the rest. Ib.

2. A testator directed his executors to pay "the sum of 500*l.* apiece to each child that may be born to either of the children of either of my brothers lawfully begotten":—Held, that the child of a niece born within eight months after the testator's death was entitled to the legacy, and that the gift was not as to such child void for remoteness. Storrs v. Benbow, 3 De G. M. & G. 390; 17 Jur. 821; 22 L. J., Ch., 823; 1 W. R. 115, 134, 420.

Distinction on a question of remoteness, between the gift of a sum in gross to be distributed among a class, and the gift of distinct legacies to a number of persons. Ib.

3. A testatrix having a son and two daughters, gave 6,000*l.* 3 per cent. stock to her son for life, remainder as in one moiety of it to his eldest male child living at her decease, and as to the other moiety to his other children. She also gave 6,000*l.* like stock to her daughters for their respective lives in equal shares, remainder to their children, and she farther gave a sum of bank stock to her three children, in equal shares during their lives, and the share of each was at his or her death to revert to their issue in equal shares. Subsequently she made a codicil, in which she desired that her grandchildren's shares of these two stocks should be settled upon them for their lives and afterwards upon their children:—Held, that by the operation of the codicil the moiety of 3,000*l.* 3 per cent. stock, which by the will was given absolutely to the eldest male child of the testatrix's son living at her death, was well limited to that male child for life, with remainder to his children; that as to all the other bequests the attempt to extend the limitations to great-grandchildren was ineffectual, and that the absolute interests given by the will to the grandchildren were not destroyed or restricted by the codicil. Arnold v. Congreve, 1 Russ. & M. 209; Taml. 347; 8 L. J., Ch., 88.

4. A power of appointing lands amongst all the children of B. "begotten and to be begotten, and their issue," and in default of appointment amongst the children equally; B. had six children, all living at the time of the power being created, and by will directed that the share which every child of B., begotten, etc., was entitled to, in default of appointment, should be held in trust for that child for life, and after its death for its children:—Held, valid, and not void for remoteness. Griffith v. Pownall, 13 Sim. 393.

5. After a devise to A. for life, with remainder to all and every the child and children of A. for their lives, in equal shares, a devise over, after the decease of any or either of such child or children, of the part or share of him, her, or they so dying, unto his, her, or their child or children, begotten or to be begotten, and to his, her, or their heirs for ever, as tenants in common, is good as to the children of such children of A. as were living at the death of the testator, for the gift to them must take effect, if at all, within the limits allowed by law; and the gift to every member of the class of children is single and independent of the gift to every other member of the same class, and cannot be affected by the result of the gift as to such other members. Cattlin v. Brown, 11 Hare 372; 1 W. R. 533; 1 Eq. Rep. 550.

6. A testator bequeathed a fund to trustees upon trust for his widow for life, and at her decease upon trust for the present and future children of A. who should be living at the decease of the widow, to be divided between them as tenants in common; and he declared that, as to the children of A. who should be daughters, their respective shares should be held by his trustees upon trust for each daughter respectively for life, and at her decease upon trust for her children absolutely:—Held, that the limitation in favour of the children of a daughter of A. was not void for remoteness in the case of a daughter living at the testator's death. Wilson v. Wilson, 4 Jur., N. S., 1076; 28 L. J., Ch., 95.

7. A testator gave an annuity of 200*l.* a year to T. N. for life, and after his death to his children then living, for life, in equal shares; and, at the decease of any of them, his share of the capital producing the annuity was to be divided amongst his children:—Held, notwithstanding there were children of T. N. living in the testator's lifetime, and the gift to the children as tenants in common, that the bequest to all of the grandchildren of T. N. was void for remoteness. Greenwood v. Roberts, 15 Beav. 92; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 262.

A testator directed his trustees to set apart sufficient stock to produce 700*l.* a-year, and pay, among others, an annuity of 200*l.* a-year to his brother Thomas for life, and after his decease to continue it amongst his brother's children then living in equal shares, during their lives, and, at the decease of any of them, the stock from which the 200*l.* a-year arose was to be sold, and the produce divided equally amongst the children of him or her so dying as they should severally attain twenty-one, with interest in the meantime to be applied for their benefit, and he said, "I give them vested interests therein;" and if any of his brother's children should, at his decease, be dead and have left issue, such issue should be entitled amongst them to the money they would eventually have been entitled to had their parent outlived his brother. If any of the parties anticipated the payment, or sold his interest before due, it was declared to be forfeited and applied as if such parties had died before the legacy fell due. The testator then appointed his trustees, executors, and residuary legatees. 23,333*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* was set aside to answer the 700*l.* a-year. The testator's brother Thomas died, leaving six children, of whom Richard was one, living at the date of the will, and he after the decease of his father, until his death, received an annuity of 33*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, being one-sixth of the 200*l.* a-year. Richard died, leaving three children surviving, one of whom was born in the lifetime of the original testator:—Held, that the children of Richard were not entitled to the money representing the annuity to which he was entitled, but that it fell into the testator's residuary estate. Ib.

1. A testator bequeathed a legacy to his son, and after his decease and on the youngest of the son's sons attaining twenty-one, to divide it equally between the son's sons and the issue of deceased son's sons who should attain twenty-one, the issue to take the share which their father would have taken if living. Whether the gift after the son's death is wholly void, or only as to the share of the issue, quære. Salmon v. Salmon, 29 Beav. 27.

2. A testator gave his residuary estate to his daughter for life, and afterwards to her two sons, Henry and Charles, and all other her children thereafter to be born, and the issue of his grandchildren, who, being a son, should attain twenty-one, or, being a daughter, should attain that age or marry with consent, equally to be divided, such issue to take a parent's share:—Held, void for remoteness. Webster v. Boddington, 26 Beav. 128.

3. A devise to A. for life, with remainder to the children of A. for their lives, in equal shares, with a devise over, after the decease of any of such children, of the share of him, her, or them so dying, unto his, her, or their child or children, and to his, her, or their heirs, as tenants in common:—Held, that the devise over was good as to the children of such children of A. as were living at the death of the testator, for the gift to them must take effect, if at all, within the limits allowed by law; and the gift to every member of the class of children is independent of the gift to every other member of the same class, and cannot be affected by the result of the gift to such other member. Knapping v. Tomlinson, 10 Jur., N. S., 626; 34 L. J., Ch., 3; 12 W. R. 784; 10 L. T., N. S., 558.

4. Where there is a gift to a class, some of the objects of which are too remote, and some not, effect cannot be given to the latter separated from the former, but the whole gift is void. Seaman v. Wood, 22 Beav. 591.

The produce of real and personal estate was bequeathed upon trust for A. for life, and after his death, upon trust "to pay or transfer" it unto such children of A. as should attain the age of twenty-one, and also such children of any son of A. who should die under twenty-one, as should attain that age equally, but the children of any deceased son collectively to take their parents' share equally, with certain gifts over:—Held, that the whole of the limitations subsequent to the life estate were void for remoteness. Ib.

5. A husband gave his real and personal estate to trustees for his wife during widowhood, and after her death or second marriage for his children who might be living at such death or second marriage, and the issue of any child who might have previously died, such issue to take the share of her or his deceased parent in equal shares, the shares of such of his children or grandchildren as should be a son or sons to become vested in and payable to them as and when he or they should respectively attain the age of twenty-four, and the shares of his daughters, or the female issue of any deceased child, to be settled as therein mentioned:—Held, that the whole of the gifts after the life interest of the widow were void for remoteness. Hale v. Hale, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 643; 24 W. R. 1065; 35 L. T., N. S., 933.

6. Where there is a time fixed at which a fund is to be divided into separate shares, each share stands separate, and the gift of any share will take effect if the disposition of that particular share does not violate the rule against perpetuities, and will not be made void by the invalid gift of a portion of another share to the donee of the first mentioned share. But where there is a gift to a class, and the total amount to be taken by any member of the class cannot be ascertained within the period fixed by law, the whole gift is void. Bentinck v. Portland (Duke), 7 L. R., Ch. D., 693; 47 L. J., Ch., 235; 38 L. T., N. S., 58; 26 W. R. 278.

An aunt made a bequest in trust for such of her four nephews and nieces as should be living at the expiration of twelve months after the death of their mother, and the issue then living, who should attain the age of twenty-one years, of any of the nephews and nieces who should have died before the expiration of twelve months:—Held, on the construction of the will, that there was no period of distribution fixed except by the gift to the class; and, that as the members of the class might not ascertained until the expiration of more than twenty-one years from the death of the mother, the whole bequest failed. Ib.

7. A bequest of the residue after the death of the testator's wife to the testator's children then living, and such issue then living of any children then deceased as should attain the age of twenty-three as tenants in common according to the stocks and not to the individual objects, and so that the issue of deceased children might take by way of substitution the shares of their respective parents, is void for remoteness. Smith v. Smith, 5 L. R., Ch., 342; 18 W. R. 742.

1. Gift on trust for A. for life, and after her death for all her children who should attain twenty-one, and the issue of such of them as should die under that age leaving issue, "which issue shall afterwards attain the age of twenty-one years, or die under that age, leaving issue at his, her, or their decease or respective deceases, as tenants in common if more than one, but such issue to take only the share or shares which his, her, or their parent or parents respectively would have taken if living." None of the children of A. died under twenty-one leaving issue:—Held, that the whole gift was not void as infringing the rule against perpetuities, but that it might be severed, and the shares only would be void as to which the specified event happened. Re Moseley, 11 L. R., Eq., 499; 40 L. J., Ch., 275; 24 L. T., N. S., 260; 19 W. R. 431.

2. In ascertaining whether a bequest falls within the rule against remoteness, the words of the testator are first to be taken, and their meaning determined; and it is then to be considered whether that meaning brings them within the operation of the rule. Pearks v. Moseley, 5 L. R., App. Cas., 714; 50 L. J., Ch., 57; 43 L. T. 449; 20 W. R. 1. Affirming S. C. nom. Re Moseley's Trusts, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 555; 27 W. R. 896; 41 L. T. 9.

The vice of remoteness affects a class as a whole, if it may affect an unascertained number of its members. Ib.

Per the Lord Chancellor (Lord Selborne):—In a devise to a class, if all the shares would necessarily be ascertained within due limits of time, it would be immaterial that in a later part of the will there were found, as to some particular shares, superadded conditions which might or might not be void by reason of remoteness. Ib.

A will contained a bequest of a particular sum of 3,000*l.* to the testator's daughter and her husband for life, and after their deaths "My will is that the sum of 3,000*l.*, the securities for the same and the produce thereof, shall be in trust for all the children of my said daughter who shall attain the age of twenty-one years, and the lawful issue of such of them as shall die under that age, leaving lawful issue at his, her, or their decease or respective deceases, which issue shall afterwards attain the age of twenty-one years, or die under that age leaving issue at his, her, or their decease or deceases respectively, as tenants in common if more than one, but such issue to take only the share or shares which his, her, or their parent or parents respectively would have taken if living." A life interest in another sum of 3,000*l.* was given to the son with exactly the same trusts for his issue; in default, over:—Held, that the bequest was void for remoteness. Ib.

Held, also, that the bequest being to a class, the parts of it could not be severed, so as to treat one portion as good, though the other was void. Ib.

Hale v. Hale (3 L. R., Ch. D., 643) approved. Ib.

3. By a deed-poll S. declared that his trustees should hold the money to be received on certain policies on his life upon trust after the death or second marriage of his wife, to pay the fund between "all and every the child or children of S. by his wife equally to be divided if more than one . . . the share or shares of such of them as shall be a son or sons to belong to and be an interest vested and payable to him or them at his or their respective ages of twenty-five, and the share or shares of . . . . daughter or daughters to become vested but not payable upon her or their attaining twenty-one or day of marriage." The income of shares not vested was to be applied in maintenance of the children presumptively entitled thereto:—Held, that the gift was to a class, and that the invalidity of the gift to the sons made the whole gift void. Re Stark, 21 W. R. 165.

6. Gift to an Individual and a Class.

4. Testator gave annuities to his widow and son, and directed the surplus of his personal estate, and the rents of his real estate, to be invested in stock, and the dividends to be accumulated, and to be and remain assets for improvement, in the hands of his executors, until the time and times should arrive when distribution should be made, as thereby directed. The testator then directed his real estates to be sold after the decease of the survivor of his wife and son, and the proceeds to be invested in stock, and the dividends to be accumulated, to be and remain assets for improvement in the hands of his executors, for the benefit of his grandchildren and his nephew T. O., and to be distributed as they should become of the age of twenty-five years. The testator had two grandchildren born in his lifetime, both of whom died infants, one in his lifetime and the other after his death. Another grandchild was born after the testator's death, who was an infant when the bill was filed. T. O. survived the testator and attained twenty-five:—Held, that the bequest was void for remoteness. Porter v. Fox, 6 Sim. 485.

5. Freehold and leasehold estates were devised upon trust, after certain trusts that failed, to receive the rents and pay them for the benefit of the testator's daughter's son R., and all other sons she should leave, until he and they should attain the age of twenty-five years; and on attaining that age, in trust for the heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of the said R., and all other such sons as the daughter should leave who should attain the age of twenty-five years; but if the daughter should leave no sons, or they should die without attaining that age, then in trust for other objects:—Held, that the gift to R. and the other sons of the testator's daughter was well vested in them, though liable to be divested in case of death under the age of twenty-five. James v. Wynford (Lord), 1 Sm. & G. 40; 17 Jur. 17; 22 L. J., Ch., 450; 1 W. R. 61.

Observations on Porter v. Fox (6 Sim. 485) how far it is consistent with Leake v. Robinson (2 Meriv. 203). Ib.

V. GIFTS TO UNBORN TENANTS FOR LIFE AND GIFTS OVER.

6. A limitation to an unborn child for life is not good, unless the remainder vests in interest at the same time. A testatrix after expressing her desire that certain stock should remain in the 3 per cents. for ever, bequeathed the dividends to her seven children for their lives, with survivorship among them, and directed that after the decease of all of them, their children should succeed to the annuity of their deceased parent, and that after the decease of the seven children's children, the dividends of the stock should devolve in annuities upon the lawful heirs of the testatrix:—Held, that all the gifts were void except the life interest given to the seven children. Hayes v. Hayes, 4 Russ. 311; 6 L. J., Ch., 141.

1. A testator gave a fund to his four brothers and sisters for life, with remainder to their children for life, with benefit of survivorship, "and from and immediately after the decease of the survivor of the said children of my said brothers and sisters," then over:—Held, that the gift over was void, and the corpus (subject to the prior gifts to the testator's brothers and sisters, and their children) belonged to the next-of-kin. Cooke v. Bowler, 2 Keen 54; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 250.

2. A bequest of personal estate to unborn issue as tenants for life, and to the executors, administrators, and assigns of the survivor of the unborn issue, gives an absolute interest to the survivor, and is not too remote. Avern v. Lloyd, 5 L. R., Eq., 383; 37 L. J., Ch., 489; 16 W. R. 669; 18 L. T., N. S., 282.

3. After a gift to an unborn person for life, there may be a good gift over if it vests within lives in being and twenty-one years. Stuart v. Cockerell, 7 L. R., Eq., 363; 38 L. J., Ch., 473; 20 L. T., N. S., 513. Affirmed 39 L. J., Ch., 729; 5 L. R., Ch., 713; 18 W. R. 1057; 23 L. T., N. S., 442.

Gift after the death of an unborn tenant for life to all the children of A., a living person, share and share alike, and the child or children of such of the said children as shall be then dead, according to the Statute of Distributions; but in case there shall be no child or grandchildren of A. then living, then over. This is not an original gift to the children of A. vesting at birth, with a mere invalid substitutionary gift to their children, but is an original gift to children and grandchildren living at the decease of the unborn tenant for life, and therefore too remote, and void. Ib.

4. A father devised his freehold and copyhold estates to trustees, upon trust to pay the income to his unmarried daughter during her life, and after her decease, if she should marry and have children, to her children during their lives, and in like manner to their children, each family taking among them their father's or mother's shares. On a petition by the daughter, who was unmarried:—Held, that the limitation to her unborn children was not void for remoteness. Hampton v. Holman, 46 L. J., Ch., 248; 25 W. R. 459; 36 L. T., N. S., 287; 5 L. R., Ch. D., 183.

5. A testator, after directing his trustees to receive the rents of his estates and to pay them in the support of his daughter M. G., and in the maintenance of all her children which she should from time to time have living, in equal shares, afterwards directed that from and immediately after the youngest of his grandchildren should have attained twenty-one, the rents should be paid to and amongst his said grandchildren, and the issue of any of them that should die leaving issue; and after the decease of the longest liver of his grandchildren, he directed his trustees to convey or dispose of his estates amongst the grandchildren of his daughter:—Held, that the gift included all children of M. G. who should be born at any time until some child should attain the age of twenty-one:—Held, that the children of M. G. took life estates as tenants in common, but without any benefit of survivorship; and that all the other trusts were void for remoteness. Gooch v. Gooch, 1 W. R. 191; 14 Beav. 565; 15 Jur. 1165; 21 L. J., Ch., 238. Affirmed 22 L. J., Ch., 1089; 3 De G. M. & G. 366.

6. A testatrix bequeathed stock to trustees in trust for her brother R.-G. for life, and after his decease in trust for his son J. R.-G., for life, and after the decease of both of them, upon trust for any immediate or direct descendants of her said brother or nephew, who should bear the name of R.-G., for life, and from and after his or her decease, or in case of failure of any such immediate or direct descendants of her said brother or nephew, who should bear that name, upon trust for certain charities, with a condition of forfeiture on abandoning the name of R.-G. Both R.-G. and his son J. R.-G. survived the testatrix, and J. R.-G. survived R.-G., but died without ever having had any issue. At the death of J. R.-G. the only descendant of R.-G., who bore the name of R.-G., was a descendant in the female line, C. G. R.-G., and he had assumed the name of R.-G. by royal licence after the death of R.-G.:—Held, that the gift to descendants was not confined to those whose family name or birth name was R.-G., but included descendants who assumed that name. That the gift to descendants was void for remoteness, and that the gift, as well to the charities as to the descendant who had assumed the name of R.-G., failed. Re Roberts, Repington v. Roberts, 45 L. T. 450; 19 L. R., Ch. D., 520. Affirming, on this point, 50 L. J., Ch., 265; 44 L. T. 300.

But held, that the intention of the testatrix was not that the descendants described should take singly and successively, but as a class for life, that C. G. R.-G. being the only member of the class, took the whole for life, and that the gift over to the charities was not void for remoteness, but took effect on the death of C. G. R.-G. Ib. Reversing on this point 50 L. J., Ch., 265; 44 L. T. 300.

7. A testator gave to A. an annuity of 50*l.* per annum for her life, and after her decease to the children she might have, born in wedlock, equally to be divided between them during their lives, and, after the decease of the survivor, to go to his nephew and his two nieces equally between them. A. having died without issue:—Held, that the gift to the nephew and nieces was not void for remoteness, and that they took the capital from whence the annuity proceeded absolutely, in equal shares, as tenants in common. Evans v. Walker, 3 L. R., Ch. D., 211; 25 W. R. 7.

8. A testator, by will in 1819, devised freehold and copyhold estates to trustees, after the death of all his three children except one, in case there should be no issue of such deceased children, or being such, they should all die, to pay the rents to such one only child for life, and after the death of such surviving child, in the event aforesaid, leaving lawful issue, then to pay and divide the rents unto and among the children of such surviving child so dying, if more than one; and in case there should be but one child of such surviving child living at his or her death, or in case there should be more than one, and they should all except one depart this life, then, so soon as such event should happen, absolutely to convey the estates in fee to such only or surviving child of the survivor of his children so dying, on his or her attaining twenty-one, and in the meantime to apply the rents for his or her benefit:—Held, that this was a gift to the surviving children of the testator's surviving child for life, in equal shares as tenants in common, with remainder to the survivor of those children in fee; and that the remainder in fee was void for remoteness, and passed as undisposed of to the heir-at-law. Garland v. Brown, 10 L. T., N. S., 292.

1. A testatrix by will, dated in 1845, limited to a daughter an exclusive power of appointment by will amongst her children. The daughter, by her will, dated in 1874, in exercise of the power, appointed the fund amongst the objects of the power in certain shares, giving to two of her daughters life interests only, and declared that if either during her life or after her death any son or daughter of hers should marry a person who did not profess the Jewish religion, or was not born a Jew though converted to Judaism, or should forsake the Jewish and adopt the Christian or any other religion, then such son or daughter should forfeit all share in the fund, and in case of forfeiture the forfeited share was to accrue and go over to the other or others of the children living at the time of the forfeiture. Julius, a son of the appointor, married a Christian in his mother's lifetime, but without her consent. The plaintiff, one of the two daughters of the appointor, to whom a life interest only was appointed, became a Christian after the mother's death. Both Julius and the plaintiff were born after the death of the creator of the power:—Held, first, the forfeiture clause was not void as against public policy: secondly, that it was effectual as to the shares of children marrying Christians or becoming Christians during the lifetime of the appointor, and therefore that the share of Julius was forfeited: thirdly, that the forfeiture clause must be read in conjunction with the gift over, and therefore that so far as it affected, after the death of the appointor, the share of a child born after the death of the creator of the power, it was void for remoteness, whether such share was appointed for life only or absolutely, and consequently that the plaintiff had not forfeited her share. Hodgson v. Halford, 11 L. R., Ch. D., 959; 48 L. J., Ch., 548; 27 W. R. 545.

VI. GIFTS TO PERSONS ANSWERING A PARTICULAR DESCRIPTION AND SETTLEMENT OF HEIRLOOMS.

2. A. devises an advowson to the first or other son of B. that should be bred a clergyman, and be in holy orders, in fee; but in case B. should have no such son, then to C. in fee. Both devises are void, as depending on too remote a contingency; therefore, though B. dies without having a son, the heir-at-law of the the devisor, and not C., is entitled. Proctor v. Bath and Wells (Bishop), 2 H. Bl. 358.

3. A., having issue several sons, the eldest non compos, created a term for years, and by another deed declared the trust thereof to his second son, and the heirs male of his body, remainders to his other sons, provided that if his eldest son died without issue, or not leaving his wife enceinte with child, living the second son, then the said term to remain to the third son, and the heirs male of his body, with like limitations to the other sons: the eldest son died without issue, living the second; this limitation to the third son was held good by Lord Nottingham, contra the opinion of the three chief justices who assisted him. Duke of Norfolk's case, 3 Ch. Ca. 1. This decree was reversed by North, C. S. (see 1 Vern. 163); but upon appeal to the Lords, Lord North's decree was reversed, and Lord Nottingham's established. Note, executory devises and limitations of the trust of a term are governed alike. And see Massenburgh v. Ash, 1 Vern. 235.

4. Testator gave 1,000*l.* to M. and the issue of her body, and in default of such issue he gave the said 1,000*l.* to be equally divided between the daughters then living of J. and E. his wife. This devise takes in daughters of J. and E. born after the testator's death, and therefore the limitation is too remote. Jee v. Audley, 1 Cox 324.

5. Where a testator by will gave his personalty in trust to pay the dividends to the children and grandchildren of A., who should not from time to time be entitled under a previous devise to the rents of the freeholds, but by a codicil directed that the children of B. and C. living at the death of A. should "take their shares" of the personalty with the representatives of A.:—Held, upon the will and codicil taken together, that the children and grandchildren intended were all those who should be living at the death of A., and that the bequest was not too remote. Harvey v. Harvey, 5 Beav. 131. And see 4 id. 215.

6. A testator, being entitled to leasehold premises for terms of years, bequeathed them to trustees, on trust to permit his grandson B. to take the profits thereof during his life, and after his decease to permit such person who, for the time being, would take by descent as heir male of the body of the said B., his grandson, to take the profits thereof until some such person should attain the age of twenty-one years, and then to convey the same to such person so attaining that age, his executors, administrators, and assigns; but if no such person should live to attain the age of twenty-one, then in trust to permit such person and persons successively who for the time being would take by descent as heirs male of the body of the testator's son, father of B., to take the profits of the same leasehold premises until one of them should attain the age of twenty-one, and then to convey the same to such heir male first attaining that age, his executors, administrators, and assigns. At the death of B., the grandson, his son and heir A. had attained the age of twenty-one, and entered into possession of the leasehold premises. Upon a bill filed against him by the next-of-kin of the testator —Held, that A. had not a good title to the leaseholds; that the bequest to the heir male of the grandson attaining twenty-one was void for remoteness, and therefore that the next-of-kin of the testator at his death became entitled to their distributive shares of the property on the death of the grandson. Dungannon (Lord) v. Smith, 12 Cl. & F. 546; 10 Jur. 721. Affirming S. C. nom. Smith v. Dungannon (Lord), Fl. & K. 638; 1 Dr. & War. 543. n.; 5 Ir. Eq. R. 84.

1. A testator bequeathed leaseholds to trustees, in trust to apply the rents for the maintenance of his grandson, A. T., until he should attain twenty-one; and then to permit A. T. to take the rents and profits for his life; and from and after his decease to permit the person who for the time being would take by descent as heir male of the body of the said A. T., to take the rents and profits thereof until some such person should attain the age of twenty-one years, and then to convey the same to such person on attaining the age of twenty-one years. Semble, that all the limitations after that to A. T. for his life, were void for remoteness. Ker or Kerr v. Dungannon (Lord), 1 Dr. & War. 509; 1 Con. & L. 335; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 343.

When the first limitation is void, all those following it are void also. Ib.

2. Testator devised his reversion in fee expectant on his decease without issue male in his mansion-house and estates at D. to his brother for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, with divers remainders over, and he bequeathed his plate, pictures, etc., in and about his mansion-house at D. to trustees in trust to permit the same to be used and enjoyed by the person or persons who for the time being should be entitled to the possession of his mansion-house under the settlement on his marriage or the limitations contained in his will, until a tenant in tail of the age of twenty-one years should be in possession of his mansion-house, and then the plate, pictures, etc., were to go and belong to such tenant in tail, and he gave the residue of his personal estate to the person who at his decease would be beneficially entitled in possession to his mansion-house. The testator's brother had a son born at the date of the will, and both he and his son survived the testator: —Held, that the trust declared of the plate, pictures, etc., was void for remoteness, so far as it intended to take effect after the death of the brother. Ibbetson v. Ibbetson, 5 Myl. & C. 26; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 49. Affirming 10 Sim. 495; 4 Jur. 408.

3. Plaintiff's father, upon marriage of daughters, demises estate to trustees upon trusts, for raising certain sums, which are settled upon daughters and their children, and by will, after charging estate with other sums to be settled upon same trusts with portions for sons, and with further sum in discharge of mortgage of another estate, he devises it to other trustees upon trust, from time to time to receive rents, etc., and to invest same in purchase of stock, so as to accumulate and form a fund for payment of aforesaid charges; and after same should have been raised and paid, upon trust to pay net rents, etc., unto or for benefit of such person of his own name, etc., as for time being should succeed to and be vested with his title and dignity of baronet, to end that his said estate might be continued in his name, etc., and be enjoyed and go along with his title, so long as rules of law and equity would permit; but if upon failure of issue male of his body there should not be any person who should be entitled to enjoy his title, upon trust to stand seised of estate, for benefit of person or persons who should be his right heir or heirs at law, and to convey and assure same accordingly:—Held, that trust for accumulation was good, and that plaintiff, succeeding baronet, took vested estate for life. Bacon v. Proctor, T. & R. 31.

4. Gift upon trust to wife for life, and then to use of son for life, and after death of survivor upon trust for such persons as should, from time to time, be Lord V., etc.:—Held, not an executory trust, but a direct gift to each Lord V. successively, and that all living at testator's death who might become Lord V. took a vested interest. Deerhurst v. St. Albans, 5 Madd. 232.

5. V., by his will, bequeathed to trustees all his household goods, furniture, pictures, books, linen, etc., upon trust, to permit his wife to have the use of them during her life, and upon her death, to permit his son, A. B., to have the use of the same goods, etc., for his life; and upon the decease of the survivor of his wife and son, should be possessed, etc., in trust for such persons as should from time to time be Lord V., it being his will, that the goods, etc., after the decease of his wife, should from time to time go and be held and enjoyed with the title of the family, as far as the rules of law and equity would permit: —Held, that the limitation over was void, as being too remote, and that the estate vested absolutely in the eldest son of A. B., grandson of the testator, who was living at the date of his death. Tollemache v. Coventry (Earl), 8 Bli. N. S. 547; 2 Cl. & F. 611.

6. Although the words in a will "as far as the rules of law or equity will permit" will not correct a gift which in terms infringes the rule against perpetuity, they may be fairly referred to when a construction warranted by the words used is impugned on the ground of inconsistency with the intention of the testator. Harrington (Countess) v. Harrington (Earl), 3 L. R., Ch., 564; 37 L. J., Ch., 593; 16 W. R. 742; 19 L. T., N. S., 38.

7. G. devised freeholds for the use of his nephew for life, with remainder to the use of his first and other sons in tale male, with successive remainders over for life, and remainders to the first and other sons of the successive tenants for life in tail male; and he bequeathed his residuary personal estate upon such trusts as were thereby declared concerning the devised freehold hereditaments, "or as near thereto as the rules of law and equity would permit; provided, nevertheless, that such residuary personal estate should not vest absolutely in any tenant in tail, unless such person should attain the age of twenty-one years":—Held, that the proviso merely narrowed the class who would have taken under the previous words of gift, and did not extend such class to tenants in tail by descent; and, therefore, the personalty vested only in tenants in tail by purchase, and the gift was not void for remoteness. Christie v. Gosling, 1 L. R., H. L., 279; 35 L. J., Ch., 667; 15 L. T., N. S.,

40. Affirming S. C. nom. Gosling v. Gosling, 1 De G. J. & S. 1; 9 Jur., N. S., 109; 32 L. J., Ch., 233; 7 L. T., N. S., 579; 1 N. R. 36; 11 W. R. 97. Reversing 10 W. R. 785; 7 L. T., N. S., 490; 32 Beav. 58; 8 Jur., N. S., 1048.

Held, also, that the words "as near as the rules of law and equity will permit," would not by their own force have controlled the construction. Ib.

1. The phrase "estate tail in possession" does not necessarily mean actual possession, but may be construed as meaning entitled to a vested estate tail in the property, though it may be vested in remainder and the party entitled may not be in actual possession, a previous life estate existing at the time. Martelli v. Holloway, 5 L. R., H. L., 532.

There may be a particular clause in a will which on one construction appears to offend against the law relating to perpetuities, but, if it is fairly capable of another construction which avoids that objection, the latter construction will be preferred, especially if it is found to be in accordance with the general intention of the will. Ib.

A father devised and bequeathed real and personal estates in trust for the eldest son then living of his the testator's daughter C. for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail, with like remainder to the other sons of C., with divers remainders over, and an ultimate remainder to his right heirs and next-of-kin. The will then provided that such person or persons as should thereunder be entitled to an estate tail in possession in the real estate should not be absolutely entitled to the leasehold and personal estates until he, she, or they respectively should attain the age of twenty-one, and that the leasehold and personal estates should absolutely belong only to such person or persons as should first attain the age of twenty-one, and become entitled to an estate tail in possession in his real estate under the trusts therein aforesaid, and in the meantime the leasehold and personal estates should remain subject to the trusts thereinbefore declared:—Held, that the words "in possession" in the proviso in the will did not mean the actual receipt of the rents and profits of the real estate, and that the proviso included only tenants in tail by purchase and was valid, and that the tenant in tail entitled by purchase who first attained the age of twenty-one, although in the lifetime of the tenant for life, was absolutely entitled (subject to his father's life interest) to the leasehold and personal estates. S. C. 42 L. J., Ch., 26.

2. A testator devised real estate unto and to the use of trustees, their heirs, and assigns, upon trust to permit his wife to receive the rents during her life; and, after her decease, subject to certain trusts for accumulating the rents in the meantime so long as the same could legally operate, to stand possessed of the said real estate in trust for the youngest grandson of A. who should be living at the decease of his wife, and should then have attained, or should live to attain, the age of twenty-five years, for life; and, after his decease, upon trust for his first and other sons in tail male. The widow of the testator died in 1879. At that time the youngest grandson of A. had attained twenty-one, but had not attained twenty-five:—Held, that there being no words in the will which would have the effect of vesting the property in the youngest grandson before he attained twenty-five, this gift was void for remoteness. Patching v. Barnett, 51 L. J., Ch., 74; 45 L. T. 292. Affirming 49 L. J., Ch., 665; 43 L. T. 50; 28 W. R. 836.

3. The testatrix, Miss R., had a brother, a widower advanced in life, who had assumed the name of R. G., and had two children, one a bachelor of unsound mind, the other a daughter. By her will she bequeathed a fund to trustees in trust to pay the income to her brother for life, then to his son for life, and from and after the decease of both of them, upon trust to pay the income "for life unto any immediate or direct descendants of my said brother or nephew who shall bear the name of R. G. only, and from and after his or her decease, or in case of failure of any such immediate or direct descendants of my said brother or nephew who shall bear the name of R. G. only," upon trust for certain specified charitable societies. There was a clause for determining the interests of any descendants who, after becoming entitled to the receipt of the income, should abandon the name of R. G. Before the death of the nephew, a son born after the death of the testatrix, of the daughter of the testatrix's brother, assumed by royal licence the name of R. G., and at the decease of the survivor of the brother and nephew there was no other descendant of either of them who bore that name:—Held, that the gift was not, as in Leigh v. Leigh (15 Ves. 92), confined to persons entitled to the name of R. G. by birth, and that the brother's grandson, as he bore the name of R. G. at the determination of the life interests, was entitled for life, and that on his decease the gift to the charities would take effect. Re Roberts, Rovington v. Roberts-Gawen, 19 L. R., Ch. D., 520; 45 L. T. 450.

Held, by Hall, V.-Ch. (50 L. J., Ch., 265; 44 L. T. 300), that the trusts subsequent to the life interests of the brother and nephew were void for remoteness, and that on the determination of those interests the fund fell into the residue. But held, on appeal, that the limitations after the life interests were not void for remoteness. Ib.

Held, that the limitation to descendants was a gift for life to descendants living at the determination of the life interests and bearing the name of R. G. as joint tenants. Ib.

4. A testator bequeathed to his executors and trustees all his personal estate (except such goods as were by his will especially bequeathed, and also except his leasehold estates, which he declared it to be his intention to exonerate from the payment of his debts and legacies), upon trust, in the first place, to pay his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and legacies; and in case there should be any residue of his personal estate (except as aforesaid), he gave the same to his son R. And after giving certain specific legacies, the testator gave all his freehold hereditaments to the same trustees, upon trust for his said son R. for life, with remainder to his grandson W. for life, with divers remainders over in tail. And the testator gave all his leasehold estates to the same trustees, in trust to permit the clear rents thereof to be received, taken, and enjoyed by the person for the time being entitled to the freeholds, until such person should by good assurance become seised of the freeholds in fee simple in possession; and then in trust to convey and assign the leaseholds to him:—Held, that the limitations of the leaseholds beyond the life estates of R. and W. were void for remoteness; and that the interest thus improperly attempted to be given did not belong absolutely to W. as the last tenant for life, nor did it pass by the residuary bequest to R., because the exception of the leaseholds out of the residuary gift was not simply for the purpose of making a separate bequest of them, but also to exonerate them from payment of the debts and legacies; and therefore held, that, beyond W.'s life estate, the leaseholds were undisposed of by the will, and belonged to the next-of-kin of the testator. Wainman v. Field, 1 Kay 507.

1. Testator gave his real and personal property in trust for all his children who might be living at his decease, for their lives; and in case any of the daughters should marry, he gave their shares or share upon certain trusts for their husbands and children after them, and in default of any such child or children he gave such shares equally among his surviving children:—Held, that the gift over of the shares applied only to the shares of daughters marrying, and that the share of one who died a spinster was undisposed of after death. Lett v. Randall, 10 Sim. 112.

VII. POWERS.

1. Creation of Powers of Appointment, 5644.
2. Creation of Powers of Sale, Leasing, or Management, 5645.
3. Execution of. See IV. supra—POWER, XVI.

1. Creation of Powers of Appointment.

2. Settlement on husband and wife for lives, remainder to sons in tail male, remainder to daughters in tail, remainder to survivor of husband and wife in fee, with power to wife if husband survived, and all the children of marriage died without issue, to charge estate with 5,000*l.*:—Held, that power is too remote and void. Bristow v. Boothby, 2 Sim. & S. 465; 4 L. J., Ch., 87.

3. Real estate was devised, in 1878, to the son-in-law of the testator for his life, remainder to his daughter, the wife of such son-in-law, for her life, remainder to her first and other sons successively in tail, remainder to her daughters as tenants in common in tail, with cross-remainders between them; and, in default of such issue of his daughters, to such person or persons as she should, by deed or will, appoint. In 1841 the daughter, the donee of the power, executed a deed-poll of appointment, which, reciting the limitations of the estate by the will, that she had not any issue of her body, and that she was desirous of exercising the power subject to the life interest of her husband and herself, as thereinafter mentioned, "and there being a failure of issue of her," the said donee of the power, the estate should go, remain, and be unto and to the use of the plaintiff, his heirs and assigns for ever:—Held, that this was a good appointment of the estate under the power; that the words "and there being a failure of issue of," etc., must be read either parenthetically, or as applying to the time of the death of the survivor of the donee of the power and her husband; that the construction that the donee might have intended to appoint, or to reserve a power to appoint, to the female descendants of sons, or to give such descendants the chance of taking by descent, would be merely conjectural, and, moreover, was excluded by the express language of the will creating the power, which made no provisions for female descendants of male issue, and was rebutted by the great age of the donee, who was then without any issue; that the title of the plaintiff under the appointment was one which the Court, in a suit for specific performance, would compel the purchaser to take. Eno v. Eno, 6 Hare 171; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 358; 11 Jur. 746.

4. By a marriage settlement, the trustees were directed, after the decease of the survivor of the husband and wife, to convey, assign, and deliver the settled property to such children or child of the marriage, or the lawful issue of such, who should or might be living at the decease of the survivor, and who should attain twenty-one, to whom the husband and wife should jointly appoint, or to whom the survivor of them should appoint; and in default of appointment, to permit the property to be held and enjoyed by and equally between all the children of the marriage and the survivors of them, and the lawful issue of such children or child so surviving the husband and wife, and attaining twenty-one, such issue representing and taking the share that the parent would have taken, if living:—Held, that the words in the clause creating the power, "who shall or may be living at the decease of the survivor," referred to the children of the marriage, and not to their issue; and therefore that clause exceeded the limits prescribed by law, and consequently that an appointment made to the son of a daughter of the marriage was void. Thomas v. Thomas, 14 Sim. 234.

5. Residue of testator's real and personal estate was given to J. upon trust to divide it in moieties, and to pay the income of one moiety to J. for life, with a direction out of such moiety to set apart a sum of 5,000*l.* to be held by trustees upon trust for X. or such of his children as to J. or other the testators should seem meet; and when X. and all his children should be dead, then the above sum to be subject to the same trusts as declared of the other moiety of the residue. The testator appointed J. his sole executor, and his will contained a power to appoint new trustees. J. being anxious to appoint 3,000*l.* part of the 5,000*l.* absolutely in favour of X.:—Held, that the power to advance the 5,000*l.* was not void for remoteness; that the power might properly be divided into two distinct powers—one vested in J., the other in the succeeding trustees, in default of J.'s exercising the power; that J. had clearly the right to exercise the power, whether the succeeding trustees had or not. Attenborough v. Attenborough, 1 Kay & J. 296.

1. A power of appointment is badly created, where it is possible that the exact composition of the class of persons among whom appointment is to be made may not be ascertained till after the period fixed by the rule against perpetuities, even though the extreme limits of the class must be ascertained within that period. E. B. by her will, after giving certain annuities out of the rental of a wharf, and directing the surplus rental to be accumulated for the purpose of paying off two mortgages upon the wharf, directed her executors that after payment of the annuities and discharge of the mortgages, they were to sell the wharf and divide the proceeds among such of her grandchildren as might then be surviving, and in such proportions as C. H. might by her will appoint:—Held, that, since the annuities and mortgages might not be finally paid off until after the period fixed by the rule against perpetuities, and the class of grandchildren among whom C. H. was to appoint would not be ascertained till that event had happened, the power of appointment was badly created, though all the grandchildren must be born within the prescribed period. Re Blight, Blight v. Hartnoll, 45 L. T. 524; 19 L. R., Ch. D., 294; 51 L. J., Ch., 162; 30 W. R. 513.

2. A power to appoint is not bad because it may be so exercised as to render the appointment void as being too remote. Slark v. Dakyns, 10 L. R., Ch., 35; 44 L. J., Ch., 205; 31 L. T., N. S., 712.

2. Creation of Powers of Sale, Leasing, and Management.

3. Leasehold estates bequeathed in trust, to pay the rents and profits to the persons for the time being entitled under the limitations of real estate devised in strict settlement, with power to trustees at any time, with consent of the persons so entitled, or if minors at their own discretion, to sell and invest the produce in real estate to the same uses. The leasehold estates vest absolutely in the tenant in tail upon his birth, and the power is void. Ware v. Polhill, 11 Ves. 257. See also Powis v. Capron, 4 Sim. 138. n.

4. A power of sale is not void, although the exercise of it is not expressly confined within the limit of perpetuity. Biddle v. Perkins, 4 Sim. 135.

5. Testator devised his estates to trustees in trust for his brothers first, and other sons successively, in fee; but so that the estate and interest of each of them should cease in favour of his next brother on his dying under twenty-one, and without leaving issue living at his death; and if all of them should die under that age, and without leaving issue living at their deaths, in trust for the person who should then be his heir absolutely. And he empowered the trustees of his will for the time being to sell the estate at any time after his decease, and at their sole discretion:—Held, that the power of sale was valid. Nelson v. Callow, 15 Sim. 353.

6. A power of sale, to be exercised during the continuance of successive estates tail, is good. Waring v. Coventry, 1 Myl. & K. 249.

7. Whatever objections may exist to an indefinite power of sale, on the ground of its tending to a perpetuity, such objections will not prevent the valid exercise of the power during the continuance of limitations, which are within the prescribed legal limits, semble. Wood v. White, 4 Myl. & C. 460; 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 209; 3 Jur. 117; 2 Keen 664; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 203.

8. Trusts for sale on failure of a series of prior limitations:—Held, on the context, to be too remote. Hale v. Pew, 25 Beav. 335.

9. An estate was devised to trustees for different persons in fifth shares, some of which shares were given to living persons absolutely, and the others to living persons for life, with remainder to their children in fee. An unlimited power of sale over the whole estate was given to trustees:—Held, that this power of sale was valid, and could be exercised over the whole estate, so long as any of the trusts of any of the shares remained to be performed. Taite v. Swinstead, 26 Beav. 525; 5 Jur., N. S., 1019.

10. A father, on the marriage of his daughter, in 1806, settled real estate upon trusts for her separate use for life, with remainder, in case she survived her husband (which event happened), to her children, as tenants in common in tail, and limited the reversion to himself in fee. The settlement contained a collateral power of sale, not in terms restricted as to time. In 1850, the daughter's issue being spent, and she being a widow, and more than seventy, the trustees executed a deed purporting to be made in exercise of the power, and to be a conveyance of the fee simple:—Held, first, that the power was valid, and subsisting at the date of the deed of 1850. Lantsbery v. Collier, 2 Kay & J. 709; 25 L. J., Ch., 672; 4 W. R. 826.

Held, secondly, that it was well exercised by that deed, although, under the trusts of the settlement, the effect of its exercise was to change the devolution of the property, passing it, in the events which had happened, to the daughter absolutely. Ib.

Observations on Ware v. Polhill (11 Ves. 257), and review of the authorities respecting collateral powers of sale, not in terms restricted as to time. The Court looks to the whole intent and purpose of the settlement, and, whether the reversion or remainder in fee simple be limited after estates tail or after estates for life, will hold the power to be valid and subsisting until the estates tail (if any) are barred, or the fee simple vested in possession; in either of which events the purpose of the settlement is spent, and the power ceases. Ib.

11. A testator directed his trustees, after the death of the longest liver of his son, his daughter, and any widow whom the son might leave, to sell his real estate and to stand possessed of the proceeds and of the rents and profits until sale, upon trust to pay and apply them "unto and equally amongst all and every the child and children of my son W. and daughter M., share and share alike, and the lawful issue of such of them as may be then dead leaving issue, such issue to be entitled to no more than their parent or respective parents would have been if living." He directed that if his daughter's son then living should die without leaving issue, or, leaving issue, all of them should die under age and unmarried, the trustees should pay the share which would have been payable to him under the above trusts to the children of J.; and that if the testator's son died without leaving issue, or all of them died under age and unmarried, the trustees should pay the share which would have been payable to them under the trusts aforesaid, to the children of J. and M. The heir-at-law claimed the corpus as undisposed of, on the ground that the disposition of the proceeds of sale was void for remoteness as being a gift to a class not ascertainable till at or after the death of the son's widow, who might be a person unborn at the testator's death:—Held, that the gift was not a gift to such children of the son and daughter as should be living at the period of distribution and the issue of such of them as should be then dead, but a gift to all the children of the son and daughter, with a gift over by way of substitution of the shares of such of them as might die before the period of distribution leaving issue; that when the gift over of any share was void for remoteness the original gift remained unaffected, and that the heir-at-law had no title. Re Goodier, Goodier v. Johnson, 18 L. R., Ch. D., 441; 51 L. J., Ch., 369; 45 L. T. 515; 30 W. R. 449.

Leasing Power.] 1. An estate was devised in strict settlement to A. and his children (in tail), with remainder to B. and her children in like manner, with remainder to right heirs of testator; and by the will, a power of leasing was given to the trustees, to take effect during the minority of any child, who, by virtue of the will, should at any time be entitled to the possession of the estate:—Held, that the power given, though for an indefinite period, was good, as it might be barred, by recovery, by A. and his eldest son when of age. Wallis v. Freestone, 10 Sim. 225.

Power to cut Timber.] 2. By a settlement family estates were vested in trustees, upon trusts to raise moneys towards the discharge of incumbrances, and, subject thereto, upon trust for a father for life, remainder to his eldest son for life, without impeachment of waste, subject to a power thereinafter given to the trustees, remainder to the first and other sons of the son in tail male, remainder to the heirs and assigns of the father in fee. The power given to the trustees was, that it should be lawful for them at any time or times thereafter, so long as there should be any mortgages upon the estates (but, after the death of the father, not without the consent of the son, if living) to fell timber upon the estates, and to apply the proceeds in discharge of the incumbrances:—Held, that the power to the trustees was not to any extent invalid as tending to perpetuity. Briggs v. Oxford (Earl), 1 De G. M. & G. 363; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 829; 16 Jur. 558. Affirming 5 De G. & Sm. 156; 16 Jur. 53.

VIII. TERMS PRECEDENT TO ESTATE TAIL.

3. The trusts of a term, limited previous to an estate tail, for raising extra portions on the death of a party without issue, were held invalid, as tending to a perpetuity, because, the term being limited antecedently to the estate tail, it could not be defeated by a recovery. Case v. Drosier, 2 Keen 764; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 353; 1 Jur. 352.

Testator devised two estates to trustees for 500 years, and subject thereto devised one estate to his grandson A. for life, with remainder to A.'s son in tail male, with remainder to A.'s daughters in tail general, with remainder to testator's grandson B. for life, with similar remainders to B.'s issue, and devised the other estate to B. for life, with remainder to B.'s sons in tail male, with remainder to his daughters in tail general, with remainder to A. for life, with similar remainders to his issue; and he declared the trusts of the 500 years' term to be that in case either A. or B. should die without issue, whereby the survivor of them would become entitled to both estates, 2,000*l.* should be raised for each of the testator's two granddaughters. A. died, leaving a daughter, and then B. died without issue, whereupon the two estates became united in A.'s daughter; but, as both A. and B. were dead, the event of the survivor of them becoming entitled to both estates did not happen:—Held, that if it was intended that the 2,000*l.* should be payable in case of an union of both estates happening otherwise than in the lifetime of one of the two grandsons (A. and B.), such intention was too remote. S. C. on appeal, 5 Myl. & C. 246; 3 Jur. 1164.

4. A testatrix devised real estate to trustees and their heirs, upon trust, in the first place, to receive and retain out of the rents and profits a sum of 800*l.* yearly, and, subject to such annual sum, she devised the said real estate to the use of her daughter for life for her separate use, with remainder to her daughter's son, T., for life, with remainder to his first and other sons successively born during the testatrix's lifetime, for life, with remainder, after the death of each such son, to his first and other sons in tail male, with remainder to the sons of T. born after the death of the testatrix, successively in tail male, with remainder to her daughter's son R. for life, with like remainder to his sons and their issue male, with remainder to her daughter's son E. for life, with like remainder to his sons and their issue male, with like remainders to the other sons of her daughter, and the heirs male of the body of each such son, with remainder over. And the testatrix declared that her trustees should, during the continuance of the limitations given by her will to her daughter and her male issue, accumulate the aforesaid sum of 800*l.* and apply the accumulations to the discharge of incumbrances on the estate, or in the purchase of head-rents in perpetuity, or real or freehold estates in Ireland, said rents or estates to be held upon the like uses or trusts as her real estate:—Held, that the gift of the annuity of 800*l.*, and the trusts upon which it was given, were void ab initio, as transgressing the rule against perpetuities. Cochrane v. Cochrane, 11 L. R., Ir., 361.

5. A term limited, after estates for life, but antecedently to estates tail, for the purpose of raising portions on failure of the issue in tail, is void for remoteness. Sykes v. Sykes, 41

L. J., Ch., 25; 13 L. R., Eq., 56; 25 L. T., N. S., 560; 20 W. R. 90.

A testator devised hereditaments to his eldest son R. for life, with remainder to the eldest son of R. for life, with remainder to trustees for a term of 500 years upon the trusts thereinafter expressed concerning the same, and from and after the end or sooner determination of the term, and in the meantime subject to the trusts thereof, to the first and other sons successively of R., the grandson of the testator, in tail male, with remainders to the second and other sons successively of R., the son of the testator in tail male, with remainder to the testator's son N. for life, with remainders to the first and other sons successively of N. in tail male, with remainders over, and declared the trusts of the term to be that in case any one or more of his younger sons, or their respective issue, should become seised in possession by virtue of the limitations aforesaid of the hereditaments, the trustees should raise 5,000*l.* and pay the same to such of the testator's sons (except such son as should be so seised in possession) as should be then living, or their issue if dead. A great-grandson of N. became seised in possession by virtue of the limitations aforesaid of the hereditaments:—Held, that the charge of 5,000*l.* was void for remoteness. Ib.

IX. TERMS CONCURRENT WITH ESTATE TAIL.

1. Trust of term during minorities of respective tenants for life or in tail, in possession, etc., to receive and lay out rents, etc., in stock, to accumulate for such persons as should, upon expiration of such minorities or death of minors, be tenants in possession, or entitled to the rents, and of age of twenty-one, is too remote; and being void in its creation is incapable of modification, so as to establish it in the extent to which it might legally have been carried. Southampton (Lord) v. Hertford (Marquis), 2 Ves. & B. 54.

2. Testatrix, after giving real estates to trustees in trust for A. B. for life, with remainder in trust for his issue in strict settlement, directed that during the minority of any person taking any estate or interest under the limitations of the will, the rents should be received by the trustees and invested; and the interest, etc., thereof to be from time to time invested; all which securities and the accumulations were to be held by the trustees upon the same trusts, etc., as had been limited concerning the lands, so far as the different nature of the property would permit, or such of them as should be then subsisting or capable of taking effect:—Held, that this trust for accumulation was void. Turvin or Turvin v. Newcome, 5 W. R. 35; 3 Jur., N. S., 203; 3 Kay & J. 16.

3. By a settlement real estate was assured to the use of trustees for a term of 500 years, and, subject thereto, to the use of A. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, with remainder to B. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, with divers remainders over; and a power was given to the trustees during the minority of any person who should from time to time be entitled under the limitations of the settlement to the immediate freehold as tenant for life or in tail, to enter into possession of and manage the estates:—Held, that the power was void for remoteness. Floyer v. Bankes, 8 L. R., Eq., 115.

4. Case in which an account of timber felled during life of tenant for life, etc., refused on account of the power given to trustees being void, etc. Ferrand v. Wilson, 4 Hare 344; 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 41; 9 Jur. 860.

5. Devise of freehold on trust for the first and other sons successively in tail male, directing that "if any person, beneficially entitled, should be under twenty-one, the trustee should apply a competent part of the rents, etc., for his maintenance, and invest the remaining part, so as the same might accumulate, and be invested from time to time, and settled to the same uses as the devised estate:—Held, that the trust for accumulation was void. Browne v. Stoughton, 14 Sim. 369. S. C. nom. Browne v. Houghton, 15 L. J., N. S., Ch., 391; 10 Jur. 747.

6. Devise and bequest of real and personal estate on trust, to invest the rents and profits, and annual proceeds, while any person beneficially interested in the real and personal estate, by virtue of trusts afterwards declared, should be under twenty-one, for the purpose of accumulation; and subject thereto, in trust for the eldest son then living of the testator's daughter C., for life; remainder to his first and other sons, in tail, with like remainder to the other living sons of C.; with remainder to the eldest living daughter of C. for life; remainder to her first and other sons in tail, with like remainder to the other living daughters of C., remainder to every other son of C., in tail, remainder to the daughters of the testator's eldest grandson; with remainder to the daughters of his other living grandsons; remainder to the daughters of his eldest granddaughter, as tenants in common in tail, with like remainder to the daughters of his other living granddaughters; remainder to the daughters of C., as tenants in common in tail, with cross-remainders in tail: and an ultimate limitation to the testator's heir and next-of-kin; with a proviso, that such persons as should be entitled to an estate in tail in the real estate should not be absolutely entitled to the personal estate before twenty-one, which should, in the meantime, be subject to the trusts before declared: the eldest grandson, an infant, takes a vested interest for life; the trust of accumulation is void, and the infant entitled to maintenance. Marshall v. Holloway, 2 Swan. 432.

7. A testator directed a settlement to be made to certain uses, so far as the rules of law and equity would permit; he then gave certain estates to trustees for 2,000 years, and, subject thereto, to certain of his sons and their issue, in settlement; and he directed the trustees of the term to pay to any child of his body, or the issue of such, who should for the time be entitled to the rents of the estates, and who, having attained his age of twenty-one years, should be under his age of twenty-five years, an annuity, and to receive and accumulate the surplus. He then directed his trustees, during the minority of any person entitled to the actual possession of the estates, to apply a competent part of the rents and profits to the maintenance of such person, and invest and accumulate the residue; and he made the accumulations a fund to be resorted to for payment of debts:—Held, that the trusts for accumulation were void. Scarisbrick v. Skelmersdale, 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 126; 14 Jur. 562; 17 Sim. 187.

1. Devise to J. for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail male, with a proviso that if the devisees entitled to the possession of the estate shall be severally under the age of twenty-six, the trustee shall receive the rents and apply them as directed. J. died leaving a son under twenty-six; and held, the proviso was void as against him. Lade v. Holford, Ambl. 479; 3 Burr. 1416; 1 W. Bla. Rep. 428.

X. TERMS OR LIMITATIONS SUBSEQUENT TO ESTATE TAIL.

2. Proviso in a will that, in case the devisee should come into possession of the family estate, the trustees should stand seised of the devised estate to the use of the next person in remainder, valid; and the eldest son of the tenant in possession is the next person in remainder. Nicolls v. Sheffield, 2 Bro. C. C. 215.

3. A testatrix devises to A. for life, remainder to A.'s first and other sons in tail male, remainder to A.'s daughters as tenants in common in tail, with cross-remainder between them in tail; remainder to trustees for a term of years upon trusts to raise and pay such legacies as she had thereafter given, or should give by any codicil; and in subsequent part of the will, she bequeaths various legacies from and immediately after the decease and failure of issue of A.:—Held, that "failure of issue," in the gift of the legacies, must be considered "failure of such issue" as were included in the limitation of the estate, and that therefore the bequests were not too remote. Morse v. Ormonde, 1 Russ. 382; 4 L. J., Ch., 158.

4. Testator bequeathed 5,000*l.* in trust to pay the interest to his nephew John for life, remainder to John's first son for life, remainder to the principal for the children of John, and for default of such issue to pay the interest to the second and other sons of John successively and to their respective issue; and for default of issue male of John, to pay the interest to the testator's nephew Charles for life, etc., etc.:—Held, that the words in italics did not mean "if John shall never have a son," so as to make the limitation to Charles take effect by way of substitution, but that that and all the other limitations subsequent to the limitation to the first son of John were void for remoteness. Burley v. Evelyn, 16 Sim. 290; 12 Jur. 712.

5. A., having the reversion in fee of lands settled upon the marriage of B. his son, in the usual manner, devises all the lands in that settlement on failure of issue of the body of B., and for want of heirs male of his own body, to his daughter F. and the heirs of her body. This will does not give an estate tail by implication to B., the devise to F. is executory, and is void as being on too remote a contingency. Lanesborough (Lady) v. Fox, Forrest. 262.

6. When property is limited in remainder after an estate tail to trustees to sell and distribute the proceeds amongst a class to be ascertained at the determination of the estate tail, the gift of the proceeds will not be void for remoteness, even though the class may comprise individuals beyond the limits of the rule against perpetuities. Heasman v. Pearse, 41 L. J., Ch., 705; 7 L. R., Ch., 275; 20 W. R. 271; 26 L. T., N. S., 299. Reversing 11 L. R., Eq., 522; 40 L. J., Ch., 258; 24 L. T., N. S., 864; 19 W. R. 673.

XI. REMAINDERS.

Legal.] 7. Remoteness does not affect the validity of contingent remainder. Cole v. Sewell, 2 Con. & L. 344; 4 Dr. & War. 1; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 66. Affirmed 2 H. L. Ca. 186; 12 Jur. 927.

An estate was settled by deed upon A., B., and C., for life, as tenants in common, remainder to their first and other sons respectively in tail male, remainder to their daughters respectively as tenants in common in tail, remainder, "in case one or two of the said A., B., and C. should die without issue of her or their bodies, then as to the share of such one or two dying without issue, to the use of all and every the daughters of such survivors, as tenants in common in tail:—Held, that the limitation to the daughters of the survivor was a good contingent remainder, and not void for remoteness, and that the word survivors must be construed "others." Ib.

8. J. M., by his will, devised the Maytham Hall estate, being of gavelkind tenure, to trustees, upon trust to sell a competent part for the payment of debts, and subject thereto upon trust for P. M. for life, and after his decease for the first son of P. M. for life, and after his decease for the first son of such first son and the heirs male of his body, and in default of such issue, for every other son of P. M. successively for the like interests and limitations, and in default of issue of the body of P. M., or in case of his not leaving any at his decease, for T. M., for life, and after his decease for T. G. M., the eldest son of T. M., for life, and after his decease for the first son of T. G. M. and the heirs male of his body, and in default of issue of the body of the said T. G. M., for every other son of T. M. successively for the like estates and interests, and on failure of all such issue of the body of T. M., upon trust for him, his heirs, and assigns for ever. P. M. never had any children:—Held, that P. M. took an estate for life with remainder to his first unborn son, if such son had been born, and that all the remainders over were void. Held, also, that effect was to be given to the gift over to T. M. and his sons in default of issue of the body of P. M., etc., as an independent clause, and that it was consequently valid. Monypenny v. Dering, 2 De G. M. & G. 145; 17 Jur. 467; 22 L. J., Ch., 313. And see S. C. 15 Jur. 1050; 14 Jur. 1083; 7 Hare 568.

9. A testator gave a fund to his four brothers and sisters for life, with remainder to their children for life, with benefit of survivorship, "and from and immediately after the decease of the survivor of the said children of my said brothers and sisters," then over:—Held, that the gift over was void, and the corpus (subject to the prior gifts to the testator's brothers and sisters, and their children) belonged to the next-of-kin. Cooke v. Bowler, 2 Keen 54; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 250.

1. A testator devised real property in trust for his daughter E. for life, and after her death to such children as she might have, if a son or sons, who should live to the age of twenty-three, and if a daughter or daughters, who should live to the age of twenty-one, their heirs and assigns, as tenants in common. He then provided for the disposition of the property in the event of one or more of the children of E. dying leaving others or another surviving; and in case all the children of E. should die, if a son, under the age of twenty-three, or if a daughter, under the age of twenty-one, or if she had none, he gave the property to his other three children, J., S., and A., equally, with the following devise over: "In case of the death of my son, or either of my two daughters, without leaving a child, if a son, that shall live to attain the age of twenty-three, or if a daughter, who shall live to attain the age of twenty-one, I give the pa and parts such children or child would be entitled to as aforesaid unto the child or children of my son and two daughters, having issue, if a son or sons, living to attain the age of twenty-three, and if a daughter or daughters, living to attain the age of twenty-one; if two of my said last-named children have such children or child, to their, his, or her heirs and assigns, as taking in equal shares from his or her father and mother, or his, her, or their assigns." E. died, never having had a child; afterwards A. died, never having had a child; S. died, leaving seven children, who attained the prescribed ages. J. had two children, who attained the prescribed ages in his lifetime:—Held, that the devise to the children of J. and S. on the death of A. without issue was not void for remoteness, but took effect as a contingent remainder, and not as an executory devise. Doe d. Evers v. Challis, 5 Jur., N. S., 825; 7 W. R. 622; 7 H L. Ca. 531; 29 L. J., Ch., 121.

Equitable.] 2. A testator devised and bequeathed real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to pay the income to his wife during her life, and after her decease, if H. was then living, to retain the rents of the realty to their own use during his life, and to pay him the income of the personalty during his life, and after his death upon trust to convey and transfer the real and personal estate to such son of M. as should first attain the age of twenty-five years, upon condition that such son of M. as should become entitled to any property under the will should, within two years after he should so become entitled, take the name and arms of the testator. At the testator's decease M. was living and had no son who had attained twenty-five, but his eldest son attained that age during the lives of the widow and H. This son died in the lifetime of H. without having taken the name and arms of the testator:—Held, by Malins, V.-C., that although the limitation of the personal estate to the first son of M. who should attain the age of twenty-five was void for remoteness, the direction to convey the real estate to him gave him a contingent remainder which was not void for remoteness, although his estate was only equitable, the doctrine of contingent remainders being applicable to equitable as well as to legal estates; that he was not bound to take the name and arms of the testator until his estate came into possession, and that the real estate devolved upon his heir. But held, on appeal, that the limitation to such son of M. as should first attain the age of twenty-five years could not, as in Riley v. Garnett (3 De G. & Sm. 629), be treated as intended to give an immediately vested interest liable to be divested on death under twenty-five, but was a limitation contingent on the son's attaining the age of twenty-five years. Abbiss v. Burney, Re Finch, 17 L. R., Ch. D., 211; 50 L. J., Ch., 348; 44 L. T. 267; 29 W. R. 449. Reversing 49 L. J., Ch., 710; 43 L. T. 20; 28 W. R. 903.

Held, also, that when the legal estate in fee is vested in trustees under the instrument which creates the beneficial limitations, the feudal rule by which a contingent remainder fails if it does not vest before the determination of the particular estate does not apply, and that the limitation to such son of M. as should attain twenty-five years, assuming it to have been an equitable remainder, would still have been void for remoteness. Ib.

Held, also, that the direction to the trustees to convey on the death of H. did not create a contingent equitable remainder, but was an executory devise. Ib.

XII. SUCCESSIVE LIFE INTERESTS.

3. J., by will, devises his real estates to trustees, in trust for several persons for life, with remainders to their first and other sons in tail male successively; but directs his trustees, upon the birth of every son of each tenant for life, to revoke the uses before limited to their respective sons in tail male, and to limit the premises to such sons for their lives, with immediate remainders to the respective sons of such sons in tail male:—Held, that this clause of revocation and resettlement, as tending to a perpetuity, and repugnant to the estate limited, was void and of no effect. Spencer (Lord) v. Marlborough (Duke), 3 Bro. P. C. 232.

4. Testator devises his real estates to trustees, to several persons for life, with remainder to their first and other sons in tail male successively; but directs his trustees, upon the birth of every son of every tenant for life, to revoke the uses before limited to their respective sons in tail male, and to limit the premises to such sons for their lives, with immediate remainders to the respective sons of such sons in tail male:—Held, that this clause of revocation and resettlement was void, as tending to a perpetuity, and being repugnant to the estate settled. Marlborough (Duke) v. Godolphin (Earl), 1 Eden 404.

5. Power of alterations of estates tail as they were to come in esse into tenancies for life:—Held, to be void. Heath v. Heath, 2 Eden 330.

XIII. TOMBS. GIFTS FOR.

6. If an annual bequest for the repair of a tomb proceeds out of a life interest, it is not void as a perpetuity. Lloyd v. Lloyd, 2 Sim., N. S., 255; 21 L. J., N. S., Ch., 596; 16 Jur. 306.

By a codicil a testator gave the rent of a copyhold house for the benefit of his wife and A., to be applied as in his will set forth, subject to all the conditions contained in his will, share and share alike; and after the death of his wife, and A., or in default of their (his wife and A.) not fulfilling the conditions contained in his will, he gave the said house upon trust for the minister and churchwardens of St. Mary's, Chatham, to apply the rents as follows: to take 5*l.* per annum for themselves out of the rents to keep the tomb in repair; and the residue and remainder of the rent to be applied for the benefit of his nephew, and after the death of his nephew the remainder of the rent to be applied for the benefit of the Church Missionary Society. At the original hearing, the devise to the ministers and churchwardens was declared void, and they were dismissed:—Held, that this decree was conclusive against the whole of the gift to the churchwardens, and that all the trusts failed; that the widow and A. took the legal estate in the rents during their joint lives, and the life of the survivor, with remainder to the customary heir of the testator. Ib.

1. A bequest of money, the interest of which was to be applied in keeping up the tombs of the testator and of his family, is void as a perpetuity. Rickard v. Robson, Re Rickard, 31 Beav. 244; 8 Jur., N. S., 655; 31 L. J., Ch., 897; 10 W. R. 657; 7 L. T., N. S., 87.

2. A testator directed his executors to apply the income of a legacy in or towards keeping in repair certain tombs, and to pay the surplus of the yearly income to the rector of B. for the time being:—Held, that the trust for keeping in repair the tombs was void for perpetuity. Fowler v. Fowler, 10 Jur., N. S., 648; 12 W. R. 972; 33 L. J., Ch., 674; 33 Beav. 616.

Held, also, that the gift of the surplus income was void for uncertainty. Ib.

3. A gift "of the upper storey of four specific houses or shops, to be occupied by the several members and descendants of K. T. C. and L. K. W., as already proposed," i.e., as the context showed, as a family house for the use of two separate families, is void for uncertainty, and as denoting an intention to create a perpetuity. Yeap Cheah Neo v. Ong Cheng Neo, 6 L. R., P. C., 381.

A devise of "two plantations, in which the graves of the family are placed, to be reserved as the family burying place, and not to be mortgaged or sold," is void as a devise in perpetuity. Ib.

A direction that "a house for performing religious ceremonies to my late husband and myself be erected" is void; such a devise being in perpetuity, and not for a charitable use. Ib.

I. IN WHAT CASES, 5651.

II. PROCEEDINGS ON, 5652.

I. IN WHAT CASES.

1. It is not competent to the king, or rather to his responsible advisers, to refuse capriciously to put into a due course of investigation any proper question raised on a petition of right, semble. Ryves v. Wellington (Duke), 9 Beav. 579; 15 L. J., Ch., 461; 10 Jur. 697.

2. The reigning sovereign is not liable to make compensation for damage to the property to an individual occasioned by the negligence of the servants of the Crown in a preceding reign; nor, semble, even where such damage has been done in his own reign. Canterbury (Viscount) v. Att.-Gen., 1 Ph. 306; 12 L. J., Ch., 281; 7 Jur. 224.

A petition of right does not lie to recover compensation from the Crown for damage to the property of an individual, occasioned by the negligence of the servants of the Crown. Ib.

3. A., a British subject, claimed to be entitled to compensation for certain losses suffered by him through confiscation of his property in the first French revolution. The Governments of England and France entered into conventions respecting compensation to be afforded to British subjects. The English Government received all the money agreed upon between the two Governments as the amount of compensation, and undertook to satisfy all the claimants. An Act of Parliament was passed, declaring how claims were to be preferred and liquidated. A. presented a claim to commissioners appointed under the Act, and adopted the modes of proceeding provided by it; his claim was rejected. After payment of the claims which were established to the satisfaction of the commissioners, a surplus remained, which, in accordance with one of the provisions of the Act, was paid over to the Lords of the Treasury. A. proceeded to make his claim afresh under a petition of right:—Held, that he had no remedy except under the provisions of the statute. De Bode v. Reg., 3 H. L. Ca. 449.

4. An officer in military service in a colony sold his commission and settled there on the promise of a grant of "an allotment of land" at W. This promise was made verbally by the governor, and afterwards recognised by him and his successors in certain official letters and minutes, but was never performed. Subsequently the settlor consented to an allotment of land at H. being substituted for that at W. The second allotment was otherwise disposed of, and was never conveyed to him, and he was subsequently offered a third allotment at L., which he refused. He then brought an action against the Government under the Local Act to afford relief in substitution of the process by petition of right:—Held, that proceedings under this Act materially differed from ordinary actions, both in the nature of the claim and the evidence by which it may be supported:—Held, also, that the letters and minutes of the governor afforded good evidence of the fact of such a promise being given, and the agreement to settle in the colony would constitute a good consideration, if it were necessary to prove this. Damages for breach of such a promise were rightly assessed by reference to the highest value of that of which the claimant had been deprived during the breach of agreement. Robertson v. Dumaresq, 3 N. R. 587; 2 Moo. P. C., N. S., 66; 13 W. R. 280; 10 L. T., N. S., 110.

5. Demurrer allowed to a petition of right presented by a medical officer in the army claiming compensation for loss sustained by him by reason of his being deprived of an appointment alleged by him to be permanent, and compulsorily retired upon half-pay. Re Tufnell, 45 L. J., Ch., 731; 3 L. R., Ch. D., 164; 24 W. R. 915; 34 L. T., N. S., 838.

6. Where land in a colony is vested in the Queen by a colonial Act for the public purposes of the colony, the 23 & 24 Vict., c. 34 does not give jurisdiction to the Court of Chancery to entertain proceedings against the Crown as a trustee of such land present within the jurisdiction of the Court. Holmes v. Reg., 2 John. & H. 527; 8 Jur., N. S., 76; 31 L. J., Ch., 58; 5 L. T., N. S., 548; 10 W. R. 39.

By an Act of the legislature of Canada, land taken for a canal was vested in the Queen. By a second Act the land so taken was vested in the officers of the ordnance; and it was enacted that so much of the land taken as had not been used for the canal should be restored to the owners. By a third Act the lands were revested in the Queen for the purposes of the colony, and subject to future colonial legislation. To a petition of right by suppliants claiming the restoration of lands taken for the canal from their predecessors in title, but not used, a demurrer was allowed on the ground that the Courts of this country had no jurisdiction. Ib.

The fiction that the Crown is at all times present in all parts of its dominions, does not give jurisdiction to the Courts in this country, acting in personam, to entertain a petition of right in respect of lands situate in a colony, and vested in the Crown, for the purposes of the colony, by an Act of the Provincial Legislature. Ib.

7. In a suit against Her Majesty's Deputy Commissary-General for Natal, and as such representing Her Majesty's commissariat department, to recover certain moneys as the price on hire of certain waggons and oxen, for the carriage of certain goods, for damages for illegal acts of defendant or his employés and for general damage:—Held, on exceptions by the defendant to the jurisdiction of the Court and to the declaration, that the defendant could not be sued, either personally or in his official capacity, upon a contract entered into by him on behalf of the commissariat department; and that there was no cause of action against him. The Government revenue cannot be reached by a suit against a public officer in his official capacity. Quære, whether the Court would have had jurisdiction if a petition of right had been presented and the Crown had ordered that right should be done. Palmer v. Hutchinson, 6 L. R., App. Cas., 619; 50 L. J., P. C., 62; 45 L. T. 180.

II. PROCEEDINGS ON.

1. When a petition of right is referred to the Lord Chancellor, with the endorsement "Let right be done," if such right, supposing it to exist, be subject to certain rules of proceeding for its ascertainment and enforcement, those rules must still be followed, and the rights of the parties will be bound by all equities to which they are properly subject. Monckton v. Att.-Gen., 2 Macn. & G. 402.

2. Course of proceeding by a subject to enforce a claim to property as against the Crown. Taylor v. Att.-Gen., 8 Sim. 413.

3. The Lord Chancellor will not make an order for a commission upon a petition of right, without notice to the attorney-general. Re Robson, 2 Ph. 84; 16 L. J., N. S., Ch., 105.

4. The first step in proceedings upon a petition of right, on which the royal indorsement has been made, is to ascertain the facts on which the petitioner's claim is founded, and a commission for that purpose is of course, unless the attorney-general be willing to admit the facts as alleged, and to take issue upon them by demurrer. Re Bodé (Baron de), 2 Ph. 85.

Where a petition of right is referred to the Lord Chancellor, with the usual indorsement, "Let right be done," the Lord Chancellor has not jurisdiction to adjudicate upon the merits, as he would upon the merits of a bill on demurrer; but the petitioner is entitled, as a matter of course, to have a commission to inquire into the facts of the case. S. C. 9 L. J., N. S., Ch., 402; 4 Jur. 645.

5. Preliminary commission to investigate claim upon petition of right substantially dispensed with. But upon inquisition found, the Crown is entitled to dispute facts, or admitting them to demur. Reg. v. Francius, 6 W. R. 288; 26 L. J., Ch., 797.

6. A plaintiff filed a bill for an injunction against the secretary-at-war, as an officer of the Crown. The defendant, on the ground that the plaintiff's remedy was by petition of right, and not by bill, put in an appearance, but raised the question of jurisdiction. The plaintiff, after the time had expired, moved for leave to enter an appearance for the defendant:—Held, that the Court could not recognise the right of any subject of the Crown to refuse to appear. The question of jurisdiction should be argued after appearance, upon demurrer or otherwise. Felkin v. Herbert (Lord), 30 L. R., Ch., 604; 9 W. R. 609.

7. The attorney-general may dispense with the usual preliminary investigation on a petition of right. Re Von Frantzius, 2 De G. & J. 126; 27 L. J., Ch., 368.

On applying for time to answer the case found on the inquisition, the Crown ought not to be precluded from demurring. Ib.

8. In the place of the usual commission issued on a petition of right, the Court, with the assent of the attorney-general, issued a formal commission, the return to which was to be made on the oath of the petitioner. Robert v. Frantzius, 26 L. J., Ch., 797.

9. Leave given to a petitioner who had presented a petition of right to file a bill against the attorney-general, notwithstanding the issuing of a commission under the petition of right. Re Rolt, 4 De G. & J. 44.

10. A motion in a suit by the attorney-general for an injunction to restrain a contractor with the Secretary of State for War from continuing on the site of Government land, after notice to quit given under the powers of the contract; and a motion by the contractor (who had presented a petition of right) for an injunction to restrain the Secretary of State for War from preventing the suppliant completing his contract, and from continuing the superintending officer of engineers in the supervision of the works, ordered to stand until the hearing of the suits. Kirk v. Reg., 14 L. R., Eq., 585.

1. The difference between pledging and bailing is that a pawnee has a special property, but a bailee the custody only. Hartop v. Hoare, 3 Atk. 46.

The disposition of a pawn is quite variant from a sale; for a vendee can transfer the thing to any other, and trade is thereby promoted; but it is otherwise in pawns, for they stop the change of the property in the thing pledged. In this case, the custom of London, as to the sales in market overt, not being found by the jury, the Court could not judicially take notice of it; but taking it as stated, they were of opinion, it did not extend to pawning; and as there seems to have been no instance that the custom of London has ever been allowed in the case of a pawn, the pawnee has no title to retain the goods against the true owner. Ib.

2. A bill being pledged in part, the whole may be proved by the pledge. Exp. Crossley, 3 Bro. C. C. 237.

3. Bankers, having securities deposited as a pledge for 1,000*l.*, though the depositor at his death is indebted in a larger sum, have no lien farther than the 1,000*l.* Vanderzee v. Willis, 3 Bro. C. C. 21.

4. The rules as to the power of sale possessed by the pledgee of a chattel apply also to the pledgee of a chose in action. Exp. Sargent (17 L. R., Eq., 273) distinguished. France v. Clark, 22 L. R., Ch. D., 830; 52 L. J., Ch., 362; 48 L. T. 185; 31 W. R. 374.

5. The doctrine that an equitable mortgagee by deposit of title deeds is entitled to foreclosure, does not extend to a pledgee of personal chattels. Carter v. Wake, 4 L. R., Ch. D., 605; 46 L. J., Ch. D., 841.

A. deposited with B. certain Canada railway bonds as security for a debt. On bill filed by B. for foreclosure or sale:—Held, that B. was entitled to an order for sale only. Ib.

6. A. borrows 200*l.* on the pawn of some jewels; afterwards he borrows three several sums, for each of which he gives his note without taking notice of the jewels; his executors shall not redeem the jewels without paying the money due on the notes. Demandry v. Metcalf, Pre. Ch. 419; 2 Vern. 691; Gilb. 104.

7. A., the owner of certain chattels (e.g., warrants), pledged them to B., who was a broker, to secure advances made on his behalf by B., and B. afterwards in his own name, and unknown to A., re-pledged the same chattels to C. to secure advances made by C. to B., but of which, unknown to C., A. was to have the benefit. C., having subsequently applied in vain to B. for payment of his advances, threatened to realise his security by a sale, which, however, he was from time to time induced to postpone, by the solicitations of B., and his assurances of speedy payment; and this was communicated by B. to A., his principal. In a suit by A. against B. and C., praying to redeem the property in pledge on payment of any balance found due on the account between himself and B.:—Held, that A. had no equity to restrain C. from proceeding to an immediate sale. Nicholson v. Hooper, 4 Myl. & C. 179. Reversing 2 Jur. 9.

Whether under the circumstances above mentioned, C. could make a good title to a purchaser, quære. Ib.

8. Bill lies by assignee for account and delivery of goods pledged by the bankrupt, notwithstanding the Statute of Limitations. Kemp v. Westbrook, 1 Ves. 278.

9. Goods shipped at Liverpool for Quebec were taken on their arrival to the examining warehouse, and were entered as consigned to M. & S. and were marked "M. & S." By the regulations of the warehouse, consignees were entitled to possession on payment of freight and duty. M. & S. having obtained an advance on the goods from Y. & Co., signed a request note directed to the officer of the warehouse, directing him to "hold their goods subject to their order, they paying duty and storage charged before removal." The officer wrote across the note "accepted," and signed it:—Held, that by the express agreement of the parties, followed by the acceptance of the officer of the warehouse, there was a valid constructive delivery of the property in the goods to Y. & Co., sufficient for the purposes of the pledge. Young v. Lambert, 3 L. R., P. C., 142; 39 L. J., P. C., 21; 22 L. T. 499; 18 W. R. 497; 6 Moo. P. C., N. S., 406.

1. Mortgage and pledge distinguished. Jones v. Smith, 2 Ves. J. 378.

Personal securities pledged for a specific debt: after a mortgage to the creditor the same securities with others were pledged to him for the balance of an account, redemption of the personal securities was decreed without discharging what was due on the mortgage. Id. 372. Sed quære.

2. The general rule of the civil law is, that possession of movables is not necessary to the validity of a lien, whether created by contract or act of law, and that such lien will attach upon movable property even in the hands of a bonâ fide purchaser without notice. This rule has been modified by the Roman-Dutch law to this extent—that if the goods left in the possession of the mortgagor are sold, or mortgaged by him to another, they cannot be followed into the hands of such transferee for value; but the contract is binding on the debtor, and the goods themselves may be taken if they remain in his hands. A debtor having, by way of security for a debt, pledged movables to a creditor, subsequently became insolvent. The movables were in the possession of the debtor at the time of committing the act of insolvency, but the creditor had, before the act of insolvency, claimed the movables, and they had been placed in the hands of a third person:—Held, that the creditor had a right to the movables as against the assignees of the insolvent. Tatham v. Andree, 9 Jur., N. S., 1019; 9 L. T., N. S., 2; 1 Moo. P. C. 386.

3. Jewellery is pledged with a pawnbroker, and the usual deposit notes given. Upon forfeiture the articles are sold, and a balance admitted upon application of the assignees of the party pledging, who was a bankrupt. The pawnbroker by an agent buys a lot representing the deposit notes, an agent also attending for the assignees and permitting the sale. The assignees then state the sale to have been a mistake in ignorance of the balance due, when the pawnbroker offers a small sum for the assignees' interest in unsold notes, claiming to retain the difference. On a bill to restrain an action brought for the whole balance by the assignees, bill dismissed without costs. Attenborough v. Edwards, 3 W. R. 39; 3 Eq. Rep. 124.

4. The Pawnbrokers Act (39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 99) does not apply to transactions above 10*l.* With regard, therefore, to such transactions, a pawnbroker is in the same position as any other person, and may avail himself of the 2 & 3 Vict., c. 37, for the purpose of obtaining a higher rate of interest than 5 per cent.; and a contract for that purpose made upon the deposit of goods will not be invalid merely because it contains stipulations peculiar to an ordinary pawnbroking transaction. Fitch v. Rochfort, 1 Macn. & G. 184; 1 H. & Tw. 255; 18 L. J., N. S., Ch., 458; 13 Jur. 351.

5. An agreement for a secret partnership is a contravention of the laws made for regulating the business of a pawnbroker, and no legal partnership is thereby constituted. Armstrong v. Armstrong, Lewis v. Armstrong, 3 Myl. & K. 45; L. J., N. S., Ch., 101.

POACHING.

6. The taking bonds to prevent poaching is for the benefit of the obligor, as that sort of idleness tends to worse consequences. Roy v. Beaufort (Duke), 2 Atk. 190.

There is no Act of Parliament which directs taking bonds in this particular case, but the Acts which relate to the customs, and the Act against deer-stealing, direct such bonds, so that the doing of it is not malum in se. Ib.

These bonds are not intended as a bare security that the obligor shall not offend for the future, but are by way of stated damages between the parties. Ib.

7. Bequest for purchasing the discharge of poachers, committed to prison for non-payment of fines, fees, or expenses under the game laws:—Held, void, as encouraging offences, and opposed to public policy. Thrupp v. Collett, 26 Beav. 126; 5 Jur., N. S., 111.

An order was made against the committee in breach of the agreement; this order the pleadings in the present action, which was brought by the guardians, admitted would be enforced against the guardians:—Held, that the committee must be added as co-plaintiffs. Blackburn Union v. Brooks, 26 W. I. Property Chargeable.

1. A., by several deeds, charges different parts of his real estates with portions for his younger children, and afterwards by his will confirms the charges so made, and then gives the residue of his personal estate, after payment of his debts and legacies, to trustees, in trust to lay out the same in purchase of land to be settled to particular uses. The eldest son brings bill controverting the validity of the deeds, and insisting that the personal estate was liable to make good the several charges so far as it would extend:—Held, that personal estate shall go according to will, and that each particular estate should bear the specific charge made upon it. Ferrers (Earl) v. Ferrers (Countess), 6 Bro. P. C. 97.

2. A. devises 500*l.* apiece to his three daughters at their ages of twenty-one or marriage, to be paid out of his stock, and devises the rents of his real estate to his wife for life, in lieu of dower, and for the maintenance of his children, and towards making up their portions; and after his debts and legacies paid, devises the lands to his son, who, together with his wife, he made executors. The stock was but of 100*l.* value; the wife being dead, and the two eldest daughters having had their portions paid them:—Held, that the lands were liable, in the hands of the son, to the youngest daughter's portion. Tomkins v. Tomkins, Pre. Ch. 397; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 90.

3. A., on marriage of his son, settles lands, which he covenants to be worth 800*l.* per annum, reserving to himself a power of charging the same with 1,200*l.* for the portions of his younger children. A. charged the estate with only 600*l.*; but because the value of the lands was defective, the son refused to pay these portions:—Held, that the portions were well charged, as they only amounted to a moiety of what the father had power to charge; and if there was a deficiency in the value of the lands, the son ought to sue upon the covenant for satisfaction out of his father's assets. Ormsby v. Dodwell, 6 Bro. P. C. 41.

4. By a marriage settlement, a freehold estate was settled on husband and wife for their lives, remainder to the first, etc., sons in tail, remainder to trustees for 500 years to raise portions for daughters, remainders over; covenant from the husband to settle his copyhold estate to the same uses. A surrender is made, but no term is limited. The freehold estate not being sufficient to raise the daughters' portions, decreed, the copyhold estate should be charged, and liable to raise the portions. Shouldham v. Shouldham, 2 Vern. 321.

5. Where real estates are devised in strict settlement, subject to trust for raising portions to younger children, during minority of tenant for life, out of rents and profits, or by sale or mortgage:—Held, certain funds that had arisen from rents during such minority, were applicable to payment of the portions, and that deficiency only could be raised by sale or mortgage. Warter v. Hutchinson, 1 Sim. & S. 276.

6. A. charges land in D. with a portion for a daughter by a first venter, and then marries, and settles part of these lands for the jointure of a second wife, who has no notice of the charge. A., believing the portion would take place of the jointure by will, gives other lands in E. in lieu thereof. The wife, by combination with the heir, refuses to accept the devise. Decreed, the daughter should hold the lands in D. till her portion was paid. Reeve v. Reeve, 1 Vern. 219; 2 Vent. 363.

7. One devises lands to his son by his second wife, in tail male, remainder to his eldest son by his first wife, provided that if the land should come to his eldest son, that then C. or his heirs should pay 100*l.* to the testator's daughter, within four months after the estate should come to them; and in default of payment, the trustees to enter and raise the money. The son by the first wife dies, leaving a son. The son by the second wife suffers a recovery of a moiety of the lands, and dies without issue, so that the moiety only of the premises comes to the son of the son by the first wife. Though no part of the premises ever came to the eldest son, yet the moiety of lands shall be liable to the payment of the whole 1,000*l.* without any apportionment. Hooley v. Booth, 2 Vern. 359.

1. Devise of lands to A., charged with a portion of 500*l.*; part of the lands are entailed by an ancient deed:—Held, that the entailed lands are not liable to this portion. Ferrand v. Jackson, 3 Bro. P. C. 2.

2. J. having, by his marriage settlement, a power of appointing portions to his daughters to the amount of 16,000*l.*, under a term for years, created for that purpose, appointed among four of his daughters, upon their respective marriages, 13,000*l.* in part thereof, and took assignments from them of their interests in the said term; he afterwards, in the marriage settlement of his eldest son, joined such son in a covenant, in the fullest and most extensive terms, that the settled estates were free from all incumbrances due by either of them; and by will appointed the residue of the 16,000*l.* to another daughter, and died. In a suit to compel the trustees to raise the 16,000*l.* out of the term of years, it was held that the evident intention of J. to keep the term on foot for his benefit would clearly entitle his executors, as against those claiming under his own marriage settlement, but that his covenant would bar him, and all claiming under him, as against those claiming under the settlement of the son; and, consequently, the son himself, who, notwithstanding his joining in the covenant, so far as his interest in that settlement, must be considered as a purchaser under it, and consequently a covenantee. Gower (Countess) v. Gower (Earl), 1 Cox 53.

3. Estates were settled, after the death of husband and wife, to trustees, for a term, and subject thereto to the husband in fee. The trusts of the term were, in case the wife should die in the lifetime of the husband, leaving children living at her decease, to raise 8,000*l.* for the portions of such children, to be divided between them in such shares as the husband should by deed or will appoint. By his will, the husband, dying before the wife, devised part of the settled land to his eldest son, in strict settlement, with powers of jointuring, and charging portions for his younger children; and other part of the settled lands to his second son in the same manner; and after reciting that he had by his settlement a power of appointing 8,000*l.* among his children, he, in pursuance of the power, and of every other power to him reserved, gave and appointed the 8,000*l.* amongst his children; and he bequeathed to his daughter E. 1,000*l.*, in addition to the sum already appointed to her; and he directed that in case all his younger children should die before their portions became payable, the said sum of 8,000*l.* should sink into the inheritance; and that his personal estate should be applied pro tanto in discharge of the 8,000*l.*, in exoneration of the real estate charged therewith. The husband died, leaving his wife and several children him surviving:—Held, that the 8,000*l.* was well charged upon the real estate of the testator. Mandeville v. Roe, 1 J. & L. 371.

4. In the year 1817, A., who was not then a trader, on his marriage covenanted that all his property, real and personal, as well that in possession as what he should thereafter acquire, should stand and be charged and chargeable with a sum of 3,000*l.* as a provision for his wife, and the issue of the marriage in the manner therein mentioned. Some months after his marriage, A. became a trader, and in the year 1835 was found and declared a bankrupt:—Held, on a bill filed by the wife and children, who were interested under the settlement of 1817, that the covenant to charge after-acquired property created a valid charge on all the freehold estates of A. purchased subsequently to his marriage, and should be carried specifically into execution against the assignees of the bankrupt A. Lyster v. Burroughs, 1 Dr. & Wal. 149. And see Gubbins v. Gubbins, id. 160. n.

5. Case in which it was held that additional portions given to younger children were a primary, if not an exclusive charge on the testator's fee-simple estates devised to his eldest son for life. Burrell v. Egremont (Earl), 7 Beav. 205; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 309; 8 Jur. 587.

6. A., by deed, settles his estate to himself for life, and then to trustees, to raise portions for his younger children, provided, that if his eldest son (who was otherwise provided for) should pay the portions, then the trustees were to stand seised to the use of the right heirs of A. for ever; and after raising and paying said portions, the trustees and their heirs to stand seised of such part of the premises as should remain unsold to the use of the right heirs male of A. for ever. The son did not pay the portions, but died intestate, leaving D., his daughter and only child:—Held, that D., being heir general, was entitled to the estate, subject to the charge thereon by the grandfather. Beckford v. Pendarvis, 5 Bro. P. C. 93.

7. The Court leans against the construction for raising portions or maintenance out of reversionary term, and upon that principle when the term fell into possession, and the portion was raised, refused to charge the difference between the sum annually allowed by the infant's grandfather for her maintenance, and the sum charged. Clinton v. Seymour, 4 Ves. 440.

8. By a settlement, two estates, one in N. and the other in S., are subject to the raising of a portion of 2,000*l.* to a daughter, by a term of 500 years, commencing after the respective decease of two several lives; one upon the S. estate, and the other upon the N. estate; the life on the S. estate fell, and the daughter bringing her bill for the 2,000*l.*, J. S., to whom that estate was come, paid the 2,000*l.* Afterwards the life on the N. estate fell, and the fee simple thereof descended to the daughter. J. S., who paid the 2,000*l.*, shall have the contribution out of the N. estate, in proportion to its value only; the estate shall be valued as an estate in possession, and the N. estate as an estate in reversion. Heveningham v. Heveningham, 2 Vern. 355.

1. By marriage articles, under seal, made between W. S., the intended husband, and M. S., his father, of the one part, and H. B., the intended wife, and T. B., her father, of the other part, it was agreed as follows: M. S. covenanted that he would, at his death, leave and devise to W. S., his heirs, executors, etc., all such property, real and personal, as he should then be possessed of and entitled to, charged only with a jointure for his wife, and with pecuniary legacies not exceeding 1,000*l.* It was further agreed that H. B., in case she should survive her intended husband, should have and receive a certain jointure, charged and chargeable upon all and singular the property, real and personal, of both M. S. and W. S.; that the eldest son of the marriage should have and become entitled to a perpetual annuity or rent charge of 400*l.* a year, to issue out of and be charged upon all and singular the real and personal estates which M. S. or W. S., or either of them, should be seised or possessed of or entitled to; subject, nevertheless, to such jointure as should be appointed for the wife of M. S., and to the jointure provided for H. B.; and also subject to a further sum of 2,000*l.* as a provision for the younger children of the intended marriage:—Held, that the 2,000*l.* was not charged upon the rent charge of 400*l.* a year; and that the proper fund for the payment of the 400*l.* a year and the 2,000*l.* was the residue of the real and personal estate of which M. S. and W. S., respectively, should die seised, after payment thereout of all their debts, whether by judgment, specialty, or simple contract. Ennis v. Smith, Jon. & C. 400.

2. By a marriage settlement certain lands were conveyed to A. (intended husband), his heirs and assigns, and in case A. should die, leaving one or more son or sons of the marriage, the elder of such sons and the heirs of his body being always preferred before the younger, with full liberty for A. to make such reasonable provision as he should think fit for such younger children, and in case A. should die, leaving no son, and there should be one or more daughters, then to such daughter or daughters (if more than one), on their attaining their respective ages of twenty-one years, their heirs and assigns, share and share alike. There was issue of the marriage eight children, four sons and four daughters; and A. by his last will and testament, in pursuance of the power contained in the marriage settlement, charged the said lands with the sum of 1,500*l.*, to be divided amongst the younger children of the marriage in manner therein mentioned. The first taker having disputed the right to charge in favour of daughters, on a bill filed by one of the daughters to raise her portion of the 1,500*l.*:—Held, that the power was well exercised, and as the intention of the settlement was evidently to provide for all the children as well daughters as sons, the Court would effect that intention, and support the appointment, by transposing the clause creating the power, and that containing the limitation to the daughters in the event of there being no son, whereby the words "such younger children" would include both sons and daughters. Fenton v. Fenton, 1 Dr. & Wal. 66.

3. A tenant for life, having a power to charge the estate with portions for younger children, mortgaged his life estate, and covenanted not to exercise the power:—Held, that he could not afterwards charge the estates with portions, to the prejudice of his mortgagees. Hurst v. Hurst, 16 Beav. 372; 22 L. J., Ch., 538.

4. The father of the plaintiff, by a settlement made in 1835 on the marriage of the plaintiff, settled estates in trust for himself for life, remainder for his wife for life, remainder for his son (the plaintiff) for life, remainder for the plaintiff's children, and, in default of issue, for the plaintiff and his heirs absolutely. In the settlement was reserved a power to the settlor to charge the estates, by any deed or instrument in writing, with portions for his younger children to the extent of 500*l.*, and to create a term for the payment. The settlor, by his will, devised the settled estates to the plaintiff, his heirs and assigns, subject to and charged with three legacies, amounting together to 500*l.*, bequeathed in favour of his three daughters. The testator did not create a term of years, nor in his will in any way refer to the powers contained in the settlement of 1835. On a bill filed by the plaintiff, praying that the 500*l.*, which he had paid to the legatees out of his own moneys, might be raised by a mortgage or sale of the estates, the Court made a declaration that that sum was well charged by the will of the plaintiff's father on the property comprised in the settlement. Davies v. Davies, 4 Jur., N. S., 1291; 28 L. J., Ch., 102.

5. On a marriage, two separate sums were provided by two separate deeds, for the portions of younger children, and each deed contained a hotchpot clause:—Held, that these clauses were separate and distinct, and operated only on the fund contained in each settlement respectively. Montague v. Montague, 15 Beav. 565.

6. A tenant for life, on his marriage, appointed, in pursuance of a power, a jointure and portions payable after his death. By another deed he charged an additional jointure and portions on certain estates "to which he would become entitled on the death of his father," and covenanted to convey such estates and all other hereditaments to which he might be entitled for an estate of freehold to trustees to such uses for securing the additional jointure and portions as were contained in the first settlement:—Held, in the absence of any fraud or misrepresentation, that the wife and children were not entitled as against incumbrancers without notice to any lien or charge on the settlor's life estate. Ford v. Tynte, 6 N. R. 51; 11 Jur., N. S., 402; 13 W. R. 643; 12 L. T., N. S., 512; 34 L. J., Ch., 452. Affirming 2 Hem. & M. 319.

II. Amount.

7. A man has issue a son and four daughters; he settles lands on himself for life, remainder for twenty-one years for raising 5,000*l.* daughters' portions, 2,000*l.* whereof to be paid to the eldest, remainder to the son in tail, remainder to himself in fee. The son dies without issue, and after the father devises the lands to his four daughters equally; yet held that the eldest should have 1,000*l.* more than any of the rest. Teviot v. Spencer, Pre. Ch. 5.

1. In marriage settlement, it was agreed that, if there should be but one daughter, she should have 500*l.* for her portion, and 200*l.* each should be paid to every of the other younger daughters. There were three daughters:—Held, each was only entitled to 200*l.* Chamberlain v. White, 6 Bro. P. C. 61.

2. By marriage settlement, the husband's family estate was settled in the usual way, and it was covenanted with the husband that the wife's portion (1,500*l.*) should be paid to trustees to provide for the daughters and younger sons after his death, in equal shares, in default of an appointment by him. It was provided also, that in case of there being but one child, it should have 1,000*l.* and the eldest son the other 500*l.*, and that a daughter, being an only child, should have the whole. The husband was to have the interest for his life, and a power of laying out the principal in the purchase of lands, in trustees' names, as a fund for the purposes aforesaid. Of this marriage there was issue two sons, the elder of whom only survived his father, and claimed the 1,500*l.*; but the Court decreed him only 500*l.*, to which it was admitted he was entitled. Where money was to be laid out in land as a more secure fund, for certain purposes, it (as well as the land when purchased) shall be considered as money, and the heir can claim no benefit of it. Watkins v. Watkins, Vern. & Scriv. 61.

3. A power to charge estates "with reasonable portions or fortunes for younger children, and for their maintenance and education," is sufficiently certain, to be capable of execution. The word "reasonable" is applicable not only to the amount of the portion, but also to the time and occasion on which the child would want it. Therefore, an appointment of a portion to an infant, payable with interest from the death of the appointor, does not so vest the portion as to make it, on the death of the infant, transmissible to her representative, the appointment being under the implied condition that the child should attain that age at which the portion would be required for advancement in life. But the infant being entitled to a reasonable maintenance while it lived, her administrator decreed, under the head of general relief, entitled to a reasonable allowance for maintenance, though not specifically prayed by the bill. By authorising the donee to appoint maintenance and education, it implied that the portions could not be raised during infancy, for if they could, the interest of the money so raised would supply those purposes. Whether the Court could make a reference to the Master to inquire whether the sum appointed was reasonable in amount, and if not, could authorise him to substitute his discretion for that which the donor had reposed in the donee of the power, quære. Edgeworth v. Edgeworth, Beat. 328.

4. By settlement, 10,000*l.* provided for one daughter, or younger son; 15,000*l.*, if more. There being but one daughter, the father by will, under a power reserved to him, appoints the time of payment, and the application of the interest of the 15,000*l.* provided for her by settlement, and gives her the farther sum of 5,000*l.* She was held entitled to 20,000*l.* Phipps v. Mulgrave (Lord), 3 Ves. 613.

5. Articles, on marriage, to settle estates of husband and wife, of equal value, in strict settlement, and providing portions; wife's estate being withdrawn by decree on the ground of her infancy, the younger children were confined, as against the eldest, to half the portion, the articles providing, in the event of no issue male, in which case the estates were to separate, that each should bear a moiety, though they also contemplated the case of wife's refusal to be bound, providing against it by the forfeiture of her interest. Clough v. Clough, 5 Ves. 710.

6. Two estates, X. and Y., were devised to trustees for 500 years, with remainder, as to estate X., to A. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, with remainder to A.'s daughters, equally in tail general, with remainder to B. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, with remainder to his daughters equally, in tail general. The estate Y. was, mutatis mutandis, similarly settled on B. and his issue, with remainder to A. and his issue; the trusts of the term were declared to be, to raise 2,000*l.* each for C. and D.; and "if A. or B. should depart this life without issue, whereby the survivor of them would become entitled to the estates X. and J., to raise a further sum of 2,000*l.* apiece for C. and D. After the death of C. and D., B. died without issue:—Held, that the further sums of 2,000*l.* were not raisable. Case v. Drosier, 2 Keen 764; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 353; 1 Jur. 352. Affirmed 3 Jur. 1164.

7. By settlement, estates were limited to A. for life, with remainder to trustees for a term of years, for raising 4,000*l.* for the portions of his younger children, remainder to his first and other sons in tail male. There was one son, B., and two daughters, C. and D. By Act of Parliament passed during the children's minority, the estates were vested in trustees in fee, discharged from the uses of the settlement, upon trust to raise by mortgage or sale the expenses of the Act and of the trusts, and afterwards certain portions affecting the estate prior to the settlement, and private debts of A. to a large amount, and to convey the unsold estates, and the equity of redemption of those which should be mortgaged, to the uses of the settlement. Under this Act, the estates were mortgaged in fee for 41,386*l.* to E., who having died largely indebted to the Crown, and it appearing that the former Act was obtained by false representations, it was provided by another Act, that if, on payment of 25,000*l.* into the Exchequer, the real and personal representatives of E. should convey the estates to some person to be approved by B. (who had then succeeded to the estate), the estates should be vested in such person, discharged of all claims of E. and of the Crown, to the intent to secure the repayment of the money so paid into the Exchequer, to the person advancing the same, and subject thereto in trust for securing such proportionable provision for C. and D. as they should be entitled to in respect of the portions originally secured upon the settled estates, and subject thereto in trust for B. The money was paid into the Exchequer, and the estates conveyed accordingly:—Held, that C. was entitled to a full half of the 4,000*l.*, with interest from A.'s death, and was not bound to contribute towards payment either of the 25,000*l.*, or the expenses incurred in obtaining or executing the Acts of Parliament. Hansard v. Kemeys, 2 Wils. 106.

1. L., having joined her father in raising 24,000*l.* to pay his debts, afterwards, upon her marriage, a settlement being made by which 30,000*l.* was to be raised for the payment of E.'s debts, it was determined by the Court, and affirmed in Parliament, that the 24,000*l.* should be taken as part of the 30,000*l.*, and not raised beyond it. Shelburne v. Inchiquin, 1 Bro. C. C. 339.

2. On marriage, lands are settled on A. for life; remainder in the first, etc., sons of the marriage in tail male; remainder to trustees for 500 years, to raise 5,000*l.* portions for daughters, payable at eighteen or marriage; remainder to A. in fee. After the marriage, A. settles other lands, and a term is created for raising the like sum of 5,000*l.* for daughters, on failure of issue male, payable at sixteen or marriage. A. dies, leaving a daughter his heir-at-law, who attains eighteen, and dies unmarried. The trust of the term is not merged in the fee, but the portion shall go to the daughter's executors, and is indisposable by her will; but there shall be but one 5,000*l.* raised. Thomas v. Kemeys, 2 Vern. 348; 2 Freem. 207.

3. Settlement on marriage to the use of the husband for life, remainder to trustees for five hundred years in trust, after the death of the husband and not before, unless with his consent as therein mentioned, to raise portions for younger children to be paid in such shares and at such times as husband and wife should appoint, in default of appointment to be paid, if but one besides an eldest son, 5,000*l.*, if two, 6,000*l.*, if three, 8,000*l.*, and if four or more, 10,000*l.* equally, to be paid respectively at twenty-one or marriage of daughters, if after the age of sixteen, if such times of payment happen after the death of the husband, if in his life then within twelve months after his decease and not before, unless with such consent; provided that if any of such younger children should die before his, her, or their portions should become payable, so that the number should be reduced to less than four, no more should be raised than what would make the whole sum for the portion of the survivor or survivors of such younger children equal to the sum originally limited for the portion of such child or children, if one, two, or three. Three younger children only survived their father, but more than four had attained twenty-one. The sum to be raised is 10,000*l.* Willis v. Willis, 3 Ves. J. 51.

4. By indenture of marriage settlement a term of years was created, the trusts of which were declared to be, to raise a sum of money, not exceeding in the whole 2,000*l.*, for the portions of the younger children of the marriage, which sum, in default of appointment by the settlor, was to be equally divided amongst such younger children, and to be payable to the sons at their ages of twenty-one years, and to the daughters at their ages of eighteen years or days of marriage, whichever should first happen; with a proviso, that, if any of such younger children should happen to die under age and unmarried, that the share of the child so dying should go to the survivors; "and in case there should be but one younger child, son or daughter, the same should have and be entitled to the sum of 1,000*l.*, and no more; and that in that event the sum of 1,000*l.*, and no more, should be raised." There were two younger children of the marriage, who both survived their parents, but one of them died under the age of eleven years. On a bill filed by the representative of the surviving child, claiming the entire sum of 2,000*l.*:—Held, that in the events that had happened the sum of 1,000*l.* only was raisable. Clarke v. Jessop, Dr. 301.

5. A trust created to raise 36,000*l.* for the portions of three children, A., L., and C., to be paid to and amongst them at such time and times, and in such share and proportion, as M. should appoint by deed or will; and in default of appointment, to be paid to and amongst the said A., L., and C., in equal shares, on their respectively attaining twenty-one, or marriage; provided, that if any of the said daughters should die under twenty-one, or unmarried, 24,000*l.* only to be raised for the surviving daughters, to be paid to and amongst them at such time or times, and in such shares, as M. should appoint; and if no appointment, then to be paid equally between them at twenty-one, or marriage, and if two die before twenty-one, and unmarried, then a like proviso for raising only 12,000*l.* L. attains twenty-one and dies. The whole 36,000*l.* to be raised; but M. has no power to appoint the share of L. It goes equally between the survivors and the personal representatives of L. An appointment as to the remaining 24,000*l.* between A. and C., unequally, is good. Vane v. Dungannon (Lord), 2 Sch. & Lef. 118.

6. Lands settled on M. for life, with remainder over, charged with 25,000*l.* for portions, raisable on the decease of M., were sold under the Irish Incumbered Estates Act. The commissioner retained 25,000*l.* out of the sale moneys to answer such portions, which he directed to be invested in consols, and transferred to the credit of a suit in the Court of Chancery:—Held, that this money must be dealt with as part of the original lands, and as being still real estate; that the portioners must, on the decease of M., take to it in lieu of the sum charged, and run the risk of a rise or fall in the stocks; and therefore, as between the estate of the tenant for life (deceased) and the portioners, the former was entitled to the dividends for his life, with an apportioned payment up to the day of his decease, although, owing to a fall in the stocks, the fund would not, on a sale, realise 25,000*l.* cash. Mornington v. Wellesley, 4 Jur., N. S., 6.

7. M. being tenant for life of real estate, on which there was a charge of 1,500*l.*, vested in trustees for life of J., remainder to his wife for life, remainder to the children of the marriage, advanced moneys to support J.'s wife, who was living separate from her husband, On a suit to raise the portion of 1,500*l.*, M. claimed to set-off against J.'s life interest the money he had advanced:—Held, that M. could not set off his debt against J.'s life interest; the portion being payable to trustees, and the claim against M. for it, being not more personal than against any of the other persons entitled to the estate. Jenner v. Morris, 3 L. T., N. S., 497.

1. Articles which were agreed to on the marriage of the parents of Mrs. H., in 1825, contained inter alia a power for raising portions for younger children, to the effect, that if there should be but one child of the marriage, other than and except an eldest or only child, whether son or daughter, entitled to the hereditaments, then to levy and raise 8,000*l.* for the portion of such child; if there should be two such children of the marriage, except as above mentioned, then to levy and raise 12,000*l.* for the portions of such children; and if there should be three or more such children, except as above mentioned, then 15,000*l.* for the portion or portions of such children; the 8,000*l.* to be paid to such one child, and the other sums to such children as the parents should jointly appoint; and in default of such appointment, then as the survivor should appoint; and in default, to become a vested interest in such child or children, being a son or sons, at twenty-one; or, being a daughter or daughters, at that age or marriage; if the husband should survive the wife, the portions not to be payable, unless otherwise directed under the power, until after his decease: but if the wife survived the husband, one moiety of such portion not to be payable until after her decease. The articles contained powers for raising any part of the portion or portions for the advancement, and, during the suspense of vesting, of raising interest on the portions for maintenance and education. There were three younger children of the marriage, two of whom died in infancy. The husband survived the wife, and Mrs. H. was the sole surviving younger child of the marriage. She presented a petition praying that she might be declared entitled to the 15,000*l.*:—Held, that as there were three younger children born, the only part of the trust which could come into operation was that which related to that sum, and that she was entitled to the whole. Hemming v. Griffith, Griffith v. Hemming, 6 Jur., N. S., 745; 8 W. R. 687; 2 Giff. 403.

2. A term of years was limited by will to trustees, upon trust, if there should be two or more younger children of D., to raise for their portions such sum or sums, not exceeding 8,000*l.*, to be paid to such of the children and in such shares as D. should appoint, and in default of appointment to all the children equally. D., by his marriage settlement, directed that 6,000*l.* should be raised for the younger children of that marriage, if two or more; and that if he should survive his intended wife, and die without being married again, or if so married, should not have any issue of any future marriage, who should take an interest in the sum provided by the will for younger children, then the further sum of 2,000*l.* should be raised for the younger children of the first marriage, if there should be two or more; neither the will nor the settlement contained a hotch-pot clause. Afterwards, D. appointed to one of his daughters the sum of 2,000*l.*, part of the sum of 8,000*l.*, made raisable by the will in the event which had happened, of there being two or more younger children. D. died in the lifetime of his wife:—Held (affirming 2 Jur., N. S., 1117; 3 Sm. & G. 353), that, on the construction of the will, 8,000*l.* was to be raised, unless D. directed that a less sum and no more should be raised, and that neither of the instruments so executed by him contained anything amounting to such a direction, and that therefore 8,000*l.* and not 6,000*l.* only must be raised. Walmsley v. Vaughan, 1 De G. & J. 114; 3 Jur., N. S., 497; 26 L. J., Ch., 503.

Semble, that D.'s settlement ought to be construed as directing that if no child of a future marriage became entitled, the additional 2,000*l.* should be raised for the children of the first marriage. Ib.

Held (reversing the decision of the Court below), that the appointee of 2,000*l.* was entitled to participate in the unappointed 6,000*l.* Ib.

3. A term of years was by deed vested in trustees, on trust to raise 31,000*l.*, and apply and dispose of the same to A., B., C., and D., who were the younger children of the Earl of C., for their maintenance and education, at such times, ages, and in such shares, as the earl should appoint; and in default of appointment, or so far as same should not extend, in trust, after the death of the earl, for the four children equally, for their lives: and in case any one or more of the children should die leaving a child or children living at his or her death, in trust, as to the parent's share, for such child or children, in equal shares. The deed contained clauses of survivorship and accruer among the younger children, and a proviso that no one of the children for whom portions were to be provided under the trusts should, by virtue, of the provisions for survivorship and accruer, be entitled to receive more than 16,000*l.* in the whole, including his or her original share of the 31,000*l.*; and no two of the children should, by virtue of the same provisions for survivorship and accruer, become entitled to more than 21,000*l.*, including their original shares of 31,000*l.*; it being declared and agreed that if, by reason or virtue of such survivorship or otherwise, any such child or children should, under the provisions thereinbefore contained, be entitled to a greater sum than 16,000*l.* or 21,000*l.* for his, her, or their portion or portions, the residue or surplus of the sum before directed to be raised for the younger children was to sink into the inheritance. C. and D. died unmarried and without issue, and in the earl's lifetime. 8,250*l.* was appointed to A., who, after the earl's death, became the eldest son, and entitled to the estate; and 10,250*l.* to B., who became the younger child:—Held, that notwithstanding the appointment, the sum of 21,000*l.* only was raisable. Stuart v. Castlestuart (Earl), 8 Ir. Ch. R. 408.

The earl became surety for A. in a bond and warrant of attorney, on which judgment was entered, for 2,000*l.* By his will he appointed 2,500*l.* of the 31,000*l.* to A., to be raised and paid immediately after his death, upon condition that A. should have paid off and discharged the debt of 2,000*l.*, and interest, and that the creditor should have released the testator's effects from the 2,000*l.*; and in case A. should not have paid, and the creditor should not release the same, 2,500*l.* should be considered as unappointed, and A. should not be entitled to any of the unappointed part of the 31,000*l.*:—Held, that the appointment of the 2,500*l.* was valid, and was not vitiated by the condition annexed to it. Ib.

1. A testator, by his will, limited real estate for a term of 500 years, upon trust in a certain event to raise 20,000*l.*, and to stand possessed as to one-fourth part thereof "upon such trusts as are hereinafter declared touching 20,000*l.* Three-and-a-half per Cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities hereinafter bequeathed, in trust for the benefit of my son W. F. H., his wife, children, and issue as hereinafter mentioned." In a subsequent part of his will he directed other trustees to stand possessed of a sum of 20,000*l.* Three-and-a-half per Cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities, upon trust to pay out of the dividends, interest, and annual produce thereof, the yearly sum of 200*l.*; but if she should marry again, then after her second marriage to pay to her separate use, free from the debts and engagements of any her future husband, the clear sum of 100*l.* only during the then remainder of her natural life; and after the death of his son W. F. H., subject to the said provision for his wife, upon trusts for the children of his son W. F. H.:—Held, reversing the decision of Romilly, M. R. (29 Beav. 109), that the widow of the testator's son W. F. H. took only one annuity of 200*l.* Hindle v. Taylor, 6 De G. M. & G. 577; 1 Jur., N. S., 1029.

2. The testator by his will bequeathed 187,500*l.* to trustees in trust for A. for life, and after his decease in trust to raise 5,000*l.* for each of such younger children of A. as thereinmentioned, and subject thereto upon the trusts therein-mentioned. In a subsequent part of the will he bequeathed one-fifth of his residuary personal estate upon the trusts thereinbefore declared concerning the sum of 187,500*l.*:—Held, that the younger children were not entitled to two charges of 5,000*l.* each. Hindle v. Taylor (5 De G. M. & G. 577) followed. Boyd v. Boyd, 2 N. R. 486; 9 L. T., N. S., 166.

3. A father bound himself to give his daughter a marriage portion of 2,000*l.*, and said that she was and should be noticed in his will. He had previously made a will, giving her a lac of rupees; but afterwards he made another will, which, after giving all his property to his wife for life, and then to his two sons, gave the same, if they should die without issue, to his daughter's issue:—Held, affirming a decree below, that there was no contract by the father to give more than the 2,000*l.* Moorhouse v. Colvin, 21 L. R., Ch., 782. Affirming 15 Beav. 341; 21 L. J., Ch., 177.

4. A tenant for life under a power charged the estate with portions for younger children varying according to the number, being, if there were four or more, 5,000*l.* There were four younger children born, two of whom died before the portions were raisable. The tenant for life subsequently made an appointment of the full amount of 5,000*l.*:—Held, that the appointment was effectual, notwithstanding the death of the children. Knapp v. Knapp, 24 L. T., N. S., 540; 12 L. R., Eq., 238.

5. By a marriage settlement, portions for daughters and younger sons, varying in amount according to the number of such children, and subject to a power of appointment in the father, were directed to be raised in certain specified events; amongst others, in case there should be a son taking the settled estate, and only one other child, a daughter, and such daughter should attain twenty-one or marry, a sum of 6,000*l.* was made raisable for her. In some of the events, also provided for by preceding clauses, the portions were directed to be raised for the daughters or younger sons, "who should" attain twenty-one or marry; and in others the portions were expressed to be raisable in case there should be by number of daughters and younger sons mentioned, and "such" childen should attain twenty-one or marry. The power of appointment reserved to the father, and the trust, in default of appointment of the sum or sums to be raised, were in terms applicable to all the children of the marriage other than an eldest or only son, their interest to become vested at twenty-one, or, in the case of daughters, upon marriage under that age. There were issue of the marriage an eldest son and a daughter, both of whom attained twenty-one, and two other children, who died under that age unmarried:—Held, that the sum of 6,000*l.* was raisable for the daughter under the above clause, the words "and such daughter" being construed as "who." Rye v. Rye, 1 L. R., Ir., 413.

A marriage settlement, from the very nature of the instrument, imports an intention to provide for all the children of the marriage. Ib.

Held also, that, in the present case, a paramount intention was manifested to provide for every child who should live to require a portion. The amount of the provision in each case to be dependent on the number of children attaining vested interests. Ib.

6. A testatrix who had a power to direct the raising of 10,000*l.* out of estates, after directing the same to be raised, appointed 5,000*l.* to A., and directed and appointed the residue to be distributed in the proportions thereinafter mentioned, giving various sums, amounting together to 3,400*l.*, to eleven persons and a charity. She then proceeded:—"I give and bequeath to B. 300*l.*, to C. 200*l.*, and to D. 50*l.*;" and, in the event of any of the legatees or appointees dying in her lifetime, she gave their shares to other persons:—Held, that the whole of the 10,000*l.*, and the costs of raising the same, must be raised; that, after setting apart the 5,000*l.* given to A., the residue must be apportioned between the fifteen appointees (including the charity); and that the part so appropriated to the charity sank for the benefit of the estates charged with the raising of the 10,000*l.* Cust v. Middleton, 16 W. R. 391; 37 L. J., Ch., 385.

As to Cumulative and Substitutional Legacies.] See LEGACY.

III. Interest.

1. From 1725 the Court has never allowed more than 4 per cent. interest, in cases of account as to a portion. Wood v. Briant, 2 Atk. 523.

2. Devise to A. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons, remainder to his daughters; and in default of such issue, the premises to stand charged with two sums to be paid after the death of A. without issue, and subject to such charge over, with a power to A. of jointuring the whole estate, which he executed; A. dying without issue:—Held, that the sums only carried interest from the death of the jointress, who survived him. Reynolds v. Meyrick, 1 Eden 48.

3. By a marriage settlement a term was limited to trustees for raising, on failure of issue male, 3,000*l.* for daughters' portions, payable at eighteen or marriage. The father and mother die, leaving issue, two daughters only, who, at the death of the father (who survived the mother), were fifteeen or sixteen years of age, and who had, by the father's will, 500*l.* apiece devised to them, payable at the same time with their original portions, but the estate was devised to S., one of the daughters being married and being of the age of twenty:—Held, on her bill, that she must have maintenance from the time of her father's death, till the portion became due, and from thence interest at 5 per cent. till paid. Greenhill v. Waldoe, Pre. Ch. 367; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 31.

4. The right to interest upon the sum of 2,500*l.*, part of a sum to be raised out of a term, was limited to the year 1825, the period to which the claim to this sum was put forward, but interest upon the sums of 1,000*l.* and 1,300*l.* the residue thereof, was allowed upon the former, from the filing of the original bill in the year 1800; and upon the latter, upon the accruer of the right to that sum. Reilly v. Fitzgerald, Dr. 122; 6 Ir. Eq. R. 335.

5. Where a tenant for life had exercised a power of charging the inheritance (which had been conferred upon him by settlement) in favour of H., and afterwards became bankrupt, and J. became the purchaser of all the estate which had vested in the assignee, and also of H.'s charge, and the bankrupt died:—Held, that as the person entitled to receive the interest on the charge was also owner of the life estate which was to pay it, it should be considered to have been regularly paid during the life of the tenant for life, and that after his death, S., the owner of the charge, was entitled to claim out of the inheritance only the arrears of interest which had accrued since the death of the tenant for life. The rate of interest was held to be 5*l.* per cent., there being no contract as to it. Simpson v. O'Sullivan, 3 Dr. & War. 446.

6. Portions charged on a reversionary fund shall not in general be raised until the term comes into possession: yet when it is expressly directed, under a power, that they shall be raised as soon as may be, they shall bear interest from the death of the testator. Conway v. Conway, 3 Bro. C. C. 267. But see note there. See also Codrington v. Foley (Lord), 6 Ves. 364.

7. It is the rule of this Court to allow no more than 4 per cent. where the will does not mention interest on portions charged upon land, and it has also been extended to legacies and portions charged upon personal estate. Guillam v. Holland, 2 Atk. 343. And see Lewis v. Freke, 2 Ves. J. 507.

8. Term to raise daughter's portion, to daughters of son, on failure of issue male of grandson, with power for grandson to jointure:—Held, the portions not raisable, nor interest payable, till after the death of the jointress. Churchman v. Harvey, Ambl. 366.

9. Where the principal of portion to be paid to sons at twenty-one, to daughters at twenty-one or marriage, with interest at 5 per cent. per annum from the death of father to the payment thereof, the interest ought not to accumulate till the portions are payable, but to be paid annually; for it is given as a recompense in the meantime till the principal becomes due. Boycot v. Cotton, 1 Atk. 553.

Where there is a power of charging interest on a portion, it shall be considered as maintenance. Id. 556.

If younger brother have provision under settlement, and live with the elder brother, whose estate is charged with his portion, he shall have an allowance for his maintenance out of the interest due. Ib.

10. A term is created for the purpose of raising out of the yearly profits several sums for the maintenance and education of younger children, until their portions should be due, and then upon trust for raising such sums of money out of the estate, not exceeding 2,000*l.*, as father and mother or survivor should appoint:—Held, that this 2,000*l.* should carry interest from the time that it might have been raised out of the yearly rents, etc., of lands, and an inquiry was directed to ascertain that time. Bagenal v. Bagenal, 6 Bro. P. C. 81.

11. What interest portions to carry, and from what time. Beal v. Beal, Pre. Ch. 405; Gilb. Eq. Rep. 93.

12. A term of forty years is limited for raising 2,000*l.* either by profits or sale. The trustees take possession but make no interest of profits:—Held, that portion should carry interest from time it was payable, the estate being sufficient, and trustee might have raised portion immediately. Roseberry v. Taylor, 6 Bro. P. C. 43.

13. A., by a deed, dated in 1826, settled property on himself for life, with remainder for such of his children as he should by deed or will appoint, with remainder, in default of appointment, to all of his children equally. The deed contained a power enabling A. to give a jointure to any wife whom he might afterwards marry, and a direction that, unless the contrary should be directed by any appointment, it should be lawful for the trustees to apply the income of the share of any child for his maintenance. A. married soon after the date of this deed, and his wife died in 1836, and there were two children of this marriage. In 1836 A. married B., and by a deed dated in that year he gave a jointure to B., and directed that if there should be two children of the marriage the trustees should raise 4,000*l.* for the portions of such children, to be paid to them at their ages of twenty-one years, after the death of the survivor of A. and B., with power for the trustees to give interest on the portions between the death of the survivor of A. and B. and the time of payment. A. afterwards appointed portions for the children of the first marriage, with interest from his death. There were two children of the second marriage. A. died in 1849:—Held, that the children of the second marriage were not entitled to interest on their portions between the death of A. and the death of his widow. Gardner v. Perry, 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 429.

1. Reversioner cannot redeem a term for raising portions, and exonerate the estate, without paying interest for the portions from the time they became due, notwithstanding the proviso that the term should cease on payment of the portions, either before or after the same became due. Hall v. Carter, 2 Atk. 358; 9 Mod. 347.

2. Testator having, by his marriage settlement, a power of appointment and distribution over a fund of 5,000*l.*, by his will appointed same payable with interest from his death. He also gave a further sum of 3,000*l.* to be divided equally among his children, subject to the same limitations, in all respects, as the said sum of 5,000*l.* Both sums were charged upon the same lands:—Held, that the sum of 3,000*l.* was not to bear interest. Bredin v. Bredin, 1 Dr. & War. 494.

3. By deeds of settlement and appointment a sum of 15,000*l.* was charged for three daughters, and appointed to them in equal shares, payable at twenty-one or day of marriage, with interest from the death of the father; by a subsequent deed, whereby the estates were re-settled, a term of 500 years was created, one of the trusts of which was to raise, in case all three daughters should attain their respective ages of twenty-one years, or be married, a sum of 6,000*l.*, and pay each of the daughters a sum of 2,000*l.* in addition to the portions provided for them by the previous deeds, with a proviso that if any of them should happen to die before twenty-one or marriage, the said sum of 6,000*l.* or any part thereof should not be raised:—Held, upon the true construction of this latter deed, that interest on the additional portions thereby provided was only payable from the time when the youngest daughter attained twenty-one years; the deed, in every other instance in which it was intended that interest should be given, having expressly provided for the payment of interest. Clayton v. Glengall (Earl), 1 Dr. & War. 1; 1 Con. & L. 311. Affirming Fl. & K. 151.

In the construction of family deeds when the intention is plain to give interest, the Court is bound to effectuate such an intention, even though there are no express words to that effect. Ib.

An intention apparent on the face of a particular clause that sums given in addition to portions already provided should bear interest, may be controlled by the general intention appearing on the entire instrument. Ib.

4. Where a testator made special provision for the maintenance of his younger children until receipt of their portions, and stated the sum appointed for the maintenance of the sons to be in lieu of interest:—Held, that the daughters were not entitled to interest on their portions, although there was a general clause in the will, that the trustees should stand possessed of the trust funds, and the annual produce thereof, for the benefit of the daughters upon their attaining twenty-one. Selby v. Gillum, 2 Y. & Coll. 379.

5. Trust term by marriage settlement, without impeachment of waste, immediately expectant upon the father's death, subject to a jointure to the mother, by sale or mortgage, rents and profits, or by any other ways and means, to raise portions for younger children at twenty-one, if after the death of both parents; and by such ways and means as the trustees think fit to raise interest for maintenance until the portions shall respectively become payable: if the remainderman should pay the portions and the interest, or if there should be no younger child, the term, or so much as should remain unsold, to attend the inheritance, which was limited in the usual way. Interest due from the death of the father, in the minority of all the children, and the wife surviving. Lyddon v. Lyddon, 14 Ves. 558.

6. Interest not given upon arrears of maintenance, any more than upon arrears of a jointure. Mellish v. Mellish, 14 Ves. 516.

7. Interest not given on a portion beyond the filing of bill, where a plaintiff, under no disability, and where no compromise has taken place, has slept on his rights, of which a defendant, not guilty of fraud, was ignorant, Barrington v. O'Brien, 1 Ball. & B. 180.

8. Portions under a settlement for younger children were increased by the will of the father: there being an express maintenance of 2 per cent. upon the original portions, the rule for interest upon the legacies does not apply, but the Court continued the 2 per cent. upon them. Mitchell v. Bower, 3 Ves. 286.

9. In a settlement before marriage was a proviso, that if the husband and wife should die, leaving issue unprovided for, then the trustees might enter upon the estate, and take the rents, till they had received 200*l.* for the benefit of such unprovided children, in such manner as the survivor of the husband and wife should appoint. The wife survived, and appointed the 200*l.* for a daughter, plaintiff's wife, being an unprovided child. Upon a bill to have the 200*l.* raised, decreed, the 200*l.* and interest by way of maintenance, from the death of the mother. Green v. Belchier, 1 Atk. 505.

Where the words "to be raised by rents and profits" are used in a deed, the Court will construe them liberally, and decree a sale, if there are no words to make it annual. Ib.

10. Though, in general cases, portions out of the real estate carry interest in their nature without particular mention, yet in the principal case, as a great length of time had elapsed, and some degree of laches occurred, with some complication of circumstances relative to the portion itself, the commencement of interest was fixed from the time of the sum to be raised having become a duty decreed upon a former occasion. Pomfret (Earl) v. Windsor (Lord), 2 Ves. 472.

11. Daughters' portions by will, charged on personal, then on real estate, with interest for maintenance, so far as the personal deficient; they carry but 4 per cent. Trimlestown (Lord) v. Colt, 1 Ves. 277.

1. A., who, under a settlement entered into upon the marriage of his father in 1783, was entitled to a younger child's portion, filed his bill in 1825 for the purpose of raising the same, praying at the same time an account of all prior incumbrances, the inheritrix having set up certain prior articles executed in the year 1765 upon the marriage of the plaintiff's uncle (the elder brother of his father), and which articles had been registered in the year 1767; the plaintiff amended his bill in 1829 by bringing before the Court B. and her husband, who were the only parties beneficially entitled under these articles. B. having answered the bill, a decree was pronounced in 1834, according to the terms of the prayer, and the usual reference made; B. and her husband claimed before the Master in right of her charge under the articles of 1765, the principal sum so charged by those articles, and sixty-eight years' interest thereon. The Master having made his report:—Held, that the account of interest on foot of this charge should be confined to the filing of the bill, and that according to the settled practice of this Court, the plaintiffs are only entitled to their costs according to the priority of their demands. Peyton v. M'Dermott, 1 Dr. & Wal. 198.

2. Where portions for younger children are created, if their interests are vested, and the contingencies have happened on which the portions are to be paid, interest on them is payable, and the portions on them must be raised, although the only means of raising them may be the sale or mortgage of a reversionary term. The intention of the parties creating the portions is to govern. Massey v. Lloyd, 10 H. L. Ca. 248; 8 L. T., N. S., 122; 9 Jur., N. S., 391; 11 W. R. 484. Affirming 12 Ir. Eq. R. 298. Reversing 11 Ir. Eq. R. 429.

But if the principal is not raisable till the death of the survivor of father or mother, though the title to the portion may be vested, interest on it will not be payable till that time, except on express words. Ib.

There is a distinction between the word "payable," when used in speaking of a sum payable to a beneficiary, and when used in speaking of a sum payable by a trustee. Ib.

In a marriage settlement the estate was given to trustees to pay the rents to the wife for life; to raise by sale or mortgage 10,000*l.* for a child of the wife by a former marriage, and also 500*l.* for a relative of the first husband, then, after the death of the wife, to pay 1,000*l.* a year to the husband for life; to raise 15,000*l.* for younger child or children, to be paid at such time, in such shares, and with such yearly interest as the wife should appoint, and, in default of appointment, at twenty-one or marriage, and until such portion should become payable, to raise money for the maintenance and education of the children as the wife should deem meet: provided, that if there should be no younger child, or it should die before twenty-one or marriage, 5,000*l.* additional should be paid to the wife's daughter by the former marriage. The wife died in 1806, leaving a son and a daughter, both very young. The daughter attained twenty-one, and married in 1824. The father died in April 1859. The Irish Court of Chancery held that the principal of 15,000*l.*, though the right to it vested on the daughter marrying, could not be raised during the life of the father, but declared interest on that sum to have become payable from the date of her marriage. On appeal the decree of the Court of Chancery was reversed, and the cause remitted, with directions that interest did not become payable till the death of the father. Ib.

3. By a settlement B. was empowered to charge lands in Ireland with any sum not to exceed 400*l.* a year, as a jointure for his wife, and with any sum not to exceed 2,000*l.* sterling for his younger children. In exercise of the power B. charged the lands with 2,000*l.* late Irish currency, to be vested in and paid to his younger children in equal shares on their attaining twenty-one or marriage; and he directed, in the event of his dying before the shares became vested, that his children should be entitled to interest on their presumptive portions at 5*l.* per cent. by way of maintenance from the time of his death until such portions should be payable:—Held, that the 2,000*l.* carried interest at 5*l.* per cent. Irish currency from the death of B. until the shares of the younger children became payable. Denny v. Denny, 14 L. T., N. S., 854.

4. By a settlement made in England on the marriage of D. certain real estates in Ireland were limited to trustees for 1,000 years, upon trust by mortgaging the said estates, or out of the rents and profits thereof, to raise 15,000*l.*, to be divided among the younger children of the marriage, as D. should appoint. D. appointed the whole of the portions among his children, appointing 4,000*l.* to his daughter, to be raised at certain specified times, with interest in the meantime at 5 per cent. The trustees being unable to raise the portions by mortgage, an action was brought to carry the trusts into effect:—Held, that D. having only a power of distributing the portions and not of charging them, had no power to fix the rate of interest; but that the land being in Ireland, 5 per cent. was the proper rate to be fixed by the Court. Lewis v. Freke (2 Ves. 507) and Young v. Waterpark (Lord) (13 Sim. 199) distinguished. Balfour v. Cooper, 23 L. R., Ch. D., 472; 52 L. J., Ch., 495; 48 L. T. 323; 31 W. R. 569.

Limitations. Statute of.] 5. By a marriage settlement of the year 1798, certain lands were limited to trustees to the use of A., the husband, and B., the intended wife, and the survivor of them, for their respective lives, with remainder to the issue of the marriage; and also to C. (a daughter of B. by a former marriage) in such shares as the survivor of them, the said A. and B., should appoint. In 1819, A. being the survivor, in pursuance of the power, appointed a certain sum to C., and limited a portion of the said lands to trustees to receive and levy by sale or mortgage the sum so appointed, and directed that the same should bear interest and be payable on the marriage of C., with a proviso, that if the marriage of C. should take place within the lifetime of A. the said principal sum should not be raised until twelve months after the decease of A. On a bill filed by C. and her husband, after the death of A., against a son of A. and B. who had got into and continued in the possession of the lands since the year 1825, and disputed the validity of the original settlement of 1798: —Held, that the plaintiffs were within the 42nd section of the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, and therefore only entitled to six years' arrears of interest on their charge. Burne v. Robinson, 1 Dr. & Wal. 688; 1 Ir. Eq. R. 333.

1. A., who, under a settlement entered into upon the marriage of his father in 1783, was entitled to a younger child's portion, filed his bill in 1825 for the purpose of raising the same, praying at the same time an account of all prior incumbrances, the inheritrix having set up certain prior articles executed in the year 1765 upon the marriage of the plaintiff's eldest brother, and which articles had been duly registered in the year 1767:—Held, that the charge under the articles of 1765 was not affected by the 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, that statute not being retrospective, and that the account of interest on foot of this charge should be confined to the filing of the bill. Peyton v. M'Dermott, 1 Dr. & War. 198.

Charge of Interest when Authorised by Powers to Charge in General.] See POWER, XIX. II.

IV. Time for Raising.

2. Portions at twenty-one or marriage, "when C. and his wife should die without issue male":—Held, a condition precedent, and not to be raised till both are dead, though one die, and other remain tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct. Champney v. Champney, 10 Mod. 312.

3. When a portion is to be raised by the annual profits or fines, if no time is appointed the portion is not due until such time as it might be so raised. Ivy v. Gilbert, 2 P. W. 20; Pre. Ch. 583. Affirmed 6 Bro. P. C. 68.

4. As to when portions are to be raised. See Evelyn v. Evelyn, Fitzg. 131; 2 P. W. 659; Selw. 18; 2 Barnard K. B. 118.

5. By marriage settlement lands are limited to husband and wife for their lives, remainder to the heirs male of their bodies, and if there should be no issue male of their bodies, and one or more daughters, then to trustees for 500 years from the decease of the survivor, in trust, by sale or mortgage to raise 1,000*l.* for daughters' portions, but there is no time appointed for the payment of them. The father dies, leaving a daughter only. The portion vesting in the daughter in the lifetime of the mother, it was decreed to be raised by a sale, with reasonable maintenance in the meantime, though no maintenance is provided by a settlement. Staniforth v. Staniforth, 2 Vern. 460.

6. A., by will, gives portions to his daughters, but mentions no time when to be paid, but adds a proviso, that his daughters should marry with consent of his wife, and if any married without such consent the portion to go over. On a bill brought by the daughters for their portions, the Court decreed the portions to be paid, but on security to refund if the condition should be broken. Aston v. Aston, 2 Vern. 452; 1 Ch. Rep. 164; Pre. Ch. 226.

7. Term created for daughters' portions, commencing after the death of the father and mother, upon trust to raise the portions from and after the commencement of the term. Father dies, leaving a daughter; decreed the portion is vested, but not raisable during the life of the mother. Butler v. Duncomb, 1 P. W. 448; 2 Vern. 760; 10 Mod. 432.

8. Where portions were provided for daughters on failure of issue male, to be paid at twenty-one or marriage, after the death of the survivor of the father or mother; the father having died, and there being an only daughter who had attained twenty-one, it was held, from the clear indication of the intention to postpone the raising till after the death of the survivor, that the portion should not be raised during the lifetime of the mother. Verney v. Verney (Earl), 2 Eden 25.

9. Term limited in remainder after father's death, in trust for raising portions for daughters at eighteen, or marriage; portions may be raised during life of father. So if on contingency, and the contingency happens in the life of the father, but not before contingency happened. Corbett v. Maidwell, 1 Salk. 158.

A term is limited in remainder after the father's death, in trust if he died without issue male, and there should be one or more daughters unmarried or unprovided for at his death; the trustees were to raise 2,000*l.* for their portions, to be paid at eighteen or marriage. The mother being dead, and there being one daughter who was married, and no issue male, the Court would not decree the portion to be raised in the life of the father, it not vesting till his death. S. C. nom. Corbett v. Maydwell, 2 Vern. 640; 3 Ch. Rep. 160.

10. A sum of 2,000*l.* was by certain articles provided for the daughters of a marriage, without any restriction as to the time of payment. By subsequent articles between the father and his eldest son, the former security was discharged, and securities to the amount of 8,000*l.* substituted for it, part provided by the father and part by the son. The intent was declared to be, that if the three daughters respectively should marry with the consent of their father (or after his death, of their mother), they should receive each a certain portion of the said 8,000*l.* on the day of her marriage, with interest from that day; and in case any of them should marry without such consent, or if any of them should die before she was married as aforesaid, her share should go between the others or to the survivor; and such of them as should be unmarried at their father's death, were to receive interest on their respective portions by way of maintenance. After the death of the father and mother, two of the daughters married and received their portions; the third having attained twenty-one years, though unmarried, was held entitled to have her portion raised. Nugent v. Clare, Wall. Lyn. 105.

11. Lands of an heir are charged with portions to infants at twenty-one, or marriage. The portions shall not be admitted to be paid in before they grow due in ease of the land. Oldfield v. Oldfield, 1 Vern. 337.

12. Portions raised in the lifetime of the father. Hillier v. Jones, 1 Eq. Abr. 337.

13. By marriage settlement, a term is limited to raise 5,000*l.*; if but one daughter to be paid at twenty-one or marriage, which should first happen after the death of the father and mother, or within six months after either of those days or terms. There being one daughter only, and she having attained twenty-one, and her father being dead, her portion was decreed to be raised in the lifetime of her mother. Gerrard v. Gerrard, 2 Vern. 458.

1. Under what circumstances payment of portion under a will shall be postponed until all the father's debts are satisfied. Daly v. French, 6 Bro. P. C. 55.

2. One has several daughters, and, being seised in fee, charges his lands with 1,000*l.* a-piece to his daughters, payable at twenty-one or marriage; and, if any die, then to the survivors, but no time limited when the additional portion should be paid to the surviving daughters. If one die unmarried before twenty-one, the additional portion shall not be paid to the surviving daughters until the deceased daughter should have come to twenty-one. Feltham v. Feltham, 2 P. W. 271.

3. Upon a marriage settlement, lands are limited to the use of the husband and wife for their lives, remainder to their first and every other son in tail, and in default of issue male of the marriage, to trustees in trust to raise 2,500*l.* for daughters, payable at twenty-one or marriage, which shall first happen, and out of the profits to pay 100*l.* per annum for maintenance; the first payment of the maintenance to commence after the estate of the trustees shall have come into possession. Husband dies without issue male, leaving a daughter, and a wife who is jointured in the premises; the portion shall not be raised in the mother's lifetime. Brome v. Berkley, 2 P. W. 484. Affirmed 6 Bro. P. C. 108.

4. Where there is a term for years for raising daughters' portions, payable at a certain time, and a vested interest, they shall not stay till the death of the father and mother; but the Court will lay hold of the slightest circumstance in a settlement that shows an intention to postpone raising them in the life of father and mother. Stanley v. Stanley, 1 Atk. 549.

5. A., upon his marriage with B., settles his estate to the use of himself for life, remainder to first and other sons in tail male, remainder to trustees for 1,000 years, remainder to his brother C. for life, remainder to the heirs male of his body, hereafter to be begotten; and then declares the trust of the term, that if there should be no issue male of the bodies of A. and B. begotten, that should live to the age of twenty-one years, or be married and have issue, and that there should be a daughter or daughters of the bodies of A. and B., such daughter should have 4,000*l.* for her portion; and if two or more, they to have 5,000*l.*, equally to be divided at their ages of twenty-one, or days of marriage, which should first happen; and if only one daughter, she to have the yearly sum of 100*l.* to be paid half-yearly for her maintenance; if two or more, the like sum to be paid them half-yearly, in equal shares, until their respective portions paid; if the portions not paid, the trustees to raise them out of the rents, or by sale or mortgage of the premises, or of part. Provided that, if the father should, in his lifetime, prefer them in marriage with portions equivalent, or the remainderman should, after the father's death, or that there should be no daughter who should attain the age of twenty-one, or be married, then the term to cease. B. died in the lifetime of A., leaving no son, but three daughters, who are all unmarried: C. took an estate tail under this settlement; and the portions may be raised for the daughters in the lifetime of A., their father. Hebblethwaite v. Cartwright, Forrest. 30.

6. The Court in late cases has thought it hard to raise daughters' portions in the father's lifetime, and therefore refused to do it. Hall v. Carter, 2 Atk. 356; 9 Mod. 347.

In late cases, where the portion was large, the Court has refused it in favour of the remainderman. Ib.

A jointress having, on the execution of the power creating her jointure, an estate precedent to a term for raising portions, the portions cannot be raised in the lifetime of the jointress so as to affect her. Ib.

Conveyancers now insert negative words to prevent portions being raised in a father and mother's lifetime. Ib.

A power in trustees of raising portions by rents or by mortgage, is no reason for postponing the raising, in order that they may make their election. Ib.

7. Directing a gross sum to be raised does not imply that it shall be raised at once, for it may be raised out of the rents and profits, and so laid out till it amounts to that sum. Okeden v. Okeden, 1 Atk. 550.

The Court of Equity lays great stress upon a particular time being appointed for payment of a portion, and has enlarged the power of trustees to raise it within the time. Id. 551.

8. Estate settled on husband and wife for life, and then to trustees for a term to raise portions for daughter, by leasing, assigning, or mortgaging: the husband dies, leaving daughters at his death, and no issue male. Their portions shall be raised in the life of the mother out of the reversion. Smith v. Evans, Ambl. 533.

9. Term to raise daughter's portion, to daughters of son, on failure of issue male of grandson, with power for grandson to jointure: —Held, the portions not raisable, nor interest payable, till after the death of the jointress. Churchman v. Harvey, Ambl. 366.

10. Where parent is tenant for life of settled estate, with remainder to trustees for 500 years, upon trust to raise portions for younger children, and parent has power to appoint portions by deed or will, they cannot be raised during parent's lifetime, and whole sum cannot be raised until they have attained twenty-one. Wynter v. Bold, 1 Sim. & S. 507.

11. In a power to appoint to children, by authorising the donor to appoint maintenance and education, it implied that the portions could not be raised during infancy, for if they could, the interest of the money so raised would supply those purposes. Edgeworth v. Edgeworth, Beat. 328.

12. A charge payable at a future day is in general not raisable, if the party die before the day, except when the time of payment is postponed for the convenience of the estate, when it is otherwise; but this exception does not apply to children's portions, which are not generally raisable for the child's representative if he dies before he wants a provision. The rule and cases on the subject considered. Ruby v. Foot, Beat. 581.

1. Where, under a settlement, a sum of money is to be raised out of real estates, for the portions of younger children, and some of the portions have become payable, the Court will raise the whole sum at once, although some of the children have not acquired vested interests. Gillibrand v. Goold, 5 Sim. 149; 2 L. J., N. S., Ch., 100.

2. Where a testator gave 2,000*l.* charged upon land to his daughter, with a direction that she should let it remain in the hands of his executors (who were his sons), at the interest of 4 per cent. till she married, and some time after, the executors, who succeeded to the business of the testator, died, and their sons, who next succeeded to the business, and one of whom succeeded to the estate upon which the legacy was charged, became bankrupt:—Held, that the daughter, though not married, was entitled to have the legacy raised out of the estate. Exp. & Re Forster, 1 M. D. & De G. 418; 10 L. J., N. S., Bky., 24; 5 Jur. 176. Affirmed 2 M. D. & De G. 177; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 340.

3. Portions held to be raisable before the time of payment, under the particular construction of the will by which they were given. Selby v. Gillum, 2 Y. & Coll. 379.

4. A term was limited in remainder after the death of a man and his wife, to raise daughter's portions at eighteen or marriage. One of the daughters attained that age after the death of her father. It was decreed that the portion should be raised in the mother's lifetime. Cotton v. Cotton, 3 Y. & Coll. 149. n.; 7 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 41.

5. By a marriage settlement, lands were limited to trustees for a term, upon trust to raise a sum of 4,000*l.* for the younger children of the marriage; the shares of sons to be payable at twenty-one, and of daughters at twenty-one or marriage. There were several younger children of the marriage, and some of them having attained twenty-one filed a bill to raise the amount of their portions:—Held, that the entire sum of 4,000*l.* could be raised at once, although some of the younger children were under age and unmarried, and that the shares of the latter should be paid into court, with liberty for them to apply when their shares should become payable. Leech v. Leech, 5 Ir. Eq. R. 69; 2 Dr. & War. 568.

6. Where, by a settlement, portions were to be raised at any time after the death of the father by the trustees of a term, to commence after the death of the father and mother, the portions to be paid at twenty-one or marriage of daughters, which should first happen, after the death of the father:—Held, that the portions were raisable during the lifetime of the mother, who was the survivor, and that the cost of raising them fell on the estate. Michell v. Michell, 4 Beav. 549; 7 Jur. 887.

7. The trustees of a term of years were to raise, as portions for younger children, 5,000*l.* if there should be one, 8,000*l.* if two, and 10,000*l.* if three or more, to be divided among them equally, the shares of the sons at twenty-one, and the shares of the daughters at twenty-one or marriage. There were three younger children:—Held, on petition, that the heir at law, on attaining twenty-one, was not entitled to have the portions raised and his estate discharged before the portions became payable, and that the Court would not order a larger sum to be raised for portions than had actually become vested and payable to the children who had attained twenty-one or married. Sheppard v. Wilson, 4 Hare 392; 9 Jur. 920.

8. An estate was limited to trustees for a term, with remainders to A. and afterwards to his sons in tail, with similar limitations successively to B. and C., and their sons in tail. The trusts of the term were, on the death of A., and of B., and of C., respectively, to raise portions for their respective younger children:—Held, on the death of C. in the life of B., that the portions for the younger children of C. could not be raised during the life of B. Lawton v. Swetenham, 18 Beav. 98.

9. Portions charged on a reversionary fund shall not in general be raised till the term comes into possession; yet when it is expressly directed, under a power, that they shall be raised as soon as may be, they shall bear interest from the death of testator. Conway v. Conway, 3 Bro. C. C. 267. But see note there.

10. On a settlement before marriage, the trust of a term was, that in case the husband should have no issue male, and there should be daughters, to raise, if two daughters, 25,000*l.*, to be paid at twenty-one or marriage, but not to be raised till the death of their grandfather. The father died leaving two daughters, and then the grandfather died; the husband of one daughter claimed 12,500*l.*, with interest from the time of the marriage:—Decreed, with interest, as a vested portion on the words of the settlement; but upon portions, or interest on them, to be raised out of reversionary terms, especially upon construction or implication only, the Court reluctantly interfered. Lyon v. Chandos (Duke), 3 Atk. 416.

11. When a reversionary term, expectant upon an estate for life, is vested in trustees for the purpose of raising and securing portions for children, such reversionary terms may be sold in the lifetime of the tenant for life, to raise the portions. Whaley v. Morgan, 2 Dr. & Wal. 330.

A reversionary term, expectant upon the estate for life of the settlor, was vested in trustees, to secure children's portions, payable after the death of the tenant for life (the settlor). The deed contained a provision that it should be lawful for the settlor and the trustees in his life to raise and levy, by sale or mortgage, or other disposition of the term, the aforesaid portions, or any part thereof, in his, the settlor's lifetime:—Held, that this provision entitled the settlor to charge such portions in his lifetime, payable with interest from the day of the date of his so charging. Ib.

12. Under a marriage settlement, lands were limited to trustees for a term in remainder, after successive life estates, to the husband and wife, and limitations to sons, etc., in tail, upon trust, that in case there should be an eldest son, and one or more child or children of the marriage, the trustees should by sale or mortgage of the term raise a certain sum for portions, such portions to be paid to a son at twenty-one, and to a daughter at twenty-one or marriage; and there was also a trust for maintenance out of the rents, issues, and profits, and also for the advancement of the sons, etc., after the decease of the husband, or in his lifetime with his consent:—Held, upon a bill filed after the death of the wife by the younger children, who had all attained twenty-one, that they were entitled to have their portions raised immediately by sale or mortgage of the reversionary term. Smyth v. Foley, 3 Y. & Coll. 142; 7 L. J., N. S., Exch. Eq., 34.

Quære, whether "rents, issues, and profits" mean annual profits merely, or authorise a sale. Ib.

In the construction of marriage settlements, courts of equity will not act upon any views of expediency or inexpediency of their provisions. Ib.

1. After a devise of his estates to trustees for twenty-one years, if any child should so long live and remain a minor, and, being a daughter, unmarried, upon certain trusts, the testator directed that after the determination of that term, and subject thereto, all his estates should remain to the use of the trustees for the term of ninety-nine years, to commence from the day of his decease, upon trust, to raise during so much of the life of his son as should fall within the period of twenty-one years from his death, and also during such other time or times of the life of his son as there should be in existence and actually born any children of his son entitled by virtue of the trusts to the benefit of the sum to be accumulated from time to time, an annuity of 2,000*l.* After other provisions, he declared that the annuity of 2,000*l.* was given to the trustees upon trust to lay out and invest the same and receive the interest, and lay out and invest the same so that the whole might accumulate, in the way of compound interest, until the decease of the plaintiff, and then upon trust for all and every the younger children of the body of the plaintiff, exclusive of an eldest or only son, to be paid to them as the plaintiff should appoint; and in default of appointment, the accumulated fund was to be equally divided between all such younger children, the shares of sons to be paid at twenty-one, and of daughters at twenty-one or days of marriage, which should first happen. By a proviso he declared that if the children of the plaintiff should die under age, the accumulated fund should be part of the personal estate of the plaintiff. The plaintiff had issue a son in 1845, who died in 1850. In 1850 a daughter was born, and in subsequent years three other sons. On a bill filed by the plaintiff, praying that it might be declared that the trustees ought not to have resumed the raising of the 2,000*l.* out of the rents, and under the trusts of the term of ninety-nine years, upon the birth of the daughter in 1850, and that the sum had not become and was not raisable under the trusts of the term:—Held, that as soon as there was a younger child born, he must be considered entitled within the meaning of the language which directed the trustees to raise the annuity. Beech v. St. Vincent (Viscount), 3 Jur., N. S., 762; 19 L. J., N. S., Ch., 130; 14 Jur. 731; 3 De G. & Sm. 678.

2. The question as to the time when portions become payable is one of construction, and when according to that construction the period has arrived when the portion is directed to be raised and paid, this must be done, although it can only be done by a waste of property, and sale or mortgage of a reversionary term. Massey v. Lloyd, 8 L. T., N. S., 122; 10 H. L. Ca. 248; 9 Jur., N. S., 391; 11 W. R. 484 Affirming 12 Ir. Eq. R. 298. Reversing 11 Ir. Eq. R. 429.

A portion is not properly said to be payable by trustees until two things have occurred, namely, when the time appointed for raising has arrived, and when the person entitled is able to give a discharge; but a portion is often said to be payable to a child so soon as the event has happened which gives the child a vested interest in it. Ib.

By a marriage settlement, lands were conveyed to the use of trustees for a term of 999 years; and subject thereto, to the first and other sons of the marriage in tail male. The trusts of the term were for the wife for life; and subject thereto, and to 10,000*l.*, for her daughter by a former marriage, to pay yearly, during the residue of the term, out of the rents, to the husband 1,000*l.* during his life; and as to the residue to such persons as the wife should appoint; and in default, to her right heirs. And as to the residue of the term, in case there should be issue of the marriage one or more child or children other than an eldest or only son, by sale or mortgage of the term, or a competent part, and by the rents, in the meantime. and until such sale, to raise 15,000*l.* for the portions of such child and children; and if only one such child, then the 15,000*l.* to be paid to such child; and in case there should be more than one such child, the said sum to be paid to such children at such time and times, and in such shares, and with such yearly interest, not exceeding the legal interest in the meantime, as the wife should by deed or will appoint; and in default of appointment, to sons at twenty-one, and to daughters at twenty-one or marriage; and should, out of the rents of the premises, in the meantime, and until the portions should become payable, raise such yearly sums for maintenance as the wife should direct, not exceeding interest at 5*l.* per cent.; and if no appointment, then interest at the same rate, with benefit of survivorship in respect of such portions. The wife appointed the surplus rents, after the two charges of 10,000*l.* and 1,000*l.* annuity, and some other legacies, to her son:—Held, that the sum of 15,000*l.* directed to be raised for portions was not payable until the death of the husband as well as the wife, and that no interest was payable thereon in the meantime. Ib.

Raising Portion before the Proper Time. Real and Personal Estate.] 3. The testator, some time before his death, executed a settlement whereby he covenanted with the trustees, that if he should die in the lifetime of his daughter, who was then an infant and unmarried, his heirs or executors should, within six months after his death, pay to the trustees the sum of 10,000*l.*, which he charged on his real estates; and he declared the trusts of that sum to be for his daughter during her life, and after her death for her children; but if she should die without leaving a child who should attain twenty-one years, then the trustees should stand possessed of the trust funds as part of his personal estate. The testator during his life raised 10,000*l.* (part of a larger sum), and paid it to the trustees. They afterwards lent 4,500*l.* to the testator, on mortgage of part of his real estates, and 5,500*l.* to other persons. The testator by his will gave his personal estate to the plaintiff, and his real estate to the defendants. His daughter survived him, but died within six months after his death, an infant and unmarried, so that the trust fund never became raisable under the covenant:—Held, that the whole of the 10,000*l.* was part of the testator's personal estate, and belonged to the plaintiff. Tucker v. Loveridge, 6 W. R. 786; 4 Jur., N. S., 939; 2 De G. & J. 650; 27 L. J., Ch., 731. Affirming 1 Giff. 377.

V. How Raised.

1. If trustees are empowered to pay portions at fixed days, out of the rents and profits of lands, and they are inadequate, the trustees may sell the lands. Backhouse v. Middleton, 1 Ch. Ca. 175.

2. The words, "to be raised by rents and profits," will imply a power to sell. Green v. Belchier, 1 Atk. 506. Okeden v. Okeden, 1 Atk. 551, and notes.

3. Where there is a trust for raising portions out of rents and profits, the lands may be sold. Sheldon v. Dormer, 2 Vern. 310.

4. Trust of a term to raise portions out of the rents and profits, to be paid as soon as conveniently may be. By virtue of the word "profits," trustees may sell or mortgage; secus, if said "annual profits." Trafford v. Ashton, 1 P. W. 415.

5. Where portions were directed to be raised "as soon as conveniently may be," Court decreed a sale of the lands. Ashton v. ——, 10 Mod. 401.

6. Lands settled on trustees for raising portions for daughters; on a bill for a sale, Court will decree the heir to join in the sale though he has no legal interest. Roll v. Roll, 2 Vern. 99.

7. Lands are settled on marriage upon condition if there should be a daughter, the persons in remainder should pay her 2,000*l.* at sixteen, with power for the daughter, in case of non-payment, to distrain for the 2,000*l.* and damages. Though no power to sell, yet a sale decreed for raising the portion. Wharton v. Wharton, 2 Vern. 1.

8. Portion raised out of reversionary terms: the rule is, that it depends upon the particular penning of the trust, and a fair construction of the whole instrument, as to the intention. Upon limitation to parent for life, with a term to raise portions at twenty-one, or marriage; if there is nothing more, and the interests are vested, and the contingencies happened at which the portions are to be paid, upon the general rule the interest is payable, and the portions must be raised by sale or mortgage of the term. Codrington v. Foley (Lord), 6 Ves. 364.

9. The Court leans against the construction for raising portions or maintenance out of a reversionary term: and upon that principle, when the term fell into possession, and the portion was raised, refused to charge the difference between the sum annually allowed by the infant's grandfather for her maintenance, and the sum charged. Clinton v. Seymour, 4 Ves. 440.

10. If lands are devised to a wife for life, and afterwards to be sold by the executor to pay younger children's portions, and the executor and the wife die, the younger children may compel the heir to sell, though the executor had only an authority. Garfoot v. Garfoot, 1 Ch. Ca. 35; 2 Freem. 176. See also Hebblethwaite v. Cartwright, 2 Barnard. K. B. 438.

11. Lands are settled on marriage, upon condition, if there should be a daughter, the persons in remainder should pay her 2,000*l.* at sixteen, with power for the daughter, in case of non-payment, to distrain for the 2,000*l.* and damages. Though no power to sell, yet a sale decreed for raising the portion. Wharton v. Wharton, 2 Vern. 3.

12. Where a term is limited to raise portions for younger children by rents and profits, the heir may have the portions raised by a sale, though the younger children oppose it, as well as he may insist on a sale if he think fit. Warburton v. Warburton, 2 Vern. 420.

13. Where the ordinary profits of a term are not sufficient to raise a portion, timber may be felled, or a mine worked for it against the heir. Offley v. Offley, Pre. Ch. 27.

14. A portion, charged on lands by virtue of a power, shall be raised by a sale or mortgage, and not by the rents and profits of the lands charged, because it could not thereby be received in any reasonable time. The party entitled might be abridged of half the value of the portion by that manner of raising it. Kelly v. Bellew (Lord), 4 Bro. P. C. 501.

15. By a marriage settlement, lands are limited to husband and wife for their lives, remainder to the heirs male of their bodies; and if there should be no issue male of their bodies, and one or more daughters, then to trustees for 500 years from the decease of the survivor, in trust, by sale or mortgage to raise 1,000*l.* for daughters' portions; but there is no time appointed for the payment of them. The father dies, leaving a daughter only. The portion vesting in the daughter in the lifetime of the mother, it was decreed to be raised by a sale with reasonable maintenance in the meantime, though no maintenance is provided by a settlement. Staniforth v. Staniforth, 2 Vern. 460.

16. The trust of a term is to raise daughters' portions by rents, issues, and profits, or by making leases for three lives, at the ancient rent, or by granting copyholds on fines, the money to be paid to the daughters at the age of eighteen, or marriage, or as soon after as the same could be raised out of the premises as aforesaid. The portions, as it seems, may not be raised by sale or mortgage. Mills v. Banks, 3 P. W. 1.

17. A reversionary term, raised for securing maintenance and portions of daughter, shall, in cases of necessity, be mortgaged to pay either; and when fallen into possession, shall pay all the arrears of maintenance incurred before it came into possession. Ravenhill v. Dansey, 2 P. W. 179.

1. The trust of a term was for raising a portion for a daughter, in default of issue male, payable at eighteen, or marriage, or so soon after as the same might conveniently be raised. The mother died, leaving only one daughter. The Court was of opinion that the portion could not be conveniently raised by sale of the reversion. Reresby v. Newland, 2 P. W. 93. Affirmed 6 Bro. P. C. 75.

The Court will not go further than warranted by precedents, in selling reversionary terms to pay portions. Ib.

2. A trust term for raising daughters' portions; if it direct a particular method of raising the portions, it implies a negative that they shall not be raised any other way. Ivy v. Gilbert, 2 P. W. 13; Pre. Ch. 583. Affirmed 6 Bro. P. C. 68.

A trust term to raise portions out of the rents, etc., as well as by leasing for three lives, or twenty-one years, at the old rent. This extends only to raise the portions by annual profits, or by leasing, and not by mortgage or sale; and if the trustee in such trust term mortgage for the portion, the mortgage is void when the portion might have been raised by the profits. Ib.

Where a portion is to be raised by the annual profits or fines, if no time be appointed, the portion is not due till such time as it might be so raised. Ib.

3. A reversionary term sold for the raising of daughter's portion. Sandys v. Sandys, 1 P. W. 707.

4. Portions secured by settlement out of lands, or articled so to be, are not to be paid out of the personal estate. Edwards v. Freeman, 2 P. W. 437.

5. As to how and when portions are to be raised. Evelyn v. Evelyn, Fitzg. 131; 2 P. W. 659; Kelw. 18; 2 Barnard K. B. 118.

6. Where land was originally charged with daughters' portions, it must bear the burden, and they shall not be paid out of the personal estate. Burgoigne v. Fox, 1 Atk. 576.

7. Portions to be raised by a trust term in a marriage settlement: the real estate held the primary fund, and a covenant by the settlor to pay them, auxiliary only. Lechmere v. Charlton, 15 Ves. 193.

8. Where real estates are devised in strict settlement, subject to trust for raising portions for younger children, during minority of tenant for life, out of rents and profits, or by sale or mortgage:—Held, certain funds, that had arisen from rents during such minority, were applicable to payment of the portions, and that deficiency only could be raised by sale or mortgage. Warter v. Hutchinson, 1 Sim. & S. 276.

9. Lands are limited by marriage settlement, upon failure of issue male, to the daughters of the marriage and their heirs, until the next remainderman should pay them 3,000*l.*; there being four daughters only, they entered: decreed at the Rolls, they should account for the profits, and that the rents should be applied first to pay the interest, and then sink the principal, as in the case of a common mortgage. Decree affirmed by the Lord Chancellor, with this variation, that the principal should not sink till a third part was raised above the interest, and so again when another third part was raised. Blagrave v. Clunn, 2 Vern. 523.

10. A., having power to raise the portions provided for his younger children under his settlement by sale, or mortgage, or other disposition of a reversionary term of 1,000 years, did, in 1815, on the marriage of one of his daughters with Lord Chancellor, purport to charge by appointment this reversionary term with 4,000*l.* and interest. After the death of Lord Chancellor, his personal representative, having been advised that the power to charge had not been duly executed, proceeded at law against A., on the covenant of title. A. gave judgment at law, and filed his bill, stating that the sum would in a court of equity be decreed to be well charged, and praying a perpetual injunction against the proceedings at law, offering, at the same time, to execute any instrument which should be deemed necessary for charging the same:—Held, that A. should, with the trustees of the term, execute to the representatives of Lord Chancellor a mortgage of the lands and premises in the term for 4,000*l.* and interest, and that a perpetual injunction should be granted against any further proceedings at law. Whaley v. Morgan, 2 Dr. & Wal. 330.

11. A wife's lands were conveyed by her settlement to trustees for 999 years, on trust, during so many years of the term as she should live, to pay the rents to her or her appointees, and, subject to a prior charge of 10,000*l.*, to pay the husband during the residue of the term, for so many years as he should live after her death, an annuity of 1,000*l.*, and to pay the residue as she, by deed or will, should appoint; and as to the residue of the term, after the death of her and her husband, on trust, if there should be younger children of the marriage, that the trustees should, by sale or mortgage of the residue of the term, and by the rents and profits in the meantime, raise 10,000*l.* for their portions, payable with interest as she should appoint, or in default of appointment to sons at twenty-one and to daughters at twenty-one or marriage, and should, by the rents in the meantime and until the portions should be payable, raise such sums as she should appoint for maintenance, not exceeding interest on the respective portions. The wife appointed the surplus rents (after the 10,000*l.* charge and 1,000*l.* annuity and some legacies) to her son, the defendant, and died:—Held, that during the husband's lifetime the portions could not be raised by a sale of the term, either in possession or expectancy on his death; and held, also, that no appointment having been made to provide for the interest, it, too, was only raisable along with the principal, and not by a receiver in the meantime. Lloyd v. Massey, 12 Ir. Eq. R. 298. Affirmed S. C. nom. Massey v. Lloyd, 9 Jur., N. S., 391; 11 W. R. 484; 8 L. T., N. S., 122; 10 H. L. Ca. 248. And see S. C. 11 Ir. Eq. R. 429.

12. Lands were limited to trustees for a term of years in trust to raise a sum for portions for younger children, to be vested at twenty-one or marriage, with a proviso that no sale or disposition should be made until some one of the portions should be actually payable. The eldest of the younger children had attained twenty-one:—Held, that the whole sum was raisable at once, and that, after paying the adult child her share, the remaining portions ought to be provided for by carrying over a sum of stock sufficient, at the present price, to provide for them, with a margin for depreciation. Pearoth v. Greenwood, 28 W. R. 417.

Scheme for Raising.] 1. Where four portioners, entitled each to a fifth of a portions fund, became entitled in undivided shares to the estate upon which the portions fund was charged, the entire estate being also subject to a mortgage:—Held, that no one of portioners could claim the right of having the whole fund divided, and thrown in fourths upon the respective shares, in order that, by payment of the difference between what was chargeable on her share of the estate, and what was due to her in respect of the portion, her share of the estate might be cleared. Otway Cave v. Otway, 2 L. R., Eq., 725.

Held, also, that such a proposal was a proper subject for arrangement in chambers; and upon a bill filed by a portioner under the circumstances to have her share in the estate discharged, and to have the trusts of the portions term administered by the Court, leave was given to the plaintiff to bring into chambers a scheme for the purpose. Ib.

Where persons entitled to a charge on land secured by a term become entitled to the land charged, it is not competent to any one of them, upon bringing in the share of the charge proportionate to his share of the land, thereupon, without more, to throw the remaining portions of the charge on the remaining shares of the land. S. C. 15 W. R. 6.

VI. Currency. Payable in What.

2. Prior to 1826 a marriage was solemnised in England, between a gentleman domiciled in Ireland and a lady domiciled in England. By their marriage settlement, which was drawn and executed in England, and of which one of the two trustees was domiciled in England, the other in Ireland, the husband assigned to trustees lands in Ireland, of which he was possessed in fee, for a term of 500 years, upon trust to levy and raise, by perception of the rents and profits, or by sale or mortgage, a sum of "5,000*l.* of lawful British money," as portions for the younger children of the marriage, and to hold the same in trust for the children, in such shares as the husband should appoint:—Held, that the portions should be paid in British currency. Re Boate, 10 Ir. Ch. R. 164.

See also III. ante.

VII. Costs of Raising.

3. The costs of raising portions are payable out of the estate, and not out of the portions. Michell v. Michell, 4 Beav. 549; 7 Jur. 887.

4. Bill by inheritor of real estate against the incumbrancers on it, stating that it would be an insufficient fund, praying an account of incumbrances, and a sale for the benefit of all parties:—Held, to be proper, and inheritor, plaintiff's, costs to be paid first out of the produce of the sale. Head v. Massey, 2 Moll. 467.

5. The value of a settled estate being less than the sum charged thereon for younger children's portions, the inheritor filed a bill against the younger children for a sale of the estate, and at the final hearing asked for his costs in priority to their demands:—Held, that, in the absence of any agreement to that effect, he was not entitled to them, overruling Head v. Massey (2 Moll. 467). Hughes v. Nash, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 495.

6. Where several children appeared and proceeded jointly, by the same solicitor, for a sum to which they were entitled in equal shares, and incurred costs to a considerable amount, two of the children having died, and there being a continuing litigation as to the persons entitled to their shares, the solicitor in the meantime allowed the surviving children to draw out their shares of the fund without any deduction for the costs for which they were jointly and severally liable; and they now applied for payment, out of the sum in bank (that was, the shares of the two deceased children), of the entire amount of the costs:—Held, that the shares of the two deceased children were liable, in the first instance, for that proportion only of the costs which they should have paid if the others had contributed equally, and that it was the duty of the solicitor to take care that the costs should be borne equally by the several younger children. Crone v. O'Dell, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 12.

7. The costs of raising a family charge should be borne by the estate, but the costs occasioned by dealings with the charge should be borne by the charge, and not by the estate. Stewart v. Donegal (Marquis), 2 J. & L. 636; 8 Ir. Eq. R. 621.

8. Costs of raising a family charge under a power, but not of the suit to raise it, given out of the estate. Alleyne v. Alleyne, 3 Ir. Eq. R. 493; 2 J. & L. 544.

9. By the exercise of the usual power of appointment in a marriage settlement the shares of children were appointed unequally, but were equalised, or nearly so, by a division of the unappointed property under a hotchpot clause:—Held, that the costs of an action to administer the trusts of the settlement must be paid ratably out of the appointed and unappointed shares. Moore v. Dixon, 15 L. R., Ch. D., 566; 49 L. J., Ch., 807; 29 W. R. 12.

10. A power in trustees to raise by mortgage a fixed sum implies a power to raise also the incidental costs of the mortgage. Armstrong v. Armstrong, 18 L. R., Eq., 541; 43 L. J., Ch., 719.

Trustees of a marriage settlement made in 1802 were empowered to raise and levy the sum of 6,000*l.* for portions on the security of a term of 300 years in certain freeholds. Part of the 6,000*l.* was raised. In 1872 it became necessary to raise the residue, which then amounted to 3,290*l.* 8*s.* 4*d.* By an order then made in a suit which was instituted for the execution of the trusts of certain indentures of settlement, the trustees were authorised to advance this amount out of their trust funds upon the security of the term. Considerable costs had to be incurred in effecting the security, and it was asked that the last-named trustees might be at liberty to advance a further sum out of their trust funds upon the same security to cover the costs so incurred:—Held, that the term of 300 years might properly be taken as a security, not only for the whole amount of 6,000*l.*, but also for the costs. Ib.

VIII. Survivorship.

1. Where, under a marriage settlement, portions were provided, to be vested and be paid at such times as the husband should appoint, and on default of appointment to vest at twenty-one, and be paid at the husband's death, and it was provided that if any child should die before the time appointed for payment of his portion, it should survive to the others, the husband appointed the portion fund among the younger children, directing the portions to vest at the time of such appointment, but to be paid after his death:—Held, that the share of a son who died, after such appointment, in his father's lifetime, did not survive, but belonged to the son's estate. Spencer v. Spencer, 8 Sim. 87; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 310.

2. Father having power under marriage settlement to appoint shares, in which his younger children were to take a sum to be raised for their portions, having exercised that power by will, afterwards advances to one of daughters, took release from her of her portion, and by codicil revoked his appointment by will as to her:—Held, her portion was to go to the other children. Noel v. Walsingham (Lord), 2 Sim. & S. 99; 3 L. J., Ch., 12.

3. Where father has power to appoint among children, and one died in his lifetime:—Held, that share which lapsed by death should go among all, as in default of appointment, notwithstanding a direction that each receiving a share should release the fund, and there is no presumption of satisfaction or purchase from another provision, which was expressly made in satisfaction of different interest. Burges v. Mawbey, 10 Ves. 319.

4. Portions held vested in the case of parent and child, by implication from the whole settlement against express words; and a clause of survivorship upon death of child "before the portion should become payable," was upon the authorities construed "before it should be vested." Hope v. Clifden (Lord), 6 Ves. 499.

5. The trusts of a term in a post-nuptial settlement of real estates were: "After the decease of the husband and wife (the settlors) to raise 1,000*l.* for the portion of every daughter and younger son, to be paid to sons at the age of twenty-one, and to daughters at that age or marriage, if such ages should be attained or marriages had after the decease of the survivor of the settlors and not sooner; and if any younger son died or became an eldest or only son before twenty-one, or any daughter died before that age unmarried, or before his or her portion became vested, the portions provided for such son or daughter so dying, etc., before his or her portion became payable as aforesaid, should survive and accrue to the survivors of such daughters and younger sons, to be equally divided between them, and paid when their original portions should become payable." Then followed a proviso for the issue of a younger son or daughter dying in the lifetime of the settlors, or after their death, before his or her portion became due and payable; and a trust after the death of the settlors for maintenance of such sons and daughters, or their issue entitled to portions as aforesaid, until his or her portion became payable, with cesser of the term on payment of the portions, or in case there should not be any younger children or issue of them living at the death of the survivor of the settlors. The settlors had seven children (besides an eldest son), four of whom died in the lifetime of their parents under the age of twenty-one and unmarried:—Held, by the Lords, reversing a decree in Chancery, that the three survivors were entitled to have the portions of the four deceased children raised for them in addition to their own. Evans v. Scott, 1 H. L. Ca. 43; 11 Jur. 291.

6. By the marriage settlement of A., a sum of 15,000*l.* was to be raised for the portions of the younger children, in such shares, and payable at such times, as A. should appoint; and in default of appointment, among the children equally; the share of each son to be vested at twenty-one, and of each daughter at twenty-one or marriage; with a proviso that the share of any younger child, dying before the time prescribed for the vesting of his or her portion, should go over to the survivors. Afterwards A., by his will, bequeathed unto all and every his daughters who should be living at his death, or born in due time afterwards, 40,000*l.*, share and share alike; but if he should have only one daughter, then unto such only daughter the sum of 20,000*l.*; to be paid to them or her, at such time or times, etc., as the provisions made for them by this marriage settlement were payable. A. died, leaving two daughters, one of whom died under age and unmarried:—Held, that the surviving daughter was entitled to the whole of the 40,000*l.*, if the personalty was sufficient to raise it. Sanford v. Irby, 4 L. J., Ch., 28.

Quære, Whether the surviving daughter would be entitled to such part of 20,000*l.* (moiety of the 40,000*l.*) as it might be necessary to raise out of real estate. Ib.

7. The trust of a term limited by marriage settlement was declared to be in case there should be issue male of the marriage, and one or more younger children, to raise 3,000*l.* for the portions of such younger children, in such shares and proportions as J. C., by any writing, etc., should appoint; and for want of appointment equally amongst the children, the portions of the sons to be paid at twenty-one, and of the daughters at twenty-one or marriage. J. C. by will appointed 1,250*l.*, part of the 3,000*l.*, to one of his younger sons, who, after the making of the will, attained the age of twenty-one, but died in the lifetime of the appointer:—Held, that the sum of 1,250*l.* went as in default of appointment. Colthurst v. Colthurst, 2 Jones 262.

IX. Merger.

1. On marriage, lands are settled on A. for life, remainder to the first, etc., sons of the marriage in tail male, remainder to trustees for 500 years, to raise 5,000*l.* portions for daughter, payable at eighteen or marriage; remainder to A. in fee. After the marriage A. settles other lands, and a term is created for raising the like sum of 5,000*l.* for daughters on failure of issue male, payable at sixteen or marriage; A. dies, leaving a daughter his heir-at-law, who attains eighteen, and dies unmarried. The trust of the term is not merged in the fee, but the portion shall go to the daughter's executors, and is disposable by her will, but there shall be but one 5,000*l.* raised. Thomas v. Komeys, 2 Vern. 348; 2 Freem. 207.

2. Lands charged with portions for A., afterwards descending to A.:—Held, not to extinguish or satisfy the portion. Rushout v. Rushout, 6 Bro. P. C. 39.

3. A daughter's portion secured by a trust term, not extinguished by a devise of the lands to the daughter in tail. Laurence v. Blatchford, 2 Vern. 457.

4. By a marriage settlement, lands are limited to the husband and wife, with remainder to their first, etc., sons, and then a term for years to secure portions for daughters. The husband dies, leaving only a daughter, upon whom the inheritance descends. The daughter dies an infant, and indebted, and disposes of her portion by her will. Equity relieves against the merger of the portion. Powell v. Morgan, 2 Vern. 90.

5. A father, tenant for life, with power to charge 500*l.* for younger children, and son tenant in tail, resettled the estate to the use that the son should receive a rent-charge of 100*l.* for their lives and that of the survivor, with powers of distress and entry for non-payment; then to the use of the father for life with a power to charge an additional sum of 1,000*l.* for younger children; then to the son in tail:—Held, that although if it was the intent to give the annuity priority over the 1,000*l.*, equity would not allow a legal merger to destroy it; yet on the true construction it was not intended that it should exist after the father's death, though granted for the son's life; and therefore that the general rule giving priority in family settlements to charges for younger children should prevail. Mills v. Mills, 9 Ir. Eq. R. 299; 3 J. & L. 242.

X. Conditional.

6. Agreed, in marriage articles, that a portion shall be paid, and a settlement made, but that payment is to be withheld, unless the settlement be made within a limited time. Afterwards, the marriage settlement not being proceeded with:—Held, that the latter clause could only be intended to hasten the marriage settlement, and that the right to the portion was independent of its execution. Kendrick v. Winter, 2 Ken. Ch. 96.

7. The rule that a condition to marry with consent is in terrorem only when no devise over, must be understood of legacies only, and not of portions. Harvey v. Aston, 1 Atk. 379; Forrest. 212, and note (i) id. 217.

8. A., by will, gives portions to his daughters, but mentions no time when to be paid, but adds a proviso, that his daughters should marry with consent of his wife, and if any married without such consent, her portion to go over. On a bill, brought by the daughters for their portions, the Court decreed the portions to be paid, but on security to refund if the condition should be broken. Aston v. Aston, 2 Vern. 452; 1 Ch. Rep. 164; Pre. Ch. 226.

9. Portions at twenty-one or marriage, when C. and his wife should die without issue male:—Held, a condition precedent, and not to be raised till both are dead; though one die, and the other remain tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct. Champney v. Champney, 10 Mod. 314.

10. Devise upon trust, by mortgage, or out of the rents and profits, to pay debts, and afterwards to raise portions for the testator's daughters, "such portions to become due, and be considered as vested at the expiration of two years next after my decease, if my debts shall be then paid." This is a condition precedent to the portions becoming vested; and one of the daughters having died while her portion remained unpaid, upon a question between her representative and the persons who would be entitled, in the event of the portion not having become vested in her lifetime; an inquiry was directed as to the time when the debts were, or might have been, paid. Bernard v. Mountague, 1 Meriv. 422. See 11 Ves. 508. n.

11. One, having two sons, G. and T., and a daughter, devises several estates to his two sons and their issue, with cross-remainders, and declared, that if either of them should die without issue living at his death, so that his estate should come to his brothers, the surviving brother should pay 2,000*l.* to his daughter, within one year after his brother's death, and charged the estate with it. G. died, leaving two sons; afterwards T. died without issue. Quære, whether the 2,000*l.* should be raised.—Held, it should. Tollett v. Tollett, Ambl. 177, 194.

12. A. covenanted in B.'s marriage settlement "that in case there shall not be any issue male of the marriage, or that all such issue male shall happen to die under the age of twenty-one years, or that if there shall be three or more daughters of the marriage, that, and in that case," A. would pay an additional portion of 1,000*l.* among B.'s daughters at twenty-one or marriage as B. should appoint, and in default of appointment among "such daughters, in case there shall be three or more such daughters, share and share alike":—Held, that A. was chargeable only in the case of one of the first two events and the last happening together, the last "or" being to be construed "and." White v. Supple, 1 Con. & L. 525; 2 Dr. & War. 471.

Semble, the gift in default of appointment would not vest unless the three daughters attained twenty-one, or married. Ib.

1. General Principles.

1. A cumulative provision in will shall not double a portion, unless plainly proved that testator intended to do so. Blois v. Blois, 2 Vent. 347.

2. The Court leans against double portions, yet regard must be had to circumstances; as where there is an eldest son, or more children, and the demand would be to their prejudice. Otherwise in the case of an only child. Bellasis v. Uthwatt, 1 Atk. 427.

When one bequest is made in satisfaction for that to which the legatee is previously entitled, the thing given in satisfaction must be of the same nature, and attended with the same certainty, as the thing in lieu of which it is given, as land for land, money for money. If personal estate be given for personal estate, one shall not be with a contingency and the other without, for here the same certainty is wanting. Ib.

3. Slight circumstances are laid hold of to get rid of the rule that a legacy to a creditor extinguishes the debt, but a little difference between a portion and a legacy to a child, and as to the time of payment, will not prevail against the presumption of satisfaction. Barclay v. Wainwright, 3 Ves. 466.

4. Portions for the children by the will of the parent:—Held, a satisfaction of a provision by settlement upon the intention; slight circumstances of difference that would repel the presumption of satisfaction between strangers are not sufficient in the case of parent and child. Sparkes v. Cator, 3 Ves. 530.

5. Portions for the children by the will of the parent, presumed a satisfaction of a prior provision by settlement, unless clearly not so intended; the presumption is not rebutted by slight circumstances. Hincheliffe v. Hinchcliffe, 3 Ves. 516.

6. Portion by will, primâ facie a satisfaction of a portion by settlement. Tolson v. Collins, 4 Ves. 491.

7. Bequest of the residue of testator's personal estate, to a younger son, being greater than the provision by the father's marriage settlement, is a satisfaction of that portion. Kirkman v. Morgan, 2 Bro. C. C. 394.

8 Land, though of much greater value, left to a daughter, no satisfaction of a portion. Lechmere v. Carlisle (Earl), 3 P. W. 225.

9. Equity leans against satisfaction of debt by legacy, but in favour of a provision by will being in satisfaction of a portion by contract. Thynne (Lady) v. Glengall (Earl), 2 H. L. Ca. 131; 12 Jur. 805. Affirming S. C. sub nom. Glengall (Earl) v. Barnard, 1 Keen 769; 6 L. J., N. S., Ch., 25, and subsequent orders.

Small differences between the debt and the legacy negative the presumption of satisfaction, but are disregarded in the case of portions. So in case of debt, a smaller legacy is not a satisfaction of a larger debt, but may be a satisfaction of a portion pro tanto. Ib.

A gift of residue cannot be a satisfaction of a debt, because, the amount being uncertain, it may be less than the debt; but as a portion may be satisfied by a smaller legacy pro tanto, so on principle a residue ought to be considered as satisfaction of a portion altogether, or pro tanto, according to the amount. Ib.

A. having invested in stock a sum of money, in pursuance of a settlement, by way of portion for one of his daughters, and having given a bond for the payment of a further sum at his decease, entered into an agreement with B. to make a provision for his unmarried daughter, on her marriage with B., on a basis of equality with the provision made for his married daughter. A memorandum of the terms of the agreement (in which some variations were afterwards made by the parties) was written, at the direction of A., by A.'s solicitor, in the presence and with the approbation of B.; and A. gave instructions to his solicitor to prepare a settlement in conformity with the memorandum, subject to the variations, but he died before such settlement was executed, having made a will, by which he gave a share of the residue of his estate to his married daughter. B. married the daughter of the testator and performed his part of the agreement comprised in the memorandum:—Held, that the share of the residue, given by the will to the daughter married in the testator's lifetime, was a satisfaction of that part of her portion which was secured by bond. Ib.

10. If a father makes a provision for a child, by settlement on her marriage, and afterwards makes a provision for the same child by his will, it is primâ facie to be presumed that he does not mean a double provision. But this presumption may be repelled or fortified by intrinsic evidence, from the nature of the two provisions, or by extrinsic evidence of the intention of the testator at the time of making his will. Slight differences between the two provisions will not repel the presumption against double provisions. Slight differences are such as, in the opinion of the judge, leave the two provisions substantially of the same nature. Declarations of the parent, referring to his intention at the time of making his will, whether made at the time, or before or after, are admissible evidence to prove that he did not mean to give a double provision. A paper written some time after the date of his will, and showing the state of his property, but having no reference to his intention, is not admissible for that purpose. A father, by articles made previous to the marriage of his daughter, agreed to settle, either by deed or will, lands of the value of 3,000*l.*, in trust for his daughter for life to her separate use, remainder to the husband for life, remainder to the children of the marriage, as tenants in common in tail, with cross-remainders. By his will he devised a real estate, worth more than 3,000*l.*, in trust for his daughter for life, for her separate use, but without the power of anticipation or alienation, remainder to the husband for life, he maintaining and educating the children of the marriage, as tenants in common in fee, with a limitation over of the shares of those who should die under twenty-five, without leaving issue, to the survivors:—Held, that the differences between the two provisions were not such as to repel the presumption against double portions, and that the daughter, her husband, and children were not entitled both to the benefits given by the will, and to the provisions stipulated for by the articles. Weall v. Rice, 2 Russ. & M. 251; 9 L. J., Ch., 116.

1. When a benefit given by a parent by a settlement, on the marriage of a child, and a legacy given by the parent to the same child, are both limited according to the ordinary forms of portions for children, the presumption is that a double portion was not intended, although the limitations of the will differ in detail from those of the settlement, and in such a case it is immaterial whether the will precedes or is subsequent to the settlement. Coventry v. Chichester, 10 Jur., N. S., 435; 12 W. R. 664; 33 L. J., Ch., 361; 2 Hem. & M. 149; 11 L. T., N. S., 103. Affirmed 10 Jur., N. S., 896; 12 W. R. 1126; 15 W. R. 849; 2 De G. J. & S. 336; 33 L. J., Ch., 676; 36 L. J., Ch., 673; 11 L. T., N. S., 171; 17 L. T., N. S., 35; 4 N. R. 535.

The meaning of the rule, that slight differences in the limitations of a portion secured by settlement and of a portion given by a subsequent will do not rebut the presumption against double portions, is, that the rule of satisfaction applies wherever the provision of both instruments, though differing from each other, are in the nature of portions to the same child. A portion is not necessarily a provision for the child alone; the successive limitations of a fund in favour not only primarily of the child herself, but likewise of her husband and children, and even of strangers, if their interests arise in default of the exercise of a general power of appointment vested in the child, together constitute "a portion." Semble, the operation of the rule of satisfaction is, that before the gift of "the portion" under the will can take effect, "the portion" secured by the settlement must be brought into hotchpot. In effect, therefore, it may displace the interests of other persons secondarily interested in the portion of the child. Such displacement cannot be justified by the doctrine of simple election, and satisfaction is not to be confounded with election, because it involves an act of election. S. C. 3 N. R. 666.

2. Illustrative Cases.

2. A., by settlement, was made tenant in tail, and a provision was made of 3,000*l.* a-piece to his daughters. A. docked the entail, and bequeathed to his daughters 3,000*l.* a-piece. It was proved that A. had declared he would augment his daughters' portions. Decreed, the daughters to have both sums. Pile v. Pile, 1 Ch. Rep. 199.

3. A term is created by marriage settlement to raise 3,000*l.* for daughters' portions within twelve months after the death of the survivor of the husband and wife. There being one daughter, the father devises the trust lands to make good his wife's jointure, and to raise 3,000*l.* for his daughter's portion: the daughter shall not have two portions of 3,000*l.*; and she dying at the age of five years, and the portion to be raised out of land, it shall not be raised for her administrator, but the interest or maintenance the child was entitled to shall. Brewin v. Brewin, Pre. Ch. 195; 2 Vern. 439.

4. A man has one daughter, to whom 8,000*l.* is secured by marriage settlement, and afterwards he gives 8,000*l.* by his will for her portion, and 200*l.* per annum. The daughter shall have but one 8,000*l.*, though she may elect which of the portions she pleases. Copley v. Copley, 1 P. W. 147.

5. A., upon his second marriage, settles lands to raise 5,000*l.* for the children of the marriage. Having four children by that marriage, he, by his will, in which he takes no notice of the settlement, gives 1,000*l.* to each of them as his or her portion:—Held, that they were not entitled to portions under both instruments, and that as they had accepted the provision by the will, they were bound by such acceptance. Byde v. Byde, 2 Eden 18; 1 Cox 44.

6. Agreement between mother, tenant in fee and in tail, and her son, that she would convey to him the estate in fee, and that he should, when in possession of the estate tail at her death, pay his sister 20,000*l.* for her fortune and portion; the agreement was never executed, but the mother afterwards made a general devise in favour of her son, charged with a legacy of 20,000*l.* to her daughter for her portion, fortune, and advancement; the legacy is a satisfaction of her interest under the agreement. Finch v. Finch, 1 Ves. J. 534; 4 Bro. C. C. 38.

7. A child, entitled by his fathers' marriage articles to a share of his father's personal estate, has a legacy given him by the will of his father. If he will have the legacy, he must waive the benefit of the articles. Herne v. Herne, 2 Vern. 555.

8. In marriage settlement, by which a life estate was given to the wife, there was a power to raise 10,000*l.* for younger children; the settlor, forgetting that he had made such a settlement, and by will reciting that he had made no settlement on the wife, provided portions of 5,000*l.* if but one younger child, and 2,000*l.* each if more: there being two younger children:—Decreed, that this provision by the will is in part satisfaction of the portion by settlement, and only 10,000*l.* should be raised. Warren v. Warren, 1 Bro. C. C. 305.

9. Upon marriage articles, 15,000*l.* was vested in trustees on trust, together with 5,000*l.* covenanted by the husband to be paid, to be laid out in land to be settled upon the husband for life, remainder to the wife for life, remainder to the use of such child and children, in such shares, for such estates, and subject to such powers, limitations, and provisions as the husband and wife, or the survivor, should appoint; in default of appointment, to the children in tail; in default of issue, to the husband in fee. The husband and wife joined in a direction to the trustees, reciting their resolution to invest the trust fund in an estate lately purchased by the husband for 16,300*l.*, and directing them to deliver the said stock, etc., to him, at the price they were at on the day of the purchase, which was done. The wife died; there were two daughters; the father, by will, reciting the purchase, and that he had not conveyed it to the uses of the settlement, and that it was not his intention that the said purchase should be an investment of the trust fund, but that the said fund, with its increase, should be taken out of his personal estate, gave 10,000*l.*, part of the trust fund, in trust to be laid out in land, to be conveyed to one daughter for life for her separate use, remainder to her children in tail, remainder to the other daughter in fee, for whom he also appointed the residue of the fund, but revoked that by codicil, reciting a portion given on her marriage:—Held, that the share of the daughter, to whom the portion was advanced on marriage, was thereby satisfied. Smith v. Camelford (Lord), 2 Ves. J. 698. See further this case sub nom. Pitt v. Jackson, 2 Bro. C. C. 51.

1. By marriage settlement part of wife's fortune was advanced to husband for the purpose of his trade, for which he secured her an annuity, the rest being settled upon the children, after the decease of husband and wife, in such proportions as the wife should direct; by will he directed the wife should relinquish her claim under the settlement, and left a larger sum to trustees, the interest to be paid to her while sole, with a power to her to dispose of the whole among the children; that is a satisfaction for their portions under the settlement. Moulson v. Moulson, 1 Bro. C. C. 82.

2. Bond conditioned that executors pay 5,000*l.* to a natural son at twenty-one if he should attain that age; by will afterwards, the father gave 15,000*l.* to trustees to pay 200*l.* per annum for the maintenance of the son till twenty-five, and then to pay him the principal, and if he should marry between twenty-two and twenty-five, and die, to pay the whole to the issue; but if he died unmarried, before twenty-five, the whole over: the devise is not a satisfaction of the bond. Jeacock v. Falkener, 1 Bro. C. C. 295.

3. A man, by marriage settlement, provides 4,000*l.* for daughters, and, having two daughters, by will give them 2,000*l.* a-piece for their portions, without taking notice of the settlement. The 2,000*l.* a-piece by the will shall be in satisfaction of the portion by the settlement. Webb v. Webb, 2 Vern. 111.

4. One on the marriage of his daughter gives a bond to the husband for the daughter's portion, and afterwards, by will, devises land of much greater value to the husband, and the wife and their heirs. The devise is not a satisfaction of the bond, though there be a defect of assets to pay the testator's debts. Goodfellow v. Burchett, 2 Vern. 298.

5. Bill is to have 3,000*l.* provided for daughters' portions on failure of issue male, by an old settlement in 1631. The brother of the plaintiffs, who might have barred them by a recovery, giving them by will above the value of 3,000*l.*, it shall be intended a satisfaction. Smith v. Duffield, 2 Vern. 177.

6. By a marriage, in case of failure of issue male, a remainder is limited to the daughters until they should raise 3,000*l.* for portions. There is issue a son and two daughters; the father, by will, gives the daughters 700*l.* a-piece and dies; the son gives by his will to the daughters to the amount of 7,000*l.*, and devises the land to his male heirs, and dies without issue. The father's or son's legacies to the daughters shall not be a bar and satisfaction of the 3,000*l.* secured by the marriage settlement. Duffield v. Smith, 2 Vern. 258.

7. A gift of 20,000*l.* to the daughters by the codicil to the will of their father, held a cumulative provision for them without prejudice to their claim of 2,000*l.* each under their father's marriage settlement. A bond by their brother for payment of 10,000*l.* out of his personal estate, not a satisfaction for such provision. Hanbury v. Hanbury, 2 Bro. C. C. 352.

8. Though generally a satisfaction by will of a portion must be of the same nature, and equally certain, a bequest of a share in powder works, to be made up in value 10,000*l.*, charged with an annuity of 20*l.* for a life, was held a satisfaction of a portion of 2,000*l.* Bengough v. Walker, 15 Ves. 507.

9. On a marriage the father and husband of the lady gave bonds for 3,000*l.* each, to be paid to the trustees upon the trusts of the settlement. The father died leaving the whole of the principal, and some of the interest, due on his bond, and having bequeathed 3,000*l.* to his executors upon the same trust for the benefit of his daughter and her husband, and their issue, as were declared by the settlement of the trust moneys therein comprised:—Held, that the legacy was not a satisfaction of the father's bond. Foster v. Evans, 6 Sim. 15; 2 L. J., N. S., Ch., 74.

10. Testator having for valuable consideration charged particular freehold estates with annuities of 300*l.* to each of his sisters for life, payable in January, April, July, and October, afterwards by will devises all his estates upon trust to pay to his widow an annuity expressly in lieu of dower and of any payment she might be entitled to under his marriage settlement, and, subject to a trust for payment of his debts, upon trust to pay one of his sisters an annuity of 900*l.* and the other an annuity of 500*l.*, in each case for their separate use, and the annuities to be payable on the four most usual quarterly days of payment:—Held, that the annuities given by the will were not in satisfaction of those secured by the deeds. Hales v. Darell, 3 Beav. 324; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 10.

11. A father advances some of his children with portions in his lifetime, and then makes his will; and thereby recites he had advanced B. and C., but omits reciting D. (whom he had also advanced), and leaves to him a sum certain, and devises the residue equally among them. The money which D. had received shall go in satisfaction of the legacy left to him. Upton v. Prince, Forrest. 71.

1. B., by his marriage settlement made in 1811, covenanted to secure upon certain estates an annuity of 400*l.* for his wife, for her life, in case she should survive him, in addition to the provision made for her by the settlement. He afterwards, by a deed executed in 1818, and intended to be made in pursuance of the covenant, granted an annuity of 400*l.* to his wife, which was made payable to her after his decease, during her widowhood. By his will in 1830, after ratifying and confirming the settlement, he gave an annuity of 400*l.* to his wife during her widowhood, in addition to the provision made for her by the settlement: —Held, that the widow was entitled both to the annuity granted to her by the deed, and the annuity given by the will. Douce v. Torrington, 2 Myl. & K. 600.

2. A person transfers a sum of stock into the names of trustees, and by an indenture under his hand and seal declares that the stock shall be held by the trustees upon certain trusts for the benefit of A. and her children by the settlor; and he afterwards obtains from the trustees a retransfer of the stock to himself, and razes the seals from the deed. By will he gave A. an annuity, etc., and the residue of his estate to the children. A. is entitled to the provision, both in deed and will. Smith v. Lyne, 2 Y. & Coll. C. C. 345.

3. By a marriage settlement a sum of 2,000*l.* was charged upon land for the daughters of the marriage, with power of appointment in the father; there was issue of the marriage one son and two daughters. The father by will, after confirming his marriage settlement, left 1,000*l.* to each of his daughters, and charged on the estate these sums, and directed that if his son should die without issue, his estate should go to the elder daughter, charged with 5,000*l.* for her younger sister. The son died without issue; the elder daughter became seised of the estate:—Held, that the younger sister was entitled to have the 1,000*l.* under the settlement, and the 5,000*l.* under the will, raised off the estate—the latter being charged on a contingency, and therefore no satisfaction of the former; but she was not entitled to the 1,000*l.* given by the will, the 5,000*l.* being intended to be substituted for it in the contingency which occurred. Maxwell v. Maxwell, Wall. Lyn. 163.

A legacy payable out of an uncertain fund is no satisfaction of a charge out of a certain fund. Ib.

4. A father, upon the marriage of his daughter, executed to the intended husband his bond, with warrant of attorney for confessing judgment thereon, conditioned for the payment of 800*l.* by instalments. He afterwards, by his will, bequeathed to his said daughter 800*l.*: —Held, that this legacy could not be considered as a satisfaction of the debt due to the husband. Hall v. Hill, 1 Dr. & War. 94; 1 Con. & L. 120; 4 Ir. Eq. R. 27.

5 Stock was transferred into the names of three trustees, on trusts of a marriage settlement. There was a power to alter and vary securities with the consent of the husband and wife. All the trustees transferred 2,000*l.*, part of the fund, to the husband, and the same was sold out, and the produce used by him and his co-partners, one of whom was one of the trustees. Two of the trustees became bankrupt. The other trustee, who was the father of the wife, by his will gave 6,000*l.* new 3½ per cents. to the trustees of the settlement. His will contained the following direction:—"For giving my daughter her legacy of 6,000*l.* new 3½ per cents., I order and direct, that whatever foreign bonds A. B. & Co. should have of mine be sold, and the produce thereof, with my balance of accounts with the said house, shall be added, for purchasing the said legacy." The testator also directed his bankers to pay all his dividends, and his balance of accounts with them, to his wife during her life, after having paid his legacy and debts. A suit was instituted against the executor of this will for a replacement of the 2,000*l.* out of the estate, and another suit was instituted by the same party against the executor for payment of the 6,000*l.* legacy:—Held, that the gift of the 6,000*l.* was a satisfaction of the 2,000*l.* and interest. Bensusan v. Nehemias, 20 L. J., N. S., Ch., 536; 15 Jur. 503.

6. By deed made on the marriage of A. and B., C., the father of B., settled 1,000*l.* upon A. and B. and their issue, which sum was recited as having been paid to the trustees, and covenanted to pay another 1,000*l.* upon his decease, upon the same trusts. Shortly before C.'s death, he, by deed, gave to other trustees 5,000*l.* upon trusts nearly identical with the trusts of the settlement for A. and B. and their issue; and by his will, of the same date, he declared that what he had given to B. should be taken in full satisfaction and discharge of all claims and demands upon him in any right or manner whatsoever. The trustees of the settlement never received the 1,000*l.* under the covenant of C., and C.'s estate had long been administered. Bill by one of the children of A. and B. against the representative of one of the trustees of the settlement, claiming a portion of the two sums of 1,000*l.* and 1,000*l.*. Defence, that the trustees never received either 1,000*l.*, and that the 5,000*l.* was in satisfaction:—Held (reversing 2 Jur., N. S., 1158; 5 W. R. 39), first, that the 5,000*l.* was to be taken in satisfaction of the 1,000*l.* covenanted to be paid. Davis v. Chambers, 3 Jur., N. S., 297; 5 W. R. 245.

Held, secondly, that although primâ facie the recital in the settlement of payment to trustees is the strongest possible evidence to charge them, yet that the circumstances of this case negatived the receipt by the trustees. Ib.

7. A., on the marriage of his son, covenanted with the trustees of the settlement, that if the son died in the lifetime of the wife, he (the covenantor) would pay to the widow 100*l.* a year during her widowhood, by half-yearly payments, the first payment to be made six months after the death of her husband, such annuity to be in satisfaction of her dower. By his will A. directed his residuary estate, after the death of his wife, to be equally divided among his children, subject and charged nevertheless, as to his son's share, with the payment of 100*l.* a year to his daughter-in-law, such annuity to commence from the death of the testator or her husband, which should last happen; and he directed all his debts and legacies to be paid out of his estate, and provided that in no case should the annuity thereby provided for his daughter-in-law be in any way affected or disturbed:—Held, that the provision thereby made was not a satisfaction or performance of the covenant, and that the daughter-in-law was entitled to both annuities. Charlton v. West, 7 Jur., N. S., 905; 9 W. R. 884; 5 L. T., N. S., 16.

1. W., by a settlement on the marriage of his son, covenanted with trustees to bequeath to his son, if living, or to his intended wife if he were dead, a legacy of not less than 2,500*l.*, to be held upon the trusts of the marriage settlement. By his will, W., after reciting a power of appointment he had over 10,000*l.* comprised in his own marriage settlement in favour of his children (which sum, in default of appointment, was settled upon the children in equal shares), appointed to his son 2,500*l.* in full discharge of his (the testator's) covenant for payment or bequest of that sum contained in the settlement:—Held, first, that the appointment by the testator in exercise of the power contained in his own settlement could not operate as a satisfaction of the personal liability created by his covenant. Graham v. Wickham, 32 L. J., Ch., 639; 8 L. T., N. S., 679; 9 Jur., N. S., 702; 11 W. R. 1009; 2 N. R. 410; 1 De G. J. & S. 474; 31 Beav. 447.

Held, secondly, that the covenant did not merely confer a right to receive a legacy of the amount named after payment of simple contract debts, but created a specialty debt in favour of those claiming under the settlement. Ib.

2. A debt due on a bond executed in contemplation of marriage:—Held, not to be satisfied by a legacy of a greater amount. Haynes v. Mico, Romilly's Notes of Cases, 41; 1 Bro. C. C. 129.

3. A testator, having covenanted on the marriage of his daughter F. to pay to the trustees of her settlement, within twelve months after his death, a share of personalty equal to the share which the most favoured child and his issue should take, by his will gave one-fifth of his personal estate to each of two children and a daughter of a deceased child, one other fifth to the said trustees, and one other fifth upon trust for his son H. for life, with a gift over for want of issue to the other three children and the grandchild, the shares of daughters and the granddaughter to be for their separate use:—Held, that the whole will indicating an intention to put the families of the children on an equality, the contingent gift for the separate use of F. was intended as a satisfaction of the covenant, and was bound by the trusts of the settlement. Davenport v. Hinchcliffe, 1 John. & H. 713.

4. The doctrine of satisfaction, so called, as applied to the case of double portions, rests upon the same general principle, whether there is first a will made and then a settlement, or first a settlement and then a will, viz., that the child shall not be doubly provided for, and shall take nothing under the will, whether prior or subsequent in date, without bringing into hotchpot the provision made by the settlement. Coventry v. Chichester, 10 Jur., N. S., 435; 33 L. J., Ch., 361; 2 Hem. & M. 149; 11 L. T., N. S., 103; 3 N. R. 666. Affirmed 10 Jur., N. S., 896; 33 L. J., Ch., 676; 11 L. T., N. S., 171; 2 De G. J. & S. 336; 36 L. J., Ch., 673; 2 L. R., H. L., 71; 17 L. T., N. S., 35; 15 W. R. 849; 4 N. R. 535.

In order that the doctrine may be applicable, all that is needed is that in each case the property given should be given or settled in some one of the usual modes of dealing with a child's portion. Ib.

A father on the marriage of his daughter C. covenanted to pay 10,000*l.* three months after demand to trustees, to be held upon trust during the joint lives of the husband and wife, to pay 200*l.* a year to the wife pin money, and the residue of the income to the husband, and after the death of either, the whole income to the survivor for life, and after the death of the survivor upon the usual trusts of a marriage settlement, for children and issue. The father also covenanted to pay interest till the principal was paid. By his will he gave his residuary estate to trustees to convert it into money, pay thereout his debts and legacies, and stand possessed of the residue as to one moiety to pay the income to his daughter C. for life, for her separate use, and after her death, then, if she died in her husband's lifetime, for such persons other than her husband as she should by will appoint, but if she survived him, for such persons as she should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment, upon precisely similar trusts for his daughter P., with an ultimate limitation, in default of appointment, to his nephew B.; and as to the other moiety upon precisely similar trusts, except that the dispositions in favour of P. preceded those in favour of C. The 10,000*l.* was not paid by the testator in his lifetime:—Held, that the entire dissimilarity of the trusts of the settlements and will, and the directions in the will for payments of debts before the division of the residue into moieties, were sufficient to outweigh the leaning of the Court against double portions, and that the 10,000*l.* ought to be paid out of the whole residue, and not out of C.'s moiety. Ib.

The question whether a gift by a parent, or person in loco parentis, by deed or will, is to be considered as an addition to, or as a satisfaction or ademption of, a gift by a prior deed or will, is one of intention. The rule against double portions is founded on a presumption of intention, which may be rebutted by intrinsic evidence raising a counter-presumption, as where the object of the bounty is not the same in both instruments, or there is any substantial difference in the provisions of the two instruments. Less is required to countervail the rule where the question is one of satisfaction, that is, where the settlement is followed by the will, than in the converse case of ademption. Ib.

5. A father voluntarily granted a rent-charge of 100*l.* to his second son for life, which was secured on estate X., and also by his covenant. By his will he devised his real estates upon trust to pay him an annuity of 500*l.*:—Held, under the circumstances, that the latter was not a satisfaction of the former. Lethbridge v. Thurlow, 15 Beav. 334; 21 L. J., Ch., 538.

6. By a settlement made in the Scotch form upon the marriage of his daughter with a domiciled Scotchman, A., a domiciled Englishman, covenanted to pay the trustees 4,000*l.* as a provision for the benefit of his daughter and her husband and the younger children of the marriage. The 4,000*l.* was not paid by A. during his lifetime; but by his will made after the death of his daughter, A. gave 16,000*l.* between the younger children of the marriage:—Held, that the will being an English disposition, the English doctrine of presumption against double portions was applicable, and that the provisions made by the testator's will in favour of his grandchildren operated as a satisfaction of the provisions made for them by the settlement. Campbell v. Campbell, 1 L. R., Eq., 383; 12 Jur., N. S., 118; 35 L. J., Ch., 241; 14 W. R. 327; 13 L. T., N. S., 667.

But, secus, having regard to the differences in the provisions made by the two instruments, if the case had been merely that of satisfaction of a debt; upon which point the doctrine of law is similar in England and Scotland. Ib.

1. A father on his daughter's marriage in 1861 covenanted that his heirs, executors or administrators, should, within six months after his death, pay 2,000*l.* to the trustee of the daughter's marriage settlement. By his will, made in 1871, he directed that his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses should be paid out of his residuary estate, part of which he gave to the daughter. He also directed that future advances made by him to any of his children, and also certain specified sums already advanced to some of his children, including the daughter, should be taken in satisfaction of their shares under the will. And, by a codicil, he directed 4,000*l.* to be set apart for his wife out of his residuary estate, before the latter was divided, according to the directions of his will:—Held, that the gift by will was not a satisfaction of the covenant in the settlement, and that the 2,000*l.* must be paid before the residue of the testator's estate was ascertained for the purpose of division pursuant to the will. Smyth v. Johnston, 31 L. T., N. S., 876.

2. Upon the marriage of his daughter the father covenanted to give an equal share of his estate upon the trusts declared in her marriage settlement. By his will he left such equal share to persons other than the trustees of the settlement, upon trusts for the benefit of his daughter. The trusts of the will differed from those of the settlement by giving the first life interest to the wife instead of the husband (giving her only a power to appoint by will to her husband for life), and also by giving a power of appointment among children to the wife alone, instead of to the husband and wife jointly. The investment clauses were also different:—Held, that the gift by will was in satisfaction of the covenant, and the funds were ordered to be transferred to the trustees of the settlement upon the trusts thereof. Romaine v. Onslow, 24 W. R. 899.

3. G., upon the marriage of his daughter M., covenanted to pay to the trustees of her settlement an annuity of 300*l.* for her for life, for her separate use, without power of anticipation. G. devised his real estate to the use that his daughter M. should receive an annuity of 400*l.* for life, for her separate use, and also that another daughter, L., should receive an annuity of 1,000*l.*, and bequeathed his residuary personal estate, subject to the payment of his debts, upon trusts therein mentioned. In other respects, both in his lifetime and by his will, the testator had given his two daughters equal benefits:—Held, that having regard to the general tone of the will, and particularly to the direction for the payment of debts, M. took the 400*l.* annuity in addition to the 300*l.* annuity. Paget v. Gronfell, 37 L. J., Ch., 833; 6 L. R., Eq., 7.

4. A wife having property so settled on her, covenanted during the coverture (but without reference to herself as a married woman) to cause 1,000*l.* to be paid after her death to the trustees of her daughter's marriage settlement. The trusts were for her daughter for life for her separate use, without power of anticipation, with remainder to the husband for life, with remainder to the children of the marriage in the usual form. This covenant did not refer to the power or the property comprised in the original settlement. Afterwards by her will made in execution of the power during the coverture, she bequeathed 1,000*l.* on trust for the daughter for life, for her separate use, with remainder on certain trusts for her children slightly different from those declared under the covenant. She also bequeathed the residue of her estate upon certain trusts:—Held, that the gift of the 1,000*l.* by the will was a satisfaction to the extent to which the daughter and her children took under the settlement. Mayd v. Field, 45 L. J., Ch., 699; 3 L. R., Ch. D., 587; 24 W. R. 660; 34 L. T., N. S., 614.

5. J. D., on his daughter's marriage, covenanted that in case he should depart this life in the lifetime of his said daughter, he would bequeath to the trustee for the time being of her marriage settlement the sum of 5,000*l.*, to be held upon the trusts of the settlement. The daughter died first, and after her death J. D. made his will, and thereby bequeathed to the trustee for the time being of the settlement the sum of 4,000*l.*, to be held upon the trusts of the settlement, this bequest being expressed to be in pursuance of the covenant in the settlement. Then followed a devise and bequest of the testator's residuary estate, a direction to pay debts, and, among other legacies to his children, a legacy of 4,000*l.* in trust for the children of the daughter above mentioned on attaining the age of twenty-one:—Held (1), that the testator's estate was not liable under the covenant in the settlement; (2) that the trustee for the time being of the settlement was entitled to the first sum of 4,000*l.*, notwithstanding that it was expressed to be bequeathed in pursuance of the covenant which was already inoperative at the date of the will; (3) that the two gifts of 4,000*l.* in the will were independent gifts, and that the daughter's children were entitled both to the second gift of 4,000*l.* and to the beneficial interest of the first gift of that amount. Re Dyke, Dyke v. Dyke, 44 L. T. 568.

6. A father, on the marriage of his daughter in 1867, covenanted with the trustees of her settlement that his executors or administrators would, within twelve calendar months after his death if he survived his wife, but if she survived him, then within six calendar months after her death, transfer to the trustees 2,000*l.* consols to be held on the trusts of the settlement, which were for such persons as the wife, with the consent of the trustees, should appoint, and in default of appointment in trust for the wife for life for her separate use, then for the husband for life, and after the decease of the survivor, for such children of the marriage as, being a son or sons, should attain twenty-one, or being a daughter or daughters should attain that age or marry, and if more than one in equal shares, and in default of children for the husband absolutely. In 1871 the father satisfied this covenant to the extent of one moiety. In 1873 he made his will, bequeathing 2,800*l.* to trustees in trust for the daughter for life for her separate use, without power of anticipation, and after her decease for such of her children as should attain twenty-one in equal shares:—Held, that there were such substantial differences between the provisions made by the settlement and by the will as to rebut the presumption against double portions. Re Tussaud, Tussaud v. Tussaud, 9 L. R., Ch. D., 363; 47 L. J., Ch., 849; 26 W. R. 874; 39 L. T., N. S., 113.

Parol evidence of the intention of the parties is admissible to rebut the presumption against double portions, and there is no difference in this respect between the cases of a deed and a will. Ib.

3. Covenants to Leave Property to Children by Will.

1. Covenant in settlement to leave by will satisfied by legacy to amount, though followed by general directions for payment of debts. Wathen v. Smith, 4 Madd. 236, 325.

2. Upon a treaty of marriage, K. promised that his son, the intended husband, should participate in common with the rest of his children in the provisions of his will:—Held, that a substantial legacy given to the son, although of less amount than that which he would have received, had the testator's property been equally divided among all his children, sufficiently satisfied such a promise. Kay v. Crook, 5 W. R. 220; 3 Jur., N. S., 104.

3. A person who has covenanted to bequeath or otherwise provide that a share of his estate shall go to the covenantee, fulfils his covenant by bequeathing the share to the covenantee, who then stands in the same position as any other legatee. Jervis v. Wolferstan, 18 L. R., Eq., 18; 43 L. J., Ch., 809; 30 L. T., N. S., 452.

A testator has covenanted to leave by will or otherwise provide for his daughter one-third of the residuary estate; he bequeathed one-third to her, which was settled on her marriage and paid to the trustees of her marriage settlement:—Held, that the testator had satisfied his covenant; that the daughter took her share, not as a creditor, but as a residuary legatee, and that her trustees must refund the amount with the other residuary legatees. Ib.

4. A father, on the marriage of his son, covenanted that he would, during the joint lives of himself and of his son's wife, pay 400*l.* a year for her separate use, and that he would by his will direct his executors to invest 10,000*l.*, to be held by the trustees of the marriage settlement upon trust for his daughter-in-law for life, for her separate use, with remainder to her children. By his will, the father directed that for five years from his death there should be paid to his daughter-in-law an annuity of 2,000*l.* for the maintenance of her husband, herself, and the support and education of her children; and at the end of the five years that there should be paid to his son's wife and children 10,000*l.* upon the trusts and for the purposes of the settlement made on his son's marriage:—Held, that the annuity of 2,000*l.* during the five years was in substitution for and in satisfaction of the interest of the 10,000*l.* during that period, and that the daughter-in-law was not entitled to both the annuity of 2,000*l.* and the interest on the 10,000*l.*, but that the annuity of 2,000*l.* must abate to the extent of the interest on the 10,000*l.* to which she was entitled under the settlement. Bethell v. Abraham, 31 L. T., N. S., 112.

5. A father, on the marriage of his son, covenanted with the trustees of the settlement that he would leave to them one-fifth share of his residuary real and personal estate, to be held by them upon the trusts of the settlement. These were for the husband during his life, or until bankruptcy or alienation; then for the wife for life, and then for the children of the marriage. By his will he gave his residuary real and personal estate equally among his five children:—Held, first, that the bequest to the husband was not a satisfaction of the interests of the wife and children under the covenant. M'Carogher v. Whieldon, 36 L. J., Ch., 196; 3 L. R., Eq., 236; 15 W. R. 296.

Held, secondly, that the bequest to the husband was a satisfaction of his life interest under the covenant, and that he must elect between them. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that his election to take the bequest and give up the life interest under the covenant was an alienation of his life interest within the terms of the settlement, and that it thereupon passed to his wife. Ib.

6. A., upon the marriage, in 1851, of B., one of his two daughters, covenanted with the trustees of her settlement to give her or her trustees by his will one moiety of all the real and personal estate to which he should be entitled at his death, subject to payment of debts and to such devises and bequests (not exceeding in the whole one-fourth of the said real and personal estate) as he might think fit to make. And the deed contained a covenant for the settlement of any property which should be so given on specified trusts. By his will, made in 1864, A., after giving an annuity and directing payment of his debts out of his personal estate, directed the trustees to stand possessed of one moiety of the proceeds of his real and residuary personal estate upon trust for B., for her separate use for life, with remainder to her husband until bankruptcy or alienation, and remainder to her children as she should by deed or will appoint, and in default of appointment, to her children equally as tenants in common, with limitations over on the trusts of the other moiety which were in favour of A.'s other daughter C. and her children. The limitations in the settlement of 1851 were not identical with those of the will; in particular, the husband took the first life interest, which was not made determinable upon bankruptcy or alienation, and the limitations to children were confined to the children of the marriage, and were subject to a joint power of appointment in husband and wife:—Held, that the legal presumption that the covenant had been satisfied by the gift in the will was not rebutted by the difference of the limitations in the two instruments, having regard to the identity of the subject-matter; and that B. and the other persons interested must elect between the provisions covenanted to be made by the settlement and given by the will. Russell v. St. Aubyn, 21 L. R., Ch. D., 398; 35 L. T., N. S., 395; 46 L. J., Ch., 641.

II. ADEMPTION OF LEGACY BY PORTION.

1. General Principles, 5681.
2. Illustrative Cases, 5683.
3. Illegitimate Children, 5688.

1. General Principles.

1. The Court leans against double portions, yet regard must be had to circumstances, as where there is an eldest son, or more children, and the demand would be to their prejudice: otherwise, in the case of an only child. Bellasis v. Uthwatt, 1 Atk. 427.

2. Where, after making a will, a father advances a child, with a portion as great or greater than the legacy, such provision has always been held an ademption, but when the devise has been of a residue, no instance where a subsequent portion has been held to be an ademption. Farnham v. Phillips, 2 Atk. 215.

3. A provision by will by a father to a child is adeemed by a subsequent portion given by the father in his lifetime. The Court leans against double portions. Watson v. Lincoln, Ambl. 326.

4. A legacy by a stranger to a female infant is not adeemed by his paying a marriage portion, and making other provisions for her and her husband. Powel v. Cleaver, 2 Bro. C. C. 500.

5. Legacy to child, discharged by provision subsequent to will. Scotton v. Scotton, 1 Stra. 235.

6. Devise and legacy from an uncle to his niece held not adeemed by an advancement upon her marriage. Brown v. Peck, 1 Eden 140.

7. As to presumption of satisfaction of legacy. Campbell v. Sandford, 8 Bli. N. S. 622; 2 Cl. & F. 429.

8. Satisfaction of a legacy from a father to his then unmarried daughter, by a portion of equal amount afterwards advanced by him on her marriage; as equity will not, where there is contradictory evidence, reject the presumption arising from the will and marriage settlement, and decide against the legal effect and operation that is to be attributed to them. Dwyer v. Lysaght, 2 Ball. & B. 156.

9. Where a father gives a legacy generally under a will to a daughter, he must be understood to mean it as a portion, and if he afterwards gives her a sum on marriage, it is a satisfaction of the legacy. Shudal v. Jekyll, 2 Atk. 518.

Double portions are what equity strongly bears against, and whether the portions given in the lifetime be less or not, is no way material. Where an orphan is under the care of a collateral relation, and he by will gives her a legacy, which is expressed to be for her portion, and afterwards provides for her in his lifetime, Lord Hardwicke was inclined to think this would be satisfaction. Ib.

Where father gives his daughter 500*l.* as a portion in marriage, and says, I will leave her something by my will, but will not oblige himself to do it, this would not be an ademption. Id. 519.

The altering of a will as to one niece cannot be taken as an evidence of the testator's intention to alter the legacy as to the other. Ib.

Ademptions are confined to instances where a testator applies a sum of money to the same purposes for which he had before given a legacy. Ib.

10. Where a parent or person in loco parentis gives a legacy to a child by way of portion, and afterwards makes advances in the nature of a portion to that child, that will be a satisfaction of the gift by will, and a court of equity will presume he meant to satisfy the one by the other; but this doctrine applies only to legacies, and not to a bequest of a residue, or to a devise of real estate; and to hold that the doctrine applies to devises of real estate, would be to repeal the sixth section of the Statute of Frauds. Davys v. Boucher, 3 Y. & Coll. 397; 3 Jur. 674.

11. The proper definition of a person in loco parentis to a child, is that of a person who means to put himself in the situation of the lawful father of the child, with reference to the father's office and duty of making a provision for the child. Powys v. Mansfield, 3 Myl. & C. 359; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 9; 1 Jur. 831. Reversing on this point S. C. 6 Sim. 528; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 153.

A person may stand in loco parentis to a child, although the child lives with and is maintained by its father. Ib.

12. Slight circumstances are laid hold of to get rid of the rule, that a legacy to a creditor extinguishes the debt, but a little difference between a portion and a legacy to a child, and as to the time of payment, will not prevail against the presumption of satisfaction. Barclay v. Wainwright, 3 Ves. 466.

13. Distinction between a legacy and a residuary bequest as to a presumed satisfaction by the advancement of a portion. The presumption from the former does not arise from the latter. Freemantle v. Bankes, 5 Ves. 79.

14. Gift of 500*l.* by father to daughter:—Held, not a satisfaction in part of legacy of 1,000*l.* by previous will, the presumption against double portions in case of parent and child being repelled by circumstances, the gift not being by way of portion, but after marriage, and from a particular motive appearing by declaration of testator to wife, which she proved. Robinson v. Whitley, 9 Ves. 577.

15. Ademption of a legacy from a father to his then unmarried daughter, by a portion of equal amount, afterwards advanced by him on her marriage, as equity will not, where there is contradictory evidence, reject the presumption arising from the will and marriage settlement, and decide against the legal effect and operation that is to be attributed to them. Dwyer v. Lysaght, 2 Ball. & B. 156.

1. A trust fund, to which a father was entitled for life, and his son and daughter in remainder, was sold, and the proceeds were received by the father. Subsequently, on the marriage of the daughter, the father settled property for her benefit of a larger value than the proceeds of the trust fund:—Held, that the claim of the daughter against the father in respect of her share of the proceeds of the trust fund must be presumed to be satisfied by the settlement; and that neither the expression in the settlement of the consideration of natural love and affection, nor the ignorance of the husband of the rights of the wife in the trust fund, had the effect of excluding the presumption of satisfaction. Evidence is admissible either to support or rebut the presumption. Semble, whether, in the case of a portion of the precise amount of the debt, the expression of natural love and affection, as the consideration for the settlement, might not be material on the question of satisfaction, quære. Plunkett v. Lewis, 3 Hare 316; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 295; 8 Jur. 682.

2. A grandfather having, in the opinion of the Court, placed himself in loco parentis to certain grandchildren, although their father was living, and having given them certain sums by his will, and having afterwards made settlements upon their respective marriages, the presumption against double portions was held to be applicable; but inasmuch as the advancements were smaller in amount than the sums expressed to be given by the will, such advancements were held to be satisfactions pro tanto only of the gifts contained in the will. Pym v. Lockyer, 5 Myl. & C. 29; 10 L. J., N. S., Ch., 153; 5 Jur. 34, 620. Reversing 8 L. J., N. S., Ch., 362.

3. If a presumption arises that payments by a testator to his children were made in satisfaction of legacies they would become entitled to under his will, it is not rebutted by their believing such payments to have been gifts when the belief is unsupported by any testimony of the intention of the testator. Schofield v. Heap, 28 L. J., Ch., 104; 27 Beav. 93; 4 Jur., N. S., 1067.

4. Satisfaction and ademption are upon the same footing, by reason of the doctrine against double portions. Montefiore v. Guedalla, 6 Jur., N. S., 329; 29 L. J., Ch., 65; 1 De G. F. & J. 93.

The question whether there is to be an ademption of a residuary bequest is one of intention, and should not depend upon the mere uncertainty of the amount of the residue. Ib.

The slight difference between the trusts of the residue and the trusts of the settlement is not sufficient to rebut the general presumption that a testator intended an advance to be adeemed. Ib.

5. A legacy by a parent or a person in loco parentis to a child is not satisfied by occasional small gifts in the testator's life. Watson v. Watson, 33 Beav. 574.

Thus, a legacy of 2,500*l.* was held satisfied pro tanto by a gift of 1,000*l.* stock on marriage, but not by gifts of 80*l.* and 100*l.*, or by an annual allowance of 60*l.* a year. Ib.

In order to create a case of satisfaction of a legacy given by a person in loco parentis, that relation must exist at the date of the will. Ib.

A legacy being held pro tanto satisfied by a gift of stock:—Held, that its value must be ascertained as at the time of the gift. Ib.

6. The presumption is against double portions, and the burthen of proof lies on those who contend for two portions, to show that this presumption is rebutted. Montague v. Montague, 15 Beav. 565.

7. The presumption of law is against double portions; where a sum of money is given by the will of a parent to a particular child, and the like sum is afterwards secured by a settlement on the marriage of that child, there is a presumption in favour of the ademption of the legacy, but this presumption may be rebutted by evidence of intention to the contrary. The burden of proof of intention is on the person claiming the double portion. It is not necessary that the legacy should be paid in order that it may be adeemed. Hopwood v. Hopwood, 7 H. L. Ca. 728. Reversing 26 L. J., Ch., 292; 3 Jur., N. S., 549; 5 W. R. 331; 2 Jur., N. S., 747; 22 Beav. 488.

Where a parent has given a portion by a will, and afterwards pays or secures the same portion by a settlement, the legacy is from that moment gone, and the will is to be read as if the bequest were expunged from it. S. C. 5 Jur., N. S., 897; 29 L. J., Ch., 747.

The covenant in the settlement was an indication of intention that the son should not have the legacy; the father must be held to have substituted the provision by deed for the provision by will; and it was not necessary that the amount of the legacy should have been paid in order that it should be adeemed. Ib.

8. The presumption that a legacy or a gift of residue is adeemed or satisfied by a subsequent advancement made by the testator to the legatee, arises only in the case of children or persons towards whom the testator stands in loco parentis. Therefore, if a testator has placed himself in loco parentis to one member only of a family, there can be no presumption as against that one that a provision made for him in common with the others by the testator's will is satisfied or adeemed by a subsequent advancement to him by the testator in his lifetime. Fowkes v. Pascoe, 10 L. R., Ch., 343; 44 L. J., Ch., 367; 32 L. T. 545; 23 W. R. 538. See Rose v. Rogers, 39 L. J., Ch., 791.

The selection of particular persons as the sole or principal objects of a testator's bounty, accompanied by acts and expressions about adoption in a quasi-parental sense, is not sufficient to place the testator in loco parentis to such persons, so as to raise the question of ademption in respect of gifts made after the date of the will. Ib.

9. There is no presumption of law that the payment of a sum of money to a child (even by a father) before the date of the will is to be set off against a legacy given to that child. Taylor v. Cartwright, 4 L. J., Ch., 529; 20 W. R. 603; 14 L. R., Eq., 167; 26 L. T. 571.

10. When a father after giving by his will a portion to his child advanced to such child a portion without any deed or instrument, such provision, in the absence of circumstances negativing the presumption, was held an ademption pro tanto. Leighton v. Leighton, 43 L. J., Ch., 594; 18 L. R., Eq., 458; 22 W. R. 727.

The occasion of a subsequent advancement satisfying or ademing a previous one need not be the marriage of the child or any other occasion calling specially for the advancement of the child. Ib.

2. Illustrative Cases.

1. A., by will, gives 750*l.* to his son, and afterwards buys him a cornet of horse employment for 650*l.*, which sum it was proved he intended to strike out of his will:—Held, that the 650*l.* should go in diminution of the 750*l.* Hoskins v. Hoskins, Pre. Ch. 263.

2. A., by will, gives his daughter 200*l.*, and afterwards gives with his daughter in marriage above 200*l.* The testator paying his daughter her portion in his lifetime is a satisfaction of the legacy. Jenkins v. Powell, 2 Vern. 115.

3. Father by will gives his son 500*l.*; he afterwards takes him into partnership. The stock being 3,000*l.* is not satisfaction of legacy. Holmes v. Holmes, 1 Bro. C. C. 555; 1 Cox 39.

4. C. provided by his will a maintenance for his second son out of the real estate; he afterwards gave large legacies to his younger children, with maintenance out of the interest. The second son entitled to both maintenances. Clive v. Walsh, 1 Bro. C. C. 146.

5. A. devises his estate to B., his son, charged with 500*l.* to his granddaughter, the daughter of B., payable at twenty-one or marriage. B. marries his daughter, and gives her 1,500*l.* portion, but no notice is taken of the 500*l.* legacy, nor any release given. Twenty-one years afterwards the daughter and her second husband bring a bill against the father for the 500*l.*; bill dismissed. The 1,500*l.* shall be presumed a satisfaction of the 500*l.*, especially after such a length of time. Mackdowell v. Halfpenny, 2 Vern. 484.

6. A., by his will, gives his children several legacies, and gives his eldest son 2,000*l.*; afterwards gives him 400*l.* to go to Italy, and being a merchant, enters his son debtor 400*l.* Afterwards, upon a calculation of his estate, and finding it not sufficient to pay the whole, he, by a codicil, retrenches 400*l.* out of the younger children's legacies, without taking notice of this 400*l.* The 400*l.* shall not be deducted out of the 2,000*l.* to the eldest son. Bird v. Hooper, Pre. Ch. 298.

7. One devises to his daughter a portion of 500*l.*, and afterwards, in his lifetime, gives her 300*l.* for her portion in marriage, and four years after dies without revoking the will. The husband a bankrupt; the assignees not entitled to the 500*l.* legacy, nor any part thereof. Hartop v. Whitmore, 1 P. W. 681; Pre. Ch. 541.

8. Testator bequeathed 1,000*l.* apiece to M. and S., payable at twenty-one, and if either die before, the whole to the survivor. He afterwards enters into two bonds to M. and S. for securing 2,000*l.* to each of them, provided they marry in his lifetime, with his consent, or in case they survive him. As the moneys given by the bonds are on contingencies, they are not a satisfaction of the legacies. Spinks v. Robins, 2 Atk. 91.

Legacy to a daughter by her father, satisfied by his giving her a marriage portion afterwards. Ib.

9. 500*l.* given in testator's lifetime to child is a satisfaction of similar legacy by will. Biggleston v. Grubb, 2 Atk. 48.

10. One devises to his wife six messuages, and the rest of his real estate equally to his two daughters in fee, and afterwards, on the marriage of his eldest daughter, he covenants to settle one moiety on her and her husband: the devise of the six houses shall be good, and subsist out of the remaining moiety. Rider v. Wager, 2 P. W. 332.

A. has two daughters, B. and C., and devises one moiety of his real and personal estate to B.; the other moiety of his real and personal estate to C., and afterwards A., in consideration of marriage, covenants to settle a moiety of his real estate upon the husband that marries B.; the husband shall have one moiety by the settlement, and the wife the moiety of the other moiety by the will. Ib.

11. A sum of 2,000*l.* paid by testator on marriage of daughter, with covenant to pay 4,000*l.* at death, extinguishes two legacies giving more to her by prior will. Clarke v. Burgoine, Dick 353.

12. A., by will, gives 300*l.* to daughter, if she marries with consent of B., otherwise only 200*l.*; A. procures her to be married, and gives 200*l.* with her. Legacy of 300*l.* held adeemed. Anon., 1 Stra. 207.

13. Testator bequeathed interest of 400*l.* to daughter, and afterwards advanced 100*l.* to daughter's husband, and latter gave receipt for it, expressive of its being part of daughter's portion, and testator enclosed the receipt, together with his will, in an envelope, and husband since his wife's death received only interest on 300*l.*:—Held, advance of 100*l.* was not an ademption pro tanto of the 400*l.* legacy. Bell v. Coleman, 5 Madd. 22.

14. R. directed his executors to place out 1,000*l.* at interest, and to apply the interest for maintenance, etc., of his grandson, empowering them to pay part of the principal as an apprentice fee, and the residue to be transferred to him at twenty-one. Testator put his grandson apprentice, and paid 126*l.* with him. A year after, testator made a codicil to his will, and gave him a legacy of 1,000*l.* The question was whether paying the apprentice fee was an ademption pro tanto:—Held, that as the 1,000*l.* was not given for that purpose alone, the codicil was a confirmation of the legacy and a republication of the will. Roome v. Roome, 3 Atk. 181.

15. J. makes his will the 4th March, 1738; soon after S. pays his addresses to the plaintiff, and in July applied to J., her great-uncle, for his approbation, who agreed to give S. 500*l.*, and drew a note payable to him on the 25th March, 1739, and lodges it in G.'s hands, to be delivered to S. after the marriage was had, and said he would leave the plaintiff something by will, but would not be obliged to do it. On the 19th August, 1738, J. dies; and the next day the plaintiff and S. were married. Ld. Hardwicke held, the legacy of 1,000*l.* given under J.'s will to the plaintiff, was not satisfied by the 500*l.* given upon the marriage in the testator's lifetime. Shudal v. Jekyll, 2 Atk. 516.

1. On deficiency of assets, marriage portions no satisfaction of a legacy to the wife from her father; the portion, being less than the legacy, having been paid absolutely to the husband upon giving up a certain interest of his wife; the legacy being to the wife for life, remainder to her children and grandchildren, remainder over, and being expressly in satisfaction of another distinct interest of the wife; and held, no ademption, the intent not being sufficiently plain. Baugh v. Read, 1 Ves. J. 257.

2. The testator gave 17,000*l.* to each of his two eldest daughters, and 16,000*l.* to the youngest, as portions, with a gift over to the others, if any daughter should marry without consent, or die under twenty-three, and unmarried. By a codicil he recited an advance of 5,000*l.* to L., one of the elder daughters, and declared it to be part of the provision made for her by the will. The youngest daughter died unmarried, and under twenty-three:—Held, not to be a case of ademption, but of part satisfaction, and the estate proving deficient, that the other daughter was entitled to a similar proportion of her legacy of 17,000*l.* before L. could take any part of the testator's estate:—Held, also, that the moiety of the younger daughter's legacy, not being intended as a provision, was not subject to the same construction. Nelson v. Bridges, 1 Jur. 753.

3. Testator, by his will, gave to his son and to his two daughters, M. and B., 100*l.* each, and after the death of his wife, he gave all his freeholds at R. or elsewhere to his son in fee, subject and charged as thereinafter mentioned; and he devised to M., her heirs, and assigns, a rent charge of 50*l.* a year, and a similar rent charge to B., payable out of the R. estates; and in case either M. or B. should die without issue before her rent charge should become payable, he gave one half thereof to the other, and the other half was no longer to be made a charge on the estates. Afterwards, testator purchased the P. freehold estate, and devised it to M. and B. in fee as tenants in common. On the marriage of M., testator gave a bond for 1,000*l.* as an immediate provision, and 40*l.* payable after his death. On B.'s marriage, testator settled the whole of P. and 400*l.* as a provision for her:—Held, that the provisions so made by the testator for M. and B. did not amount to an ademption of the benefits given them by the will. Darys v. Boucher, 3 Y. & Coll. 397; 3 Jur. 674.

4. P. H. devised and bequeathed all his real and personal property to trustees, to pay S. an annuity out of the lands of M. and B. during his life; and to pay unto his children, viz., to Ellen H. 2,000*l.* and to Edward, Anne, Francis, and William, 1,000*l* each; and to pay to J. H. an annuity for his life out of the lands of B. and R.; and as to all his interest in all his estates, lands, houses, and landed property, to the use of his son, H. H.; and he appointed Ellen H. his residuary legatee, and his trustees to be his executors. By a codicil executed the same day, he bequeathed all his household furniture, and his horses, stock, etc., to his son, H. H., and directed that all rents then due by the tenants on the respective lands should belong to H. H. Ellen H. subsequently married, and by a settlement, to which she, her father, and her intended husband were parties, after reciting that P. H. had agreed to give his daughter 2,000*l.* for a marriage portion, certain sums of money and securities for money were vested in a trustee for the benefit of the intended husband and wife and the issue of the marriage, in the manner therein mentioned. By a second codicil, executed after the settlement on his daughter Ellen, P. H. declared it to be his intention that all his lands, houses, etc., should revert to his son, H. H., and he bequeathed all his money, and securities for money, equally to Ellen, Anne, and Francis; and he left to William the lands of T.; "these bequests subject to a bequest already made in my will;" and he desired that all rents due on his property in those respective lands, should belong to his son, H. H.:—Held, that the provision made for Ellen H. on her marriage, was a satisfaction of the legacy of 2,000*l.* given to her by the will. Barry v. Hardinge, 1 J. & L. 475; 7 Ir. Eq. R. 313.

5. Testator bequeathed 10,000*l.* to trustees, in trust, to pay the interest to his daughter for life, provided, that when she married, one moiety of the 10,000*l.* should be paid to her or her husband, and that the other moiety should be held in trust to pay the interest to his daughter for life, and after her decease in trust for her children, and if she had no children, then to sink into the residue of his personal estate, which he gave to his two sons. The daughters married during the testator's lifetime, and the testator settled 10,000*l.* in trust for his daughter for life, for her separate use, and after her decease, in trust for her husband for life, and after the decease of the survivor in trust for the children of the marriage, as the husband and wife should jointly appoint, and, in default of such joint appointment, then as the survivor should appoint; and, in default of any appointment, then in trust for the issue of the marriage; and on failure of such issue, then in trust for the issue of the testator living at the death of the survivor of the husband and wife:—Held, that the provision made by the settlement was a satisfaction of the legacy. Platt v. Platt, 3 Sim. 503.

6. W. bequeathed 5,000*l.* to the daughter of his brother J., charged on his real estates, and directed the interest to be raised for her maintenance, if J. should so direct; and he devised his real estates so charged to J. in fee. J. bequeathed 10,000*l.* in trust for his daughter for life, and after her death in trust for her children, and declared that that sum should be in addition to the sums which she was entitled to under W.'s will. The daughter afterwards married. Her father advanced to her husband 15,000*l.* as his daughter's marriage portion, and, by the settlement, pin-money, and a jointure for the wife, and portions for the younger children of the marriage, were provided out of the husband's property, and the 15,000*l.* was declared to be in satisfaction of the sums which the wife was entitled to under W.'s will:—Held, that the 10,000*l.* was satisfied by the marriage portion. Durham (Earl) v. Wharton, 3 Cl. & F. 146; 10 Bli. N. S. 526; 3 Myl. & K. 698; 6 L. J N. S., Ch., 17. Reversing 5 Sim. 297; 3 Myl & K. 472; 2 L. J., N. S., Ch., 25.

1. A testator by his will gave to his daughter, Sophia, and her children under certain circumstances, a sum of 10,000*l.* 4 per cent. annuities, and directed that, with the exception of certain sums, of which this was not one, and which were expressly ordered to be brought into hotchpot, the legacies bequeathed to any of his children were to be, not in satisfaction of, but in addition to, any portion or provision to which they were, or should be, entitled under any articles or settlement then already executed by him. Afterwards, upon her marriage, a sum of 10,000*l.* 4 per cent. bank annuities was settled upon Sophia, her husband, and her children. She is not entitled to both provisions, notwithstanding the differences in the limitations. The testator, on the marriage of another daughter without his consent, revoked a bequest of 10,000*l.* 4 per cent. bank annuities, which he had made by the same will in favour of that daughter and her children, and gave her a life interest in a sum of 5,000*l.* 4 per cent. bank annuities; he afterwards settled 10,000*l.* on her and her children, and by a codicil declared the settlement to be in satisfaction of the legacy; this circumstance, even coupled with the difference of the provisions, and the language of the will, is not sufficient to repel the presumption against double portions in the case of the daughter Sophia. Sheffield v. Coventry (Earl), 2 Russ. & M. 317.

2. An advance of a marriage portion to a daughter, does not of itself, by the law of Scotland, bar her claim to legitim. Breadalbane (Marquis) v. Chandos (Marquis), 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 28; 4 Cl. & F. 43; 2 Myl. & C. 711.

Such a claim cannot be barred by implication. Ib.

A marriage contract, in which the father of the lady agreed to pay a certain sum of money, as the portion or fortune of his daughter, and which then went on to describe how the sum should be paid partly in his lifetime, and partly out of his estate after his death, was held not to be capable, without more, of barring her claim to legitim. Ib.

3. A testatrix, in loco parentis to A., bequeathed 10,000*l.* sterling to M., and afterwards transferred 12,000*l.* consols into the joint names of herself and M.:—Held, under the circumstances of the case, that the transfer was an ademption or satisfaction of the legacy. A legacy is given to M., with a contingent limitation over to N. in the event of M. dying without children. The legacy to M. is adeemed by a subsequent gift to M. in the lifetime of the testatrix, to which no limitation in favour of N. is attached. The legacy is not merely adeemed as to M., but also extinguished as to N. Twining v. Powell, 2 Colly. 262.

4. A testator, by his will, reciting that he had, on the marriage of two daughters, advanced and transferred, for their respective benefit, 500*l.* sterling, and 900*l.* bank stock, bequeathed 500*l.* sterling and 900*l.* bank stock in trust for his remaining daughter, Francisca, during her life, to her separate use, without power of anticipation or alienation; then for her children, subject to an exclusive power of appointment by her, and if there were no children in whom the fund should vest, then for such person as she should appoint. Francisca afterwards married, and on her marriage her father advanced to her 500*l.*, and transferred to the trustees of her marriage settlement 900*l.* bank stock in trust for her separate use during her life; then for her husband during his life, and after his decease to the children; but if she died in the lifetime of her husband, without leaving any child, then to her husband absolutely, and if he died in her lifetime, without leaving any child by her, to her absolutely:—Held, that the provision made for Francisca on her marriage was an ademption of the legacies of 500*l.* and of 900*l.* bank stock. Carver v. Bowles, 2 Russ. & M. 301; 9 L. J., Ch., 91.

5. A testator having left his son 10,000*l.* by his will, expressed an intention, verbally, of settling 10,000*l.* stock on the son's marriage, and then became insane. The marriage took place, and the 10,000*l.* stock was purchased out of the testator's moneys, and settled accordingly. The testator then had a lucid interval, and on being told of the transaction, did not disapprove thereof. He afterwards became irrecoverably lunatic:—Held, first, that the testator confirmed the settlement upon his son by not expressing any disapprobation during this lucid interval; and, secondly, that the evidence did not prove that the settlement of the 10,000*l.* was an ademption of the legacy. Browne v. Browne, 11 L. J., N. S., Ch., 57; 5 Jur. 1053.

6. The testator bequeathed a sum of 3,000*l.* to his daughter for her separate use for life, with remainder to her children as she should appoint, and, in default of appointment, to her children equally, with provision for survivorship, advancement, and for the substitution of their issue; and, subject to an annuity and to his debts, he devised and bequeathed all the residue of his real and personal estate, naming securities for money, unto his son absolutely. After the date of the will, the testator gave to his daughter and her husband a promissory note for 500*l.*, then due to the testator. In a suit by the children of the daughter against the son, claiming to have the legacy of 3,000*l.* invested and secured for their benefit, the defendant tendered parol evidence that, after the date of the will, the testator was requested by his daughter to confer some benefit on her husband, and that thereupon the testator gave her a promissory note, declaring that it was to be in part satisfaction of the legacy of 3,000*l.*, and that the testator was advised by his solicitor that it was not necessary to alter his will to give it that effect:—Held, that the advance to his daughter and her husband was an ademption pro tanto of the legacy bequeathed by the will for the benefit of the daughter and her children. Whether, if the children had been all living at the date of the will, and been named therein individually, and not merely described as a class, the advance would have been an ademption, quære. Kirk v. Eddowes, 3 Hare 509; 13 L. J., N. S., Ch., 402; 8 Jur. 1024.

7. A father makes his will and gives a legacy of 5,000*l.* to his son, and afterwards takes his son into partnership, and gives him half the stock in trade, to the amount of 15,000*l.*; this advancement shall not be taken in satisfaction of the legacy. Holmes v. Holmes, 1 Cox 39.

1. Testator being seised of a reversion in fee, expectant on the death and failure of issue male of himself and his brother, and being possessed of a leasehold estate, and of stock in the funds, devised the reversion to trustees for the term of 1,000 years, and gave to them the leasehold estate and stock, in trust to raise 10,000*l.*, which he directed to be held in trust for his niece, Julia, the daughter of his brother, for life, and, after her decease, in trust for any husband who might survive her, and after the decease of the survivor of them, in trust for all the children of his niece who should be then living. The niece married about three months after the date of the will, and by a settlement made, in contemplation of the marriage, the testator, in consideration of natural love, etc., for his niece, Julia, the daughter of his brother, and for her advancement in life, and to provide a maintenance for her, charged the reversion with the payment (after the death of the survivor himself, and his brother, without leaving issue male, who should attain twenty-one), of the interest of 10,000*l.* to his niece's husband for life, and after his decease to his niece for life, and after the decease of the survivor, with the payment of 10,000*l.* to trustees in trust for the younger children of the marriage. About a year afterwards, the testator, by a codicil, disposed of a certain portion of his property, not before mentioned, and in all other respects confirmed his will. The testator died a bachelor. His brother afterwards died leaving issue, Julia, and five other daughters:—Held, that the provision made by the settlement, was a satisfaction of the provision made by the will. Powys v. Mansfield, 3 Myl. & C. 359; 7 L. J., N. S., Ch., 9; 1 Jur. 861. Reversing on this point 6 Sim. 528; 5 L. J., N. S., Ch., 153.

2. A father made his will, giving to each of his three younger children 5,000*l.* On the marriage of one of them, a daughter, he paid to the husband 2,000*l.* By a codicil he declared that sum to be in part satisfaction of the 5,000*l.* One of his younger sons, F., married. On that marriage the father entered into a covenant that he would cause to be paid to the trustees of the marriage, within twelve months after his death, 5,000*l.*, with interest in the meantime at the rate of 5 per cent., such interest to be employed in the payment of premiums on life policies. By a codicil made after the date of this settlement, the testator recited what he had given by his will to each of his two younger sons, and directed his trustees to raise "a farther sum of 7,000*l.*" for each of them, and to hold such farther sum on the same trusts as those of the 5,000*l.* The testator afterwards raised 5,000*l.*, with which he purchased a lieutenant-colonelcy in the Guards for his other younger son, H.; and he then made a codicil, declaring that this sum so laid out was to be taken by H. in satisfaction of the legacy given him by the will:—Held, that these circumstances did not show an intention on the part of the testator rebutting the presumption that the 5,000*l.* given by the will to F. was adeemed by the settlement. Hopwood v. Hopwood, 7 H. L. Ca. 728; 5 Jur., N. S., 897; 29 L. J., Ch., 747. Reversing 3 Jur., N. S., 549; 26 L. J., Ch., 292; 5 W. R. 331; 2 Jur., N. S., 747; 22 Beav. 488.

3. A testator who has contributed to the maintenance and education of a female infant nearly related to him, from the time of her father's death, and who has been treated by her as the person whose consent was necessary to her marriage, and who has taken upon himself the obligation to make a provision for her in that event, is, as to the question of a double provision by will and settlement, to be considered in loco parentis, and the presumption against a double provision, which would arise in the case of a father, will apply to such a case. In such a case parol evidence may be adduced to prove the intention against a double provision, as well as on the question whether the testator was in loco parentis. Quære, whether, if the testator were not to be considered in loco parentis, parol evidence of his intention not to make a double provision by will and settlement would be admissible. It being proved by parol evidence that the testator intended the provision made by the settlement to be in lieu of a legacy given by the will, the settlement was held to be a satisfaction of the legacy, though the two provisions differed so much from each other that they could not be considered substantially the same. The legacy was not set up by a codicil, made after the settlement, ratifying and confirming the will and all the devises and bequests therein contained. Booker v. Allen, 2 Russ. & M. 270; 9 L. J., Ch., 130.

4. The testator, upon the marriage of a daughter, entered into a bond for payment of 5,000*l.* within six months after his decease to the trustees of his daughter's settlement, the interest to be paid to the husband for life, and after his decease, if the wife survived him, and there were children of the marriage, 1,000*l.*, part of the 5,000*l.*, to be paid to the wife, and the remainder to be applied for the use of the children of the marriage; but if there were no children, 2,000*l.* to be paid to the wife, and the remainder of the 5,000*l.* to be paid to the executors and administrators of the husband, and in case the husband survived the wife, and there were no children, then the whole of the 5,000*l.* to the husband. The testator afterwards made his will, and gave his daughter 5,000*l.*, stating it to be in addition to what he had secured upon her marriage. About five years afterwards the testator executed a deed, whereby he covenanted that his executors should pay to the trustees, within six months after his death, the sum of 5,000*l.* upon the trusts of the settlement. Parol evidence of the declarations of the testator was admitted to prove that he did not intend a double portion. Quære, whether the different interests of the husband, wife, and children in the legacy of 5,000*l.*, and in the sum of 5,000*l.* given by the deed, would repel the common presumption against double portions. Lloyd v. Harvey, 2 Russ. & M. 310.

5. A testator gave all his personal estate equally between his three children, one of whom was his daughter M. There was a direction in the will that only one moiety of his daughter's share should be paid to her absolutely, and that the other moiety should be held by the trustees of his will upon the usual trusts. M. married before the testator's death, and on her marriage the testator gave her 800*l.* by way of outfit, and settled on her and her children 7,000*l.* The testator died without having revoked his will, and it was held that the 7,800*l.* must be brought into hotchpot, and that the direction in the will as to the share of M. thereunder applied only to such share minus the sum of 800*l.*, and the sum of 7,000*l.* settled on her marriage. Woodhouse v. Woodhouse, 2 Eq. Rep. 1271.

1. In 1842, a parent having a power to appoint two separate sums of 5,000*l.* and 10,000*l.* amongst his children, made his will, by which he appointed the 5,000*l.* to James, and the 10,000*l.* between Theodosia and Catherine. In 1844, he, by deed, appointed the 5,000*l.*, which he had before appointed by will to James, to Theodosia. In 1846, he, by codicil, confirmed his will, and he died in 1847. Theodosia claimed the two sums of 5,000*l.*; but James contended, first, that she was bound by election to give effect to the bequest of 5,000*l.* to him, or to relinquish the 5,000*l.* given her by the will; and, secondly, that the appointment of 1844 was a satisfaction of the legacy of 5,000*l.*:—Held, that no case of election had arisen, but that the legacy to Theodosia was satisfied, and the amount unappointed. Montague v. Montague, 15 Beav. 565.
